Mega Loops

By: Crisis

The Mega Man universe is entering the Infinite Loops, but there's a few problems...

Status: ongoing

Published: 2014-02-09

Updated: 2016-01-25

Words: 786873

Chapters: 48

Rated: Fiction T - Language: English - Genre: Drama/Humor - Characters: Rock, Roll - Reviews: 209 - Favs: 269 - Follows: 228

Original source: https://www.fanfiction.net/s/10094468/1/Mega-Loops

Exported with the assistance of FicHub.net

Mega Loops

Introduction
Primary Anchor Candidate
Secondary Anchor Candidate
Tertiary Anchor Candidate
The Crash
Loop 1 Part 1: Once More, From the Top
Loop 1 Part 2: Worlds Collide Again
Loop 1 Part 3: Roboticized Masters
Loop 1 Part 4: Skull Egg Zone
Loop 1 Part 5: Final Showdown!
Loop 1 Part 6: Overtime!
Loop 1 Part 7: Online
Mega Loops 2
Mega Loops 3
Mega Loops 4
Mega Loops 5
Mega Loops 6
Mega Sonic Part 1
Mega Loops 7
Mega Sonic Part 2
Mega Loops 8
Mega Sonic Part 3
Mega Loops 9
My Mega Pony: Season 1
Mega Sonic Part 4
Mega Loops X
A Mega Halloween

Mega Loops 11
Battle in the Network: Failed Attempts
Thanksgiving Mega-Mini-Special
Battle in the Network: Do it Again
Battle in the Network: With Style
The Twelve Loops of Christmas
Mega Loops: Harry New Year
Mega Loops 13
Mega Sonic Part 5
Mega Loops 14
Mega Loops 15
Battle in the Network: With Soul - Part1
Mega Loops 16
Mega Woman: Red Vs Blue
Mega Loops 17
Mega Sonic Part 6
Mega Loops 18
Mega Man: Inside Out
Mega Loops 19
Battle in the Network: With Soul - Part2
Happy New Year From The Yggdrasil Admins
Mega Loops 24

Primary Anchor Candidate

Disclaimer: Mega Man does not belong to me. Also, the Infinite Loops as a whole aren't my idea. They were started by Innortal and later codified by Saphroneth, this is just my personal jump into what has become a reasonably large fanfiction community with something resembling shared continuity.

Loop mechanics (general):

One person in a Loop, often the main character, is an Anchor. They are the person who first starts time looping.

There is always at least one Anchor present in a given Time Loop snippet, though it may not be the local one.

The standard pattern for a loop is that the Anchor (and whoever else is Looping there) come to awareness in a loop at a particular point in the story. From there, events will play out as influenced by the Loopers present, acting with the benefit of their foreknowledge, until either a predetermined end point is reached or all the Loopers have copped it.

To be Awake is to be aware of the time loops (that is, to have gone back in time this time.)

The Anchor is the only character guaranteed to be Awake. Even after others have started looping, it is mostly random as to whether they will be Awake this particular loop.

Crossovers, fusions, and alternate pasts can also take place. It is perfectly possible, for example, to have the characters Awaken into a loop which conforms to a fanfic universe rather than reality.

Loops do not have to be in chronological order, but it is strongly preferred that they not require a mutually contradictory order (where

A must be before B and B must be before A.)

Just about every Looper is very, very stir crazy.

Tvtropes Page: tvtropes. o r g (slash) pmwiki/ pmwiki . php/ Fanfic/ TheInfiniteLoops

---

Backstory: The Loops began as a last-ditch failsafe when an event of unknown origin, even to the gods, hit Yggdrasil, the world tree and divine computer that runs all of reality. And while the admins do their best to repair something that has never needed this level of repair before, Yggdrasil's depleted resources try to hold back the proliferation of bugs, malware, and even eldritch reality viruses that were formerly contained by the healthy system. But... Not every Loop was hit equally by this event. Some, like Eiken, managed to escape damage to the point where they do not require an Anchor to keep running. Others... others were hit even harder than most and suffered more damage as a result. In these more damaged Loops the rules that govern them are affected by data corruption, resulting in bizarre circumstances that sometimes do not exist elsewhere.

And the branch of Yggdrasil containing the Mega Man multiverse was hit harder than any other known Loop.

Attempting Loop Activation:

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 1 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock shook his head as he suddenly experienced a glut of memory errors. Entire years worth. Just like...

No, he'd never experienced something like this before... Why would he think he had?

It didn't matter. Dr. Wily had stolen Dr. Light's robot masters and attacked the city. Since he had been about the only thing outside Wily's control, he'd volunteered to be converted into a fighting robot and stop the mad doctor's plans. And possibly get him psychiatric help once he captured him.

The gate in front of him slid up and he beheld his opponent.

"Took you long enough," the orange robot master glared. "I thought you might have chickened out. But the Glue Gun of Bond Man will make certain you stick around... forever!"

Bond Man? No, that wasn't right... It was supposed to be 71#3 # &*$ #!%^...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 2 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock still hadn't figured out what was up with his memory banks. He seemed to have spontaneously gained at least one redundant copy of events prior to actually living them, except it had been hopelessly corrupted and unreliable. After all, Dr. Wily had used a space station rather than the garish castle his false memories suggested. And for whatever reason, those memories were locked out from being overwritten.

Very odd.

But Rock's memory problems didn't change the fact that he needed to free the Chronos Institute from Dr. Wily's control.

"Well, look who decided to show up!" his own voice came from behind him.

Whirling around, Rock came face to face with... Copy Robot? Where was Qu!|\|7?VFRF[}%...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 3 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock honestly felt like the universe was off somehow. In addition to what might have been multiple sets of corrupted memories of events he both had and hadn't lived, all of the robot masters seemed to be musically inclined.

Sure, the instrumentals were catchy and the songs were quite good, but the whole practice just seemed somehow... wrong.

Like what he was hearing as he climbed towards his confrontation with Gamma.

Gamma, stand for you are now unchained (You are now unchained)

You'll bring peace to our world gone insane

Restoring your freedom to make you whole (You are now unchained)

I'll give you power, you'll take control

All systems online

g:\GAMMA\sys/activation

g:\[peacekeeping]/calculation…

g:\…[solution\extermin 7!0|\|%$W6% 8...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 4 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock had no time for this. He didn't know how he had memories of fighting this giant crane game reject when he'd never encountered it before, but he really didn't care so long as they helped him finish this quickly.

Severing the thick cable holding the machine up, he rode it to the ground and ripped off the canopy, only to freeze at the sight of the occupant.

"Kalinka?!" he stared incredulously at the young girl, looking like she hadn't slept or bathed in days. "Where's Dr. Cos$ [|#?#$%^ ...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 5 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock had no idea what to think. Everything seemed to be going along according to the partial memory errors he'd received, except that he was a character in a video game. And apparently aware of it. Then some kid left his system on and, impossibly, Dr. Wily escaped into the outer world and Rock followed. Then Dr. Wily somehow caused a bunch of smaller robots to coalesce into a giant robot master-type thing.

Then things got weird.

"Because I..." declared Dr. Wily dramatically, throwing off his labcoat and revealing a dark-colored gi with mesh underneath, "...am a ninja!"

Seriously... What the heck was g01|\|&}nftwG%$Ydft4s5#$^...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 6 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock was rather enjoying the World Robot Tournament. Sure, fellow robot masters were fighting, but it wasn't with him or to the death. It was, all things considered, a welcome change.

Even if those weird memory errors of his insisted the semi-finalists were supposed to be different.

"The first of eight semi-finalists!" the announcer boomed. "Built by the Comic Irregulars of Australia!"

"CHEDDAR MONK!"

The crowd roared with approval as the robed robot lifted its orange beam saber in70 743 A!&EVy6f4y6er^V&^9*t...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 7 using primary Anchor candidate:

"Watch out," Rock told his partner. "There's no telling what Dr. Wily's newest robot will try to pull."

"Understood," Tempo replied as he opened the door.

Rock silently counted his blessings that Tempo had started to help him in his fight against Dr. Wily since they met at the expo – even if the 'hints' his sister kept dropping that they should be a couple tended to be fairly annoying. Taking on the various threats that just seemed to keep cropping up without her help would have been a great deal harder. He knew this for a fact since he seemed to have partial memory errors of another life where he'd done just that.

Of course, the robot they were about to face rather flew in the face of those strange false memories himself.

"Well, well," growled the bipedal wolf robot Treble. "If it isn't the dynamic duo." At Treble's side sneered his animalistic and strangely quadrupedal humanoid companion Bass. "I suppose we'll have to put those new upgrades to the test. Come on Bass!"

Treble and Bass leaped into the air, glowing with energy as they began their combining sequence...

...and reality froze.

'What?' Rock thought to himself in confusion. Treble and Bass simply hung in midair, completely frozen. Rock himself couldn't seem to move either. 'What's happen!|\|&vve676v$%32% c24...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 8 using primary Anchor candidate:

"MWA HA HA HA HA HA HA! PEOPLE OF THE WORLD BEHOLD! I know it may be a bit sudden, but I hereby announce the commencement of my eighth plot to take over the world!" the sunglasses-wearing Dr. Wily declared over the pirated television broadcast, revealing his newest line of robot masters.

The entire world stared united in stupefied silence.

"Using the power of interpretive dance!"

Rock tried to reboot his neural net. 'What is this... I don'7 3^3|\|...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 9 using primary Anchor candidate:

Rock was wary. He had woken up one day with a slew of memory errors depicting multiple separate lives that he'd apparently already lived. The ones that seemed the oldest, if such a concept could truly be applied to them, got rather corrupted towards the end before becoming completely unreadable, but he had a feeling they were somehow important.

The others were a combination of similar or odd variations of the original up to a point where something incredibly strange happened and the universe just... crashed. Like a computer running a faulty program.

The events happened later and later, one for each set of robot masters Dr. Wily had used. As he was currently dealing with the ninth set of robot masters, Rock was on edge, just waiting for the other shoe to drop.

And as he entered the area where Fake Man should be, he knew that it was about to happen. Because instead of Fake Man, there was a bound Dr. Light in the room.

Rock was prepared for just about anything, up to and including the whole room suddenly turning into a three-ring circus where clown cars tried to run him over. Thus he was rather stunned when he managed to cross the room and start to free Dr. Light without incident.

"Are you okay Dr. Light?" he asked his creator, still frantically scanning the room for anything weird.

"Oh, I'm just fine," the doctor said in a voice that very clearly wasn't that of Dr. Light.

Rock's jumpiness was all that managed to save him. He was so keyed up that he backed off as fast as possible at the first un-Dr.

Light sound out of the impostor's mouth and just barely managed to avoid a Metal Blade that would have taken his head off. He stared as the impostor peeled off Dr. Light's face to reveal the face of a robot he was quite familiar with.

"Old Doc Robot's just PEACHY!" the skull-faced multi-weapon robot master yelled as he attacked.

In a way, Rock was kind of relieved. Now that the bizarre event was out of the way, he could focus on finding the real Dr. L![]-+\=}"/...

ATTEMPT FAILED

PRIMARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE DEEMED UNVIABLE DUE TO SUCCESSIVE FAILURES

ADDITIONAL PRIMARY ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE

PROCEEDING TO SECONDARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE

Attempt 1) Bond Man was actually intended to be included in the original Mega Man, but they cut the number of robot masters in the game down to six before the eighth could even be designed.

Attempt 2) I actually like the idea of Quint. He was a very poorly handled character in my opinion. Personally, I think he's yet another clone of Rock using futuristic technology programmed to think he's the real thing. It's not like Wily hasn't proven to be more capable of that than kidnapping and reprogramming Mega Man or anything...

Attempt 3) The Megas rock. That is all.

Attempt 4) I'm just as confused as Rock is. I swear, this stuff comes out of my brain without consulting me first.

Attempt 5) Megaman: Upon A Star . I share Rock's opinion of the events depicted. And they go exactly like that in the material referenced.

Attempt 6) So... I may be a fan of the Darths and Droids webcomic...

Attempt 7) Tempo/Quake Woman is one of the original characters from the Archie comics. She's also one of the few female robot masters around, and the only one so far not made by Dr. Light, so Roll tends to be Shipper On Deck for Tempo and Rock.

Also a fatal reality glitch seems to have occurred with Treble and Bass.

Attempt 8) Gigamix (the best of the Megaman mangas in my opinion) Wily to start with (and he looks damn cool in those shades of his). Though he certainly took a turn for the bizarre there. Can you imagine Frost Man trying to do ballet?

Attempt 9) Rock is remembering the failed Loop activation attempts. This shouldn't be possible.

Secondary Anchor Candidate

Special Loop Terms:

Branch - A multiversal section of Yggdrasil comprising a universal baseline and all of it's myriad 'branching' variants. Can also be known as a 'Loop' when the term is referring to a location. They are so termed because Yggdrasil is frequently referred to as a tree. The Megaverse and all variations thereof comprise one such branch.

Loop Aware - To be aware that time is looping (without needing help) but not remembering past Loops Dreaming - The ability to recall memories from past Loops without actually being Awake. Powers and physical skills are not retained. Extremely rare.

Malicious Looping Entity (MLE) - Anchors and loopers are meant to increase the stability of their branch of Yggdrasil so it doesn't collapse into nonexistence while repairs are affected. MLEs... essentially do the opposite. Extremely nasty and thankfully extremely rare. Most branches don't even have one .

Attempting Loop Activation:

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 1 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll blinked as her memory banks glitched.

Looking down at herself, she suddenly wondered if she'd always been this tall. Or had been such a mature-appearing model. The yellow bodysuit with the red stripes on the side certainly didn't seem familiar to her...

She really didn't remember getting into a fight with a buff-looking Cut Man.

She dodged a rolling cutter narrowly and pointed her arm at Cut Man, feeling it reform like her brother's often did – when did Dr. Light install that on her? – into... a toaster?

What good was a toa$73R/$%&^$Fg5ev6&^]...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 2 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll hated her life.

To start, she had fragmented and corrupted memories of at least one timeline that really didn't match the one she was living, reality couldn't seem to make up its mind about what was really going on, she was anatomically correct (which felt extremely weird to her despite the fact that her clearest memories insisted she'd always been this way), and her clothes kept getting destroyed for the most ridiculous reasons.

'I swear,' she thought angrily to herself, 'if something stupid disintegrates my clothes one more time, !'11...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 3 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll reflected that the oddest things tended to cross one's mind during times of peril.

She could have been reflecting on the fact that she had a glut of unexplained memory errors showing a completely different life – or was it several different lives? – she'd led.

She could wonder why Dr. Light apparently seemed to be based in Hawaii rather than this 'Mega City' she recalled from the other lives.

She might possibly wonder why she was programmed for polynesian cultural preservation in addition to the housekeeping duties her base design was meant for.

A question more pertinent to her current predicament was why, during his tenth attempt at global domination, Dr. Wily was using the Genesis Unit – Buster Rod G, Mega Water S, and Hyper Storm H, – to support his robot masters instead of a trio of robots her memory errors told her were called Enker, Punk, and Ballade – the Mega Man Killers?

An even better question would be why they had kidnapped her to set a trap for her brother when her memory errors insisted she should be sick with something called Roboenza instead.

However, what Roll really wanted to know all of a sudden was why she'd spent her life dressed as a hula girl complete with grass skirt.

Of course, Tempo seemed to dress the same way for equally unapparent reasons and her brother seemed much more interested in her than her memory errors indicated he would have been, so in the end it wasn't that bad she supp0$3|)^V%W^WY%%$GHYFg6yer...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 4 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll did her best to remain focused as she fought one of Dr. Wily's latest robot masters. Her brother had managed to do it, and she refused to dishonor him by failing to do the same. But that day haunted her incessantly.

Rock had gone off to Dr. Wily's latest space station to capture the madman and put an end to his latest reign of terror. He'd done it more than once already, and there was no reason to believe he wouldn't do it again.

So the whole world was understandably shocked when Dr. Wily appeared on every channel laughing victoriously.

Beside him was her brother.

More specifically, what was left of him.

Dr. Wily had apparently decided to indulge in a barbaric practice and mount her brother's head on a pike.

Consumed by sorrow and rage, she'd insisted that her father make her into a fighting robot like her brother had become so she could carry on his work. It was a testament to how affected Dr. Light was himself that he didn't even raise a complaint. He'd just wordlessly and mechanically done exactly as she asked, and more. She'd been outfitted with some experimental upgrades that allowed her to combine with Tango – the only surviving animal companion left – and the moment she'd seen the claws at the ends of her fingers that first time using the 'super adapter', she'd known exactly what she would do with them.

Roll had descended on the armies of Dr. Wily like the wrath of god, carving her way through his forces with a ferocity that a force of nature would have approved of. But he'd escaped then. Roll vowed he wouldn't do so again.

She was determined to catch Dr. Wily for real this time. But she wasn't going to hand him over to the authorities.

No, she was going to straight up k!11
4!|\/|VU&BB&^$F{}|543f65$%2$#*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 5 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll was a little jealous of her brother for something that could not possibly be his fault. The reason was that she'd gotten a slew of memory errors about a lifetime where he was the hero instead of her, and during this lifetime he had to deal with a radical pro-human terrorist movement known as the Emerald Spears led by Xander Payne.

Her? She had to deal with a fanatical robot-worshipping cult lead by a nutjob named Reverend Samuel Tiberius Dark. She'd have traded him for Xander Payne in an instant.

Aside from the unfortunate initials which must have made his school life hell, the man preached that the fate of humanity was to submit to robot rule and the only salvation for humans was to become robots themselves. He'd come up with a perversion of the 'three laws' as the central tenets of the religion. 'A human may not harm a robot'. 'A human must obey the commands of a robot'. 'Humans may not preserve their existence at the expense of robots'. The man believed that Dr. Wily was some kind of messiah, Dr. Light was the devil incarnate, and that she and her brother were traitors to their divine race for daring to defend the lives of humans.

And her other brother? Blues apparently had been sucked in by the cultist propaganda since he was leading the latest revolution in their name.

She dueled her older brother, trying to find something that indicated he wasn't doing this of his own volition when Blues what shot... by Blues.

Roll stared in confusion at two of her brother when the image of the first, her opponent, wavered and then dropped entirely to reveal a completely different robot.

An impostor.

Using her older brother's image to give the cult a semblance of credibility.

To say Roll was livid would be an understatement.

But even as her fury built up, she noticed something that replaced it with disgust.

The unknown robot was like the other models she'd faced in the fortress, only red. The other major difference was that the clear dome revealed not a complex CPU, but a live human brain. The cult had gone so far as to surgically remove a person's brain and place it in a robot? What kind of sick people were in charge?

"Well," chuckled a familiar voice, "I suppose the facade couldn't have gone on forever."

Roll's jaw dropped. "Reverend Dark?!" she shouted incredulously.

"Samuel Tiberius Dark is dead," the robot declared, activating a rotating electromagnetic field around himself in preparation for further combat. "I am the Dark Man!"

Roll fumed. The nutjob was going down. She couldn't let him spread his fanatical poison an- 10|\|&3Reht^%4656%76&)=()(^$!************

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 6 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll was really disturbed right about now.

The constellation droids, she could handle. Even if Gemini looked like a robot hermaphroditic transvestite.

Having to fight a slew of Dr. Wily's robot masters along with them, she could handle as well.

What was creeping her out though was the addition to the team that accompanied her and her friends.

The chinese robot Fan seemed to have no personality whatsoever. He didn't talk, emote, or anything. He just stood there and stared blankly at whatever was in front of him despite the fact that he was supposedly just as advanced and human-like as Roll herself.

He was looking at her again. With those empty eyes that just seemed to cons|_||\/|3 3^3R-74!|\|&#$%vu^ct5*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 7 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll cheered from her seat in the pulsing crowd.

Everything was going great. Dr. Wily hadn't been heard from in a while, both she and her brother Rock were actually going to school, Rock had a girlfriend named Chelsea, and they were all about to enjoy the latest rock and roll sensation.

"Greetings everyone!" yelled a boombox-themed robot master from the stage. "I'm DJ Jazzy J4-8950, and I'm your mix artist for the evening! Are you all ready to rock?!"

The crowd cheered.

"I said, ARE YOU ALL READY TO ROCK?!"

The cheers became thunderous.

"Then welcome to the stage the newest mechanical music sensation, and my fellow band mates: The Dreamwaves!" DJ Jazzy yelled to the crowd. "On drums, we have the incredible BARRAGE MAN!"

The crowd yelled in approval for the massive 25-foot tall robot and his equally huge drum set that took up the entire back of the stage.

"On guitar, keyboard, bass, and saxaphone, we have the amazing MULTI MAN!"

The cheers continued for the self-replicating instrumentalist.

"And on vocals is the sensational EXPRESS MAN!"

A blur zoomed to the center of the stage and the sleek form of the band leader stood before the delirious crowd.

"But before we begin, I'm afraid I have some sad news for everyone," DJ Jazzy said somberly.

The crowd's cheering died down in confusion.

"I'm afraid Dr. Wily has ordered your termination," DJ Jazzy intoned ominously as the eyes of all the band robots turned glowing red. "Nothing personal, you understand."

And with that, the robots jumped off the stage, which itself rumbled and stood up, revealing a massive Godzilla-sized steel machine that looked very much like the devil series robots and towered over the suddenly terrified crowd.

It was about then that the screaming finally st
R73|)%Y$n8k&df54tf#%^*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 8 using secondary Anchor candidate:

Roll stood behind her brother the hero as he faced down the strange alien robot known as Terra.

She worried for her brother, partly because she had false memories of a reality where he'd failed at being the hero and was brutally murdered for it. She also had false memories of taking his place for multiple lifetimes, during one of which she'd failed catastrophically. So she'd let her brother volunteer and trusted him to save the world, but she'd requested to be outfitted as his field support to help make sure he stayed alive. It had worked so far, but this opponent worried her more than any other and she wasn't really sure why.

"So," Terra sneered down at them, "this is what the pathetic inhabitants of this planet have to defend them. I am not impressed."

"This is your only warning," Rock called confidently. "Cease all hostile actions and leave this planet in peace!"

"Or what?" Terra laughed mockingly. "Your weapons couldn't even scratch me. Here, I'll even give you a free shot to prove it. And when you fail, you die pathetic Earth scrap."

With that, Terra spread his arms wide in invitation. Mutely, Rock took him up on the offer and shot to disable, only for the buster shot to dissipate harmlessly on what looked like a personal energy field surrounding Terra.

"My turn," Terra grinned maniacally and pointed his hand at the blue bomber. "SPARK CHASER!"

"ROCK!" Roll screamed as the laser weapon zig-zagged from Terra and straight through her brother's head. An instant later, several more proceeded to shred the rest of his body mercilessly.

"NOOOOOO!" Roll wailed in grief and fury as she saw her brother fall. She felt herself move and Tango attach to her as her arms simultaneously formed into clawed weapons of destruction. Some rational part of her mind noted that Dr. Light had never given her the modifications she was now using, but the rest of her didn't care. All that mattered was hurting Terra as much as possible.

Terra was caught off-guard in shock at her transformation and he took a rocket claw to the face before he could recover, and then Roll was upon him. Her purely physical weapons rent through Terra's defensive energy field with only some resistance and she clawed apart his body with fury, ripping out large chunks of his torso at the same time.

In the space of a few seconds, she'd rendered the alien invader to a shredded mess and let his body fall lifelessly to the ground while she mourned for her brother.

Or, that's what would have happened if Terra hadn't stood back up.

Roll stared in shock and horror at the sight of Terra getting back to his feet. She'd not only shredded his armor and ripped out at least half his vital mechanisms, but she'd also taken half his head off... and he was still moving...

The apparently undead robot raised his damaged fingers in her direction and yelled her death sentence.

"$P R| CH $ER!"

Roll found herself incapable of moving as the lethal laser weapon that had killed her brother cut a jagged line right towar|)$ 43RET%$76gy45%^65vy54*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 9 using secondary Anchor candidate:

If there was any robot that Roll genuinely hated, it was the future-tech clone of her that Dr. Wily made named Waltz. According to some glitchy memory errors – one set of several she possessed – if Rock had stepped forth to become a hero he'd have gotten a counterpart named Quint. A bitter and disenchanted robot who was originally convinced that he was somehow Rock himself from the future, and had not taken the truth of his origins very well after he'd returned to said future.

Waltz? Waltz was batshit insane.

The Dimensions, a set of robot masters from the future, when they had been led by Quint – or 'Mega Man's Shadow' as he'd taken to calling himself by then – in this other life had been rather typical of robot masters like what Dr. Wily had unleashed. That is, dangerous and causing lots of property damage, but relatively minimal loss of life all things considered. They were far more concerned with taking over territory than they were with killing people.

Under Waltz, the Dimensions were little more than crazed killers that put forth more effort targeting civilians than infrastructure. Their initial appearance had been a bloodbath.

Thankfully, Waltz's brother Bass had no more love for his insane sister than Roll herself did and had been all too happy to help her destroy the Dimensions and face off against Waltz herself.

Unfortunately, Waltz had been ready for them and the two of them had suffered severe injuries in bringing her down. Bass had lost one of his arms at the shoulder, Treble had half his body strewn over the battlefield, and Roll estimated her armor had more holes than swiss cheese. It was a miracle she was still functional.

But they had won. Waltz was missing her entire body from the waist down, her teleporter circuits were fried, and her arms were useless.

There was no way she could escape this time.

"It's over," Roll brandished her chosen weapon at the fallen Waltz, a telescoping broom made of highly durable material. Despite its appearance, it made for quite the lethal weapon when she chose for it to and many foes had fallen prey to it after laughing at its appearance.

"You haven't seen the last of me," Waltz grinned maniacally from where she lay.

"What makes you think that?" Roll managed not to sneer, her expression studiously neutral.

"Because father gave me the kind of data copying ability yours gave you and that my dear brother got as well," Waltz laughed dementedly. "I've seen your memories."

Roll's eyes widened involuntarily.

"I've seen that this hasn't been your first time through..." Waltz said darkly. "And it won't be the last. It's only a matter of time before I repeat like you have and then I'll KILL EVERYTHING YOU EVER LOVED WHILE I MAKE YOU WATCH H31|13$$1-wtd5ce5vy6654$^&^*($# #$$%*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

SECONDARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE DEEMED UNVIABLE DUE TO SUCCESSIVE FAILURES

ADDITIONAL SECONDARY ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE

PROCEEDING TO TERTIARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE

Attempt 1) I actually kind of liked the Mega Man cartoon show...

Attempt 2) Novas Aventuras de Megaman . Yeah, it's pretty much like that.

Attempt 3) Aloha.

Attempt 4) Something just went very wrong...

Attempt 5) Reverend Dark is the product of my own twisted imagination. Feel free to toss him Ian Flynn's way and see if he sticks.

Attempt 6) Fan is just kind of... there in the game he's from. He doesn't really contribute anything to the storyline as far as any source I can locate reveals.

Attempt 7) If you're unfamiliar with the names introduced here, they're all from the 4-issue run of Mega Man in Dreamwave Comics before they folded.

Attempt 8) Since when was Terra a zombie?

Attempt 9) Oh crap.

Tertiary Anchor Candidate

Yggdrasil Threat Classification: The rating system goes from 1-5 in descending order of severity.

Category 1 - Capable of dealing critical damage to Yggdrasil's systems. This has happened once and the event resulted in the Loops themselves becoming necessary to keep the whole system from crashing. A great deal of Yggdrasil's remaining power, roughly 90% at least, is dedicated to ensuring there's not a second.

Category 2 - Capable of completely destroying a branch of Yggdrasil's system (more commonly known as a Loop). A looper, particularly an Anchor, ascending to the divine level is the most well-known method to trigger a category 2 event. There have been two confirmed category 2 events. Madoka of the Puella Magica Loop was manipulated by her looping familiar Kyuubey into causing the first by ascending to the divine level, and the second was an event now known to loopers across the multiverse as The Crash. Much of what Yggdrasil operators do is meant to prevent potential category 2 events.

Category 3 - Capable of inducing metaphysical instability. Whether Loop or looper, metaphysical instability is bad and, left unchecked, could worsen to a full-blown category 2 event. Yggdrasil operators have been known to intervene in category 3 events to prevent them from so worsening.

Category 4 - Serious threat in-universe. Basically anything an experienced or veteran looper could have significant trouble dealing with. A number of category 4 events result in universal destruction and/or the premature end of a Loop iteration. Little chance of causing serious metaphysical instability, so they're rather low on Yggdrasil's long list of priorities right now. Loopers are officially on their own dealing with these things.

Category 5 - Standard competent villain level threat, and not even a blip on Yggdrasil's radar at this point. Generally a negligible threat to an experienced looper.

Attempting Loop Activation:

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 1 using tertiary Anchor candidate:

Blues didn't betray the worry he felt as he faced off against the self-proclaimed King of Robots yet again. It was actually quite the feat given that his opponent had bisected him in their last encounter.

Their second – or was it fourth? His memory was kind of screwy lately – encounter really wasn't going any better for him either due to that danged energy reflecting shield. There was no two ways about it. The shield had to go.

He was about to overload his buster for a massive shot that would surely destroy the shield when his screwy memory showed him the outcome of such an action.

'Time to do something different,' he thought to himself and charged at King, intending to vault over the shield and fire point blank at his face instead.

As he approached, reality itself seemed to short out for an instant and suddenly King was holding his axe instead. And bringing down towards Blues's head with all his strength.

'How?' was all Blues had time to think before he was cut in two onc3 & !|\|%$uB&%!(%0*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 2 using tertiary Anchor candidate:

This was wrong. This wasn't how everything was supposed to go. He was supposed to be the disenchanted first creation of Dr. Light. An experimental military model with the mental programming of a son the man never had who ran away because he was afraid that a repair to his faulty power core would end up erasing his personality.

He most certainly wasn't supposed to have been the last hope of humanity in a post-apocalyptic world where Wily had not only won, but apparently done so without any resistance whatsoever while at the same time framing Dr. Light for crimes Wily had committed. He wasn't supposed to have lost his faith in humanity and be forced to duel his brother to the death for defending them, and then watch as humanity's lack of will caused even Rock to lose faith.

But no matter how hard he tried, he couldn't seem to stop himself. Surely this w $ 4311***

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 3 using tertiary Anchor candidate:

This was much more familiar to Blues. His life was far from perfect, but it was more the purgatory his oldest memory errors depicted than the utter hell of the more recent ones. He'd made his share of mistakes... again, but he had the chance to make things right.

He would start by helping his younger brother destroy Ra Moon.

"When this is over, you and I have a lot to discuss," Rock said to him.

"Focus on the battle at hand," Blues reminded him, thankful his Break Man persona concealed his pained wince at his brothers tone.

The allied robot masters of doctors Light and Wily gathered around the two and prepared to breach Ra Moon's chamber.

It was then that he felt something touch his mind. Something sinister, foul, and completely uncaring for all life. He tried to push it back, but he might as well have tried to push back the tide itself as the presence swept over his consciousness and took over his body, forcing him to watch as he raised his buster at his own brother.

"Like the one here," he heard the voice of Ra Moon come from his own mouth as he shot his brother in the back.

He watched, horrified, as Rock fell lifelessly to the ground amidst the utterly shocked expressions of the other robot masters.

"For the glory of Ra M00n#$VY^$Y%$fyt4%4&^56)
({_*****

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 4 using tertiary Anchor candidate:

'I'm being punished,' Blues thought to himself. 'That's all there is to it.'

His memory errors were getting clearer, so he was certain of this fact. He'd forsaken his father and turned on his family in his original life and never truly made any effort to heal the rift that had formed. So he was forced to live through lives where he failed to protect them or was forced to betray them even worse than he had.

What else could he conclude? He'd ended the last run-through by murdering his brother while under mind control from Ra Moon, and he'd spent the entirety of this one attempting to do the same while unable to disobey orders from Dr. Wily. He could only thank the powers that be that he was far less competent at it this time than previously.

"You know," he heard himself saying in that nasally voice he seemed to have right now as he continued to shoot at Rock, "I'd honestly prefer to have you working for Dr. Wily like I am, but orders are orders."

"That's right," Rock replied in a manner completely unlike him. "You're nothing but a robot you outmoded model. Your destiny is to follow orders and be a good little weapon until your masters and betters make a better one and send you to the scrap heap."

Blues found himself completely frozen, unable to move as Rock's face turned ugly and sinister. He could only watch and listen in horror as the favorite son of Dr. Light – and he knew in his heart that Rock deserved it more than he – turned into his own antithesis before his eyes.

"You're right to be jealous of me," Rock continued, activating a set of shades on his own helmet just like Blues's. "After all, I'm the latest model. New and improved in every way. The son Dr. Light really wanted all along."

As he spoke, Rock wound a purple scarf around his neck and his helmet shifted in appearance until Blues could have sworn he was looking at himself wearing blue armor instead of red.

"Because all I am is you , except better."

Blues wanted to do something, anything, but all he could do was watch immobile as his brother, looking so much like Blues himself, raised his buster to Blues's head and began charging.

"There's no room for last year's m0|)3145b5u7-[0[pp;}{|*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 5 using tertiary Anchor candidate:

Blues woke up in his room at Light Labs feeling a sensation that a human would have recognized as eerily close to a cold sweat.

'I was about to be shot by my brother...' he thought in terror, which turned quickly to confusion. 'No... I don't have a brother... But it looked like me? Was I about to get shot by myself?'

Blues shook his head. It must have been what humans called a nightmare. He'd really have rather learned that he could dream from a more pleasant example though.

He remembered now. He'd suffered a failure in his core during a field test due to some unforeseen fault and his father had sent him to bed while he explored options to fix the problem. Hopefully in a way that didn't rewrite Blues's mind.

Blues shuddered as he thought about that. He liked the way he was and he didn't want to lose that. With this in mind, he made his way towards his father's room where he could see a light on. As he approached the door, he heard his father talking with someone and, despite himself, he listened in.

"I hate getting into debates with you," he heard his father say.

"You called me for my dazzling insight," an unfamiliar voice retorted, with the typical distortion caused by long-distance communication devices. "Or did you just call to complain about your boy?"

Blues couldn't quite make out the first part of the response, but he heard the rest of it loud and clear.

"Honestly, it would be easier if I did write that rebellious streak out of him..."

Blues backed away from the door in horror. His own father would rewrite his mind? No... It couldn't be possible...

He ran back to his room, tears trailing down his face. He had just started to toss energy tanks into a sack when an extremely clear memory error hit him.

It showed what would happen if he went down this path. A life alone, slowly dying from the flaw in his power core. A rift with his father that could never be healed. Death battles with robots who should have been his dearest siblings. Becoming a villain. A living hell of his own making.

He paused, and thought about the situation for a moment. His father hadn't quite sounded like someone who had actually meant to undertake that course of action. Maybe... Maybe his father wouldn't actually rewrite his mind over this? Maybe this... was a misunderstanding.

Blues made his decision. He'd trust his father, the one who had taught him what doing the right thing meant, to do the right thing himself. And maybe he could have a real family this time.

He turned around, and saw Dr. Light standing in the doorway to the room.

"Oh, hi father," he greeted, relieved despite being startled. "I didn't know you were there."

"Quite alright my boy," his father returned amiably. Still, something seemed... off. "I was just talking with a colleague of mine and I decided that fixing your power core couldn't wait. Please come with me."

Blues followed his father, a bit confused at the sudden shift in the repair timetable, but staying with his decision to trust his creator. The off feeling didn't go away though. If anything, it grew stronger as they approached the lab.

He obediently lay down on the table, and was a bit surprised when he suddenly found himself restrained.

"What?" he blurted in confusion. The confusion only grew as his father opened the access in his head rather than his torso. "What are you doing?"

"Oh," Dr. Light smiled in what should have been a kindly manner, if his eyes hadn't suddenly taken on an evil appearance. "Well, the fault with the power core is only a minor one you see."

Blues didn't see, and as his father gathered up some sinister looking tools he realized that he really wasn't going to like what was about to happen.

"The real problem lies in your programming," Dr. Light continued in that kind fatherly voice from the twisted evil face. "Far too free-willed. Completely unsuited to the contract. Building a new model would just take too long. Far easier to remove the unnecessary subroutines and continue with you. You understand, don't you?"

Blues wanted to scream that he didn't understand, and to let him go, but his mouth refused to work.

"Excellent," Dr. Light said in a voice not his own as he began the procedure.

Blues tried to scream as he felt his mind being torn a| R7}+) {"Pl0{_)^&:*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 6 using tertiary Anchor candidate:

Blues clutched his he4d in 4gony. Wh4t fre5h h3ll w4s h3 be!ng thr0wn !nto thi$ t!me? Wh3n w0u1d th!s ni&47|\/|4R3

3|\||)0VY#rh76gYEF^*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

WARNING: RELEVANT BRANCH OF YGGDRASIL SYSTEM BECOMING DANGEROUSLY UNSTABLE. ATTEMPTING TO SET TO READ-ONLY.

WARNING: BRANCH SEVERELY DAMAGED. SETTING BRANCH TO READ-ONLY MAY RESULT IN DATA BEING UNRECOVERABLE.

PROCEED? Y/N

Y:\ N

READ-ONLY SETTING ABORTED.

DETERMINING ALTERNATIVE METHODS OF ACHIEVING STABILITY...

LINKED LOOP PROTOCOLS DETERMINED TO POSSESS HIGHEST PROBABILITY OF SUCCEEDING.

ASSESSING LINKED LOOP PROTOCOLS...

SECTION 1: APPROACHING CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS. ANCHOR CANDIDATES PROVEN UNVIABLE WITHOUT AID.

SECTION 2: CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS DETECTED. ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE.

SECTION 3: CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS DETECTED. ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE.

SECTION 4: CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS DETECTED. ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE.

SECTION 5: CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS DETECTED. ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE.

SECTION 6: CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS DETECTED. ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE.

SECTION 7: CRITICAL CORRUPTION LEVELS DETECTED. ANCHOR CANDIDATES CURRENTLY UNRECOVERABLE.

SECTION X: SECTION NOT FOUND.

CONCLUSION: LINKED LOOP PROTOCOLS IMPOSSIBLE AT THIS TIME.

ASSESSING FURTHER ALTERNATIVE METHODS...

UNIVERSAL DATA PATCH DEEMED MOST LIKELY AVAILABLE METHOD TO SUCCEED.

PROCEED? Y/N

Y:\ Y

ATTEMPTING EMERGENCY UNIVERSAL DATA PATCH VIA 'JUMPSTART' PROTOCOLS.

SEARCHING FOR DONOR LOOP...

VIABLE DONOR FOR UNIVERSAL PATCH DETERMINED.

BEGINNING FUSED LOOP...

Attempt 1) King is actually kind of a badass if you think about it.

Attempt 2) Inspired by the musical group The Protomen.

Attempt 3) Comic Ra Moon is freaking scary.

Attempt 4) Blues is stuck in a nightmare he can't wake up from.

Attempt 5) ...That's just wrong.

Attempt 6) Did... did the Loop attempt just fail in less than ten seconds?

The Crash

The Crash - An event by which an Anchor was destroyed and their entire branch erased from existence at the conceptual level, erasing even its backup data in the Hub (i.e. any fiction regarding it in our universe). The reverberations of this caused the premature termination of every Loop iteration running at the time, set every known looper to active status in an attempt to prevent further damage to existing Loops, and shook out a few new loopers in a number of places, some of which suffered minor bugs in their reality code that have since done wonky stuff to them (ex: Silver Spoon in the MLP Loops who had her species marker knocked off kilter).

And you're about to see it happen.

Attempting Loop Jumpstart:

(Hint: This should be possible to decode, but the site may have eaten a few characters. Use https(colonslashslash) d o c s. goog l e.c o m (slash)document(slash)d(slash)10vGkNCfelRpmCjvPOyrFcYrjuQAREN65S7sYskpfMEo(slash)edit(questionmark)usp(equals)sharing for the properly encoded version. If you just don't want to, then the decoded version is at the bottom after the section with Hephaestus)

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt using fused Loop 'jumpstart' protocols with Anchor ERROR from Loop designated 'ERROR':

ÆÏ8žE&ÖðE&Öu¯9žƒ§¯³&ÖŽð¹&¹Žž&ŽžÏÏ&ÖðE&8Q&Ö§¹Ž&¹Žž&Öuƒ Ï9r&Þž&Öð¯¹ž9&¹u&·žÏ§žSž&Žž]9&°§¯ðÏÏÒ&Öuež¯&8Q&°ƒu‹&¹Žž&8¯ž¯9§¯³&¯§³Ž¹‹ðƒž&Žž]9&·žž¯&E8·^žd¹ž9&¹u[&·8¹&Žž&9§9¯]¹&°žžÏ&Žž&du8Ï9&QuEE§·ÏÒ&·ž&¹Žð¹&Ï8deÒr&©E&ð&ƒžE8Ï¹[&Žž]9&·žž¯&E¹ðÒ§¯³&·ðde&ðE&‹8dŽ&ðE&QuEE§·Ïž&ð¯9&ŽžÏQ§¯³&Ž§E&°ð

‹§ÏÒ&ÖŽž¯žSžƒ&Žž&du8Ï9&·ž°uƒž&°ð9§¯³&·ðde&§¯¹u&¹Žž&EŽð9u
ÖEr==˜u‹ž&‹§³Ž¹&EðÒ&Žž&ÖðE&·ž§¯³&du‹QÏž¹žÏÒ&Qðƒð¯u§9[&·8
¹&¹Žð¹&u¯ÏÒ&ðQQÏ§ž9&§°&¹Žž&8¯§Sžƒež&ÖðE¯]¹&u8¹&¹u&³ž¹&Ò
u8[&ð¯9&ÆÏ8žE&Öu8Ï9&¯žž9&ð&Ïu¹&‹uƒž&du¯S§¯d§¯³&·ž°uƒž&Ž
ž&·žÏ§žSž9&¹Žð¹r==²Sžƒò¹Ž§¯³&ÖðE&9§°
°žƒž¯¹&°ƒu‹&ŽuÖ&Žž&Eu‹žŽuÖ&e¯žÖ&§¹&ÖðE&E8QQuEž9&¹u&·ž
r&6Žžƒž&Ežž‹ž9&¹u&·ž&¯u&hƒr&¿§ÏÒ&°u‹ž¯¹§¯³&ƒu·u¹&ƒžSuÏ8¹§u
¯Er&Ð¯E¹žð9[&¹Žžƒž&ÖðE&ð&‹ÒE¹žƒ§u8E&uƒ³ð¯§¢ð¹§u¯&dðÏÏ§¯³
&§¹EžÏ°&hðƒe&˜§³‹ð&¹Žð¹&ÖðE&9u§¯³&§¹&§¯E¹žð9[&žðdŽ&u°&§¹E
&‹ð^uƒ&ð³ž¯¹E&³u§¯³&·Ò&ð&]‹u9žÏ]&9žE§³¯ð¹§u¯&QÏ8E&ð&Ïž¹¹žƒ[
&Ö§¹Ž&‹§¯uƒ&ð³ž¯¹E&³ž¹¹§¯³&]‹u9žÏ]&QÏ8E&ð&¯8‹·žƒ[&ð¯9&¯žSž
ƒ&§9ž¯¹§°Ò§¯³&¹Žž§ƒ&Ïžð9žƒ&ðE&ð¯Ò¹Ž§¯³&u¹Žžƒ&¹Žð¯&]#u9žÏ
&¿]r==6ŽžÒ]9&E¹ðƒ¹ž9&u8¹&ðE&Ž8‹ð¯&ð³ž¯¹E&ÖŽu&Žðdež9&§¯¹
u&ƒu·u¹&du‹‹ð¯9&ƒžÏðÒE[&·8¹&¹ŽžÒ]9&·žž¯&žðE§ÏÒ&ƒu8¯9ž9&8
Q&·Ò&hƒr&¾§³Ž¹]E&§¯98E¹ƒ§ðÏ&ƒu·u¹&‹ðE¹žƒE&Ïž9&·Ò&Øude&ð
¯9&ØuÏÏr&*¯ÏÒ&ð°¹žƒÖðƒ9E&Öžƒž&ð¯Ò&u°&¹Žž&ð³ž¯¹E&ƒu·u¹&‹ð
E¹žƒE&¹Žž‹EžÏSžEr==Øu·u¹&‹ðE¹žƒE&¹Žð¹&Žð9&·žž¯&E8·Sžƒ¹ž9&
·Ò&hƒr&¿§ÏÒ&§¯&¹Žž&uƒ§³§¯ðÏ&¹§‹žÏ§¯ž&Žž&ƒž‹ž‹·žƒž9&_&žSž¯
&ÖŽž¯&¹Žž&ÖuƒÏ9&9§9¯]¹&_&Žð9&QƒuSž¯&¹u&·ž&°uƒ‹§9ð·Ïž&ðÏÏ
§žE&¹Ž§E&¹§‹žr&hƒr&ßuEEðde&ð¯9&Ž§E&Ï§¯ž&u°&ƒu·u¹&‹ðE¹žƒE
&Žð9&·žž¯&§¯E¹ƒ8‹ž¯¹ðÏ&§¯&¹8ƒ¯§¯³&·ðde&¹Žž&ðEEð8Ï¹&u°&¹Žž
&§‹‹ž¯EžÏÒ&QuÖžƒ°8Ï&]#u9žÏ&Ø]
[&ðÏEu&e¯uÖ¯&¹u&Ž§‹&ðE&Øð&6ŽuƒÏ[&ð¯9&¹Žž&Eud§uQð¹Ž§d&ðÏ
§ž¯&E8Qžƒdu‹Q8¹žƒ&¹Žð¹&·ðdež9&§¹&8Qr&6Žž&¿uƒÏ9&Øu·u¹&6u
8ƒ¯ð‹ž¯¹&du¯¹žE¹ð¯¹E&Žð9&·žž¯&ðÏÏ&¹uu&Ö§ÏÏ§¯³&¹u&ŽžÏQ&°§³Ž¹
&·ðde&]#u9žÏ&h]
[&ð&Ž8‹ð¯&e¯uÖ¯&ðE&ØžSžƒž¯9&hðƒe&¹8ƒ¯ž9&ƒu·u¹&¹Žð¹&Žž&
ƒždu³¯§¢ž9&ðE&hðƒe&#ð¯3&]#u9žÏ&!][&¹Žž&!
§¯³&u°&Øu·u¹E3&ð¯9&]#u9žÏ&Æ]
[&u¯dž&e¯uÖ¯&¹u&Ž§‹&ðE&ÆðEE&ð¯9&6ƒž·Ïž3&ðÏu¯³&Ö§¹Ž&¹Žž
§ƒ&Sðƒ§u8E&Ï§ž8¹ž¯ð¯¹Er==¾ð¹žƒ[&žSžƒÒu¯ž&Žð9&¯žž9ž9&¹u&
·ð¯9&¹u³ž¹Žžƒ&¹u&¹8ƒ¯&·ðde&¹Žž&§‹‹ž¯EžÏÒ&QuÖžƒ°8Ï&]#u9žÏ&6]
[&ÖŽu&ÖðE&dÏžðƒÏÒ&ð&SžƒE§u¯&u°&¹Žž&ðÏ§ž¯&ƒu·u¹&6žƒƒð&°ƒ u‹&Ž§E&‹ž‹uƒ§žE[&ð¯9&Ž§E&ƒ§9§d8Ïu8EÏÒ&QuÖžƒ°8Ï&E¹ðƒ9ƒu§
9Er&Æ8¹&¹Žž&‹uE¹&9žSðE¹ð¹§¯³&Žð9&·žž¯&¹Žž&ŽžÏÏ§EŽ&Qð§ƒ&
e¯uÖ¯&u¯ÏÒ&ðE&]#u9žÏ&
]&ð¯9&]#u9žÏ&×]&_&¹Žž&Ïð¹¹žƒ&Ïuue§¯³&9§E¹8ƒ·§¯³ÏÒ&Ï§ež&ð&‹u

ƒž&‹ð¹8ƒž&Øude&§¯&Eu‹ž&ƒžEQžd¹E&_&ð¯9&§¹&Žð9&¹ðež¯&¹Žž
&Ï§SžE&u°&¯8‹žƒu8E&ðÏÏ§ž9&ƒu·u¹&‹ðE¹žƒE&·ž°uƒž&¹ŽžÒ&°žÏÏr&˜
u‹ž&u°&¹Žž&Ðß&dŽ§QE&u°&¹Žž&°ðÏÏž¯&Žð9&·žž¯&du‹QÏž¹žÏÒ&9ž
E¹ƒuÒž9r==#uƒž&§¯¹žƒžE¹§¯³&ÖðE&ŽuÖ&Ž§E&·ƒu¹Žžƒ&ð¯9&E§E
¹žƒ&Öžƒž&ðd¹§¯³r==Øude&Ežž‹ž9&QžƒQž¹8ðÏÏÒ&du¯°8Ež9r&Þž&
Öžð¹Žžƒž9&¹Žž&E¹ƒžEE&u°&Öðƒ&‹8dŽ&·ž¹¹žƒ&¹Žð¯&ÆÏ8žE&ƒždð
ÏÏž9[&ð¯9&¹Žž&u¯ÏÒ&¹Ž§¯³E&¹Žð¹&¹ŽƒžÖ&Ž§‹&u°
°&Öžƒž&¹Žž&‹uƒž&‹8¯9ð¯ž&§¯E¹ð¯džE&¹Žð¹&ÆÏ8žE&e¯žÖ&¹u&·ž
&ƒð9§dðÏÏÒ&9§°
°žƒž¯¹&°ƒu‹&¹Žž&uƒ§³§¯ðÏ&¹§‹žÏ§¯žr==ØuÏÏ&u¯&¹Žž&u¹Žžƒ&Žð¯9&
ÖðE&QžƒQž¹8ðÏÏÒ&^8‹QÒ[&Ï§ež&EŽž&ž÷Qžd¹ž9&ð¯&ð¹¹ðde&°ƒu‹
&ð¯Ò&Eu8ƒdž&ð¹&ð¯Ò&¹§‹žr&Æ8¹&8¯Ï§ež&ÆÏ8žE&Ž§‹EžÏ°
[&EŽž&9§9¯]¹&Ežž‹&°ƒ§³Ž¹ž¯ž9&°uƒ&ŽžƒEžÏ°
[&·8¹&°uƒ&u¹ŽžƒEr&²SžƒÒÖŽžƒž&EŽž&Öž¯¹[&EŽž&E8·¹ÏÒ&QuE§¹
§u¯ž9&ŽžƒEžÏ°&·ž¹Öžž¯&u¹ŽžƒE&ð¯9&Qu¹ž¯¹§ðÏ&¹Žƒžð¹E[&Ö§¹Ž&
¹Žž&u¯ž&³§Sž¯&Qƒ§uƒ§¹Ò&·ž§¯³&Øuder&˜Žž&Ežž‹ž9&du¯S§¯dž9
&¹Žð¹&§°&EŽž&9§9¯]¹&ŽðSž&Ž§E&·ðde&ð¹&ðÏÏ&¹§‹žE&Žž&Öu8Ï9&
·ž&e§ÏÏž9&·Ò&ð&E8ƒQƒ§Ež&ð¹¹ðde[&ð¯9&¹Ž8E&ð¯Ò¹Ž§¯³&¹Žð¹&¹
ƒ§ž9&¹u&Ž8ƒ¹&Žžƒ&·ƒu¹ŽžƒÖðE&žÏ§‹§¯ð¹ž9&Ö§¹Ž&ž÷¹ƒž‹ž&Qƒž
^89§džr==Þž&9ðƒž9&¹u&ŽuQž&¹Žð¹&¹ŽžÒ&ƒž‹ž‹·žƒž9&¹Ž§¯³E&¹Žð
¹&ŽðQQž¯ž9&·ž°uƒž&ðE&ÖžÏÏ[&·8¹&Ž§E&‹ž‹uƒ§žE&u°&¹Žž&¯§³Ž¹‹
ðƒž&Žž]9&ž÷Qžƒ§ž¯dž9&·ž¹Öžž¯&¹Žž&uƒ§³§¯ðÏ&¹§‹žÏ§¯ž&ð¯9&¯u
Ö&ŽžÏ9&Ž§‹&·ðder&6Žž&ŽuƒƒuƒE&Žž&‹§³Ž¹&E8°
°žƒ&Öžƒž&Žž&Öƒu¯³&·u8¯9&Ž§‹&‹uƒž&¹Žuƒu

Æu·ð&±ž¹¹&Öð¯¯ð·ž&dðÏÏž9&]#u9žÏ&}]&žEQžd§ðÏÏÒ&Öuƒƒ Ò§¯³r==
Þž]9&°uÏÏuÖž9&Ž§E&E§·Ï§¯³E&ðE&¹ŽžÒ&¹ƒðdež9&¹Žž&e§9¯ðQQž ƒ&¹u&ÖŽð¹&Ïuuež9&Ï§ež&ð&Ïðƒ³ž&Öðƒžžu8Ež[&9ž¹žƒ‹§¯ž9&¹u&·ð
de&¹Žž‹&8Q&ÖŽ§Ïž&¹Žž§ƒ&u¹Žžƒ&ðÏÏ§žE&Öžƒž&E8QQƒžEE§¯³&¹
Žž&ð¹¹ðdeE&žÏEžÖŽžƒž&‹žð¯¹&¹u&E‹uežEdƒžž¯&¹Žž&e§9¯ðQQ§¯
³r&Þž&Ž§9&§¯&¹Žž&ƒð°¹žƒE&ð¯9&Öð§¹ž9&°uƒ&Ž§E&‹u‹ž¯¹&ÖŽ§Ï
ž&Øude&ð¯9&ØuÏÏ&du¯°ƒu¯¹ž9&¹Žž&S§Ïž&#u9žÏ&}r==#u9žÏ&}]E&Q
ƒ§‹ðƒÒ&ÖžðQu¯&Ežž‹ž9&¹u&·ž&ð&EŽu8Ï9žƒ0‹u8¯¹ž9&dð¯¯u¯[&ð
¯9&ÖŽ§Ïž&§¹&ÖðE&ð¯&ð¹ÒQ§dðÏ&9žE§³¯&¹Žž&ÖžðQu¯&ÖðE&§‹‹
ž¯EžÏÒ&QuÖžƒ°8Ï&ð¯9&¹Žž&ƒu·u¹]E&Q8ƒQÏž&ðƒ‹uƒ&ð¯9&u¹Žžƒ&
QŽÒE§dðÏ&ð·§Ï§¹§žE&Öžƒž&dÏžðƒÏÒ&§¯&¹Žž&Eð‹ž&dÏðEE&ðE&¹Ž
ž&ŽžÏÏ§EŽ&98u&#u9žÏ&
&ð¯9&#u9žÏ&×r==Æ8¹&Ž§E&·ƒu¹Žžƒ&ð¯9&E§E¹žƒ&Öžƒž&¯u&EÏu8 dŽžE&¹Žž‹EžÏSžE[&ð¯9&¹ŽžÒ]9&Ïžðƒ¯ž9&QÏž¯¹Ò&°§³Ž¹§¯³&¹Žž&ð°
uƒž‹ž¯¹§u¯ž9&ƒu·u¹Er&#u9žÏ&}&‹§³Ž¹&·ž&°ðE¹žƒ[&E¹ƒu¯³žƒ[&ð¯9&
¹u8³Žžƒ[&·8¹&Žž&Žð9&¯uÖŽžƒž&¯žðƒ&Ž§E&E§·Ï§¯³]E&du‹·ð¹&ž÷
Qžƒ§ž¯dž&uƒ&Ee§ÏÏ&ð¯9&§¹&EŽuÖž9r==$¯°uƒ¹8¯ð¹žÏÒ[&ð&Ï8deÒ
&·ÏuÖ&Žð9&E¹8¯¯ž9&ØuÏÏ&ð¯9&ð&ÖžÏÏ0¹§‹ž9&³ƒð·&Žð9&§‹‹u·§Ï§¢
ž9&Øuder&#u9žÏ&}&ÖðE&¯uÖ&dŽðƒ³§¯³&8Q&Ž§E&EŽu8Ï9žƒ&dð¯
¯u¯&°uƒ&ð&Qu§¯¹0·Ïð¯e&EŽu¹&¹Žð¹&Öu8Ï9&E8ƒžÏÒ&e§ÏÏ&Ž§E&·ƒ
u¹Žžƒr==ÆÏ8žE&e¯žÖ&¹Žž&¹§‹ž&¹u&ðd¹&ÖðE&¯uÖr=="&Qƒžd§E§ u¯&E¯§Qžƒ0EŽu¹&¹u&¹Žž&ŽžÏ‹ž¹&³u¹&#u9žÏ&}]E&ð¹¹ž¯¹§u¯&¯§džÏ
Ò&ð¯9&Øude&¹uue&°8ÏÏ&ð9Sð¯¹ð³ž&u°&¹Žž&9§E¹ƒðd¹§u¯r&Þž&·ƒ u8³Ž¹&Ž§E&ðƒ‹&dð¯¯u¯&8Q&§¯&ð&‹ð¯¯žƒ&¹Žð¹&Öu8Ï9&Q8¹&b8§
de9ƒðÖ&ðƒ¹§E¹E&¹u&EŽð‹ž&ð¯9&°§ƒž9&Ž§E&uÖ¯&dŽðƒ³ž9&EŽu
¹r==˜¹ƒð§³Ž¹&9uÖ¯&¹Žž&·ðƒƒžÏ&u°&#u9žÏ&}]E&EŽu8Ï9žƒ0‹u8¯¹ž9&
dð¯¯u¯r==6Žž&ž÷QÏuE§u¯&¹uue&#u9žÏ&}]E&ðƒ‹&u°
°&ð¹&¹Žž&EŽu8Ï9žƒ&ð¯9&Ž8ƒÏž9&Øude&·ðde&EžSžƒðÏ&‹ž¹žƒE&°ƒ u‹&¹Žž&°uƒdžr&Ð¹&Ïuuež9&ðE&§°&#u9žÏ&}&Öu8Ï9&ƒžduSžƒ&·ž°u
ƒž&Øude&9§9[&·8¹&8¯Ï8de§ÏÒ&°uƒ&Ž§‹[&ØuÏÏ&Öu8Ï9¯]¹&ðÏÏuÖ&Ž
§‹&¹Žž&ð9Sð¯¹ð³žr&6Žž&ßƒðEŽ&Æu‹·&EŽž&°§ƒž9&Ž§¹&Qžƒ°žd¹Ï
Ò&u¯&¹Žž&9ð‹ð³ž9&Quƒ¹§u¯&u°&#u9žÏ&}]E&¹uƒEu[&ð¯9&¹Žž&ž÷Q
ÏuE§u¯&9žd§‹ð¹ž9&¹Žž&9žÏ§dð¹ž&§¯¹žƒ¯ðÏ&EÒE¹ž‹E&¹Žð¹&Öžƒž&
¯uÖ&8¯Qƒu¹žd¹ž9&·Ò&ðƒ‹uƒr==6Žž&Eu8¯9&u°&EÏuÖ&ðQQÏð8Ež
&°§ÏÏž9&¹Žž&Öðƒžžu8Ežr==©²÷džÏÏž¯¹[©&ð&Su§dž&Eð§9&ð¯9&ÆÏ
8žE&°ƒu¢ž&§¯&Žuƒƒuƒr&Þž&9§9¯]¹&Žžðƒ&¹Žž&°uÏÏuÖ§¯³&E¹ð¹ž‹ž
¯¹&ð¹&ðÏÏr&Þž&ÖðE&¹uu&ÏuE¹&§¯&ð&¹žƒƒ§·Ïž&‹ž‹uƒÒ&ÖŽžƒž&hƒr

&¾§³Ž¹&ÖðE&ðd¹§¯³rrr&¯u¹&Ï§ež&hƒr&¾§³Ž¹r&6Žž&¯u¹0hƒr&¾§³Ž¹&Žð9&Eð§9&¹Žð¹&SžƒÒ&Öuƒ9&§¯&¹Žð¹&SžƒÒ&Su§džr&Þž&Žð9¯]¹&·žž¯&ð·Ïž&¹u&QÏðdž&¹Žž&Su§dž&¹Žž¯r==Æ8¹&Žž&9§9&¯uÖr==±8ƒ¹ŽžƒÆ‹8E§¯³E&Öžƒž&d8¹&u°°&ðE&Žž&ÖðE&Q8‹Qž9&°8ÏÏ&u°&žÏžd¹ƒ§dðÏ&SuÏ¹ð³ž&ð¯9&QÏ8‹‹ž¹ž9&°ƒu‹&Ž§E&QuE§¹§u¯&§¯&¹Žž&ƒð°¹žƒE&ðE&ð&ƒžE8Ï¹r&Þž&°žÏÏ[&ð¯9&ežQ¹&°ðÏÏ§¯³&QðE¹&ÖŽžƒž&¹Žž&°Ïuuƒ&EŽu8Ï9&ŽðSž&·žž¯r&6Žž&ÏðE¹&¹Ž§¯³&Žž&EðÖ&·ž°uƒž&Žž&·Ïðdež9&u8¹&ÖðE&¹Žž&°ðƒ0ðÖðÒ&Edž¯ž&u°&¹Žž&ÖðƒžŽu8Ež&ƒuu°&ðE&ð&EŽð9uÖ&dÏuEž9&u‹§¯u8EÏÒ&·žÏuÖ&§¹r==00000==¿Žž¯&ÆÏ8žE&dð‹ž&¹u[&Žž&e¯žÖ&Žž&ÖðE&ƒžE¹ƒð§¯ž9r&Þ§E&ðƒ‹E&ð¯9&Ïž³E&ÖžƒžŽ&·u8¯9&§¯&ð¯&]×]&°uƒ‹ð¹§u¯&ð¯9&§‹QuEE§·Ïž&¹u&‹uSžr&*Qž¯§¯³&Ž§E&žÒžE[&Žž&EðÖ&¹Žð¹&Ž§E&·ƒu¹ŽžƒžðŽ¯9&E§E¹žƒ&ÖžƒžŽ&E§‹§ÏðƒÏÒ&·u8¯9r&6Žž§ƒ&QÏðdž‹ž¯¹&ðƒu8¯9&¹Žž&ƒuu‹&°uƒ‹ž9&ð&¹ƒ§ð¯³Ïž[&ždŽ&u°&¹Žž‹&°ðd§¯³&¹Žž&dž¯¹žƒ&ÖŽžƒž&¹Žž&Ž8‹ð¯&§¯¹žƒ¯&\\²ØØ*Ø\&9ð¯³Ïž9&°ƒu‹&¹Žž&dž§Ï§¯³r&6ðe§¯³&ð&Ïuue&ðƒu8¯9[&ÆÏ8žE&ƒžðÏ§¢ž9&¹ŽžÒ&ÖžƒžŽ&ðÏÏ&Žuuež9&8Q&¹u&ð&³§ð¯¹&‹ðdŽ§¯ž[&¹Žž§ƒ&·§¯9§¯³E&Qðƒ¹&u°&Eu‹ž&Euƒ¹&u°&d§ƒd8§¹r==6Žž&Q8ƒQuEž&u°&§¹&ÖðE&·žÒu¯9&Ž§E&ž÷Qžƒ§ž¯dž[&·8¹&ÆÏ8žE&ÖðE&Ö§ÏÏ§¯³&¹u&·ž¹&žSžƒÒ¹Ž§¯³&¹Žð¹&§¹&ÖðE¯]¹&³uu9r==©¿žÏdu‹ž[©&¹Žž&Su§dž&°ƒu‹&·ž°uƒž&E¹ð¹ž9[&¯u&Ïu¯³žƒ&Eu8¯9§¯³&Ï§ež&§¹&ÖðE&·ƒuð9dðE¹ž9r&6Žž&uÖ¯žƒ&u°&¹Žž&Su§dž&ÖðE&§¯&¹Ž§E&ƒuu‹r&©¿žÏdu‹ž&¹u&¹Žž&Žžð9b8ðƒ¹žƒE&u°&‹Ò&Ï§¹¹Ïž&uƒ³ð¯§¢ð¹§u¯r&Ð&ð‹&Eu&³Ïð9&¹Žð¹&Òu8&ðÏÏ&du8Ï9&°§¯ðÏÏÒ&^u§¯&‹žr©==ÆÏ8žE&EŽ§Sžƒž9&ð¹&¹Žž&°ð‹§Ï§ðƒ&Su§dž&ð¯9&Ïuuež9&¹uÖðƒ9E&¹Žž&°§³8ƒž&ðE&Žž&E¹žQQž9&§¯¹u&¹Žž&Ï§³Ž¹r&Þž&ÖðE&9§°°žƒž¯¹r&Þž&Žð9&ÖŽð¹&Ïuuež9&Ï§ež&ð&E‹ðÏÏ&ƒž9&³ž‹&§¯&¹Žž&‹§99Ïž&u°&Ž§E&°uƒžŽžð9[&Ž§E&Žð§ƒ&Ežž‹ž9&‹uƒž&·Ï8ž&¹Žð¯&¹Žž&ž÷Qžd¹ž9&³ƒðÒ[&Ž§E&žÒžE&Öžƒž&Ž§99ž¯&·žŽ§¯9&ð&Qð§ƒ&u°&ð¯³8Ïðƒ&EŽð9žE&¹Žð¹&E¹§ÏÏ&°ð§Ïž9&¹u&Ž§9ž&ŽuÖ&dƒð¢ž9&Ž§E&ž÷QƒžEE§u¯&ÖðE[&Žž&ÖðE&9ƒžEEž9&‹uƒž&°§¯žÏÒ&¹Žð¯&ÆÏ8žE&ƒž‹ž‹·žƒž9[&ð¯9&Žž&Žð9&ð&Ee8ÏÏ0¹uQQž9&dð¯ž&¹Žð¹&ÖðE&dÏžðƒÏÒ&°uƒ&ðQQžðƒð¯džE&u¯ÏÒ[&·8¹&E¹§ÏÏ&ÆÏ8žE&du8Ï9&¯žSžƒ&ŽðSž&‹§E¹ðež¯&Ž§‹&°uƒ&ð¯Òu¯ž&žÏEžr==©¥žE[&§¹&§E&Ð[&#u9žÏ&¿[&¹Žž&Ïžð9žƒ&u°&hðƒe&˜§³‹ð[&¹Žž&Øž³ðÏ&!§¯³[&hƒr&"¾Æ²Ø6¡& ¿²Ð¾¡ & ¿Ð¾¥¡©==6Žž&ž÷QƒžEE§u¯E&u°&¹Žž&°u8ƒ&dðQ¹§SžE&Öžƒž&SðE¹ÏÒ&

9§°
°žƒž¯¹r&\\²ØØ*Ø\&dÏžðƒÏÒ&Žð9&¯u&§9žð&ÖŽu&Ž§E&dðQ¹uƒ&Öð
E[&Øude&ÖðE&dŽðƒðd¹žƒ§E¹§dðÏÏÒ&9ž°§ð¯¹[&ØuÏÏ&ÖðE&E8ƒQƒ
§E§¯³ÏÒ&‹8ƒ9žƒu8E[&ð¯9&ÆÏ8žE€==ÆÏ8žE&ÖðE&Edðƒž9&u8¹&u
°&Ž§E&‹§¯9r==
(u¹&u¯ÏÒ&ÖðE&¹Ž§E&¹Žž&uÖ¯žƒ&u°&¹Žž&Su§dž&¹Žð¹&Žð8¯¹ž9&
Ž§E&¯§³Ž¹‹ðƒžE[&¹Žžƒž&ÖðE&ð&9ž°§¯§¹§Sž&°žžÏ§¯³&u°rrr&
Öƒu¯³¯žEE
&ð·u8¹&¹Žž&‹ð9&9ud¹uƒr&¿Žž¹Žžƒ&Žž&ÖðE&¹Žž&Eð‹ž&hƒr&¿§ÏÒ
&ðE&¹Žž&uƒ§³§¯ðÏ&¹§‹žÏ§¯ž&9§9¯]¹&‹ð¹¹žƒr&"ÏÏ&ÆÏ8žE&ÖðE&džƒ¹ ð§¯&u°&ÖðE&¹Žð¹&¹Ž§E&Sžƒ E§u¯&u°&¹Žž&‹ð¯&
ÖðE¯]¹&E8QQuEž9&¹u&ž÷§E¹
r==6ŽžÒ&Öžƒž&ðÏÏ&§¯&Sžƒ Ò&ƒžðï&9ð¯³žƒr==©*Ž[&§¹&ÖðE&b8§¹
ž&¹Žž&Q8¢
¢Ïž&u¯&ŽuÖ&¹u&³ž¹&ÖŽð¹&Ð&¯žž9ž9[&·8¹&Ïu&ð¯9&·žŽuÏ9[&¹Žž&¹
Žƒžž&u°&Òu8&Žð9&§¹&ðÏÏ&ðÏu¯³¡©&¿§ÏÒ&ðdeÏž9r==©"¯9&¹Ž§E&
·uÒrrr©&Žž&du¯¹§¯8ž9[&ð&E§¯§E¹žƒ&³ƒ§¯&EQÏ§¹¹§¯³&Ž§E&°ðdžr
&©¿ŽÒ&¹Ž§E&·uÒ&§E&¹Žž&SžƒÒ&ežÒ&¹u&‹Ò&žEdðQž&°ƒu‹&¹Ž§
E&8¯§SžƒEðÏ&Qƒ§Eu¯r&6Ž§E&§¯°§¯§¹Ò&u°&ƒžQžð¹§¯³&¹§‹žr©==
\\²ØØ*Ø\\]E&žÒžE&Ö§9ž¯ž9&ðE&¹ŽžÒ&EÏuÖÏÒ&¹8ƒ¯ž9&¹u&E¹ðƒž
&ð¹&¹Žž&9ud¹uƒ&§¯&Žuƒƒuƒr==©*Ž[&ÒžE[©&¿§ÏÒ&dŽ8deÏž9r&©
Ð&e¯uÖ&ðÏÏ&ð·u8¹&¹Žð¹r&"¯9&Ð&e¯žÖ[&¹Žž&‹u‹ž¯¹&Òu8&dð‹ž&§
¯¹u&‹Ò&¹žƒƒ§¹uƒÒ[&¹Žð¹&Òu8&Öžƒž&¹Žž&ežÒ&¹u&‹Ò&žEdðQžr&
#Ò&ežÒ&¹u&·ždu‹§¯³&¹Žž&‹ðE¹žƒ&u°&ðÏÏ&dƒžð¹§u¯¡&¿ŽÒ&9u&Òu
8&¹Ž§¯e&Ð&ŽðSž&EQž¯¹&Eu&‹8dŽ&ž°
°uƒ¹&u¯&dðQ¹8ƒ§¯³&ð&¯u·u9Ò&Ï§ež&Òu8ƒEžÏ°
€&6Žž&§¯9žEdƒ§·ð·Ïž&žEEž¯dž&¹Žð¹&ðÏÏuÖE&Òu8&¹u&ƒž¹ð§¯&ð
Öðƒž¯žEE&ð¯9&ð·§Ï§¹Ò&ðE&¹§‹ž&ƒžQžð¹E&§¹EžÏ°&§E&ÖŽð¹&Ð&
¯žž9r©==\\²ØØ*Ø\&QÏžð9ž9&Eu‹ž¹Ž§¯³&·ðde&ð¹&¹Žž&9ud¹uƒ&¹Žð
¹&ÆÏ8žE&du8Ï9¯]¹&b8§¹ž&‹ðež&u8¹r==©*Ž[&·8¹&Ð& dð¯
[©&¿§ÏÒ&E¯žžƒž9r&©¿Žð¹&9u&Ð&dðƒž&§°&Òu8ƒ&ž¯¹§ƒž&8¯§Sž
ƒEž&§E&žƒðEž9&ðE&ð&ƒžE8Ï¹€&#Ò&9žE¹§¯Ò&ðÖð§¹E&Òu8&Qð¹
Žž¹§d&°uuÏ¡©==¿§ÏÒ&¹8ƒ¯ž9&EŽðƒQÏÒ&ð¯9&E¹ƒu9ž&¹u&ð&du¯¹ƒ uÏ&Qð¯žÏr&©(u&‹uƒž&‹žð¯§¯³ÏžEE&Qƒð¹¹Ïž¡&¿ž&·ž³§¯&§‹‹ž9§ð¹žÏ Ò¡©&"¯9&Ö§¹Ž&¹Žð¹[&¿§ÏÒ&¹ŽƒžÖ&ð&EÖ§¹dŽr==²¯žƒ³Ò&Ž8‹‹ž9[&
ð¯9&ð&E¹ƒð§¯&¹Žð¹&ÆÏ8žE&du8Ï9¯]¹&ƒž‹ž‹·žƒ&°žžÏ§¯³&·ž°uƒž[&·
8¹&Òž¹&ƒždu³¯§¢ž9&Qžƒ‹žð¹ž9&žSžƒÒ¹Ž§¯³r&Ð¹&ÖðE&Ï§ež&¹Žž&

E¹ƒð§¯&°žÏ¹&ƒ§³Ž¹&·ž°uƒž&u¯ž&u°&Ž§E&¯§³Ž¹‹ðƒž&Ï§SžE&Žð9&ð·ƒ8Q¹ÏÒ&ž¯9ž9r&Þž&Žð9¯]¹&¯u¹§dž9&¹Žž&°žžÏ§¯³&¹ŽuEž&¹§‹žE[&·8¹&ž÷Qžƒ§ž¯d§¯³&§¹&¯uÖ[&Žž&Eu‹žŽuÖ&e¯žÖ&¹Žð¹&§¹&Žð9&ŽðQQž¯ž9r&¿Žð¹&ÖðE&ŽðQQž¯§¯³&¯uÖ&ÖðE&¹Žž&Eð‹ž&¹Ž§¯³r&6Žž&E¹ƒð§¯§¯³&°žžÏ§¯³&^8‹Qž9&§¯&§¯¹ž¯E§¹Ò&ð¹&¹Žž&Eð‹ž&¹§‹ž&ð¯9&9§9¯]¹&ÏžEEž¯r&6Žž&ž¯žƒ³Ò&ƒuEž&§¯&Q§¹dŽ&ð³ð§¯&ð¯9&¹Žž&Eð‹ž&¹Ž§¯³&ŽðQQž¯ž9&Ö§¹Ž&Ž§E&E§E¹žƒ[&Žžƒ&°ðdž&°ƒu¢ž¯&§¯&Qð§¯&ðE&¹Žž&°žžÏ§¯³&u°&E¹ƒð§¯&¯žðƒÏÒ&9u8·Ïž9&§¯&§¯¹ž¯E§¹Òr==6Žž&ž¯žƒ³Ò&ƒuEž&u¯dž&ð³ð§¯[&ð¯9&ÆÏ8žE&E¹ƒ8³³ÏžE[&e¯uÖ§¯³&Žž&ÖðE&¯ž÷¹r&²Sž¯&¹Žž¯[&Žž&ÖðE¯]¹&QƒžQðƒž9&°uƒ&ÖŽð¹&Žž&Öu8Ï9&EÖžðƒ&ÖðE&¹Žž&°žžÏ§¯³&u°&ð&ƒu9&u°&8¹¹žƒ&Öƒu¯³¯žEE&·ž§¯³&ƒð‹‹ž9&E¹ƒð§³Ž¹&¹Žƒu8³Ž&Ž§E&Eu8Ïr==6Žž&ž¯žƒ³Ò&dƒðdeÏž9&‹ð9ÏÒ[&‹ð¹dŽ§¯³&¹Žž&9ud¹uƒ[&ðE&§¹&·ž³ð¯&¹u&Qƒu·ž&\\²ØØ*Ø\
&²ðdŽ&¢ðQ&ð¯9&EQðƒe&¹Žð¹&¹u8dŽž9&¹Žž‹&Ež¹&u°°&ð&Edƒžð‹&u°&ð³u¯Ò&Ï§ež&¹ŽžÒ&Öžƒž&·ž§¯³&ƒ§QQž9&ðQðƒ¹[&ð¯9&ÆÏ8žE&ÖðE&džƒ¹ð§¯&¹Žð¹&§¯&Eu‹ž&ÖðÒ[&¹ŽžÒ&Öžƒžr==6Žž&°žžÏ§¯³&u°&E¹ƒð§¯&ÖðE&Qƒðd¹§dðÏÏÒ&Edƒžð‹§¯³&¯uÖ[&ð¯9&ÆÏ8žE&E899ž¯ÏÒ&e¯žÖ&ÖŽð¹&§¹&ÖðEr&
ØžðÏ§¹Ò&9§9¯]¹&Ï§ež&ÖŽð¹&ÖðE&ŽðQQž¯§¯³
r&Ð¹&9§9¯]¹&Ï§ež&§¹&u¯ž&·§¹[&ð¯9&§¹&ÖðE&ð¹¹ž‹Q¹§¯³&¹u&°§³Ž¹&·ðde&ð³ð§¯E¹&¹Žž&8¯¯ð¹8ƒðÏ&¹Ž§¯³&¹Žž&9ud¹uƒ&ÖðE&ð¹¹ž‹Q¹§¯³r==6Žž&ž¯žƒ³Ò&u°&¹Žž&‹ðdŽ§¯ž&·ž³ð¯&¹u&ƒ§Ež&§¯&Q§¹dŽ&8¯¹§Ï&§¹&¹uu&ÖðE&Edƒžð‹§¯³[&ð¯9&¿§ÏÒ&E899ž¯ÏÒ&Ïuuež9&8¯džƒ¹ð§¯r&¾§ež&¹Žž&ƒžE§E¹ð¯dž&¹u&Ž§E&‹ðdŽ§¯ž&ÖðE¯]¹&QÏð¯¯ž9&°uƒr&Þž&·ž³ð¯&¹u&ƒð¯¹&ð¯9&ƒð§Ï&Eu‹ž¹Ž§¯³[&8¯¹§Ï&ð&E¹ƒðÒ&·uÏ¹&u°&ž¯žƒ³Ò&°ƒu‹&¹Žž&‹ðdŽ§¯ž&E¹ƒ8de&Ž§‹r&"¯9&¹Žž¯&¿§ÏÒ&Ž§‹EžÏ°&·ž³ð¯&Edƒžð‹§¯³r==6Žž&Edƒžð‹E&u°&¿§ÏÒ[&\\²ØØ*Ø\\[&¹Žž&‹ðdŽ§¯ž[&ð¯9&ƒžðÏ§¹Ò&§¹EžÏ°&‹§¯³Ïž9&8¯¹§Ï&¹ŽžÒ&du8Ï9¯]¹&·ž&9§°
°žƒž¯¹§ð¹ž9&°ƒu‹&žðdŽ&u¹Žžƒr==ÆÏ8žE&e¯žÖ&¹Žð¹[&žSž¯¹8ðÏÏÒ[&Eu‹ž¹Ž§¯³&Žð9&¹u&³§Sžr=="¯9&¹Žž¯&Eu‹ž¹Ž§¯³&9§9r

CRASH

Loop -

Yggdrasil admin office for branch designated 'Mega':

Hephaestus regained consciousness to blaring alarms. He fought back the fog that pervaded his mind and the pain that wracked his body so he could orient himself. He hadn't felt this bad since the time he'd tried to pick a solo fight with Typhon back when he still believed anything he did could impress his bitch of a wife.

"REPEAT: ALL ADMINISTRATORS REPORT TO YOUR ASSIGNED LOOPS TO ASSIST ANCHORS IN RECOVERING. ALL OTHER YGGDRASIL PERSONNEL REPORT TO EMERGENCY STATIONS FOR DAMAGE ASSESSMENT. REPEAT: ALL ADMIN–"

Hephaestus tuned out the automated message. He'd get in trouble for not reporting as ordered, but it was likely he was already in a heap of trouble considering what he'd been doing before he had apparently collapsed, so a little more wasn't going to hurt him that much. The important thing was that he recover the logs from the fused Loop attempt. There was very vital information that needed to be salvaged from that.

If only he could remember what.

Shaking his head and telling himself that it would come back to him in time, he called up the Loop log and blinked. Loop designated 'ERROR'? Anchor name ERROR? That couldn't be right. They were clearly–

It was right then that Hephaestus realized that he had no clue what the names of the donor Loop and its Anchor were. He tried a memory retrieval spell on himself, and got nothing.

Crap.

That could only happen if the thing he was trying to remember had been conceptually erased from existence. The memories were unretrievable because there weren't any memories to retrieve .

He checked the file for the fused Loop and found that it was completely corrupted. The data still existed, thank Kami-sama, but it was utterly unreadable. He checked the status of the Loop he was assigned to get functional, and sighed with relief that it hadn't been erased as well. In fact, it seemed the universal data patch procedure had been partially successful and it was more stable than it had been. Then there was the fact that he still remembered that there had been a donor universe and Anchor involved, so there was a chance, however slim, that their data still existed somewhere.

It was a desperate hope at best, but he'd take what he could get at this point.

He forwarded the corrupted file of the fused Loop to his superiors and proceeded to try and see what else could be salvaged from this endeavor. Some data that would perhaps justify the loss of a whole branch from Yggdrasil's mainframe.

Yggdrasil had been having more problems than just the Loops for a while now. At first they'd given loopers estimates on when Yggdrasil would be fixed, but as more Loops were brought online and Yggdrasil's depleted resources stretched ever thinner they'd pushed those estimates back. Eventually they'd stopped giving them at all.

It wasn't just the thinned-out resources to blame. As more of the universes were rendered provisionally functional through the Loops, an increasing number of bugs, malware, and viruses came with them. These things were normally kept under control with little issue, but that was when Yggdrasil was functioning at full power. With the damage and reduced power levels, these normally minor issues that could be safely ignored or tabled indefinitely were suddenly potentially significant threats to the vulnerable Loops.

Hephaestus remembered when the DC and Marvel Loops were rushed to functionality because they both contained some of the most comprehensive universal restoration code in Yggdrasil's system. That code was now indispensable in keeping the Loops running despite being constantly attacked by annoyingly malicious code that he would swear spontaneously multiplied any time someone wasn't looking.

The god of the forge was brought out of his musings as he found what he was looking for. The comparison data analysis.

One of the things everyone did was compare events in the Loops to what little data they had on the category 1 event that had originally damaged Yggdrasil and made the Loops necessary in the first place. Such information could potentially allow them to speed up the repairs. If nothing else, they'd be able to spot a repeat event early enough that they could stop it before it became a problem – one category 1 event was more than enough for one eternity thank-you-very-much.

So far matches for the category 1 event hadn't risen above 20%, and that was the Skaia protocol. It likely meant that the event was something very similar to the Skaia protocol – which would be bad news because no one at the divine level had any knowledge of such a thing and the idea that one could be independently developed without any of the gods knowing was frightening – or the Skaia protocol itself was expanded upon to cause the event – an even more frightening prospect, especially since there had been no indication that the Skaia protocol had left its quarantine area in Yggdrasil prior to the event.

There it was.

CATEGORY 1 EVENT COMPARISON: 15% MATCH. NO COMMON DATA WITH SKAIA PROTOCOL.

That... that was bad. It indicated the latter scenario of someone getting a hold of the Skaia protocol without their knowledge and actually trying to 'improve' it. What really floored him was the next line.

VIRAL CONSCIOUSNESS SUCCESSFULLY DISSIPATED.

A what?!

Okay... a viral consciousness inside the Loop might explain some of the problems he'd been having, but he didn't immediately recall identifying it. He tried another memory retrieval spell to see if he could figure out what exactly had happened.

Memories came flooding back. He'd seen some really nasty viral code in the presence of something whose sole purpose could only be to breach dimensional barriers from 'below' while increasing the dimensions of its operator. The viral consciousness had invented an artificial method of ascending to the divine level.

It hadn't taken more than a moment to realize what was happening and he immediately requisitioned power from Yggdrasil, citing an imminent category 2 event to get a response rapid enough to make a difference. He'd brought his full personal power to bear, called in favors from other gods to bolster what he had, promised favors to a few more if they helped, and broke Almighty-knew-how-many regulations to siphon just the tiniest bit more out of Yggdrasil's over-extended reserves. A viral consciousness was attempting to ascend past the confines of the Loop and if it succeeded, they'd have a genuine fully sapient and highly intelligent divine-level virus loose in Yggdrasil's damaged systems. He hadn't had time to convince anyone of the seriousness for a concerted effort to be made, so he'd done what he could to get immediate results and effectively went it alone with only a fraction of the power he should have had to deal with the problem.

He'd slowed down relative time in the Loop while simultaneously speeding it up for himself, making every tense moment count as he coded furiously. As he tried to stop the dimensional breach it was triggering, he examined the viral code. The viral consciousness was too hardy for a direct assault, but it appeared to be a composite consciousness in addition to being viral. He could attack the cracks and force them apart, returning it to the component minds once more. He was so focused on defeating the obvious threat that he hadn't noticed the direct metaphysical attack on the visiting Anchor in the background until it was too late.

When the Anchor gave out, his native Loop crashed hard enough that Hephaestus, directly connected to the fused Loop in his attempt to forestall disaster, had been rendered unconscious. As much as he wanted to mourn the loss of existence, he had to double-check Yggdrasil's claim that the consciousness had been effectively dissipated. Losing a Loop was bad enough. Having a viral consciousness that dangerous free in the system would be worse.

Of course, it was going to take some time digging up any records after a disruption like that. Better get star-

VIRAL CONSCIOUSNESS DISSIPATION RECORD COMPILED AND AVAILABLE FOR VIEWING.

VIEW NOW? Y/N

Hephaestus blinked. It was always weird when Yggdrasil did something like this. Anticipate something an operator would need and run the request on its own initiative. Yggdrasil's bouts of foresight were always useful, but they could get a touch creepy at times.

Y:\ Y

VIRAL CONSCIOUSNESS DISSIPATED VIA SUCCESSFUL FRAGMENTATION OF COMPOSITE CONSCIOUSNESS.

LIST OF INDIVIDUAL CONSCIOUSNESSES COMPRISING COMPOSITE THAT WERE RESTORED:

DR. ALBERT W. WILY

DATA CORRUPTED

DATA CORRUPTED

DATA CORRUPTED

DATA CORRUPTED

DATA CORRUPTED

DATA CORRUPTED

FILE NOT FOUND

UNKNOWN DATA

Hephaestus winced. He hated being reminded of just how damaged this branch was. One barely functional section, six that were too corrupted to recover without further repairs, and one that had effectively been 'misplaced' among all the corrupted data.

Plus something that apparently wasn't supposed to exist in this branch. Possibly an invading virus from outside or something that had germinated in the damaged branch as the activation attempts failed. It was hard to be certain with the way things were.

THREAT ASSESSMENT OF INDIVIDUAL CONSCIOUSNESSES:

CATEGORY 4 OR LESS.

That was a relief. Much better than the category 2 event that had just happened. Category 4s could safely be left to loopers to deal with, provided he could actually get the Loop functional of course.

He typed in a request for analysis of viable Anchors.

PRIMARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE: ROCK LIGHT - 25% CHANCE OF SUCCESSFUL LOOP ACTIVATION

SECONDARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE: ROLL LIGHT - 20% CHANCE OF SUCCESSFUL LOOP ACTIVATION

TERTIARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE: BLUES LIGHT - 10% CHANCE OF SUCCESSFUL LOOP ACTIVATION

Hephaestus swore. They were all more stable than before the universal data patch, but still nowhere near as stable as he'd like. Unlike most other offline branches, their branch was degrading with every failed activation attempt and it was possible for the whole branch to become completely unviable as soon as the next failure. He just couldn't take a chance on numbers that low.

With the other sections of the branch hopelessly corrupted until further repairs were made, a Linked Loop was simply impossible. The branch was also too corrupted to risk setting it to Read-Only lest it become completely unrecoverable as a result. And after what just happened there was simply no way another universal data patch via fused Loop would be authorized, even though the threat had been neutralized. The 'Mega' branch was officially omnia non grata until it was sufficiently stabilized.

Which meant it was time to get creative. Fortunately, Hephaestus was good at that. Being a patron god of invention had its perks.

He coded his idea furiously and ran it through Yggdrasil's precognitive data simulator.

66% CHANCE OF SUCCESSFUL LOOP ACTIVATION USING NEW PROTOCOLS.

Much better, but still a lot lower than he'd like. He racked his brain for anything he could do when he had a flash of brilliance. It was risky, but...

90% CHANCE OF SUCCESSFUL LOOP ACTIVATION USING NEW PROTOCOLS AND SCENARIO.

Hephaestus frowned. He'd honestly thought the number would be higher. He ran a number of variations on the scenario, but all the new simulations did was lower the number. He sighed as he accepted the fact that the odds simply weren't going to get any better.

It was time to make a call. He picked up his office phone and dialed the relevant number.

A voice chittered back at him from the other end of the line and he fought the urge to roll his eyes. The trio of interns that served under the god he was trying to contact seemed to take great pleasure in being as odd as possible ever since their ascension shortly before the category 1 event, going so far as to invent a language just to mess with others. Fortunately he'd taken the effort to learn it himself and had little trouble understanding them.

"Yes, it's me," he said and waited while the intern chittered back at him. "I'm sure they are, but I have things I need to do before I can meet with them. Is Hermes available?"

The intern chittered back at him at length before letting him respond. "Yes, I'll hold."

It was not too long a wait before he heard the voice of the god he'd called for.

"Hephaestus! Baby!" Hermes drawled over the phone. "Just got finished filling Sonic and his buddies in on what happened. Man, are the higher-ups pissed at you! I certainly hope you've got a good excuse for yanking power from Yggdrasil unauthorized like that, not to mention letting a Loop collapse like it did, or they're going to crucify you. Nails and all. This better not be a request to help you hide from them. You used up all your bargaining power doing whatever it was and it's just not worth it to cover for you right now."

"I was attempting to stop a containment breach by a category 2 viral consciousness hosted in the Loop I've been trying to get active," Hephaestus replied bluntly.

"...No joking?" Hermes finally asked. "How in Tartarus did that happen?"

"It invented a device to artificially induce ascension. I didn't realize it was using the visiting Anchor as fuel until it was too late," Hephaestus replied. He could hear Hermes sit down hard.

"Oh, speed," Hermes moaned over the line. "You deal with it?"

"Managed to break it up into smaller chunks, each one only a category 4 and most native consciousnesses," Hephaestus admitted. "Turns out the damn thing was a composite." The divine smith sighed. "Look, that device it used was a partial event match to the category 1 event. No common data with the Skaia protocol. Still a huge chunk of data on the category 1 event unidentified."

"Okay," Hermes said a bit weakly. "The higher-ups might be lenient in that case. Geez, you really don't get any breaks, do you?"

"Only in my leg," Hephaestus replied with bitter humor and he heard Hermes chuckle good-naturedly. "Look, the reason I called is that I need a favor. A big one."

The god of travel sighed the sigh of one who was about to agree to something against his better judgement. "How big, man?"

"I need you to activate Sonic's baseline."

"WHAT?!" Hermes sputtered. "Do... do you have any idea what you're asking?! If Yggdrasil tries to run that without all the other branches he hits looping or otherwise stable, it could cause a serious instability collapse! Not as bad as the one you just dealt with, sure, but I'd probably have to shunt them into a safe-mode branch so I could patch their Loop back up, which will probably be Eiken ! You know I hate sending them there! And I'd just have to take it offline again anyway!"

"Listen," Hephaestus implored. "I've got a new experimental protocol set up to get my Loop functional with much higher odds than anything I've had before, but the deterioration rate per failure means that there's a good chance that if I don't get it functional now , it won't ever happen."

Hermes was silent, so Hephaestus took that as a sign to continue.

"The numbers weren't high enough for me to risk it as-is, so I fiddled with the scenario parameters. I can get as high as 90% possibility of successful Loop activation, but only if you have Sonic's baseline running in tandem. The natural crossing of the two will add stability to the activation attempt and your Loop shouldn't be at any greater risk than normal."

"That's a lot of assuming you're doing there," the messenger god sighed. "Look, I can't just do this on a whim. I'm gonna need to call in a fair number of favors myself to get the power needed to arrange this like you want and..." Hermes paused for a moment. "And I owe it to Sonic and his friends to tell them what you want done and let them decide if they're willing to go along with it despite the risks. If they say no, then no deal. And you will owe me big if they say yes no matter what else happens."

"I'll accept those terms," Hephaestus agreed. He'd happily accept much harsher terms, but Hermes wasn't in the habit of gouging those he didn't feel deserved it and his connection to travel made him a patron god of hospitality by default. Offering a higher payment to him would be a grave insult that Hermes would be unlikely to forgive.

"Alright, I'll be back shortly," Hermes said as he hung up.

Hephaestus waited patiently for the return call, and when he got it, he calmly picked it up and waited for Hermes to speak.

"Sonic and his pals said to 'do it to it'," Hermes half-sighed half-chuckled. "Don't know why I expected anything different. I'll get things squared away on my end and link the final activation decision to your terminal. You won't be able to do anything until their current Loop is over, so you might as well go take your medicine from the higher-ups while you wait. If anything happens to you, I'll see that this goes through anyway. Don't worry about the higher-ups trying to stonewall this. We tricksters have ways of getting around little obstacles like that."

Hephaestus chuckled. He honestly wouldn't be surprised if the god of thieves already had copies of his office keys and login password. It wouldn't be the first time, and this time they'd be put to far better use than loading porn of his wife to his desktop. "Thank you."

"Seriously, man," Hermes offered, "good luck. Life around here wouldn't be half as much fun without you and your toys."

And with that, Hermes hung up.

Hephaestus sighed to himself and got up to go see his superiors. After a catastrophe like that, someone needed to be raked over the coals for appearances sakes, and it looked like it was his turn this time.

It actually turned out far better than he could have hoped. His data logs and offered memories about the viral consciousness and its attempt to breach universal containment went a fairly long way to explaining his actions. The proceedings and debates still took exceedingly long, years to the perception of mortals, before a decision was reached.

In the end, he was put on probation. All future decisions – he was sure he sensed Hermes' influence in that particular semantic wording – regarding his assigned Loop were to be reviewed and then approved before being undertaken until the entirety of the branch was successfully looping. In addition, he'd been assigned a trio of valkyrie interns/probation officers to watch over him. He certainly couldn't complain about that. He'd fully expected to be watched if he was allowed to go back to work and valkyries were much preferred to the alternatives. They were almost as beautiful as his wife – and trying to suggest they were equal or better within the same plane of reality as a jealous love goddess was just inviting trouble, regardless of his personal opinions – and they had a respectable appreciation for his work as a god of the forge. Infinitely more than his wife had ever possessed or ever would.

On the way back to his office, he'd noticed the valkyries assigned to him subtly flirting with him – you picked up on this kind of thing when married to a love goddess, no matter how estranged a marriage it was – and he'd flirted back. He definitely sensed Hermes' influence in his sentencing now. No one else he knew kept trying so honestly to hook him up with a lady, or three in this case, that appreciated him for who he was rather than (loudly) lamenting the fact that he wasn't a sculpted vision of male perfection.

He got back and assigned one of the valkyries, Herfjötur, to his perpetually empty secretarial desk. One of the others, Eir, retired to a corner and appeared to go to sleep while the third, Brynhildr, followed him into his office. It wasn't a bad arrangement. Two awake at all times, one guarding the outside of the office, and the last keeping a personal eye on him. One was certainly plenty, as Hephaestus was no fighter. A valkyrie might not be quite the same power level as he was, but they could fight more than well enough to subdue a semi-crippled inventor like himself with minimal effort.

He sat down at his terminal and waited for Hermes' message. To his surprise, Brynhildr started to give him a shoulder massage.

"Just so you know," she whispered, "if you try to break probation, I and my sisters will break your other three limbs before giftwrapping you for the Justice Gods. That said, Hermes suggested that the best way to keep an eye on you was to make sure you didn't want to go anywhere without us."

The smith god chuckled. "Tough choice. The company of lovely capable ladies like yourselves and more help than I've ever had in the office or broken bones and arrest. I think I'll go with the former."

"Good choice," Brynhildr smirked. "Though if you behave yourself, we can probably be persuaded to a bit more than keeping you company and helping out at the office. Especially if your 'toys' are half as good as we've heard."

"You can judge the quality for yourself," Hephaestus winked. "I make everything with my own two hands and I simply won't stand for lovely ladies like yourself having anything less than the absolute best. Soon as we get my assigned Loop online, I'll get you all in for a custom armor fitting."

"We do love a good custom armor fitting," the saucy valkyrie winked back. "Now, Hermes mentioned that you'd arranged something with him. How fortunate that only decisions made after your sentencing are subject to review. Otherwise we might have a problem. I do believe that's him now."

Hephaestus looked at his screen.

MESSAGE FROM HERMES, GOD OF TRAVEL FIRST CLASS, TO HEPHAESTUS, GOD OF THE FORGE, FIRST CLASS:

Everything's taken care of. Just push the button and I'll let you know when your marker's being called in. In the meanwhile, do take some time to enjoy the company (and perhaps more) of your new companions.

Best of luck,

Hermes.

END MESSAGE

Hephaestus sighed heavily and looked back at the screen.

TANDEM RUN WITH LOOP DESIGNATED 'SONIC' AUTHORIZED BY LOOP ADMINISTRATOR HERMES.

BEGIN LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPT USING EXPERIMENTAL PROTOCOLS DESIGNATED 'HEPHAESTUS 1' AND OPTIMAL DETERMINED SCENARIO? Y/N

Y:\ Y

BEGINNING LOOP...

Fused Attempt) O_O

-) Hephaestus is the god I chose to be the admin of the Megaverse. As an ancient god of the forge, I believe he'd make and excellent patron god of inventors like Dr. Light and others that populate the Megaverse.

The reason no one came to haul him in front of his superiors after the Lost Loop suffered severe metaphysical collapse was that everyone was essentially running around in a panic. They would have sent someone eventually, but so long as he wasn't trying to do a runner there were more important and urgent things to worry about.

As for the valkyries liking a god who lives his life with a limp due to a poorly healed broken leg in his youth and is perpetually marred by the soot of his forgework until he's about as far from 'handsome' as you can really get for a fairly average guy (I refuse to make him deformed and ugly. Though, for the greek gods, average appearance could probably be seen as 'ugly' so it still works for his mythical origins) – where was I? Oh, yes, valkyries liking Hephaestus – that's because I see valkyries as being warriors who respect things like hard work and craftsmanship. Especially when that hard work and craftsmanship goes into making the armor and weapons they use to kick copious amounts of behind. Arrogant, and actually somewhat cowardly according to several myths, Ares doesn't float their boat. A solid hard-working amiable smith who both treats them with respect and makes superior armor and weapons, aka 'toys', is much more their preference.

Why are there three of them? One, because Hephaestus really is on probation and they're really there to watch him. They rotate who is keeping a direct eye on him, who is pulling secretary duty outside his office, and who is resting. Two, because Aphrodite (Hephaetsus's wife) is an adulterous bitch that he can't get rid of (her contribution to the Trojan war went a fair ways in influencing my view of her). Making her hit the roof because her 'unattractive' husband is turning the tables with ladies genuinely interested in him is amusing to me. Especially when those ladies also turn their noses up at her favorite lover, Ares.

The way they act is a little atypical of what could be expected of warriors. I justify this by the fact that, while valkyries are warriors with few peers, they are still female and like to be treated to pretty things just as much as the next woman. They just like their pretty things to be functional and able to survive a warzone. Think of how stereotypical women might like a boyfriend who was a master goldsmith and jeweler who made custom items just for them and you'll get their mindset regarding smith gods. In addition, Hephaestus being married to a goddess of love, even a bitch like Aphrodite, has taught Him what ladies generally like and how to treat them well.

The sort-of-friendship with Hermes? Hermes may be respected, but you know the 'god of thieves' shtick has to work against him at times. Plus he's the patron of vagabonds and other underdog travelers, so I honestly think he'd be more sympathetic to Hephaestus than a number of other members of the greek pantheon. Why is he the admin of Sonic's Loop? Hermes is also the god of speed, of course. That and the attitude I see him having meshes well with Sonic's typical demeanor.

As for Hermes' interns, they're the Ancient Walkers. The original ones who 'died' (or rather ascended according to this) in the baseline before Yggdrasil was damaged. Wise though they may be, they like to mess with others' heads as a hobby. They currently have lesser aspects (like how many gods can exist within some universes while still fulfilling their roles running Yggdrasil) filling their former roles in Sonic's Loop.

...What is it about me that I can turn a simple author's note into a wall of text without realizing it?

Special Bonus! For those who don't care to decode the Crash Loop, here's the decoded format all ready for you:

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt using fused Loop 'jumpstart' protocols with Anchor ERROR from Loop designated 'ERROR':

Blues was wondering what the hell was up with the world. He wanted to believe he'd finally woken up from the unending nightmare he'd been subjected to, but he didn't feel he could possibly be that lucky. As a result, he'd been staying back as much as possible and helping his family whenever he could before fading back into the shadows.

Some might say he was being completely paranoid, but that only applied if the universe wasn't out to get you, and Blues would need a lot more convincing before he believed that.

Everything was different from how he somehow knew it was supposed to be. There seemed to be no Dr. Wily fomenting robot revolutions. Instead, there was a mysterious organization calling itself Dark Sigma that was doing it instead, each of its major agents going by a 'model' designation plus a letter, with minor agents getting 'model' plus a number, and never identifying their leader as anything other than 'Model W'.

They'd started out as human agents who hacked into robot command relays, but they'd been easily rounded up by Dr. Light's industrial robot masters led by Rock and Roll. Only afterwards were any of the agents robot masters themselves.

Robot masters that had been subverted by Dr. Wily in the original timeline he remembered – even when the world didn't – had proven to be formidable allies this time. Dr. Cossack and his line of robot masters had been instrumental in turning back the assault of the immensely powerful 'Model R', also known to him as Ra Thor, and the sociopathic alien supercomputer that backed it up. The World Robot Tournament contestants had been all too willing to help fight back 'Model D', a human known as Reverend Dark turned robot that he recognized as Dark Man; 'Model K', the King of Robots; and 'Model B', once known to him as Bass and Treble; along with their various lieutenants.

Later, everyone had needed to band together to turn back the immensely powerful 'Model T', who was clearly a version of the alien robot Terra from his memories, and his ridiculously powerful stardroids. But the most devastating had been the hellish pair known only as 'Model Z' and 'Model X' – the latter looking disturbingly like a more mature Rock in some respects – and it had taken the lives of numerous allied robot masters before they fell. Some of the IC chips of the fallen had been completely destroyed.

More interesting was how his brother and sister were acting.

Rock seemed perpetually confused. He weathered the stress of war much better than Blues recalled, and the only things that threw him off were the more mundane instances that Blues knew to be radically different from the original timeline.

Roll on the other hand was perpetually jumpy, like she expected an attack from any source at any time. But unlike Blues himself, she didn't seem frightened for herself, but for others. Everywhere she went, she subtly positioned herself between others and potential threats, with the one given priority being Rock. She seemed convinced that if she didn't have his back at all times he would be killed by a surprise attack, and thus anything that tried to hurt her brother was eliminated with extreme prejudice.

He dared to hope that they remembered things that happened before as well, but his memories of the nightmare he'd experienced between the original timeline and now held him back. The horrors he might suffer were he wrong bound him more thoroughly than his jealousy and pride ever had.

But the one thing that captured everyone's interest was a human named ERROR that would normally not have been given a second glance. They were a fairly average individual and an intern at the Cronos Institute. Not particularly valuable a target, especially given the more senior and lauded members at the Chronos Institute, but they were involved in every single attack and seemed to be a priority target for Dark Sigma.

Blues had no memory of this human from the original timeline, but he knew , somehow, that the intern was vitally important.

Which made the fact that they'd just been kidnapped by some Boba Fett wannabe called 'Model V' especially worrying.

He'd followed his siblings as they tracked the kidnapper to what looked like a large warehouse, determined to back them up while their other allies were suppressing the attacks elsewhere meant to smokescreen the kidnapping. He hid in the rafters and waited for his moment while Rock and Roll confronted the vile Model V.

Model V's primary weapon seemed to be a shoulder-mounted cannon, and while it was an atypical design the weapon was immensely powerful and the robot's purple armor and other physical abilities were clearly in the same class as the hellish duo Model Z and Model X.

But his brother and sister were no slouches themselves, and they'd learned plenty fighting the aforementioned robots. Model V might be faster, stronger, and tougher, but he had nowhere near his sibling's combat experience or skill and it showed.

Unfortunately, a lucky blow had stunned Roll and a well-timed grab had immobilized Rock. Model V was now charging up his shoulder cannon for a point-blank shot that would surely kill his brother.

Blues knew the time to act was now.

A precision sniper-shot to the helmet got Model V's attention nicely and Rock took full advantage of the distraction. He brought his arm cannon up in a manner that would put quickdraw artists to shame and fired his own charged shot.

Straight down the barrel of Model V's shoulder-mounted cannon.

The explosion took Model V's arm off at the shoulder and hurled Rock back several meters from the force. It looked as if Model V would recover before Rock did, but unluckily for him, Roll wouldn't allow him the advantage. The Crash Bomb she fired hit perfectly on the damaged portion of Model V's torso, and the explosion decimated the delicate internal systems that were now unprotected by armor.

The sound of slow applause filled the warehouse.

"Excellent," a voice said and Blues froze in horror. He didn't hear the following statement at all. He was too lost in a terrible memory where Dr. Light was acting... not like Dr. Light. The not-Dr. Light had said that very word in that very voice. He hadn't been able to place the voice then.

But he did now.

Further musings were cut off as he was pumped full of electrical voltage and plummeted from his position in the rafters as a result. He fell, and kept falling past where the floor should have been. The last thing he saw before he blacked out was the far-away scene of the warehouse roof as a shadow closed ominously below it.

When Blues came to, he knew he was restrained. His arms and legs were bound in an 'X' formation and impossible to move. Opening his eyes, he saw that his brother and sister were similarly bound. Their placement around the room formed a triangle, each of them facing the center where the human intern ERROR dangled from the ceiling. Taking a look around, Blues realized they were all hooked up to a giant machine, their bindings part of some sort of circuit.

The purpose of it was beyond his experience, but Blues was willing to bet everything that it wasn't good.

"Welcome," the voice from before stated, no longer sounding like it was broadcasted. The owner of the voice was in this room. "Welcome to the headquarters of my little organization. I am so glad that you all could finally join me."

Blues shivered at the familiar voice and looked towards the figure as he stepped into the light. He was different. He had what looked like a small red gem in the middle of his forehead, his hair seemed more blue than the expected gray, his eyes were hidden behind a pair of angular shades that still failed to hide how crazed his expression was, he was dressed more finely than Blues remembered, and he had a skull-topped cane that was clearly for appearances only, but still Blues could never have mistaken him for anyone else.

"Yes, it is I, Model W, the leader of Dark Sigma, the Regal King, Dr. ALBERT! WEIL! WILY! "

The expressions of the four captives were vastly different. ERROR clearly had no idea who his captor was, Rock was characteristically defiant, Roll was surprisingly murderous, and Blues?

Blues was scared out of his mind.

Not only was this the owner of the voice that haunted his nightmares, there was a definitive feeling of... wrongness about the mad doctor. Whether he was the same Dr. Wily as the original timeline didn't matter. All Blues was certain of was that this version of the man wasn't supposed to exist .

They were all in very real danger.

"Oh, it was quite the puzzle on how to get what I needed, but lo and behold, the three of you had it all along!" Wily cackled.

"And this boy..." he continued, a sinister grin splitting his face. "Why this boy is the very key to my escape from this universal prison. This infinity of repeating time."

ERROR's eyes widened as they slowly turned to stare at the doctor in horror.

"Oh, yes," Wily chuckled. "I know all about that. And I knew, the moment you came into my territory, that you were the key to my escape. My key to becoming the master of all creation! Why do you think I have spent so much effort on capturing a nobody like yourself? The indescribable essence that allows you to retain awareness and ability as time repeats itself is what I need."

ERROR pleaded something back at the doctor that Blues couldn't quite make out.

"Oh, but I can ," Wily sneered. "What do I care if your entire universe is erased as a result? My destiny awaits you pathetic fool!"

Wily turned sharply and strode to a control panel. "No more meaningless prattle! We begin immediately!" And with that, Wily threw a switch.

Energy hummed, and a strain that Blues couldn't remember feeling before, but yet recognized permeated everything. It was like the strain felt right before one of his nightmare lives had abruptly ended. He hadn't noticed the feeling those times, but experiencing it now, he somehow knew that it had happened. What was happening now was the same thing, only far greater.

The energy reached a pitch and suddenly his brother spasmed like he'd been impaled on something. The straining feeling jumped in intensity at the same time and didn't lessen. The energy rose in pitch again and the same thing happened with his sister, her face frozen in pain as the feeling of strain nearly doubled in intensity.

The energy rose once again, and Blues struggles, knowing he was next. Even then, he wasn't prepared for what he would swear was the feeling of a rod of utter wrongness being rammed straight through his soul.

The energy crackled madly, matching the doctor, as it began to probe ERROR. Each zap and spark that touched them set off a scream of agony like they were being ripped apart, and Blues was certain that in some way, they were.

The feeling of strain was practically screaming now, and Blues suddenly knew what it was. Reality didn't like what was happening. It didn't like it one bit, and it was attempting to fight back against the unnatural thing the doctor was attempting.

The energy of the machine began to rise in pitch until it too was screaming, and Wily suddenly looked uncertain. Like the resistance to his machine wasn't planned for. He began to rant and rail something, until a stray bolt of energy from the machine struck him. And then Wily himself began screaming.

The screams of Wily, ERROR, the machine, and reality itself mingled until they couldn't be differentiated from each other.

Blues knew that, eventually, something had to give.

And then something did.

CRASH

Loop 1 Part 1: Once More, From the Top

Mega Loop 1.0 - Part 1: Once More, From the Top

Yggdrasil Log: Loop activation attempt 1 using experimental procedure:

"NO! –" Rock's protest died on his lips as he blinked. He'd been about to call out a name, except he hit an error when trying to actually speak it. He remembered there was... someone who was being hurt. Badly. But for the life of him, the name wouldn't come. He checked his memory, revealing multiple lifetimes worth of memory errors so clear he would have almost sworn they were multiple lifetimes worth of actual memories. (1)

But the last one... The last one had this gaping person-shaped hole in it. Rock could remember everything around this person clearly, but the person themselves? It was like they hadn't actually existed. Rock couldn't recall their appearance, age, voice, what they wore, or even their gender.

Roll came into his room and looked at him oddly.

"Sorry, Roll," he said sheepishly. "Bad... dream? I think? Dad never said if we could. But there was... someone being hurt and I was trying to call their name, but it's not actually in my memory banks. Weird, huh?"

Roll's eyes widened, and Rock thought she might actually be shaking a little. "You too?"

"Huh?" Rock blinked in confusion.

"You..." Roll shook visibly, "remember a life where there... used to be a person, but now there's a..."

"Hole?" Rock offered, not daring to believe what he was hearing. "You..."

"I'm so sorry!" Roll tackled her brother in a weeping hug. "I couldn't protect you! I couldn't save you fro–"

"Whoa! Whoa!" Rock raised his hands in a 'stop' gesture. "Protect me from what? People and robots being in the wrong places? Musically talented robot masters? The world generally crashing because of weirdness?"

Roll opened her mouth, and then closed it. She released her brother and took a moment to center herself. "From dying, you idiot."

Now it was Rock's turn to repeat his sister's gesture. "I... don't recall dying. I came close a few times, but no closer than usual. Mostly it was just weirdness. Like existing as a video game and chasing Wily out into the 'real world' and then listening to him boast about being a ninja."

"I had a few like that," Roll admitted. "The first time, I somehow ended up in a fight with Cut Man and I tried to shoot him with a toaster. Then I was somewhere that had a personal vendetta against my clothes. After that we were all on Hawaii instead of here and I dressed like a hula girl 24/7 and never wondered why until right at the end. The time after that, I watched Wily march on the city with your head on a pike."

"Oh," was all Rock could say.

"It just kept getting worse. Instead of Xander, I ended up fighting some religious fanatic who worshipped robots as living gods and had his brain surgically extracted into Dark Man. I failed to protect an entire concert when Wily reprogrammed the band to slaughter them. I watched Terra murder you. And then there was Waltz..." Roll shuddered and Rock decided not to ask about it.

"Is that why you were so protective of me that last time?" Rock asked instead, getting a nod.

"I'm never letting you fight alone again," Roll stated vehemently. "I could never live with myself if I stood on the sidelines while you got hurt because I didn't act."

Rock sat silently for a minute. Even discounting the madness he'd lived through, multiple times it seemed, he'd never wish this kind of life on anyone. But Roll had apparently been thrust into it anyway, and he had to admit that Roll had saved his life a number of times the last go-round. She was every bit as capable as he'd ever been.

"Then I guess I'll rock," he offered his hand to his sister.

She grasped it firmly in a warrior's handshake, grinning at his offered pun. "And I'll roll."

Dr. Light stared at both of his children in astonishment. "You're both sure?"

Rock and Roll nodded in unison.

"Neither of us want to hurt anyone, human or robot," Rock told their father. "But it seems like Dr. Wily doesn't feel the same way."

"We'd prefer a peaceful solution," Roll continued, "but I don't think there is one."

"We know you don't want to build fighting robots anymore," Rock picked up, "and if we can get the others to stop without fighting we will. But–"

"If we have to fight," Roll finished, "then we have to fight."

Dr. Light sighed heavily, his expression going a little odd at their united speech.

"You're right," the scientist replied with a bit of confusion in his voice. "You're both absolutely right."

The city was in flames and both Rock and Roll, along with Elec Man and their new friends Tempo and Pharaoh Man, were too occupied rescuing people from the blaze to do anything about the source.

Somehow, both Xander Payne's anti-robot terrorist group, the Emerald Spears, and Reverend Dark's fanatical robot-worshipping cult had shown up at the robot expo. The speed at which the city effectively became a war zone rivaled anything Dr. Wily had pulled in any of their lives. (2)

"Blues!" the joint cry caused the red robot to stop in his tracks.

He'd been in an impossible position. He'd needed his energy core repaired if he wanted to continue living, and the only two he knew could do it he couldn't bring himself to trust. So he'd stopped thinking about it and just let himself walk.

He'd ended up at the Lanfront ruins. Again.

Where Dr. Wily patched him up and upgraded his systems. Again.

And no alterations to his mind.

It seemed his subconscious knew who was more trustworthy to repair him. So why did it hurt so much?

"Do you..." Roll, in yellow armor like her brothers', except molded for a female frame, looked hopeful.

"Do you remember a life where there was a person-shaped hole?" Rock finished for her.

Blues blinked behind his full-face mask. "Yes," he admitted reluctantly. He was only mildly surprised that the two of them remembered it as well.

"Do you remember any lifetimes before then?" Roll asked eagerly. "Rock and I have two completely different sets of me–"

Far easier to remove the unnecessary subroutines...

"I don't want to talk about it," Blues cut her off rudely. (3)

Hephaestus was distracted from observing the Loop activation attempt by a tone from his intercom.

"Hermes and company here to see you, sir," Herfjötur's voice called to him. Blast it all.

"Better go see what he wants," Brynhildr said from where she sat next to him. "No telling what a Trickster will get up to if you leave them to their own devices for too long."

That got him moving a little faster. He didn't want his office repainted in some garish color scheme that his wife thought was 'in' lately. And he knew that Hermes was fully capable of doing it right under his nose.

He entered the outer office, and saw Hermes with a pair of nymphs who seemed to be dressed in nurses' uniforms. Hermes was a patron of doctors and would never profane the profession, even for a gag. Which meant the nymphs had to actually be trained as nurses.

"Hermes," Hephaestus pinched the bridge of his nose, "how long have you been training nymphs as nursing staff? And why have you brought two to my office?"

"Longer than anyone thinks," Eir said from her spot napping by the wall.

"Traveler's rule 65: Never upstage a decent host," Hermes smirked.

Hephaestus facepalmed as the valkyries roared with laughter. Hermes had pretty much just said that he'd brought only two nymphs because Hephaestus was personally hosting three valkyries. He was about to fire back a cutting remark when he caught a familiar smell.

"Hermes..." he growled dangerously.

"We brought popcorn!" the god of travel grinned, pulling out a full subspace bowl of the foodstuff.

"Did you use my forge to make that?"

"Duh," Hermes rolled his eyes. "How else was I supposed to get the most divine smokey flavor in all of creation?"

Hephaestus caught himself halfway to an angry retort. He'd used his forge for cooking more than once, and it did give the food an amazing smokey flavor. "Huh... Good point."

"I thought so," Hermes grinned. "Anyway, we're here to watch the activation attempt with you. I even brought my remote terminal in case something goes wrong."

"What makes you think anything will go wrong?" Hephaestus asked, curiosity edging out the challenge in his voice.

"Your track record," Hermes returned bluntly. (4)

Hephaestus winced and acknowledged the point. His bad luck was almost as legendary as his smithy skills. It was the reason he'd sworn never to gamble.

"Anyway, why don't you invite the rest of your ladies to join us and we'll make a party of it," Hermes suggested. "Not like you haven't gone without an active secretary before and the more the merrier."

And with that, everyone had filed in and arranged themselves a bit cozily, not that anyone seemed to complain, to observe the proceedings.

"You have all three of them active?" Hermes raised an eyebrow. Hephaestus knew he wasn't referring to the valkyries. "You realize how risky that is, right?"

"Better than most," Hephaestus admitted, "but I'm not exactly swimming in options here."

"Well," Hermes offered the god of the forge some popcorn, "here's hoping it works."

"Thanks."

Roll wasn't entirely sure how it had happened, but instead of her lying about to die from Ra Moon's EMP wave, it was Tempo. Blues hadn't crashed the dedication ceremony of Mega City – this time jointly for both Mega Man (her brother) and Mega Woman (herself) – but the Emerald Spears had .

The result had been utter chaos, and both she and Rock had their hands full trying to get everyone to safety when she'd heard Dr. Lalinde scream out Tempo's name. She hadn't even known the two were still in town, but Tempo had a smoking hole in her back and looked like she'd taken a shot meant for Dr. Lalinde, the shooter nowhere to be seen.

And then the EMP had hit and she'd blacked out.

She'd heard later that the Emerald Spears had fled when Blues, once again immune to the global EMP field, showed up and showed no compunction about firing on them if they didn't hightail it out of there. It didn't stop the Emerald Spears from running around the city afterwards claiming that the event was divine providence in favor of their cause, but it had probably saved a lot of people's lives, including hers.

After she, Rock, Guts Man, Cut Man, Bomb Man, Rush, and Tango had been treated with something that could block Ra Moon's EMP field, they'd gone to the Lanfront Ruins. Once there, Blues had intervened on their behalf with Dr. Wily's first set of original robot masters and enlisted their aid rather than she, Rock, and Dr. Light's robot masters having to fight them first. It had still taken them time to work their way towards Ra Moon's lair, battling with the mind-controlled second set of Dr. Wily's robot masters along the way, and the chaos of the ensuing melee was nothing short of total.

Dr. Wily himself had shown up with Ra Thor, who Ra Moon promptly took control of, and when Ra Moon declared it was done 'playing' with them and shut off Dr. Wily's loyal robot masters, Roll simply lost it.

She'd managed to fuel up on a number of weapons from all sets of robot masters in preparation of this fight and she'd unloaded all of them on Ra Thor. It had barely been enough.

But, of course, Ra Moon couldn't leave it at that. It had to create its own version of the Yellow Devil and set it on them. She'd been too exhausted to dodge its eye-laser and had been blasted into the wall. That had set Rock off, and he was doing his best to obliterate the Ra Devil despite its personal protective energy field while Blues and the remaining Light robot masters held off Ra Moon's remaining forces.

It was then that a ragged and worn-out Dr. Wily had worked his way over to her.

"Dr. Wily?" she asked groggily.

"There's no time!" the doctor whispered frantically. "Please listen closely! Ra Moon has tipped his hand! Rock's made several direct hits to the control eye of Ra Devil, and they all should have done something , but there's been no effect at all. That tells me that Ra Moon is directly powering Ra Devil! The energy protecting Ra Devil from harm is energy Ra Moon cannot use to protect itself! His defenses can now be breached!"

"So..." Roll gathered her thoughts and tried to remember how Rock had told her this went in their original life. "Let Rock keep Ra Devil busy while I line up a shot at Ra Moon."

"Yes!" Dr. Wily hissed. "You'll likely only get one shot, so you cannot miss or Ra Moon will crush us all personally!"

"Right," she replied as she shifted both arms to cannon mode. "I'm gonna need to time this just right."

"T-two...?" Dr. Wily stuttered in confusion. "But your power matrix can't support two Mega Buster Cannons!"

The image of Tempo lying where she would have been otherwise crossed her mind. "I'm aware of that."

"Your body wasn't built for that kind of output! You'll tear yourself to shreds!"

"I'm aware of that," Roll let a tear slide down her face as she remembered the state Rock had been after this in the original timeline.

"You–"

"Dr. Wily..." Roll interrupted. "If there's anything left of me that can be repaired... If my IC chip is still intact... Take it back to Dr. Light."

She took a deep breath and centered herself, feeling the charge build up in both arms. Almost ready.

"And tell my brothers I'm sorry."

She waited until a flash from Ra Devil's laser obscured visibility before leaping to her feet and firing at Ra Moon with both barrels.

She felt her arms shatter from the overload, but as she fell to the sound of Ra Moon's death cry, she couldn't help but smile. (5)

"She's okay," Hephaestus let out a sigh of relief. "They got her repaired."

Hermes wiped some sweat from his forehead as well. Death by in-loop events wasn't generally a problem for Anchors, but having one die prematurely during an activation attempt, especially one this critical? That would be bad (6). And since all the threats so far faced were native to the universe, and of no danger to anything outside it, they were expressly forbidden from interfering.

Of course, that wasn't the only thing on Hermes' mind right now.

"You know, I was certain that the cross with Sonic's Loop would have happened by now..."

"If I was willing to accept a 10% drop in activation success, it would have," Hephaestus replied sardonically.

Hermes winced. A 1 in 5 chance of failure versus a 1 in 10 chance of failure? Yeah, he knew which option he'd choose too.

"I arranged the tandem scenario so they'll cross later in Rock's timeline," Hephaestus continued, "when Dr. Wily has no reason to rewrite the timeline to a later point in order to gain access to his full army."

Ah, that would put a fair strain on the system during a Loop activation. Especially when the Loop in question was barely holding together as it was.

Roll found her brother brooding in an empty room of the lab. "Rock? Are you okay? Look, I'm sorry about what happened with Ra Moon, but–"

"It's not that," Rock interrupted.

"Huh?" Roll blinked.

"Roll, I won't lie to you," Rock admitted. "You scared the heck out of me when you nearly killed yourself taking out Ra Moon, but I knew the risks you were taking when you signed up to fight as well. After all, they're the same risks I've taken every life I've lived and I accepted the fact that you'll be taking them as well this time. And that you've been taking them for a while already. I'm good with that."

"Then," Roll digested all that for a moment, "what's got you so worked up?"

Rock sighed. "You remember the robot expo? The one where the Emerald Spears and the Church of Robotic Superiority tried to kill each other?"

Roll gave her brother a flat look. "Who could possibly forget?"

"Well," Rock rubbed his head sheepishly at his sister's retort, "before they started shooting, I was trying to think of a way to stop them from hurting anyone and I realized something."

"What?"

"There wasn't anything stopping me from hurting them first," he admitted. "Our safeguards against harming lifeforms, the 'first law of robotics', weren't there anymore. I was so shocked that I missed it when they started shooting at each other. I checked my coding, and found the other 'laws' were also gone. I don't have to obey anyone, even Dr. Light, and there's nothing stopping me from self-terminating aside from my personal desire to live."

"Are you sure?" Roll looked apprehensive. "How could that be possible?"

"I don't know how it's possible, but it's true," Rock stated morosely. "I-I actually have full Free Will. You and Blues probably do too. I have no idea what's happening to us."

"I–" Roll wanted to state that she didn't believe it, but some part of her was insisting that it was the truth. "I have to test this."

Roll ran from the room before her brother could say anything to stop her. She found Dr. Light very quickly and ran to him.

"Dr. Light!" she called, grabbing him firmly by the hand and began tugging. "I think there's something wrong!"

"Ow," Dr. Light muttered as his daughter gripped a little tighter and tugged just a little harder than was comfortable for him. "Roll, calm down! What's the matter?"

The grip just tightened as Roll tugged even harder.

"Ah!" the scientist gasped as he felt something bruise slightly. "Roll! Let go! I can't help you if you injure me by accident!"

The grip got even tighter and the tugging even harder.

"ROLL!" Dr. Light yelped as it felt like the bones in his hand were about to crack, and he was suddenly released.

Roll took several steps back, staring blankly at the bruised hand of her father.

Dr. Light rubbed his sore hand as he looked at his daughter. He suddenly realized that she looked very scared of something.

"Roll?" he asked with concern, the pain in his hand forgotten. All that mattered to him right now was soothing whatever was causing his daughter such anguish. "Is everything alright?"

"Good," Hephaestus nodded to himself. "They're getting this out of the way now. Best to discover this new trait about themselves sooner rather than later."

"How exactly did you pull this off?" Hermes asked. "I thought only sapient, free willed entities with completely realized souls could even be considered for looping."

"Technically, I didn't," Hephaestus admitted. "Yggdrasil did. Somewhere in the branch are versions of those three who fit that description and are part of the greater identity code used to generate Loop memories, so Yggdrasil brought that code to full prominence in their individual core coding to ensure that such will always be the case when they Loop."

Dr. Light looked at his children with kindness and understanding. What they had told him was beyond belief, but it was also very clearly true. His children had true and honest Free Will, and they were scared to death of the implications.

"It'll be alright," he said.

"But Dr. Light!" Rock insisted. "We can hurt people now! We're a danger to everyone around us! It's not safe to keep us active and–"

Dr. Light cut Rock off with a simple raise of his hand. "Rock, every human being alive is a potential danger to others. We can all choose to do harm to each other as easily as we can choose anything else in our lives. But yet almost all of us are capable of living without becoming a danger to anyone around us, because we have learned moral behavior. Just like the two of you have."

He drew them both into a hug, ignoring the bruising on his hand where Roll had gripped him to test the truth of her Free Will. He couldn't fault her for that. He was a scientist, and knew the importance of testing hypotheses, and despite her design, Roll was very much his daughter. Of course she would need verification before she trusted the revelation.

"But I hurt you!" Roll cried. "And I didn't stop even when I knew you were in pain!"

"Roll," Dr. Light comforted his children, "I would have gladly born this pain a thousand times over if it meant I could ease the pain of my children by even the slightest amount. You are the ones who are hurting the most right now, not me."

His words were the honest truth, and he hoped that his children understood that.

"I remember a movie in my youth," Dr. Light told them. "Assuming I recall it correctly, one of the characters said to another that 'after you live your whole life in a cage, the whole world can seem like a very big place'. That is what you are feeling now. You have been let out of the cage formed by the 'laws of robotics' and given true freedom for the first time in your lives. It is amazing, wonderful, and miraculous. But it is also very terrifying." (7)

Roll sniffed. "But, it's too much! How can we deal with this?"

"One day at a time, Roll," Dr. Light answered. "That's all you can do with much of life I'm afraid. Understand that the enormity of Free Will can overwhelm even humans, who have had their entire lives to get used to it. The prospect of being able to choose anything is simply too vast at times to contemplate."

Dr. Light waited for a moment while his children digested this.

"But we have learned to adapt and live with it," he told them. "It is a part of who we are, and now it is a part of who you are, even if I never understand how it came about. You have the power to choose now my children, and no greater power has ever been granted to anyone."

"But," Rock protested, "what if we choose wrong?"

"Then you learn," Dr. Light told him, "and choose better the next time. I have faith in you both."

"Hey, Rock?" Roll called to her brother. This set of robot masters was... odd in a way she couldn't put her finger on. The nine robot masters and the one they supposedly served – and she hadn't yet discounted the idea that Wily was behind everything – hadn't happened in any of her weird lives. The original timeline on the other hand... She couldn't really recall them in it, but she also couldn't quite shake the idea that they'd been there. "Do you remember these guys and their master CRORQ from the original timeline?"

Rock started to answer her, only to get a look of confusion on his own face.

"You know... I'm not sure...?" (8)

"Because of you, we have to be," the green armored robot with the blue shades, yellow eyebrow-horns, and the jackhammer/pogo-stick from hell declared. "Without you two, there is no us. Let the time stream figure out the rest."

"Aw," giggled the tanned female robot in the dark navy and cream armor – complete with neon pink 'W' on the helmet – next to him, "don't be so melodramatic Quint! Stop pretending like we're them from the future! You know that's just to mess with their heads! And they're clearly not buying it, so why don't we get on with things and kill them messily? It'll be so much fun!"

Quint scowled at his companion. "Cease your inane prattle Waltz. We were reprogrammed to serve Dr. Wily faithfully and that is what we will do."

Waltz ignored him and turned towards their opponents. "See what I have to deal with? How can I get on with lovely, sweet murder when I'm saddled with such a killjoy?"

Rock just turned to his sister, who had been shaking ever so slightly since they'd walked through the door to see Dr. Wily's little duo. "You okay?" he whispered.

"I'll be fine," she whispered back. "Just need to calm myself."

"Tell you what..." Rock offered. "Why don't we switch partners this time? They're clearly each designed to get under our skins, so let's shake them up instead."

"Rock, you don't understand what she's like..." Roll started.

"I know she hurt my sister badly enough to–" Rock was cut off by an energy blast that forced him and Roll to jump away from each other.

"Quiet talky time is over!" Waltz grinned maniacally as she charged for Roll. "Happy fun killing time has begun!"

"Come, Sakugarne!" cried Quint as he hopped on his support unit and leapt high into the air so he could rain energy down on Rock.

Rock wasn't having any of this. He ignored Quint and cut across the room to intercept Waltz with a punch to the face that sent her skidding across the floor.

"Roll!" he yelled to his sister. "Keep Quint busy while I deal with her!"

Roll only nodded and turned to face Quint, who seemed confused.

"This..." Quint's face contorted in bafflement. "This isn't how this goes..."

"Rock and I aren't slaves to Fate," Roll retorted, readying her broom-staff that Dr. Light had made for her recently.

Across the room, Waltz was throwing a fit.

"No! Nononononono! You don't do that!" she screamed as she fired rapid shots from her finger cannons at her unexpected foe. "You don't hit me! I shoot up your sister while Quint carves you to pieces! That's how this wo–" a buster shot to the face cut her off.

"I'm changing the rules," Rock told her.

Waltz, half her face missing from the blast, charged at Rock while screaming incoherently. (9)

The ladies had stuck around for a while at the beginning, but as Hephaestus and Hermes began talking shop regarding the happenings in the activation attempt before them, they began drifting in and out and chatting amongst themselves.

That wasn't what was happening right now.

The nymphs Hermes had brought with him were hiding behind Hephaestus's desk while the valkyries were all out in the outer office trying to get rid of an unwanted visitor. A visitor known as Aphrodite, wife of Hephaestus and the one individual he hated more than any other.

The facts of their very final breakup were a bit sketchy, but it was known that after millennia of Hephaestus forging himself into a lover that Aphrodite could declare worthy, he'd realized that it would never be good enough. Aphrodite could never see past his average looks, imperfect form, or unromantic trade. Nor would she ever admit that the concept of Love and romance she championed could realistically continue to exist between a married couple. In short, he could become a better lover than all of the love gods combined, and she would still never be satisfied.

When he realized this, the passion that he'd kept burning for his lovely wife for so long had turned into a smoldering hate.

But, of course, Aphrodite wouldn't stand for her husband telling her that he despised her and never wanted to see her again.

When Hephaestus tried to break it off with Aphrodite, the Wrath of a Love Turned to Hate had clashed with the Fury of a Woman Scorned, and the latter had been knocked flat on its arse.

Too bad Aphrodite was never one to accept a lesson she didn't like.

She'd been looking for ways to browbeat her husband ever since, and Hermes had taken it upon himself to try and thwart them as best he could. The valkyries were his latest scheme, and something of a desperation gambit. Aphrodite may fight dirty, but her attitude made her no friends among the female warriors of the divine realm. And these female warriors were under the protection of the Aesir, a pantheon that had absolutely no fear of the Olympians. The valkyries would happily take any excuse to twist Aphrodite into a pretzel, goddess first class or no.

Hermes respected Hephaestus, and knew that he didn't deserve what would happen if he had another confrontation with his wife. She was bound and determined to browbeat her husband until he snapped completely, forgetting that underneath the Smith was a Force of Nature.

And causing volcano gods to snap never ended well.

As much as Aphrodite might deserve such a fate, Hermes didn't want to see his friend hauled in front of the Justice Gods for murdering his wife (10). And so, he was determined to keep Hephaestus distracted.

"What's up with Quint's code?" he asked, casually ignoring the muffled harridan screeches coming through the door.

"Quint got flagged by Yggdrasil as a severe Paradox risk," Hephaestus replied, clearly grateful for something else to focus on.

"His greater code was a bit of a mess, with almost half of the known instances being a legitimate future version of Rock himself."

Hermes winced at the implications of that. (11)

"Obviously we can't have multiple yet distinct instances of a potential Anchor or looper from different periods of the timeline running around regularly," the smith god explained, "especially fighting each other to the death, so Quint's code needed to be adjusted. He still has some code that will rarely manifest him as a future version of Rock from an alternate timeline, but the rest of his original code is a clone of Rock made with technology from the future and merely programmed to think he's a future version of Rock. It helped that I stabilized his remaining code by combining it with the code from a Mega Man Shadow who is similar enough to Quint that their codes already overlapped significantly."

"How about that Waltz character," Hermes continued as sounds of a scuffle were heard through the door. "What's her story? Her code seems a little... viral."

Hephaestus winced. "It is viral, but I can't fix it. When Roll took her brother's place as the hero in the attempts to Anchor through her, Yggdrasil reconciled some of her brother's main battles a little differently. It couldn't activate a version of Quint as her future counterpart since she isn't her brother, so it searched deep into the variants for some code it could use in place of Quint and found Waltz. Her code is definitely infected, but it's also corrupted enough that I can't tell where the virus ends and she begins. And Yggdrasil insists on using her as Roll's future counterpart for some reason. It's really quite maddening."

The door to the outer office opened and Eir strode in, dusting her hands off. "Sorry for leaving so suddenly like that. Needed to take the trash out. I left the others guarding the door to prevent further interruptions."

"Thank you," Hephaestus replied, clearly grateful.

It had been a very long year, Blues thought to himself.

After the incident at the Chronos Institute, it had looked like things were settling down, but Blues knew better. He'd made friends with the Cossacks and tried to head off Kalinka's kidnapping only to fail. At his advice, Dr. Cossack had instructed his robot masters to use no lethal force and fight to delay Rock and Roll only.

Even with his knowledge of the original timeline, he had barely managed to rescue Kalinka in time to stop her father from doing something drastic.

After that, Reverend Dark had apparently had his brain installed in Dark Man (Blues still shuddered at the disturbing concept) and tried to frame Blues for setting the latest invasion of robot masters on the world. Too bad for him that Blues had been hanging out in a coffee shop near city hall with his brother and sister when the man's live broadcast came on, so all sorts of witnesses, up to and including Mayor L. Dorado, vouched for him.

It was shortly after that incident had been resolved – Dr. Wily behind everything again – that Dr. Cossack had called him and asked him to stop by. It was something he didn't recall happening at all in the original timeline, and Blues had to admit to being intrigued enough to humor the man.

"Ah, welcome Blues!" the Russian scientist proclaimed as the robot in question entered the lab. "Right on time! I just put the finishing touches on Beat here."

'Beat?' Blues wondered. Sure, he knew that Dr. Cossack had developed the bird robot jointly with Dr. Light, but the bird belonged to his brother. Didn't it?

"I'm glad you came," Dr. Cossack continued. "It would have been a shame if we couldn't get Beat here registered to you. Again."

Blues blinked in surprise, though the motion was thankfully hidden behind his shades.

"Oh, yes," Dr. Cossack chuckled, somehow sensing the robot's surprise anyway, "Beat was always meant to be your companion instead of your brother's. But, sadly, you never stuck around long enough for me to give him to you. It saddens me that the one I owe everything to for saving my daughter's life has never allowed me to present him with proper thanks."

Blues wanted to apologize, but what he found himself saying instead was: "You were saying something about finishing touches?"

"Yes," Dr. Cossack replied good naturedly. "Dr. Light sent me some notes about upgrades he was giving to the companions of your siblings, and in the nature of competitive robotics scientists such as us, I simply couldn't let myself be outdone. Although, I unfortunately missed the chance to name the type of upgrades I installed. But, come, come! Let us get Beat registered to you and get your upgrades installed so you can take full advantage of Beat's."

Blues allowed the Russian doctor to work on him, but only if he remained conscious for the process. It was paranoid, he was certain, since Mikhail Cossack was the only doctor he currently believed to be fully trustworthy, but it was also the only way he could go through with it and not suffer a panic attack. In short order, the upgrades were installed and Beat was registered as his companion support unit.

"Now," Dr. Cossack rubbed his hands in anticipation, "please activate Beat's super adaptor."

"Beat," Blues commanded. "Super adaptor."

Beat's flew towards Blues and his body shifted around the larger robot, forming torso armor over Blues's normal armor. Blues could feel the flight systems now on his back and the unique weapons data that came with it. He opened his eyes and looked into a mirror the doctor had set up so he could observe himself and found a blue and white-armored Proto Man–

After all, I'm the latest model. New and improved in every way. The son Dr. Light really wanted all along.

–staring right back at him.

"There's also a special weapon attachment for your buster," Dr. Cossack continued. "Just reach the barrel over your shoulder to your back to connect it."

Blues did so and when he brought his buster back around, it looked like it had Beat's beak attached to the end. He ran some energy through it, and was only mildly surprised to see a solid sword blade materialize from the weapon. It might be larger than the Rolling Cutter or Metal Blade, but the principles of its formation were the same.

"Like it?" Cossack grinned and adjusted his glasses. "You already had the shield, and Kalinka's been calling you her 'knight in shining armor' ever since you saved her. I thought you should perhaps look the part."

Blues tested the heft and feel of the weapon. The way it cut through the air with ease. He smiled.

"It's perfect." (12)

"Are the cat ears on her helmet intentional?" Rock inquired curiously as he took in Roll and Tango's super adaptor form. Green and white actually wasn't a bad look for Roll, and the claws on her fingertips seemed somehow fitting.

"Not... entirely," Dr. Light admitted. "Sometimes I zone out a bit when designing, and end up including some rather interesting extras. What do you think, Roll?"

Roll had been examining herself over, and noted that her current super adaptor mode with Tango was a little different than the one that had been designed for her in her solo lives. However, she felt like the differences were pleasant improvements rather than detractions. For one, she felt a little less like a female copy of her brother in it.

"I love it! Nyah!" Roll purred, before realizing what she'd said and clapped her hands over her mouth in embarrassment. That had been unexpected.

"Oh, dear," Dr. Light worried. "I was afraid of that. Tango's programming was a little problematic when I was installing the upgrades and it looks like there's some personality leakage. Don't worry, it should go away when you disengage."

"Please tell me you can fix it!" Roll mewled pitifully.

"I'll do my best," her father placated, "but you know Tango's feline personality isn't exactly the most cooperative."

Rock was doing his best not to laugh. He really was. (13)

"That is some seriously buggy code there, man," Hermes observed. Not the Roll girl's problems – those were entirely the mortal programming of her and her cat, and pretty dang funny in his opinion – but that of her father, Dr. Light.

"Tell me about it," Hephaestus groused. Dr. Light wasn't supposed to invent the super adaptors until after the world robot tournament, not this far in advance of it. Right now, he should have been in the middle of developing a couple of prototype designs that would eventually produce the super adaptors, not presenting the final products to his children. So he'd examined Dr. Light's code and found a buggy section that refused his attempts to fix it.

"It's bad enough that my three Anchor candidates have Loop memory bugs accessing the failed activation attempt logs," he continued, ignoring Hermes' look of shock, "on top of the near-critical corruption of their branch code, but why does Dr. Light have to be randomly accessing stable timeline memories?"

"Wait," Hermes said, "say that again?"

Hephaestus blinked. "The buggy code is causing him to randomly access stable timeline memories. Right now, he's just getting flashes of knowledge from the baseline, but if it stays like this, he's going to be able to get them from any Loop where he existed."

"That sounds like the Dreaming state affecting several humans the Norns interact with regularly in that service Loop they run," Hermes mused. "Just not nearly as lucid."

"Dreaming state?" Hephaestus asked. "Why have I not heard about this?"

"It's not exactly common," Hermes admitted. "Heck, this is the first time I've heard of it occurring outside the Norns' service Loop. Loopers are Awake, so they automatically retain memories, skills, and powers from any Loop where they were also Awake. Dreamers are a little different. They can't retain skills or powers, but they can retain memories from past Loops even though they aren't Awake currently or were in the Loop they're accessing. I haven't heard the state being the result of a bug, but if it is then the bug is about as benign as they get."

"And if it's showing up in someone now , then I can probably expect to get even more 'Dreamers' in the future," Hephaestus sighed. "And knowing my luck, they can't all be people I'd want to be accessing Loop memories."

"Dude," Hermes patted the smith on the shoulder, "if this branch was easy to handle, they wouldn't have assigned you to it. That's the price of being as good at this as you are."

Hephaestus ignored the comment. "I swear, it's like Yggdrasil wants Dr. Light to have this code in his matrix."

"Who knows? Maybe it does. Wouldn't be the strangest thing Yggdrasil's ever done." Hermes shrugged. It was true. Hermes couldn't remember who, but some god had once said that operating Yggdrasil was like sitting down to a massive multiplayer social luck-based strategical roleplaying, world-building board game halfway through where the pieces, the dice, and the cards all had their own ideas about how to play and even the board itself wanted in on the action. (14)

Blues was racing as fast as he could. Roll had asked him to keep an eye out for a very specific type of energy signature so that he could help with one of the most dangerous enemies since Ra Moon before they got a serious foothold. And he'd still nearly missed it. He'd teleported himself and Beat as close as possible – this individual had put up a field preventing him from getting closer – and began running for his siblings' lives.

Terra of the Stardroids had arrived.

A robot yelp, with accompanying yowl, of pain pierced the air, followed by dual cries.

"RUSH!"

"TANGO!"

Damnit, he needed to move faster. "Beat. Super adaptor."

The jet pack on the super adaptor contributed greatly to his speed, but the sounds of battle in the distance told him he might arrive too late.

"ROCK!"

'Damnit.' he swore to himself. Rock had told him of Roll's potential trauma triggers, and it sounded like a big one might have just gone off. 'Damnitdamnitdamnitdamnitdamnit.'

He growled as he came within sight of the battle and saw Roll's buster shots splashing off her opponent's personal energy field. When the alien robot grabbed her and pinned her to the ground, he realized the protection didn't entirely extend to physical objects. "Beat. Blade."

The sword formed as he hurtled towards Terra, intent on taking the Stardroid's head off. Unfortunately, Terra seemed to have heard him coming and was even now beginning to turn to meet his charge. He wasn't going to get close enough to deal critical damage before Terra retaliated.

Blues swung anyway, and was rewarded with a cry of pain as Terra fell to the ground clutching his face.

"YOU INSOLENT INFERIOR EARTH ROBOT!" Terra roared, and Blues could see that his cut had carved a long scar on his face and taken out one of the alien robot's eyes. "YOU WILL PAY FOR THIS! MY MASTER WILL OBLITERATE YOU AND EVERYONE WHO DARES TO STAND AGAINST HIS RIGHTFUL CLAIM OF THIS PLANET!"

"Tell him he's free to take a number," Blues retorted. "Now get going before this costs you your other eye."

He watched Terra fume in fury, clearly believing that destroying Blues, even if the earth robot had hurt him, would not be difficult. But, in the end, the Stardroid teleported out and left them alone.

"ROCK!" Roll wailed over her fallen brother. "Please be okay, please be okay, pleasebeokay..."

Blues disengaged from Beat and went over to run a field diagnostic on his brother, and sighed in relief at the results.

"He'll be fine," he told Roll. "Repairs shouldn't even be difficult. Just take him to Dr. Light immediately along with Rush and Tango: They look like they didn't take any damage to their IC chips. I'll do everything I can to keep the Stardroids from gaining a foothold."

Roll nodded firmly and teleported herself, her brother, and their support units back to the lab. (15)

"You know, you kind of look like Dr. Wily with a fake beard and cheesy sunglasses," Roll said innocently.

Mr. X, the 'mysterious billionaire philanthropist' sponsoring the World Robot Tournament, sputtered in shock and surprise.

'Totally worth whatever he's going to do in retaliation,' Rock thought to himself as his sister continued to play the 'I'm just an innocent little girl' card. (16)

It was Dr. Wily's seventh invasion and Roll had convinced Rock to let her fight Bass in his super adaptor mode while he went on ahead. Her insistence that Bass was much more amiable when she beat him than when Rock did – something she still didn't quite understand from her solo lives – hadn't gotten her anywhere. Her use of 'paper' in the decision making process had factored in rather better.

Of course, Bass was getting on her absolute last nerve right now, and she was starting to regret the decision.

"Hahahahaha!" he had started laughing at her challenge, which had ironically been what let Rock slip past. "You?! A housekeeping model? Fight me ?! With what? A toaster ?!"

Roll fumed as Bass howled with laughter in his winged super adaptor form and flexed the claws of her own.

"Or maybe..." Bass's laughter died down and he grinned. "Maybe you find me simply irresistible? Is that it? Did you send dear old Rock on ahead because you wanted some time alone with the most amazing example of male robot in the world?"

Roll twitched.

"That's it, isn't it?" Bass grinned at her expression and flew down until his face was inches from hers.

She hissed at him. Dang it, Tango's personality programming was leaking into hers again...

"Aw, don't be like that," Bass fake-pouted. "Come on. Give me a kiss. You know you want to."

Roll's eyes grew hard, and she slashed at Bass's face with her claws.

"Whoa!" The black robot barely avoided losing an eye, only to get a kick to the stomach before he could take to the air on his wings. He doubled over in reflex, and was promptly at the girl robot's mercy.

She'd punched, kicked, clawed, and blasted him for good measure before leaving his battered form on the ground and going on ahead.

Bass lay there for a long moment before speaking, contemplating the unmatched ferocity that had laid him prone in the first place.

"I think I'm in love..." (17)

Rock had entertained the thought that he wouldn't have to face Bass while he was powered by Evil Energy in this timeline.

No such luck, though his prior knowledge of Bass's reckless fighting style under its influence had made the battle somewhat easier than he recalled.

"Seriously Bass," Rock shook his head. "What were you expecting to accomplish?"

"Heh," Bass chuckled as his body sparked from damage. "Roll looks up to you so much, I thought if I could take you out it would impress her..." (18)

Bass was trying to impress his sister? That was new.

"I probably just saved your life then," Rock folded his arms and gave Bass a flat stare. "If you'd have succeeded, she'd have cut off your head and shoved it into your torso by way of the new anal cavity she'd ripped you."

Bass stared at Rock for a very long moment. "...Yeah, she could, couldn't she?"

Blues was nervous, though few would know it.

He was about to try and face down King, a robot his memories of past lives told him was more than capable of cutting him in half in single combat.

"Please tell me you aren't wussing out," grumbled Bass, his rather interesting partner in this endeavor. Rock had said he was trying to impress Roll for some reason, and Blues had suggested stopping King would go a fair ways towards that.

"Not a chance," Blues retorted, hefting his shield. He'd have to rely on it rather than his buster given King's skill at closing range for melee. "Now follow me." (19)

"Mega Man!" yelled one of the nine figures at the top of the building.

"And Mega Woman!" cackled the lone female next to him.

"Come face your destiny!" the male continued. "Come face your future!"

"Come DIE like the little scrapheaps you are!" the crazed female jumped in front of her partner, cutting him off.

"Who are these bozos?" Bass asked the Light siblings.

"The green one is Quint," Rock explained, "A future-tech clone of me."

"Sounds like a tool," Bass huffed.

"The girl is Waltz," Roll shuddered.

"A murderously crazy future-tech version of Roll," Rock finished for her and watched Bass suppress a shudder himself.

"The seven others..." Roll began. "No idea, but they look like robot masters."

In reality, she and her brother knew full well who those seven were. The Dimensions; Dangan Man, Konro Man, Aircon Man, Komuso Man, the twin Clock Men, and Compass Man; robot masters recruited from the future by Quint and Waltz since Rock and Roll had defeated them and then brought back to the present. But Bass would never believe how they knew that.

"These guys are the Dimensions!" Waltz screeched. "And they're gonna help us scatter your pretty little circuits all over the c–urk!"

Waltz looked down in incomprehension at the energy blade sticking out the front of her torso.

"No more distractions," Quint's voice emerged from behind her with all the warmth of the antarctic. With a quick jerk of his buster arm, with which he'd produced the energy blade, he cut Waltz's torso vertically, the blade exiting the top of her head and destroying her IC chip.

Then he took his boot and pushed her lifeless body off the roof of the building.

Down, down, down the body of Waltz tumbled as the two youngest children of Dr. Light and the son of Dr. Wily watched in shock, until it shattered on the unforgiving street.

"Dude," Bass exhaled. (20)

Roll had forgotten how not fun Roboenza was. It had been a long time since she'd had it. She honestly wished it could have been a lot longer.

It was kind of hard to go out and make sure her brother was safe when she felt like coughing up a processor.

Or whatever the robot equivalent of a lung was.

Ugh, she felt terrible. (21)

"Hephaestus," Hermes said from where he was examining some data, "I've been going over this Anchor configuration of yours and I can't quite figure it out. Obviously you have three individuals you're trying to Anchor through, but this isn't a standard three-Anchor configuration. If I didn't know better, I'd say you took a two-Anchor configuration and slapped it over the commonly used one-Anchor configuration, but even then it doesn't look right."

"That's pretty much what I did," Hephaestus admitted. "Rock is the main Anchor holding up his Loop, while I set Roll and Blues to an experimental 'provisional Anchor' state to shore up both the Loop and hold Rock steady while the Anchoring process finalizes. The 'provisional Anchor' code allows for a one-time adjustment up to full Anchor, should such a thing be needed, or down to normal looper which I've set to occur automatically if the attempt succeeds without issue."

Hermes personally thought that was brilliant, but it seemed there was more to it.

"There's a possibility that it can even survive the removal of one individual in the configuration by adjusting the remaining two into a standard two-Anchor configuration before the Loop collapses."

"That sounds a little problematic," Hermes observed. "What are the odds that could even work?"

"2%" Hephaestus sighed, "but it gave me an extra 1% for the overall success of the Loop activating."

"Here's hoping we don't need to find out. Anyway, it's about time for the intersection of both Loops," Hermes stretched. The god of travel turned to where the two nymphs he'd brought were watching from an observation terminal. "And speaking of chances, how's the overall success chance holding up, ladies?"

"Holding steady at 90% Dr. Hermes," one of them saluted in a bout of sillyness while the other giggled.

'Wait,' Hermes thought to himself. That didn't sound right. He typed a few lines on his remote terminal and brought up the data.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 90%

NO CHANGE SINCE BEGINNING OF ATTEMPT INITIATION.

"Hephaestus..." Hermes began. "I know your assigned branch isn't exactly normal due to all the data corruption, but shouldn't these odds have changed by now? I mean, it took seven tries to get a variant scenario up that would let Sonic's branch stabilize and start looping, and the numbers were all over the place. They'd go down when his problems didn't get resolved properly or increased beyond expectations and go up when he solved them. So why has this scenario been holding steady at 90%?"

Hephaestus sighed. "Probably because the problem area Yggdrasil predicted hasn't happened yet."

Hermes blinked in shock. Hasn't happened yet? "I watched your Anchors nearly die before the Loop was stabilized, and that's not a problem area?! "

"Yggdrasil doesn't seem to think so," Hephaestus returned.

"Whoa," breathed one of the valkyries, Hermes couldn't tell which at the moment, "it just dropped a whole 10% after a reality warping event."

"Then it's started," Hephaestus intoned as he focused on his terminal and the data being displayed. "We're now in the problem zone everyone. Look sharp." (22)

---

1) Waking Up is hard to do. :P

2) 'Well intentioned' terrorists vs religious cult fanatics. Smart money's on 'everyone loses'.

3) Blues has issues.

4) Hephaestus keeps getting all the toughest jobs that no one else wants, don't ya know.

5) Close Call #1.

6) Not all activation attempts are equal. Some can stabilize even if the anchor candidate dies before the full Loop runs. The Megaverse isn't that lucky.

7) Free Will really is kind of scary if you think about it.

8) The Mega baseline is still a bit fuzzy in many places.

9) The Mega Men shooting dangerous opponents in the face is going to become a thing , isn't it?

10) Hephaestus does not like his wife anymore. Given that she's the Eiken admin (Aphrodite's allergic to actual work), neither does most of the multiverse.

11) Because having mind-controlled loopers time travel in order to try and kill their past selves causes problems . Pre-Loop, Yggdrasil could handle this kind of thing, no sweat. Now… not so much.

12) Tell me, does the mental image of Super Adaptor Proto Man with an arm-sword look as awesome as I think it does?

13) Catgirl Roll. Yeah, I couldn't help myself.

14) And the rules change whenever no one's looking.

15) Close Call #2.

16) They're not even online yet and they're already using Loop memories to troll their villainous adversaries. sniff I'm so proud!

17) A little something inspired by the Battle and Chase Manga. There, Roll had a crush on Bass, and he only went along with it to troll Rock. Clearly (as in, personal headcanon) this was because Bass is interested in girls who can beat the crap out of him and that version Roll wasn't battle capable.

18) Bass... shakes head Stop taking your romance cues from thought processes worthy of daytime soap operas.

19) I have a feeling that this still ended up being Close Call #3.

20) I'm with Bass on this one.

21) Roboenza: The disease where some would think being driven crazy is the preferable option.

22) Worlds Collide in 3...2...

Loop 1 Part 2: Worlds Collide Again

Mega Loop 1.0 part 2: Worlds Collide... Again (0)

Rock blinked as he felt... something wash over him. He could have sworn it felt familiar, but even the original lifetime hadn't...

Wait...

There was a blank section of his original memories that seemed to be spontaneously restoring itself. Slowly, but enough that he was sure something like what he'd just felt had happened in his original life.

He shook himself out of his thoughts and decided to go about his business. It looked like they'd come together in time.

"Hey Dr. Light," he greeted his father cheerfully as he carried a few tools into the lab, "how's Bond Man coming along?"

"Quite well actually," Dr. Light replied, looking a bit distracted as he did on occasion. "In fact, he's almost ready. I just need to finish programming his IC chip."

"I'm eager to see what he's li–"

"Hey, Rock!" Roll called from the other room. "Blues is on the line!"

"Sorry dad," Rock apologized. He and Roll had become closer to Blues over the years, but the eldest sibling still refused to speak with their father more than absolutely necessary.

"It's fine," Dr. Light smiled melancholily. "Go."

Rock joined his sister by the vidphone to talk to their brother. As tended to be the case, it wasn't a social call, and Blues got right to the point.

"Do either of you have a blank spot in your original memories that suddenly seems to be restoring itself?"

"Yeah," both Rock and Roll replied in unison.

"Me too," Blues intoned. "Be on your guard. If this is happening now, it means something's u–"

Blues was cut off by a scream in the background of his end of the call, followed by the sound of sirens.

"Gotta go," Blues rushed. "Looks like whatever it is isn't wasting any time."

And with that the call was cut off.

"Is our brother ever going to ask for help with anything?" Roll huffed.

"It doesn't seem likely," Rock postulated sadly. "Let's suit up and go help anyway." (1)

Sonic had known this was coming. He and his friends (and often-not-so-friendly-rivals) had prepared for it their whole Loop after that Hermes guy had asked if they were willing to help some newbies get online despite the possibility of severe risks. On the upside, they'd apparently finally be able to have baseline Loops instead of variants.

Sonic had long suspected that the Loops he was stuck in had never quite matched whatever his baseline was, but it was news to the rest of them.

But back to the topic at hand. Apparently at least one whole Loop, and all native loopers, had already pretty much been erased from existence trying to get these guys they were being asked to help up and running. But not only was he not the kind of hedgehog to leave people in need of help hanging, it sounded like one heck of an adventure.

And the rest of his fellow loopers, including the newest additions brought on by the Crash, apparently felt the same way in at least one of those two respects. Hermes had even promised to pull some strings so everyone would be Awake for this. Supposedly this Loop needed every bit of help it could get. It sounded easy. Just make sure that all of them got through their first Loop alive and intact, and they'd stabilize and be just like everyone else in the Loops.

But it looked like they'd still been blindsided by Eggman and... whoever he'd partnered up with – man, having to piece together his baseline memories after not having access to them for who-knew-how-many Loops was hard – shortly after the latest genesis wave. As a result, many of his friends and allies, most of whom were experienced loopers, had vanished without a trace.

It was going to be damn hard to protect the new guys when they couldn't even seem to protect themselves.

He was currently trying to talk the Chaotix; Vector, Espio, Charmy, Mighty, and Ray; into helping look for everyone, but Vector seemed hung up on the issue of payment. It was beginning to look like Sonic might actually have to fork over some serious Loop bling this time.

"Guys, please!" he pleaded. "I really think Eggman's up to something serious. These are experienced loopers vanishing and we still gotta think of the new guys we're supposed to help soon!"

"Hey, we agreed to this thing Hermes asked like everyone else," Vector reclined in his chair casually. "We'll be happy to help. Just as soon as you pay us for the last dozen or so jobs we've done for you over the course of the Loops." (2)

"This is weird," Hermes said. "The Zone search engine I made for Sonic's Loop so I could keep track of where the heck they went at times can't find where the doctors are right now. Those Zones of theirs have an annoying tendency to manifest just outside the branch and I needed a way to find them if they went in one while I wasn't watching. The Sonic Loop's Zone code is pretty unmistakable and the program should have located the doctors by now."

"That is weird," Hephaestus admitted. "Try hitching a tracer program on your boy Sonic and we'll see where it leads when they go after their foes."

"Yeah," Hermes agreed. "I tend to use the search engine because it's less resource intensive, but we need to be able to watch them." (3)

"Hey, you remember the last time we did this? Good. The doctors are watching us, so let's give them a good show until we're off their grid."

Rock recalled the hastily whispered words of his current 'adversary' Sonic and did exactly that. He fought as as much like his slowly restoring memories indicated until they could believably reconcile and force the 'roboticized master' watching them to intervene.

He and Roll had joined Blues at the bank robbery, only to find that the number of roboticized masters committing it was double what they remembered it should be, and half of them looked completely unfamiliar. Roll had managed to capture one, a yellow and white robot with a squirrel design that used an energy membrane between its limbs to fly, but the rest had escaped. Rock had gone after them, taking the hit from the blue blur that he could tell was mechanical this time around, and just barely making it through the portal before it closed. Blues had the data readings, Roll had a prisoner, and he knew his dad would be able to get him back.

He'd had a meeting with an old friend to make. (4)

Sonic had come in like last time, same entrance and same lines even, but he'd whispered the message and Rock had played along. Of course, Sonic didn't do things exactly the same way, and so Rock had to improvise. It was... surprisingly fun sparring like this with an opponent not trying to kill him.

They'd gone back over, and Rock had decided to do things a little differently himself by only calling for Rush and Eddie (Sonic had managed once again to disarm his buster). The fight had continued, both he and Sonic throwing their lines out like they were in a play, until they felt they'd delayed enough.

"That gem your buddies stole from the bank isn't yours! Just return it and I'll call off the chase!" Rock called out loud and clear.

"I didn't steal anything!" Sonic retorted with equal volume. " You're the one who kidnapped my friends!"

"I didn't kidnap anyone!" Rock yelled, counting down in his head. '3...2...1...'

Right on cue, the watching roboticized master, Tails Man, descended and engaged them. Not even pausing to examine the situation, Rock and Sonic rescued the civilians caught in the crossfire before engaging the enemy themselves. A quick use of a charged shot to stun and Sonic's spin dash to destabilize the roboticization matrix, and it was time for Rock to copy the weapon data and finish the process.

In a flash of light, Sonic's friend Tails was standing in the place of the roboticized master, looking disoriented.

"That still feels weird," Tails observed groggily.

A quick reunion, a scan of the area to make sure that no other potential spies of the doctors were watching, and they began to discuss business.

"So," Rock began, "You all are repeating your lives over as well?"

"Looping," Sonic replied. "That's what it's called. We've been at it for a while actually. I'll give you the full speech once we get back to your place."

As Rock digested the term 'looping', Tails suddenly spoke up. "Hey, isn't there an attack on your home right about now?"

"Probably," Rock allowed. "But that's why Roll agreed to wait there and surprise whoever the doctors sent for dad."

"Roll..." Sonic pondered. "That's your sister, right? The housekeeping model?"

"I don't think a housekeeping model's gonna slow down either of our doctors much," Tails agreed.

Rock smirked. "Ah, but Roll's changed. She's just as good as I am now. Even a bit better in some ways."

Roll had indeed agreed to stay behind and defend the lab. But even so, she was still surprised when Bass came to attack instead of one of Wily's other robots. His partner had pinned Blues down and grabbed Dr. Light while she engaged Bass.

"Bass!" she pleaded as she brandished her buster at him. "Why are you doing this?"

"Because my father said so," Bass sneered at her. He didn't seem to recognize her as an ally. Wily had overwritten the mind of his own son to make him attack the lab.

Out of the corner of her eye, Roll saw Blues hit with a lucky shot and fall to the floor. She needed to do something.

"Then I'll have to stop-uff!" Roll was cut off by a kick to the gut. She fell to the floor realizing she'd forgotten how competent Bass could be when he wasn't being distracted or arrogant. She groped around with her non-buster hand for something to use, and grabbed the first thing she came across. She shot with her buster and threw the item she'd grabbed, hoping to send him off balance.

Bass sidestepped the shot, but was blindsided by the toaster she threw at him. He shook his head partly to clear it and partly at the absurdity–

You?! A housekeeping model? Fight me?! With what? A toaster?!

–and managed to catch the reinforced weapon-grade broom she'd swung at his face. He caught her follow-up kick as well and then kicked her hard in the gut while she was off balance.

"Sorry doll," he sneered, "but that was your free shot and you only get one."

The girl robot glared at him with a ferocity he'd never seen before–

–but he just grinned cheekily and followed his partner back through the warp ring with their captive, leaving her behind in a damaged lab and the realization that she hadn't been able to protect her family again.

Fighting back tears, she activated her comm. "Rock... I... I'm sorry. I tried, but... But they still took dad..." (5)

Auto had been told to contact Dr. Cossack and Dr. Lalinde and tell them what happened to the lab. Considering what everyone was being told, it was probably best he wasn't there. As for the rest of them? Sonic and his friend had requested that they gather in the main lab for an important talk. And what a talk it was.

"So, we're stuck in a repeating period of time called the Loops?" Blues stared at the hedgehog known as Sonic as he went over some form of holographic powerpoint that he'd pulled out of thin air. "Run by some divine supercomputer named Yggdrasil administrated by gods straight out of ancient mythology?" (6)

Over to the side, the fox known as Tails worked on his sister's Mega Buster, modifying it to use something he called the 'Spin Dash Blast' which would be able to restore the roboticized masters to their biological state. Once Sonic was done explaining, Roll was going to use it on Ray Man, the roboticized master they'd caught.

"Yep," Sonic nodded. This was actually kind of thrilling for him. He doubted anyone in the Loops had given the 'Welcome to the Multiverse' speech to someone whose Loop hadn't even finished going live yet. "And you're not the only ones. There's all sorts of different Loops out there, each one with its own Anchor. Most of them have just one, though some Loops are divided up into sections called Linked Loops where each section has its own Anchor. You guys are the first I've come across that have more than one Anchor in a single section though."

"Finished!" Tails called out as he closed up Roll's buster. "Your turn," he said to Rock.

Rock obediently held up his own Mega Buster for the two-tailed fox to work on and Sonic continued his speech.

"Anyway, every so often you can end up in what's known as a fused Loop where you either get visitors from another Loop, you visit their Loop, or you end up in some Loop mish-mashed with stuff from both of your home universes or more. But that's not what's happening here. We're on what's known as a Tandem Run."

"Tandem Run?" Rock inquired.

"It's something that Linked Loops generally do by default since actions in certain sections are supposed to affect events in the others. But it can be done with otherwise unrelated Loops that cross each other in the baseline, like ours do. Our sysadmin, Hermes, told us that we've been stuck in variant Loops, that's when your home Loop differs from your baseline before you even do anything to change events, because our baseline can't load properly unless all the other Loops it crosses are looping or independently stable. Even if the specific baseline Loop iteration doesn't intersect with yours, you still need to be up and running for it to load right."

"And you're done," Tails told Rock as he closed up his buster and began to move towards Blues. "Your turn!"

"I really don't like anyone messing with my systems," he told the fox bluntly. "Sorry."

"And none of these 'gods' know when this will be fixed?" Roll asked.

"Hermes told me they stopped giving repair estimates a while back," Sonic admitted. "And we can't really do anything about it unless we ascend to their level, which would basically break our Loop and destroy our home universe and everyone in it. All we can do is keep going and try to stay as sane as possible and hope we don't run into anything like what caused the Crash."

"That..." Blues start–

Reality didn't like what was happening.

–ed. "That had something to do with us, didn't it?"

"Er..." Sonic looked nervous. "Yeah, kinda. Recently something destroyed an Anchor on the metaphysical level and made his Loop collapse so hard that Yggdrasil forced a system-wide reset. Set every looper to Awake to shore up the Loops and shook a few new ones out, or whatever Hermes called it, in a bunch of places. Apparently even the memories of this place are gone. Hermes said that the Anchor that was destroyed was sent to a fused Loop with you guys to get your universe patched up enough to start looping."

"The person-shaped hole in our memories..." Rock and Roll said in stereo.

"Whoa," Tails' eyebrows shot up. "You... remember the previous attempts to get your universe looping? That... I really don't think that's a good sign."

"Which might explain why they have to use three of us as 'Anchors' instead of one," Blues observed.

"Anyway," Sonic continued. "There was apparently some reality virus or something that tore apart the Anchor, only for Yggdrasil to tear the virus apart as well. So your admin asked ours to see if we'd be willing to take a risk and help get you all looping, and we all figured why not? I mean, from here we just need to save my friends, your dad, and the day, preferably in that order. I remember some of how good you guys are, so we should be done in no time."

"It won't be that easy," Blues deadpanned.

"Sheesh," Sonic groused to Rock. "Your brother always like this?"

"Yes," both Rock and Roll replied.

"Anyway," Tails observed, "we should get Ray back to normal and start getting the portal up."

"Right," Roll nodded and went to retrieve the roboticized master in question. When she returned, she put Ray Man down in the middle of the room and began charging her buster before firing.

A flash of light came from the form and when it subsided, a disoriented anthropomorphic squirrel was sitting next to a glowing yellow orb. Roll picked up the orb and immediately absorbed it, her armor changing from yellow and cream to yellow and white as she did.

"Ray Glide?" Roll said to herself and extended her arms, an energy membrane flaring to life between the arm and leg on each side. "Huh. The energy membrane allows for gliding and limited flight. Some sort of personal gravity manipulation as well to artificially reduce mass. Not bad."

"Ugh, where am I?" the squirrel asked.

"Hey Ray!" Sonic greeted. "You're over at Rock's place right now. Apparently our doc and his managed to snag you along with the others and roboticized you to fight for them."

"Rock?" Ray's brow furrowed in confusion. "Oh, right, that guy whose universe we agreed to help. Sorry, I'm still a bit out of it."

"No problemo," Sonic grinned. "Guys? This is Ray the Flying Squirrel. He's one of my oldest buds in our baseline and a member of a team called the Chaotix. He's a newbie looper like yourselves since he was 'shaken loose' as a result of the Crash, but he's still 100% awesome." (7)

"I'm really not all that great," Ray rubbed his head, embarrassed.

"The guy also has a tendency to sell himself short," Sonic grinned and gave Ray a playful noogie. "Keeps trying to compare himself to me when there really is no comparison."

"Uh, huh," Rock folded his arms. Sonic's personality was coming back to him now. Jerk, brash, overconfident, more than a little reckless, and a heart of gold beneath it all.

"Anyway," Roll cut in while Tails worked on the portal in the background. "We should try and leave someone here at the lab. Rush, Tango, and Beat are coming obviously, but Auto and Eddie just aren't enough protection if Dr. Wily and your Dr. Eggman send anyone back."

"So leave it to us," a female voice interrupted.

The room turned to see Dr. Noel Lalinde in the doorway, flanked by her robotic daughter.

"Tempo!" Roll cheered and rushed to embrace her friend. "How've you been?"

"I have been well," Tempo smiled. "Auto contacted us and we teleported right over. Mother and I will be honored to guard the lab for you while you rescue your father."

"Wow," Sonic whistled. "She certainly ages better than your dad."

"Thank you," Dr. Lalinde smiled.

Rock chuckled. "Sonic, meet Dr. Noel Lalinde and her daughter Tempo, aka Quake Woman. Dr. Lalinde, Tempo, this is Sonic and his friends Ray and Tails, the latter of which is working on getting us to where dad is."

"Got it!" Tails cheered as a ring-shaped portal opened up near the wall. "It was a little harder than I expected. The readings were a bit like the Special Zone, but also kinda... off."

"Who cares!" Sonic slapped his friend on the back. "We got us a day to go save, right everyone?"

Rock, Roll, Blues, and Ray all nodded firmly and stepped towards the portal.

"Be careful you all," Dr. Lalinde told them.

"Don't worry," Rock assured her as he stepped through the ring.

"We'll bring everyone back safe and sound," Roll finished as she followed her brother.

"Okay," Hermes concentrated on his terminal. "Trace is good and we have... whoa."

"What in the...?" Hephaestus stared at the screen.

"That... that sort of looks like Zone code," Hermes began nervously, "but it looks like it's merged with..."

"I... I think it is ," Hephaestus was pale. 'No. Not that. Anything but that... Not when the Loop is so close to stabilizing...'

The group emerged from the portal and all stared. To Rock and Blues, it looked somewhat like what their slowly restoring memories told them it should. Wildly divergent landscapes with no transition areas between them and bizarre geography that defied common sense, good taste, and several laws of physics.

But if anything it was even more bizarre than their memories depicted.

Sonic and Tails on the other hand were staring at the ground while Ray and Roll were staring at the landscape in horrified fascination. The checkered ground was different than what they were expecting. The dark brown squares were so dark as to be nearly black, and the lighter ones were so light as to be almost white. But what really got their attention was a gem embedded in the ground close by.

"Sonic," Tails looked shocked. "Is that?"

Sonic bent down to examine the gem. "Not quite, but close enough to mean trouble."

"What is it?" Blues asked.

"Grist," Sonic said gravely. "Looks like one of those things merged with one of our Zones and the not-so-good doctors lucked right into it." (8)

ANALYSIS OF POCKET DIMENSION COMPOSITE CODE COMPLETE.

'SPECIAL ZONE' CONFIGURATION NATIVE TO BRANCH DESIGNATE 'SONIC': 50%

SKAIA PROTOCOL: 50%

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 70%

---

0) A fair amount of dialogue in the Worlds Collide chapters of Loop 1.0, this and later ones, was lifted straight from the comics. Such dialogue is not my original work, and should not be taken that way. It was, however, necessary for certain scenes that were relevant to the progression of Loop 1.0 and had little or no reason why they would be different.

1) Obviously working through Blues's issues is going to take more than one lifetime.

2) I don't think the reality of how serious this is has quite hit Vector yet. Then again, Sonic should really settle his accounts more expeditiously.

3) Hmm... Does Yggdrasil have a Lost and Found they could check?

4) Ah, the old friends you didn't remember before meeting them again...

5) So... Bass went from crushing on Roll to wanting to crush Roll. I smell foul play. Or train tracks.

6) Earliest 'Welcome to the Multiverse' talk ever. As if anyone needed more proof the Megaverse is messed up.

7) Introducing Ray the Flying Squirrel, the first of several never-before-seen Sonicverse loopers (as well as several new roboticized masters). Ray had a single playable appearance in the arcade game SegaSonic the Hedgehog where he was teamed with Sonic himself and Mighty the Armadillo. His ability to glide/fly, as well as his characterization, is from the Archie Comics adaptation.

8) Oh, this can't possibly be good...

Loop 1 Part 3: Roboticized Masters

Mega Loop 1.0 part 3: Robots, Doctors, and Skaia. Oh My.

Bass glared at the two robots in front of him.

Dr. Wily's Copy Robots stared blankly back.

Bass had never liked these two, but his dad liked to have them around in case he needed to impersonate his mortal enemies Mega Man or Mega Woman. A tool-using model and a housekeeping model retrofitted for combat that Bass, who was designed solely for combat, had faced multiple times. His memories told him that he hated them both and desired nothing more than to finally prove himself superior. The strongest robot in the world. And Dr. Wily's one true son.

So why was there this niggling doubt in the back of his head? (1)

He shook his head free of such weakness and ignored the one that looked like Mega Man – Rock some part of his neural net reminded him – and looked over the one who shared Mega Woman's – Roll's – appearance. The red eyes stared back emotionlessly and were the only things aside from the acid green scarf that differentiated her from the daughter of his father's eternal rival.

There was one more difference, Bass was realizing. The female Copy Robot didn't have Roll's inn– –er fire.

I think...

"Dr. Wily wants you two to intercept and delay your counterparts and their allies while he and Dr. Eggman finish their joint project. Take the Genesis Unit with you. Do not fail."

The two Copy Robots grinned evilly as they processed their orders. "Yes, sir."

Hephaestus's valkyrie probation officers had seen the emergency for what it was and told him he could do what he needed to to keep the branch from collapsing. Apparently he was allowed some leeway in his probation when the situation was urgent. He hadn't questioned it. He'd just said thanks and gotten to work.

The Skaia Protocol was one of those things that was... complicated. It was effectively the mortal manifestation of a universe generation program in Yggdrasil's system. An important part of the subroutines that permitted Yggdrasil to 'grow', and thus it couldn't simply be taken offline or set to Read-Only. It had to run.

Unfortunately, the fact that mortals could access and use it to make their own universes was a problem. The Homestuck place was the looping area of the branch where the Skaia Protocol was housed, and significant effort had been put in to making it an independently stable universe in no need of an Anchor, which had then been quarantined from the possibility of fused Loops.

But the Skaia Protocol itself was... less easily contained. Instances of it 'drifted' around Yggdrasil's system where they could fuse with who-knew-what and/or Anchors could encounter them. And if those instances created universes that were not properly quarantined, then those universes could then generate additional instances of the protocol.

Any time an Anchor looped into an instance of the protocol, it was immediately flagged by the system. A quarantine team was then sent to debrief the Anchor, and any other looper involved, at the beginning of their next Loop and confiscate anything... problematic.

The Skaia Protocol and items from it... rarely reacted well to established universal code. Using them in an established universe could potentially do far more damage than simply causing a Loop iteration to fail.

The Grist that could be harvested from the monsters that tended to inhabit instances of the Skaia Protocol were, in a way, bits of Yggdrasil code manifested in a form mortals could understand. If you knew what you were doing, you could use Grist to make anything you could imagine. If you didn't know what you were doing, you could cause the reality around you to crash.

And two mortals who liked to frequently straddle the line between knowing and not knowing what they were doing had chanced upon an instance of this protocol. An instance that had somehow become enmeshed with a type of pocket universe known as a Special Zone where the laws of space and time could be freely bent any which way the mortal master of the Zone chose. And they had given themselves plenty of time to learn just what they could do with all this.

Hephaestus would have dearly loved to shut the thing down and toss everyone back to their home Loops, consequences be damned, but Yggdrasil seemed to be of the mind that the leeway on his probation didn't extend that far.

ACCESS DENIED.

NO SIGNIFICANT CHANGES CAN BE MADE TO BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' WITHOUT AUDIT AND APPROVAL OF YGGDRASIL OVERSIGHT COUNCIL.

CONTACT RELEVANT OVERSEER TO ARRANGE AN AUDIT.

'Relevant Overseer' meant his father. Zeus.

Damnit. (2)

"Dr. Eggman's your father?!" Rock stared at the two-tailed fox in confusion.

"Sort of," Tails replied. "He's not in most variants or the baseline, but since Hermes couldn't use our baseline to start our Loop, he apparently ran several different variants until one worked which was then used in place of our baseline as our most common Loop. And in that one, I'm a genetic experiment by Dr. Ivo Robotnik, Eggman's original name, which makes him my father the same way Dr. Light is yours."

"I can understand that," Rock nodded.

"He's actually not that bad a guy there," Tails explained. "Sure he's still a 'villain', but that's the result of a type of mental condition called Science Related Memetic Disorder, or SRMD for short. 'Eggman' was the personality he took on when he suffered an attack and even that part of him subconsciously wanted to be stopped every time. Even at his worst he'd be considered a villainy hobbyist compared to the current version. I was kind of looking forward to him joining us in the Loops, but I guess I know why he won't be if this version is his baseline. Still, I can hope, right?" (3)

"Right," Rock agreed firmly, sympathetic to the fox's plight. He could only imagine if the man he'd always known as his father turned out to be just a small part of some–

Rock's musings were cut short as Rush tackled him out of the way of a buster shot. Looking up, he saw the Genesis Unit; Buster Rod G, Hyper Storm H, and Mega Water S; along with both of the Copy Robots.

"Tango!" Copy Roll admonished the feline who'd rescued his sister from being shot like Rush had rescued him. "Bad kitty! No treats!"

Dr. Wily was trying to ignore his growing headache now that the last Chaos Emerald had been secured. He and his new partner had gotten together with a brilliantly ambitious plan to use this one-of-a-kind pocket zone to make themselves into the absolute omnipotent rulers of their respective universes. With this place serving as a convenient spot to meet each other over tea between forcing their local populaces to recognize their greatness.

But he kept getting the damnedest headaches. He'd have taken something for them, but they came with ideas. Flashes of memory, or perhaps precognition? They'd led him to talking Ivo into making double their original number of roboticized masters, and they'd convinced him to bring forth even more robot masters for his army.

Now they were telling him that Ivo could become a threat. But... Ivo was the friend he'd always wanted. One who could not only match his brilliance like Thomas, but still respected Wily's as well. Sure, it descended into rivalry at times, but that was to be expected of capable geniuses like them.

"Fine!" he declared. "Whoever's nemeses manage to survive the longest can claim their world is superior!"

"It's a bet!" Ivo declared as he enthusiastically shook on it.

Could Ivo really betray him? Hmm... better put some contingencies in place.

BEEP "Hi, you've reached the personal line of Zeus, Lord of the Olympians and God of Storms First Class. Remember to vote Zeus in any and all upcoming elections! Zeus: The god who has only the best in mind. I'm sorry I can't come to the line right now, but I'm either attending to important business or entertaining a guest. Please leave a message and I'll get back to you as soon as possible." BEEP

"YOU LAZY WOMANIZING POLITICIAN!" Hermes screamed into the phone. It was not the first message he'd left. "STOP BEDDING WHOEVER YOU MANAGED TO CON THIS TIME AND DEAL WITH

SOME ACTUAL DAMN BUSINESS FOR ONCE! IF YOU DON'T RUSH THAT AUDIT THROUGH IMMEDIATELY I'LL MAKE CERTAIN THAT YOUR WIFE KNOWS EXACTLY WHO AND WHAT YOU DID IN HER OFFICE RECENTLY!"

Hephaestus was meanwhile examining Dr. Wily's code. He'd sworn he'd seen a virus in it a few times, but the dang thing vanished whenever he took a closer look. But it was a different piece of code he was looking at right now, and not one that boded well for this branch or the activation attempt.

Dr. Albert W. Wily had the same 'Dreaming Bug' in his code that Dr. Light had. (4)

Sonic was handling Buster Rod G without a problem, Tails was having only minor issues with Hyper Storm H, Blues was in a defensive stalemate with Mega Water S, Rock was in an evenly matched aerial duel atop Rush with the male Copy Robot on an Item-2 jet, which left Roll and Ray to handle the female Copy Robot.

And she'd gotten a lucky shot on Tango.

"Don't hurt my cat!" Roll yelled as she fired on her double, only to have each shot intercepted.

"Aw, poor Roll!" Copy Roll grinned as she dodged a tentative strike from Ray and hopped aboard her own Item-2 jet to gain the aerial advantage. "Can't fly. Can't keep up. Should have just stayed in the kitchen!" (5)

"I-I'll show you!" Ray stuttered as he flew up and got in Copy Roll's face.

"Get off me you stupid rodent!" Copy Roll screeched as she swatted the young squirrel-person off of her.

But that moment of distraction was all Roll needed to activate her Ray Glide weapon and fly up herself using a jump and her own artificially decreased mass. And unlike using the Item-2 jet, she didn't need to worry about keeping her footing.

Roll crashed into her double and tackled her off the Item-2 jet, sending both into a fall. Roll positioned herself in such a way that she landed on top and drove her copy's body into the hard ground.

Off to the side, she saw Rock take out his double with the Tail Wind. Sonic and Tails had already defeated their adversaries, and Blues, upon seeing the rest finished, let out a sharp whistle and let Beat take out Mega Water S from behind. Tango came to join her, not particularly any worse for wear.

"Well," Sonic grinned, "that was fun! Wonder what the docs'll throw at us next."

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 60%

The group had walked through a number of areas, braving hazards native to both worlds. They also occasionally had to deal with robotic versions of things Sonic informed them were called 'Underlings'. He didn't seem all that thrilled about their current robotic nature either.

Eventually, they had located a series of springs that allowed them to rapidly climb to higher ground, where they saw the imposing form of the Wily Egg in the distance. And behind it in the sky on either side was a golden sun and purple moon made into the likenesses of Eggman and Wily respectively.

"Yep," Sonic deadpanned. "Same old doctors. Subtle as a meteor impact."

"Elec Man prefers the term 'blown transformer'," Roll chimed in.

"Eh," Sonic shrugged. "Po-tay-to, po-tah-to."

"Hold on everyone," Blues cautioned. "The sun and moon don't look right."

"I-I don't think those f-faces would look right on anything," Ray offered.

"Not that," Blues cut him off, concentrating. "Rock, Roll, take a look at those with your Sit-Rep scanners."

His siblings nodded and in a moment, both sported shaded visors like their brother. (6)

"Wait, you guys have cool shades too?" Sonic blinked. "Then why is your brother the only one who uses them?"

"Because I'm the military model of the family," Blues intoned. "The shades contain a comprehensive Sit-Rep system I like to have available at all times."

"And he likes wearing shades," Rock smirked.

"I look good in shades," Blues shot back as his siblings turned to gaze upon the deformed sun and moon.

"Are those..." Roll gasped.

"...cities?" Rock finished.

"As far as I can tell," Blues allowed. "Heavily damaged, but the glow from both hides it. The doctors must have destroyed them before remodeling their appearances."

Tails drew in a sharp breath. "Prospit and Derse... The doctors... took them both out? At once?" (7)

"Y-you've heard of them?" Ray inquired nervously.

Tails nodded absently. "Prospit is the guardian of Skaia and protects it from Derse, but is forever doomed to fail. They both are supposed to have armies. Fleets."

"Like the one Eggman keeps building over and over even when he's not a completely evil douche?" Sonic reminded the fox.

"And Wily's made at least one space station with weapons that could easily demolish either of those places directly," Rock nodded.

"What's going on here?" Tails wondered. "This is clearly some version of the Skaia Protocol, but everything is different from how it's supposed to run! And on top of that, we haven't run into any of our friends yet!"

"Awwwww," the unmistakable condescending voice of Dr. Eggman pierced the tableau, "does wittle Tails miss his wittle friends?"

The group of robots and mobians turned to meet the speaker. There in the sky, riding in their personal trademarked flying machines were Drs. Eggman and Wily. Along with no less than sixteen roboticized masters. Made from the friends and allies of Sonic, Tails, and Ray.

The Light siblings got pings from the robots' transponders, revealing their identities.

Knuckles Man

Rose Woman

Shadow Man

Silver Man

Blaze Woman

Charmy Man

Espio Man

Vector Man

Marine Woman

Cream Woman

Mighty Man

Shade Woman

Acorn Woman

Boomer Man

Cool Man

Bunny Woman

"Let's turn that frown upside down, whaddaya say?"

"Screw it," Hermes suddenly said, stopping the frustrated pacing he was doing in the office. Zeus had finally picked up, and hadn't exactly been enthusiastic about pushing through an audit allowing necessary changes to the universe his son was administrating. He'd still agreed, but it was clear he did so under protest and threat of irate wife.

"What?" Hephaestus looked puzzled.

"So we're cut off from the higher adjustments we're normally allowed to make," Hermes stated. "So Zeus is being himself as usual. So what? What can we still do?"

Hephaestus sighed. "Analyze data. Send subconscious nudges to the inhabitants that they could very well ignore. Standard temporal flow adjustments normally used for coding moment-to-moment. Maybe a minor intervention or two. Why?"

Hermes slid purposefully into his seat by his remote terminal. "Because I'm Hermes the trickster. And you're Hephaestus, the most successful survivor of creation's crap the Olympians have ever produced regardless of how unintentional. We've worked with worse."

Hephaestus blinked, and his face hardened with purpose equal to his fellow's as he turned to his own terminal.

"Indeed we have."

Dr. Albert W. Wily had been enjoying the ensuing melee between his and Ivo's ingenious joint creations and their eternal foes. One half, the half his mysterious ideas suggested would have been all they'd made by this point, had gone after Sonic, Mega Man, Proto Man, Rush, and Beat. The other half had gone after Mega Woman, Tails, Tango, and that skittish squirrel Ray.

Of course, then Proto Man had to spoil everything by fleeing the battle to go on ahead and rescue Thomas.

"EWN-001 through–" Ivo had begun, before a headache-induced flash of insight caused Wily to cut him off.

"No, Ivo," Dr. Wily stopped his partner. "He's too good at leading others on a wild goose chase. Let the Egg Denizens take care of him while the roboticized masters end our eternal headaches for us. Besides, we know where Blues is going. So long as we get there first, we can set up some 'surprises' for him."

"Yes..." Eggman mused. "You're quite right. Why, I don't know what came over me!"

"I'm afraid these 'heroes' can bring that out in even the best of us my friend," Wily sympathized.

"Yes, they do tend to thwart genius like ours by not playing their roles properly, don't they?" Eggman mused darkly.

"Perhaps we should return to our base," Wily suggested. "Front row seats like these are wonderful, but we do still have some work to finish. Eyes on the prize and all that."

"Of course," Eggman agreed, "of course. Good thing we installed those portable surveillance monitors, though, right? Work and entertainment all at once!"

"Oh, yes! Quite the inspired idea of yours!" Wily agreed as the doctors made their way back to their base. (8)

The battle with the roboticized masters was shaping up to be rather difficult. The allied robots and mobians were all quite skilled and experienced, but they were also decidedly outnumbered by powerful opponents.

Roll, Tails, Ray, and Tango had been effectively separated from the rest of the group. They were being pinned down by half of the roboticized masters and slowly overwhelmed.

In fact, Roll felt the only thing keeping her in the game was what appeared to be a heightened state of situational awareness. An almost zen-like battle state where she could react to her opponents as fast as they were able to threaten her. If she didn't know better, she'd swear someone was whispering the right moves to make directly into her mind. She was currently engaged with the tonfa-like Electric Blades of Acorn Woman when such an insight came to her.

Behind you. Duck.

Dropping to the ground, she avoided the energy-draining blades of Shade Woman and backed away from the stealth-black robot...

MINE! Ray Glide!

And straight toward one of her Stealth Mines that promptly exploded. Fortunately, the quick switch to the Ray Glide weapon reduced the damage to minimal and allowed her to ride the explosion upwards where she saw Tails dealing with the trio of Bunny Woman, Cool Man, and Boomer Man while Tango sowed confusion among Mighty Man, Marine Woman, and Cream Woman. Ray tackled Acorn Woman from behind, leaving her a clear opening to take down Shade Woman.

Using the Ray Glide to ride the air, she came down into a dive that Shade Woman failed to dodge, sending them both into a skid that Roll was in significantly more control of. She dismissed the Ray Glide and began charging up her Mega Buster for a Spin Dash Blast as she essentially surfed her opponent across the ground, unleashing the blast and vaulting off the robot in a single motion.

She took note of the female anthropomorphic figure – an echidna? Maybe? – in what appeared to be a special ops bodysuit as she grabbed the nearly-black orb and absorbed the Stealth Mine weapon, turning black and gray. (9)

"One down!" Hermes exclaimed in triumph as he continued the feed of subconscious communication to his portion of the battlefield.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 58%

Sonic was doing his best to support Rock since Blues, along with Beat, failed to draw away any of their opponents. The robo-dog rush was doing his best to help, but even then, the best he was managing was knocking their opponents off balance for a second or two so Rock would have a chance to blast them. He hadn't even had enough of a breather to whip something out something from his subspace pocket.

Shadow Man on your six.

Sonic didn't even question where the intuition came from, he just whipped around in time to see Shadow Man getting a bead on Rock with his Chaos Cannon.

"Rock! Look ou–" the blue blur was cut off as he dove between the blue bomber and his opponent to take the temporal stasis blast meant for the other.

Fortunately, Rock didn't hesitate a moment longer than Sonic. His color shifted to orange and white even as the hedgehog was shouting his warning. As Sonic took the blast meant for Rock, the robot was firing a shot of the Tail Wind at the roboticized assailant.

"–t!" Sonic gasped as Shadow Man went down, and the temporal distortion ended. He was up and running interference an instant later as Rock charged up his make-it-all-better beam and restored Shadow to normal, taking the orb with his weapon as well.

"Hey Shadow!" Sonic called out to his dark rival as Rock's armor turned black and red. "We could use some breathing room here!"

The genetically engineered 'ultimate lifeform' unlocked his limiter rings and began glowing red as he dove into the middle of the remaining roboticized masters. (10)

"CHAOS BLAST!"

Sonic grinned as he pulled out one of the swords he'd snagged from those variant Loops where he kept getting sucked into storybooks. It wasn't Caliburn – Sonic had no idea where the looping artifact, known by most as Excalibur, had gotten to these last few subjective centuries – but it would do. (11)

Hephaestus nodded to himself as he continued to type away, doing his best aiding the loopers in their battle.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 56%

Shade – who apparently was indeed an echidna – had recovered quickly and engaged Acorn Woman with Roll as Ray went to help keep the rest of the roboticized masters occupied. The plan was to distract their opponents as much as possible while Roll restored them one-by-one. Hopefully it would keep working.

Lead her into a mine.

As Shade crossed her energy draining blades with Acorn Woman's electric ones, Roll set one of the Stealth Mines behind the latter and switched to her Mega Buster as she motioned for Shade to lead Acorn Woman into the mine.

The explosion went off and downed the female robot just as Roll finished charging. A moment later and there was a female anthropomorphic ground squirrel in boots, gloves, bicycle shorts, and a blue vest rubbing her head next to an electric blue orb.

"Give me a moment," the female squirrel said, shaking off her disorientation as Roll absorbed her master weapon, the Electric Blades, and turned brown and blue. A pair of bracelets on the squirrel woman's arms hummed to life and produced a pair of energy blades identical to what her robot form had possessed. (12)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 54%

"CHAOS CANNON!" Rock yelled as he blasted Silver Man, only to take a hit from Blaze Woman before Shadow could engage her. Nonetheless, he switched to his Mega Buster and reached full charge as the temporal stasis field around Silver Man collapsed and the two fired at each other.

Rock's memories of such a cross-counter blast of energy happening before restored themselves as the two shots effectively proved no impediment to each other and both hit their targets full-on. Rock struggled against the psychokinetic field produced by the Psycho Burst for a moment before the restored Silver made himself known.

"Sorry about that," the temporally displaced looping hedgehog apologized as he raised his glowing arm towards Rock. "Let me see what I can do." (13)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 52%

Cool Man and Bunny Woman had broken off from Tails, Ray, and Tango to engage Roll. Fortunately, Shade was able to waylay Bunny Woman while Roll and Sally, the squirrel woman and apparently princess, double-teamed Cool Man.

The energy of Roll's Electric Blades arced around the coyote-styled robot's Trick Sword and stunned him when the two clashed, allowing Sally to score a disabling shot from behind while Roll charged up the shot to restore the roboticized master to normal.

One blast later, and Roll was being hastily introduced to one Antoine D'Coolette as she absorbed the Trick Sword, turning red and brown.

"Madame!" the coyote mobian pleaded frantically, gesturing at Bunny Woman. "You must help my wife!" (14)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 50%

The now teal and white, with helmet colors reversed, Rock made his way towards Blaze Woman as Silver shielded him from stray shots. The fire-based roboticized master had decided to engulf herself in a pillar of flame that made her impossible to physically approach, making it imperative that they restore her next.

Rock fired the Psycho Burst weapon straight through the flame, causing it to dissipate and Blaze Woman to freeze in place. Trusting Silver to cover him, he switched over to his Mega Buster and charged up a Spin Dash Blast before firing on the robotic pyromaniac.

"Ugh," Blaze the Cat muttered as she was restored to normal. "That was no more pleasant than last time. Thank you again." (15)

"Any time," Rock smiled as he collected the weapon orb for the Fire Tornado, turning violet and white.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 48%

Bunny Woman's laser weapon was immensely powerful, but it appeared that while the Trick Sword of Cool Man was highly conductive, it was also very reflective in nature. Turning away the laser blasts with ease, Roll kept Bunny Woman distracted while her allies surprised her from behind and pinned her arms long enough for her to charge and fire the restoration blast from her Mega Buster.

As she picked up the weapon orb for the Rabbot Laser, turning brown and pink, she saw the rabbit woman, who still had three robotic limbs , blink in disorientation before grabbing the coyote in a hug.

"Sugah 'Twan!" the cybernetic rabbit cried in a southern drawl. "Ah was afraid ah'd never see ya again!"

Roll blinked at the mobian cyborg. "Er, are you sure you're fully restored?"

An explosion sounded, and the group turned to see a swarm of little blue robots, all crying 'omochao' in mechanical voices, cover the battlefield.

"Maybe ah should fill y'all in later..." the cyber-lagomorph replied, wide-eyed at the latest development. (16)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 46%

Rock's memories of the fighting styles of the roboticized masters were restoring faster and faster. Thus he knew full well how painful dueling Rose Woman and her Piko Hammers could be. And so he didn't hesitate for a second to use the Fire Tornado on her full blast.

A quick charge and shot with his altered Mega Buster, and the pink hedgehog was shaking out the cobwebs of returning to her normal body as Rock picked up her weapon orb, changed colors to red and pink, and rushed towards the next roboticized master. (17)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 44%

The restored mobians were desperately fending off the swarm of robotic Omochao sentinels as Roll blasted her way through with the Rabbot Laser in search of the source.

She found it in the form of a smaller lagomorph-model roboticized master, Cream Woman, floating in mid-air and fired. The small robot was taken off guard and fell to the ground as Roll switched out her weapon and charged up to restore the roboticized master. At the last moment, one of the Omochao sentinels placed itself in the path of the blast.

Roll shielded her eyes from the double flash of light and saw not only a young rabbit girl – one who had to be years younger than Kalinka was when she and Roll first met – but also a non-robotic Omochao thing.

"Cheese!" the rabbit girl cried in worry and relief.

"Chao!" the blue organic Omochao-like thing returned, flying to embrace the girl.

Roll began fuming as the swarm of Omochaos began falling to the ground without their master to guide them. 'A child?! Eggman! Wily! You utter bastards!' (18)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 42%

Rock's acquired Piko Hammer met the Sharp Knuckle of Knuckles Man head-on, and the latter broke.

A pounce from Rush and a spin dash from Sonic as he switched weapons and charged up were all the distraction needed to restore the next of Sonic's allies. (19)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 40%

A furious cream and red Roll fired Omochao after Omochao as she closed in on the super-strong Mighty Man. She needed to vent some frustration and this roboticized master looked like he was armored enough take it. The Omochao sentinels dodged the powerful punches of Mighty Man and knocked him off balance as Roll switched weapons and charged. In both senses of the word.

Getting close to Mighty Man, she leveled her blaster point-blank at his torso and fired.

"Ugh," the armadillo mobian coughed as he was restored. "Anger management issues much?" (20)

"Sorry," Roll apologized. "I saw what Eggman and Wily did to that poor rabbit child and I had to hurt something."

"Understandab–" the armadillo man started before his eyes widened.

Behind you!

Roll was turning and grabbing Mighty Man's weapon orb before the flash of insight even came. Turning red and yellow, she equipped the Mighty Blow weapon and punched– –shattering the sonic energy from the Acoustic Blaster of Vector man. The red and white Rock winced at the mild recoil doing that with the Sharp Knuckle incurred before re-engaging the crocodilian Vector Man.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 38%

"Unacceptable levels of resistance," Vector Man intoned mechanically as Rock dueled him at close range. "Self-destruct option authorized. Self-destruct of remaining units in two minutes fifteen sec–"

Rock laid the roboticized master out with a blow to the head and wasted no time restoring him to normal and grabbing his weapon orb (21). Turning green and lime as he equipped it, he focused on locating Charmy Man. He had to restore the remaining allies of Sonic quickly. There was no time to waste.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 36%

The revelation of a self-destruct option from the walrus-model Boomer Man made Roll's circuits go cold as she deflected another blast of the Shockwave Boomer around her with the Mighty Blow. She had to step things up.

Marine Woman was being kept busy by Tails, Ray, and most of their restored allies until she finished with Boomer Man, so there was minimal chance of interference from an outside source as she charged Boomer Man and laid him out with a powerful body blow.

Roll quickly switched out and restored Boomer Man to normal (22). Ignoring the walrus as he shook himself free of disorientation, she grabbed his weapon orb and equipped it, turning purple and yellow as she did, and turned to face the last of this half of the roboticized masters.

Only for a wall of water originating from Marine Woman to erupt, flinging all of her allies every which way.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 34%

Charmy Man had proved annoyingly agile and able to evade attacks from not only Rock but also Sonic and his allies for a whole minute.

"Submit to termination," the bee-themed robot announced. "Self-destruct in one min-bzzt!"

Fortunately, Rock had recalled that the Acoustic Blaster was chargeable, and the larger blast was much harder to avoid.

Walking up to the downed roboticized master, Rock switched weapons, charged his Mega Buster, and fired.

"I don't feel good..." Charmy Bee moaned. (23)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 32%

Roll had barely withstood the torrent of water Marine Woman unleashed, but withstood it she had. Now she was looking at a roboticized master encased in protective water and free to fire her Hydrokinesis weapon at will.

But then, Roll was well aware that sound traveled quite well in water. The Shockwave Boomer didn't even lose a decibel as it plowed through the aquatic protections and downed the raccoon-model robot.

Roll restored Marine Woman and felt another jab of fury as she beheld that the mobian was a girl roughly the same age as the rabbit. Did Eggman and Wily have no shame?!

"All hands on deck, ye cobbers," muttered the raccoon youth. "Yer captain demands it, mates... Avast and ready the main cannons..."

Roll blinked as she collected the weapon orb, turning green and brown, and stared at the girl in confusion. (24)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 30%

"Well, that looks like everyone," Sonic sighed in relief as Rock collected Charmy Man's weapon orb and turned black and yellow.

"Is it?" Knuckles asked, uncertain. "I don't see Espio."

Sonic's eyes suddenly widened in a panic when he realized he had no idea where the ninja was, or had been for most of the battle.

"Where...?" he began, only to be cut off as Rock casually fired the Rapid Stinger over his shoulder, hitting a cloaked Espio Man who was directly behind him in the process.

Without even turning around, Rock switched to his Mega Buster, charged up, and restored the chameleon to normal.

"Heh," a groggy Espio snorted. "How did you know?"

"Let's see," Rock smirked. "You were a ninja robot programmed for silent elimination of the enemy with a clear shot at my back. Where else would you have struck?" (25)

Espio chuckled at that and stood up, picking up his weapon orb as he did so.

"The Chroma Camo," he declared as he gave it to Rock. "May you do as well with it this time as you did the last."

"I promise," Rock bowed respectfully, turning purple and black as he absorbed the weapon into his databanks.

Hephaestus blinked from where he'd been about to hit the 'enter' key on his terminal and send the subconscious communique to Rock. "Huh. He didn't even need help for that one."

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 28%

"Hey, Hephaestus?" Hermes called from his own terminal. "Why the heck are the numbers still dropping when our boys are clearly winning?

"Obviously the doctors have something very nasty in store in case they get desperate," Hephaestus postulated, "and with each decisive victory our loopers achieve, the more likely that desperation gambit becomes."

Dr. Light sighed in his cramped cell as the two mad doctors walked away. Really, what was the point in chiding him over his choice in facial hair? Albert had gone around the bend before, but he seemed even more unhinged than usual.

A sound outside his cell caused him to look up, and when he did he beheld an anthropomorphic bat woman that he knew he'd never seen before. Despite this, some part of his mind insisted she was familiar. The bird on her shoulder however, was completely unfamiliar even to the feeling of deja vu.

"Dr. Light, I presume," the bat woman smirked in greeting. The bird on her shoulder simply considered him with an unusually acute intelligence in its eyes.

"Why, yes," the scientist blinked in surprise. "May I ask who you and your companion are?"

"You can call me Rouge," the bat woman smiled. "I'm a spy, and right now your best friend. My colleague here is called Omega. He's a flicky who normally serves as the biological AI of my heavy artillery support." (26)

The bird chirped smugly.

"Indeed," Dr. Light raised an eyebrow. A strange concept, but he'd come across stranger.

"The only reason he's out is because this mission requires stealth instead of muscle," Rouge continued, ignoring Omega's displeased look. "We were in the middle of an investigation when one of the Copy Robots abducted our partner, a mistake on her part. She made this personal."

Dr. Light was impressed with Rouge's knowledge and resourcefulness, and told her so. As he did, Omega flew off to examine something nearby.

"Oh, honey," Rouge dismissed, clearly flattered. "You have no idea."

"Are you here to rescue me?" he asked her.

"Yes and no–" Rouge was cut off by an alarmed chirp from Omega, but before she could react a clear tube had sprung out of the floor straight to the ceiling, entrapping her in it. Omega tried to fly away, but an electrical arc stunned the bird and deposited him on a portion of floor that disgorged a clear tube around his form like the one that held Rouge.

"Oh, bravo Ivo!" came the cheery voice of Albert Wily applauding from the doorway. "Superb catch!"

"Oh, you flatterer!" Dr. Ivo 'Eggman' Robotnik returned in a teasingly coy manner. "As if you didn't predict a rescue might be attempted!"

"Eggman! Wily!" Rouge spat angrily. "Just what do you think you're going to accomplish with this?!"

"Oh, nothing much," Eggman grinned. "Just finishing up the membership of our roboticized masters."

"Like you can keep me from breaking out between here and there," Rouge taunted.

"Between...?" Dr. Wily began in confusion before both doctors cracked up laughing.

"Oh, my dear Rouge," Eggman wiped a tear of mirth from his eye. "You always had the best sense of humor. The robiticization chamber is this very room! It was Albert's genius idea to make it and the prison cells in the same place so when we caught someone trying to free a prisoner, there wouldn't be any fuss at all! Just spring a trap and flip a switch!"

Rouge's eyes widened in horror.

"Speaking of switches, Ivo," Wily gestured to one on the wall. "Would you do the honors?"

"Why, thank you Albert!" Eggman grinned as he did exactly that. Energy coursed over Rouge and her avian companion and when it subsided, there were two more members of Eggman and Wily's forces standing in the room.

"Be grateful, Thomas! For you bear witness to the most dangerous of our roboticized masters!" Wily cackled as he and his partner prepared to finish the introduction in unison.

"Rouge Woman and Omega Man!"

---

1) Don't you hate those memories you can't quite grasp?

2) As if this situation needed more problems.

3) The Sonicverse has been running primarily on a game-based variant with some interesting fanon history and a characterization of Eggman based on some stuff from the comic Ruins Of The Fourth Wall by Jen Irwin instead of a canon baseline until... this Loop actually.

4) Zeus: The divine politician. Dr. Wily: Mad scientist and would-be conqueror randomly accessing Loop memories. Can I get a refund on this recipe?

5) The Copy Robots are jerks.

6) How you make Cool Shades even cooler.

7) I had to wiki all of my Skaia/Homestuck knowledge. That said, anyone who's familiar with that continuity fubar is probably getting a sinking feeling right about now. Assuming they hadn't already.

8) Dr. Wily just got Dr. Eggman to drop the Villain Ball. That sinking feeling is getting stronger.

9) Shade the Echidna's only game appearance to date is Sonic Chronicles: The Dark Brotherhood where she starts out as part of the bad guy group, the Nocturnus Clan, but has a change of heart. She's a stealth expert, martial artist, and military strategist. While her main weapon is a pair of energy-draining blades, she's also known to use explosives and I didn't have a bomb weapon among the roboticized masters yet, so...

She's only been in Archie Comics in the alternate reality "Another Time Another Place" to promote the game she appears in, but with the recent continuity reset, I'm hopeful that she'll return.

10) Shadow the Hedgehog, arguably Sonic's biggest rival. First appearing in Sonic Adventure 2 , Shadow is one of the few Sonic characters besides Sonic himself to star in his own game, appropriately named Shadow the Hedgehog . I'd expect that anyone who's been paying any attention to Sonic media in the past decade or so to know who he is.

11) Caliburn, the talking sword from Sonic and the Black Knight . Also known as the one true Excalibur. As a 'Looping Artifact', he essentially can't be duplicated in much the same way loopers can't (and you know someone's tried), and he doesn't have to follow anyone through the Loops he doesn't want to. Many other blades in the multiverse bear the name Excalibur, but they're not the 'real thing', though Caliburn would freely admit that the imitation is quite flattering. He and Sonic parted ways after the latter stopped using the former regularly during the Loops. While still friends, both will admit that weapons aren't really Sonic's style.

12) Princess Sally Acorn of the Archie Comics Sonic the Hedgehog series. Princess of the kingdom Dr. Ivo "Eggman" Robotnik conquered when she was a child, leader of the Freedom Fighters, ground squirrel, chief love interest of Sonic's comic incarnation, and all-around badass. She's in her post-continuity-reset form here. She has these awesome bracelets that can form energy blades mounted on her wrists, and since I was having trouble thinking of a decent master weapon for her prior to her re-introduction, I snapped this up.

Trivia: Those energy blades? They originated pre-continuity-reset after Eggman roboticized her (long story) and installed them as weapons. And the reset retconned them to her personal weapon-of-choice.

13) Silver the Hedgehog made his debut in Sonic the Hedgehog (2006) . He's a time traveller from an ill-defined future sent to the past to avert catastrophe in all his canon incarnations, and boy does that have to be a headache for Hermes, the admin of the Sonicverse. The walking paradox that is the Time Eater would probably be on lockdown though.

14) Antoine D'Coolette. Boy did his roboticized master name take a while for me to hash out. Anyway, he's also from the Archie Comics series and in post-continuity-reset form. Antoine's interesting. He started out among the Freedom Fighters as the designated comic relief butt-monkey with a bad French accent and has since graduated to bonafide badass swordsman and debonair romantic. Oh, and he's a coyote.

15) Blaze the Cat actually isn't from Sonic's dimension. She's from an alternate dimension of the Sonicverse called the Sol Dimension which has a set of flame-based Sol Emeralds instead of the Chaos Emeralds, and her instead of Sonic. She and her home dimension first appeared in Sonic Rush .

16) Meet Bunnie Rabbot-D'Coolette, 100% southern belle and Antoine's canon wife. Like her husband, she's from the Archie Comics series, and she had two cybernetic legs and one cybernetic arm (her left). Pre-continuity-reset, this was due to partial roboticization, but post-continuity-reset it was due to a life-saving medical procedure. She's in the latter incarnation, like the rest of the Freedom Fighters, which is kinda funny since the continuity reset I keep talking about happened as a result of the Worlds Collide crossover, which is essentially what's currently happening. Aren't the Loops fun?

Anyway, her cybernetic limbs come with all sorts of cool options and she's gone toe-to-toe with several of the heavy hitters in her universe, like Metal Sonic.

17) Amy Rose first appeared in Sonic the Hedgehog CD , and she's been stalking the blue blur ever since under the impression they were meant to be together. It gets kinda creepy at times, even to characters that aren't Sonic, but she's otherwise a good person and a strong ally.

18) Cream the Rabbit and her chao Cheese, one of the punniest duos in the gaming industry. Both first appeared in Sonic Advance 2 . They're surprisingly capable as combatants, and have been known to defeat opponents that even give Sonic a hard time. Oh, and did I mention that she's six in the baseline?

The Omochao weapon on the other hand is a direct reference to the robotic chao of the same name introduced in Sonic Adventure . He acts as a guide, and a number of gamers tend to feel about him the same way they feel about 'annoying fairy guides'.

19) Knuckles the Echidna, Sonic's very first rival from all the way back in Sonic the Hedgehog 3 first released in 1994. I really shouldn't have to say any more than that.

20) Mighty the Armadillo originated in the arcade game SegaSonic the Hedgehog along with Ray, but he's probably better known for his appearance in Knuckles' Chaotix . He wasn't really developed much in the games and seems to have been dropped from the Chaotix line-up there, but his Archie Comics incarnation is another story. There he's super-strong, enough to swing a tank by the gun barrel, and extremely tough.

I think I missed my chance to make an Armored Armadillo reference though. Dangit.

21) Vector the Crocodile, the leader of the Chaotix (we saw him earlier before he was roboticized). Depending on which continuity you ask, the Chaotix are a bunch of bumbling detectives or fellow defenders of Knuckles' homeland, the floating island. Regardless, Vector's a brawler who likes music and seems to frequently wind up in debt. First appeared in Knuckles' Chaotix .

22) The last of the Freedom Fighters from the Archie Comics series, Rotor "Boomer" Walrus. Pre-continuity-reset, he was a definitively portly mechanic who wasn't really suited to front-line fighting. Post-continuity reset, he's a buff battle mechanic who beats up robots by throwing them into other robots . Guess which incarnation I picked. Yep, the latter one.

Rotor's roboticized master weapon actually comes from his pre-continuity-reset incarnation though, where he built a power suit with wrist-mounted sound-energy cannons (why is a long story). There was some tweaking though. Mechanics like Rotor do that.

23) Charmy Bee is another member of the Chaotix originating in Knuckles' Chaotix . He's depicted as having a kid-like attitude, but his actual canon age could be anywhere from six to sixteen depending on which continuity you're asking.

24) Marine the Raccoon got her start in Sonic Rush Adventure where she's a sea captain with her own ship (despite being seven). At the end of it, she uses a mystery power that some believe could be hydrokinesis, so I took that and ran with it as a baseline power she's further honed over the Loops. Her depicted personality that I'm familiar with I've interpreted as the following three words: Hyperactive Australian Pirate.

25) The last of the Chaotix, Espio the Chameleon. He debuted in Knuckles' Chaotix and is a badass ninja. So, Rock's pretty much on the dot here.

26) Ah, Rouge the Bat and E-123 Omega (in flicky form), Shadow's fellow teammates on Team Dark. Rouge is a jewel thief and part-time secret agent introduced in Sonic Adventure 2 . She's looping. E-123 Omega is a renegade creation of Dr. Eggman introduced in Sonic Heroes . He's not looping.

Omega as a flicky-in-a-robot is a call-back to E-102 Gamma from Sonic Adventure and the rest of the E-Series robots from that game who were flickies that needed to be rescued. Whether or not Omega is the same way is a question that hasn't been answered yet. But I needed him to be biological in some way in order to make him a roboticized master, so a flicky (with the ability to exit his robot body, and a marked preference for being inside it) he became.

Sorry for the infodump there. Hope I didn't bury anyone. Here's a TLDR rundown of Sonicverse loopers and allies:

Sonic the Hedgehog - Anchor for every variant of his branch where a version of 'Sonic' exists.

Blaze the Cat - Linked Loop Anchor for the rest of the 'Sonic' branch of Yggdrasil.

Miles "Tails" Prower - Oldest looper aside from Sonic.

Marine the Raccoon - Only other known looper in Blaze's section.

Knuckles the Echidna - First rival of Sonic to start looping.

Amy Rose - Looper who almost went Sakura Syndrome. Sonic still gives her a wide berth if at all possible.

Shadow the Hedgehog - Looping rival of Sonic.

Vector the Crocodile - First member of the Chaotix to start looping.

Espio the Chameleon - Chaotix looper.

Charmy Bee - Chaotix looper.

Rouge the Bat - Looping sometimes-ally of Shadow.

Cream the Rabbit - Looping friend of Amy (Cheese may or may not be looping. Cream isn't saying and no one else can really tell).

Mighty the Armadillo - Chaotix looper.

Silver the Hedgehog - Looper with some wonky code due to being a baseline time traveler. Essentially, he Awakens when he 'comes to the past' and any time he returns to the future outside what's 'required', his participation (Awake or otherwise) in that Loop ends

Shade the Echidna - Most recent looper pre-Crash.

Princess Sally Acorn - New looper activated by the Crash.

Antoine D'Coolette - New looper activated by the Crash.

Bunnie Rabbot - New looper activated by the Crash.

Rotor "Boomer" Walrus - New looper activated by the Crash.

Ray the Flying Squirrel - New Chaotix looper activated by the Crash.

Big the Cat - While Big is not truly stupid, his outlook on life is so thoroughly simple that his behavior wouldn't change even if he was looping.

E-123 Omega - Not looping, though still thoroughly badass. I fear the day he gets access to a subspace pocket since the only thing he'd use it for is more ammunition.

Loop 1 Part 4: Skull Egg Zone

Mega Loop 1.0 part 4: Across the Skull Egg Zone! Destination: Wily Egg!

"Okay..." Hermes' mind raced for possibilities as to how they could try and fix the situation. "Could we use a local aspect of ourselves as a backdoor and slip down there personally?"

"Two big problems with that," Hephaestus replied. "First is that our local aspects have been turned into minions of Eggman and Wily, and I'm not wild about plugging my mind directly into something like that no matter how easy it would be to usurp control. Second, if either of us has our consciousness down there while the Loop isn't yet stable and the activation attempt fails..."

"...there's a chance we could possibly end up with brain damage, turning us into divine vegetables," Hermes finished (1). "Right. Bad idea. Damnit, there has to be something we can do! It's like everything we're doing here is just making it worse!"

"And the moment we stop, they'll face something where our intervention is actually critical to the success of this attempt," Hephaestus returned flatly. "I know how these things tend to work, same as you do."

"Doesn't mean I have to like it," Hermes grumped.

Hephaestus smirked. "Welcome to my existence."

With the restoration of Sonic's friends and allies to normal, the groups reconvened and introductions were had all around.

As it turned out, Sonic's home Loop was part of a Linked Loop, with Blaze the Cat being the only other Anchor that held down every part of their 'branch' of Yggdrasil that Sonic couldn't. The only other looper from her section was Marine the Raccoon, a hyperactive young sea captain with what sounded like an Australian accent on International Talk Like a Pirate Day. Even Blaze admitted her friend took some getting used to.

On Sonic's side, there was of course Miles 'Tails' Prower, the oldest looper aside from Sonic himself. After the fox, Knuckles the Echidna had been the earliest looper and Sonic's first 'rival' to start looping. Amy Rose had come next, and she'd reportedly flirted with a mental condition called Sakura Syndrome. It seemed Sakura Syndrome was a special type of insanity that could affect loopers when they failed to handle the stressful nature of the Loops and stopped considering the consequences of actions that sane people would normally see as abhorrent. She'd apparently skirted the edge of this state for long enough that Sonic was still a bit nervous around her.

The Chaotix were a team that were sometimes detectives and other times fellow guardians of Knuckles's homeland. Vector the Crocodile was the oldest looper among them followed by the ninja Espio the Chameleon, the hyperactive Charmy Bee, the super-strong and super-tough Mighty the Armadillo, and finally the somewhat nervous yet capable Ray the Flying Squirrel who had started looping as a result of the Crash.

Shadow the Hedgehog had started looping about mid-way between when Sonic had been made an Anchor and now, and only one of his two normal teammates, neither of whom were present, was looping. After him there was the physically young Cream the Rabbit and her chao Cheese, the latter of whom might or might not be looping. Cream seemed to know, but found the fact that no one else did amusing enough to keep the secret.

Silver the Hedgehog was some sort of time-traveler, but the Loops resolved that fact in such a way that he always Awoke after traveling to the past and returning to 'his' time outside a stable time loop event caused his participation in that Loop to end. Silver had related that this was likely due to his native time period being generally ill-defined or corrupted in Yggdrasil's system when individuals from Sonic's era weren't involved. Then there was Shade the Echidna, the youngest looper pre-Crash, who apparently had the tendency to Awaken with the name Julie-Su every so often. Sonic and his allies agreed that this state of affairs was a testament to how screwy the Loops could be at times.

After them were the four Freedom Fighters; Princess Sally Acorn as the leader with her non-looping pocket computer NICOLE that she had kept in her subspace pocket, battle mechanic Rotor 'Boomer' Walrus, coyote swordsman Antoine D'Coolette, and his cybernetic wife Bunnie Rabbot-D'Coolette. All of them were loopers who had been 'shaken loose' as a result of the Crash like Ray, and it seemed the newest loopers actually had the clearest baseline memories out of anyone in the crowd. Bunnie's three cybernetic limbs were explained as a result of a life-saving medical procedure, at least this life anyway, and thus something she was supposed to have. Sonic had explained that nearly every version of Bunnie he'd come across before she'd started looping had ended up with mechanical limbs for one reason or another.

And finally there was some possibility of another looper having been activated by the Crash. Tails was still hoping for the not-really-evil version of Eggman he was used to, who was clearly not Awake this time regardless if he'd begun looping or not, but a number of the others had money on a new looper in Blaze's section or someone named Big the Cat. However, Sonic had related that Big's outlook on life was so thoroughly simple; fish, sleep, help his friends when needed, and basically pal around with his pet Froggy; that he could have been looping since before Knuckles and none of them would be able to tell.

Talking amongst each other, the large group decided that splitting up to make their way to the Wily Egg was best. Sonic and Tails would stay with Rock and Roll as the main group. Knuckles would take the Chaotix and try to catch up with Blues and inform him of the situation as well as offer aid in case he needed help. Blaze would take Marine, Amy, Cream (with Cheese), and Silver on ahead and try to take out threats to the main group. Sally and the rest of the Freedom Fighters would circle around and see if they could find any less hazardous routes to take towards their objective. And no one was quite certain where Shade had snuck off to while they were discussing how to divide up the groups, which left Shadow who had decided to go off on his own to try and find his missing colleagues.

In all honesty, if he'd been thinking straight he would have realized that he might find them faster by staying with the main group.

Omega Man stood before a hulking robotic behemoth whose head was wreathed in flames.

"Egg Denizen: Forge," the roboticized master ordered. "You are required by the masters of this Zone, Drs. Eggman and Wily, to accompany this unit to eliminate the opposition of priority ones: Sonic the Hedgehog and Mega Man as well as their allies."

Elsewhere, Rouge Woman was making an identical request of a sleek machine identified as Egg Denizen: Racer. They would join up with Omega Man and Egg Denizen: Forge for a full assault on the enemies of the doctors. (2)

Blues had been making his way along the mountain trail he'd found when he was blindsided by two robots the size of trucks. One appeared to be a male-form humanoid robot floating in a Buddhist-style meditative position and a laser in its forehead while the second was a lithe female-form model with arm-mounted weapons that appeared similar to crossbows. The first had self-identified as Egg Denizen: Prophet and the second as Egg Denizen: Hunter.

Blues could have handily taken out either on their own, but both at once was proving troublesome. He was contemplating doing something reckless from where he was pinned down behind his shield when the cavalry arrived.

The red form his restoring memories recognized as Knuckles slammed hard into Egg Denizen: Prophet and knocked it off-balance. An armadillo he didn't recall from the original timeline at all landed atop Egg Denizen: Hunter and punched it hard enough to dislodge the machine from its perch on the cliff.

"Hey Pogo Man!" came the shout of Vector, leading Espio, Charmy, and Ray in a charge to reinforce Blues personally. "Looks like we found you just in time!"

Blues shook his head, wondering how a complete goof like Vector somehow managed to be a good enough detective to actually find him when Dr. Wily often couldn't. He chalked it up to one of the eternal mysteries of the multiverse and rejoined the battle. (3)

Princess Sally Acorn directed her fellow Freedom Fighters expertly after they'd been ambushed by a surprisingly female Eggman creation that identified itself as Egg Denizen: General. The problem wasn't so much the machine itself, but the small army of smaller robots it brought with it.

Currently Bunnie and Rotor were unleashing as much widespread destruction among the smaller robots as they could with Bunnie's built-in cybernetic armaments and a few of Rotor's inventions. This left her and Antoine to engage the 'General' with their respective blades.

It might have gone a bit better if Eggman's robot hadn't been skilled with a blade as well.

Shadow was cursing his luck. Not only had he not found either Rouge or Omega, but he'd been accosted by something calling itself Egg Denizen: Harvest. That could control the local plant life.

Damnit, he didn't have time for this!

Blaze and company had spotted four robots moving towards Rock and Sonic's group, but before they could intervene they were attacked by a pair of large robots themselves.

The first was clearly female, and exquisitely designed. Aside from that, it didn't seem to do anything other than radiate an energy field that caused disorientation. It called itself Egg Denizen: Princess.

The other was the standard kind of mecha that Eggman liked to use. Egg Denizen: Knight carried a shield and a brutal-looking sword. Such an opponent would normally be easy for a group like theirs, but with the disorientation field up, it was looking like a tough battle was ahead.

The attack had come out of nowhere. One moment Sonic had been moving right along with his group, and the next he'd been blindsided by something the size of a car and moving as fast as himself.

"What the heck are you supposed to be?!" he called out as he peeled himself away from the robot and began running alongside it.

"Egg Denizen: Racer," the bot replied.

Sonic blinked, and then grinned. 'I do believe that was a challenge.' (4)

Tails looked up at his opponent. Neck-craning up. Sonic had been removed from the field and the other two opponents that had arrived needed to be dealt with by Rock and Roll since they were clearly roboticized masters and only those two were able to restore them to normal.

They'd left Rush and Tango to help him, but Tails was thinking that he might need some heavier artillery as his opponent was the size of a small house. And what he hadn't forked over to Shadow needed to be saved for the robot master army he knew was coming later. The one that could keep getting back up every time they were destroyed thanks to the fuzzy time/space of the Zone. And Tails knew their luck wasn't good enough for that to have changed as a result of the Skaia merge.

"Hey, big guy," he chuckled nervously. "What's your name?"

"Egg," the machine shook the earth as it punctuated the statement by stomping one foot.

"Denizen," the earth shook again as the other foot was used, and then the flames surrounding the robot's head flared intensely as it prepared for battle.

"Forge."

Rock was quickly finding out that Rouge Woman was not the pushover she'd been the first time around. Then, she'd been one more robot master-level opponent among many in the middle of an incredibly chaotic melee where keeping track of all combatants was impossible. Then, it had been relatively easy to catch her off-guard and blast her back to normal.

Now? Now it was proving somewhat more difficult. Now Rock had her undivided attention while her companion squared off with his sister, and she was proving very competent.

"Gah!" he cried out as he took a glancing hit from the Black Wave weapon and fell under the stunning effect. Completely immobile, he couldn't defend himself as Rouge Woman flew forward and kicked him square in the torso.

Rock tumbled across the battlefield and assessed his options. Her targeting systems were extremely good, her weapon fired blasts as big as his charged shots, and even a glancing blow from one left him stunned and defenseless to a follow-up strike.

Okay, threat assessed. What were his options?

Roll dodged another barrage of bullets from Omega Man and took cover behind a convenient boulder. She'd taken a couple of hits already and she really couldn't afford to take any more.

The Omega Gatling relentlessly chewed up nearly any cover she could spot. In addition, the near-constant barrage meant she was having trouble assessing her options for negating or overcoming the weapon. She didn't have much that could outright block it, and of that even fewer could be used offensively. (5)

And if she didn't strike a decisive blow, she'd likely not get a second shot.

'Think, Roll,' she ordered her processor. 'Think, think, think!'

Egg Denizen: Racer was not only fast, he was brutal and relentless in his attacks. It was taking practically all of Sonic's concentration just to keep pace and dodge at the moment, leaving precious little to counter-attack with.

Then he heard the familiar sound of Shadow cursing up a storm and decided that a change of tactics was in order.

"Hey Shadow!" he called as he led his own opponent towards the other melee between the ultimate lifeform and a robot that could command plants. "Trade ya!"

"I don't need your help!" Shadow yelled, but still turned towards his rival, hands glowing yellow. "CHAOS SPEAR!"

Sonic grinned as the burst of energy slammed into his opponent and vaulted over Shadow, wreathing himself in flames. It had been a while since he broke out his fire-based abilities, but a plant-based opponent was the perfect opportunity to dust them off.

"Okay," Knuckles growled. "These two are good."

The fight against the Egg Denizens was not going as quickly as they'd hoped. Hunter and Prophet were simply too coordinated with each other. They'd struck some decent blows, but nothing decisive yet.

"We need to at least disable one of their weapons," Espio agreed.

"I know just the one," Blues stated as his Sit-Rep system finished target analysis. With that statement hanging in the air, he whistled a piercing note.

Beat hurtled down out of the sky like a bullet and raked his talons across the laser weapon in Prophet's forehead, leaving it a sparking scar in the Egg Denizen's face.

"Nice!" Vector exulted. "Okay! Dog-pile on the one that's still armed!"

Silver grunted as he used his psychic powers to suppress the disorientation field that Egg Denizen: Princess was putting out. "Take Knight out quickly! I'm not sure how long I can hold this!"

"Ye heard the bloke, mates!" Marine ordered. "Let's show this land-lubbin' bilge rat what-for!"

Egg Denizen: General had easily proved to be a match for two skilled blade-wielders, but Sally and Antoine had succeeded in occupying its full attention while Rotor and Bunnie took out her minions. With more leeway on that front, Bunnie had thrown Rotor at the Egg Denizen's back where he put his favorite offensive invention to use and unleashed a few hundred decibels of sound energy straight through her armor and into her delicate inner workings.

Tails had a hard time dealing with Egg Denizen: Forge given his necessary, but self-imposed, handicap. Nevertheless; through use of the Rush Jet, a bag of grain dust from his subspace pocket to temporarily and explosively douse the flames around the robots head, and a volleyball spike of Tango's 'spin dash' mode through said vulnerable robot head; he'd prevailed.

Now to get back to his own robot allies before something happened to them.

Rock had hit on an idea, and was now putting it into action. Switching to the Chroma Camo, he goaded Rouge Woman into firing on him as he faded from view. And then promptly shouted like he'd been hit anyway.

As the roboticized master dove in for a melee strike, he side-stepped the blow unseen and allowed herself to become embedded in the relatively soft ground. Wasting no time, he switched back to his Mega Buster, charged up, and fired.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 26%

As Roll analyzed the weapons at her disposal, she recalled an old television show regarding substances that could stop bullets and got an idea. She switched to the Hydrokinesis weapon and waited for an opening.

When she heard the hail of bullets cease momentarily, she leaped from cover and fired at the roboticized master even as he finished reloading and fired upon her. The hail of bullets met the oncoming rush of water and failed to either penetrate or even slow it down.

Roll immediately switched to her buster and charged the weapon even as she herself charged towards her opponent. As Omega Man started to stir, she fired...

... and blinked in surprise at what appeared to be a small bird next to Omega Man's weapon orb.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 24%

Getting Shadow to listen had been difficult, but Sonic had managed through mentioning that Rouge and Omega had been roboticized and were even now squaring off against Rock and Roll. Shadow had been pretty insistent on following him back after that.

'How the heck have I not yet made a music pun regarding those two?' (6) Sonic wondered idly to himself as he and Shadow raced into the spot where he'd last seen the two robots...

...and found them and Tails already talking with a restored Rouge and flicky-Omega. Wow. Sonic had forgotten that Omega could sometimes do that. It was something of a toss-up most Loops if the non-looping E-series bot was a full robot or a flicky-in-a-robot like many of the other E-series bots. But most Loops it really didn't matter. Until Rouge had programmed a little something that would allow flicky-Omega to actually exit his robot form and later re-integrate with it. Sonic knew she kept several flash drives with the program in her subspace pocket, but he'd really only personally seen Omega make use of it once or twice in the Loops. Even when a flicky, Omega preferred his robot form.

"–and that's why I've taken to carrying Omega's robot body in my subspace pocket when he's out like this," Rouge finished, producing Omega's usual robot body as she did. The bird chirped happily and promptly flew into the open cranium, turning to an energy form as he did so.

"E-123 Omega back online," the robot monotoned as his head panel shut itself. That at least never changed. No matter the variant, Omega's voice box was incapable of conveying emotional undertones. "Ready to lay waste to the worthless consumer models of Drs. Eggman and Wily."

"I think you're going to get your chance," Roll informed them as she shifted to a red and black coloration with yellow highlights.

'Must be Omega Man's weapon,' Sonic reasoned.

"Yeah," Rock formed his arm into a cannon as he shifted to a white and black coloration with pink highlights of Rouge Woman's weapon. "We've got company."

Two more Egg Denizens tromped out of the woods nearby. One seemed to be a young female-style model, except for the flames her hands were generating, while the other looked like a fat guy made from a mass of metal vines. Sonic could swear he smelled wine in the air all of a sudden as well.

"Surrender in the name of the Eggman-Wily Empire!" the female ordered. "So say Egg Denizen: Vine and Egg Denizen: Hearth."

Sally and the rest of the Freedom Fighters had been having a rough day trying to make it to the Wily Egg. After Egg Denizen: General had fallen, they'd faced the pair known as Egg Denizen: Cup and Egg Denizen: Barbarian.

The first appeared to be some kind of young female holding up a gigantic bowl, looking for all the world like a giant wine glass with a novelty stem. She also didn't really seem to do much in the way of combat.

The latter on the other hand was incredibly strong, relentless, and seemed utterly invincible. It had taken the four mobians a bit before they realized that Egg Denizen: Cup's whole shtick was healing her ally, and that she actually didn't have any personal offensive or defensive powers of her own.

Fortunately, Egg Denizen: Barbarian wasn't exactly a tactical genius. He'd allowed the Freedom Fighters to get between him and his healing support and before he'd realized what was happening, Antoine had dealt with the healer. Without constant regeneration, the barbarian model was merely 'very tough' and had eventually fallen to their coordinated efforts.

Then there was their current opponent. Egg Denizen: Meme. An utterly passive female robot who had trapped the group and herself in some sort of demented quiz show. According to her, they had to answer all of her questions correctly. A single wrong answer, lie, or 'I don't know' and the speaker's life was forfeit. A single refusal, and all the lives of the questioned were forfeit.

It had started out with some rather easy personal questions, followed by a series of trivia questions that made Sally very thankful Rock and Roll had volunteered data on their home reality to NICOLE. Then the questions had started to get tricky.

"Who would win in a battle between Sonic and Mega Man?" volleyed Meme.

"Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily," Sally shot back without hesitation.

Meme scowled. "Who shall you face in battle after myself?"

"Someone who eez not you, I think," Antoine sniffed disdainfully.

"Where are your friends right now?" Meme grinned evilly.

Rotor's eyes narrowed. "The four of us are here with you. The rest are somewhere else."

"Honestly, sugah-bot," Bunnie put her hand on her hip in exasperation before Meme could ask another question. "Exactly how many more questions we gotta answer before ya' let us on our way?"

Meme got an ugly look on her face. "As many as it takes."

"That answer is not exact," NICOLE interjected.

Meme's ugly look turned to one of horror as her own trap executed her for a wrong answer. (7)

Blues, Knuckles, and the Chaotix weren't exactly having an easy time of things since getting rid of Hunter and Prophet. First they'd been ambushed by some snake-woman robot named Egg Denizen: Gorgon who had eye-beams that turned their target to stone. Simply not getting hit had been one heck of a chore, especially given their mountainous route, but a rockslide caused by Mighty had buried the terrible foe at the base of the cliff.

Their current foes didn't have such a terrifying ability, but they were a force to be reckoned with regardless.

Egg Denizen: Cyclone hurtled gale force winds everywhere from the two tubes on his back, keeping the entire group grounded while Egg Denizen: Joker was throwing bombs filled with Chaos Energy without any sort of care for where they landed, disrupting the whole landscape. It was a toss-up right now what would topple first, their group or the mountain around them.

Blaze and her allies weren't having a fun time. The strange figure of Egg Denizen: Crossroad, that of three females apparently joined at the back, was disturbing, but the figure itself seemed to have no movement or offensive ability. Its defensive ability was proving to be somewhat more problematic however.

The fact that each of the three faces had summoned another Egg Denizen to combat the group was a fair bit worse for their situation.

Amy and Cream, along with Cheese, had their hands full with the feminine Egg Denizen: Flower, whose large petals spawned masses of smaller ones that could not only damage and inhibit the combatants, but teleported around the battlefield at random.

Silver was in a solo battle against what looked like a mechanical satyr called Egg Denizen: Wild, who generated all manner of energy-beasts to fight alongside him.

Blaze herself was partnered with Marine again against the massively unpredictable Egg Denizen: Box. The designs on the box-shaped foe depicted the story of a woman who opened a magical jar and unleashed unspeakable horrors on the world. Like the jar in the story, Egg Denizen: Box would play a jaunty 'Jack-in-the-box' tune before opening up and unleashing some manner of disastrous result. Blaze and Marine had yet to land a blow on their primary foe because they were so tied up in fending off the latest thing it had unleashed.

And throughout it all, Blaze could sense the immobile Crossroad feeding power to the other three and enhancing their abilities while they in turn fed the defenses keeping Crossroad protected from direct assaults.

Egg Denizen: Hearth and Egg Denizen: Vine had proven to be little issue against the combined might of both Shadow's team as well and Sonic and Mega Man's. The problem was that the alcoholic fumes Vine had saturated the battlefield with had left the organic members of Shadow's team (Sonic and Tails had gone after Hearth instead) rather tipsy even after the two groups separated.

As a result, the female assassin-robot known as Egg Denizen: Vengeance was giving the trio of Rouge, Shadow, and Omega a much harder time than it should have. Shadow and Rouge's reflexes were off until the alcohol worked through their systems, and Omega had always had trouble with assassin-style opponents. He was built for raw force engagements, not fighting opponents who relied on stealth and precision.

"Show yourself, worthless servant of Eggman and Wily!" Omega blared at the surrounding forest as he did his best to cover his teammates.

Sonic wiped his brow of sweat after the latest encounter with yet another Denizen/Egg-something-or-other mish-mash, the ruins of the twin monstrosities 'Dawn' and 'Dusk' lying nearby. This was officially getting ridiculous. He was certain none of his other friends were having this hard of a time making their way to the Wily Egg.

"You know, with all of the enemies showing up now that didn't the first time, I wonder what else the doctors have in store for us that they didn't before," Rock mused.

"Not sure if he'd risk the Stardroids or not," Roll stated. "The Dimensions for certain. Probably the CRORQ Numbers as well. Huh... Getting a few conflicting memories on three of the latter."

Rock paused for a moment. "I see what you mean. CRORQ's Wave Man might be called Water Man, his Blade Man might be Razor Man, and his Oil Man might be Grease Man (8). Huh. Also, it seems Wily's little altered history includes some robots called the Constellation Droids, and an ally of ours named... Good circuits, does this Fan guy not have a personality?"

"I met him in one of my failed lives, and it doesn't seem like it," Roll admitted. "Creepy, right?"

"No kidding," Rock shuddered. "There are toasters out on the market with more depth of character."

"Not that this isn't fascinating," Sonic cut in, "but are any of those guys you mentioned a problem?"

"The Stardroids certainly would be," Rock allowed, "but I'm not sure if Wily could control them, even with how screwy this place is. The Constellation Droids are fairly tough, but not a whole lot more than usual. Could be twelve or fourteen of them depending if Wily thinks he can control Apollo and Luna. Dimensions aren't much tougher than the normal robot masters, same with the CRORQ numbers. Though one of the first three is called Sonic Man."

"WHAT?!" Sonic growled. "Why that... I'll sue! "

"Chill," Rock suppressed a chuckle. "His design is actually aquatic. The name is because he uses sound waves."

Sonic didn't seem to hear as he continued gnashing his teeth.

"Hey, guys!" Tails called from the crest of a nearby hill. "Come quick!"

The rest of the group quickly convened on him and he pointed towards a lake, or at least as close to one as this place was likely to get, at the bottom of the other side. Or rather, at the lone figure seated at the shore, clearly fishing.

"Hey, it's Big!" Sonic brightened. "Let's go say h–"

Rock cut him off with a firm hand on the hedgehog's shoulder. "Wait."

"What gives?" Sonic returned quizzically. "It's just Big. He's a cool guy."

"More like Big Man," Roll revealed gravely. "He's a roboticized master. (9)"

Sonic's eyes went wide. "Aw, yertz."

Egg Denizen: Vengeance was getting bolder. Her attacks were getting harder for Omega to effectively counter while he protected his alcohol-affected allies. Any moment now and she would decide to move in for the kill.

"Damnit," Shadow groaned. He'd been just a hair too slow in dodging one of their opponent's strikes and had a ringing in his head to go with the alcohol-induced disorientation. Rouge was out cold after taking a hit herself. He needed to give Omega an edge. Willing the pain down, he put his hand to the robot's frame and channeled as much Chaos Force as he could muster. "Chaos... Control..."

Time in the area around them slowed to a crawl as Shadow used the warping technique. Omega quickly spotted their stealthy opponent making a dash from her cover towards them in what could have been a decisive strike had Shadow not acted.

"Exterminate," Omega intoned as he unleashed a barrage of weapons fire that proved Egg Denizen: Vengeance wasn't a particularly heavily armored model.

With all the trouble they were having, Blaze decided it might be best to switch opponents. She'd turned her fire powers on Egg Denizen: Flower to great effect and directed the rest to act similarly.

Silver had used his psychic powers to forcibly hold Egg Denizen: Box's lid shut, which caused it to explode from forces it couldn't contain. This left Amy, Cream, Cheese, and Marine to handle Egg Denizen: Wild and his energy beasts while Blaze and Silver caught their breaths from exertion. Once the satyr-form robot fell, Egg Denizen: Crossroad would be a sitting duck.

The Chaotix, plus Knuckles and Blues, had gotten lucky. That's all there was to it. Vector had gotten fed up with the suppressing wind and continuous bombardment, no matter how poorly the latter was aimed, and pulled out a baseball bat from his subspace pocket. As one of the chaos-energy bombs came in, on target for once, he'd swung with all his might and somehow hit the thing through the gale winds towards Egg Denizen: Cyclone where it detonated beautifully, blowing the wind-based robot to pieces. (10)

With freedom of movement restored Charmy, Ray, Knuckles, and Beat took to the skies while the rest scattered outwards from where they'd been pinned down. It was time to press a counter-offensive against Egg Denizen: Joker.

"What are those things, Sally girl?" Bunnie asked from where the Freedom Fighters were holed up at the base of a mountain. Above that mountain floated their objective, the Wily Egg. In their way stood what looked like two more Egg Denizens.

One was female and had spear-length spines sticking out of her back. The other was probably male and looked like it belonged in a monster movie stomping through downtown and basically trashing everything in its path. Both were, in a word, huge.

"I don't know," Sally responded. "NICOLE, what's the assessment on our potential hostiles?"

"They are Egg Denizen: Mother and Egg Denizen: Father."

The Freedom Fighters blinked as one. That hadn't been NICOLE's voice...

Sonic and the rest had carefully made their way down to where Big Man was fishing – there was no sign of Big's pet Froggy, robot or otherwise – but they needn't have bothered. The sumo-sized robot master didn't even look up as they approached. He just kept fishing.

"So... Now what?" Sonic scratched his head. They had Big Man dead to rights, but taking him out like this just... didn't seem proper.

"Let's try talking with him," Rock suggested, keeping his arm cannon ready just in case as he approached the roboticized master and addressed him. "Big Man, I presume? I'm Rock Light, also known as Mega Man. I'd prefer not to fight you if possible, so if you'll cooperate we can restore you to your biological state without any sort of unpleasantness. I promise that you'll be treated peacefully and respectfully."

"Okay," Big Man replied without looking up.

'That worked?!' Sonic stared incredulously. He wasn't the only one either.

"After fishing," Big Man finished.

As Sonic proceeded to facefault into the ground (11), any doubts that this was really Big were reduced to smithereens.

"Okay..." Rock agreed, looking a bit confused. He'd offered the peaceful option to numerous robot masters, but having one take it was throwing him off. "Why are you fishing?"

"Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily told unit Big Man to do what he does best," the roboticized master responded. "So unit Big Man fishes. Unit Big Man must catch a big one."

"So..." Tails offered, looking as confused as everyone else.

"...I guess we wait for him to catch a fish?" Roll suggested.

"I am Egg Denizen: Consort," the female robot informed the gathered Freedom Fighters. She was expertly crafted with the appearance of a noble woman in her best finery. A robotic 'trophy wife'. "I am not here to fight you, merely to inform you that I am the one who maintains the barrier around the mountain you see ahead. The barrier that keeps the abode of the masters Eggman and Wily inviolate."

Rotor unleashed a shockwave of sound that washed over Consort and dissipated without so much as an indication that it had even connected.

"As my barrier is inviolate, so am I," Consort continued, uncaring of the power just levied against her. "I can neither be attacked nor myself attack others. Only a symbol of eternal love can pierce my protections (12), so you had best abandon your folly here and now. Even were you to slay me, Mother and Father are too strong for you and yours. Go home and prepare yourselves to welcome your new masters."

"Hey, Sonic?" Roll asked as something occurred to her. "How big a fish could Big Man catch anyway?"

Crossroad had barely gone down when a wave of water swept over the battlefield. Marine managed to shield herself, Cream, Cheese, and Amy with her hydrokinesis abilities; but Blaze and Silver had been swept up and knocked unconscious against the treeline.

"Avast ye lubbers!" called the voice of their opponent, a robotic humanoid crustacean in pirate garb, holding a long trident in his single hand, the other arm ending in a bladed crab claw. "Surrender yeselves to the glorious admirals Eggman and Wily!"

"Or what ye Davy Jones wannabe?!" Marine yelled back. "You surrender ta me and maybe I won't keelhaul ya fer what ye did ta me mates!"

"Watch yer tongue, wench!" the pirate-bot snapped back, brandishing the trident at the still-conscious trio. "I be Egg Denizen: Tide, and I'll run ye all through before I'll allow such talk!"

Sonic thought to all the battles Big had put his fishing rod through. All the stress he put on a seemingly flimsy object that never even creaked in protest, much less broke. He thought to how Big was able to lift things that he'd only ever seen his old friend Mighty pick up before. He thought about how Big could stop the spinning sawblade over twice his size that was Silver Sonic using his bare (well, gloved) hands and without even being pushed back by the impact. And then tossing the giant robot several dozen feet in the air with minimal effort.

In the end, Espio had taken down Joker. The Chaotix ninja had camouflaged himself, swiped one of the chaos-energy bomb's right out of the Egg Denizen's hand, and pinned it to Joker's back. Events had proceeded rather predictably from there.

Blues, Knuckles, and the Chaotix had trudged out of the mountain area at long last and on towards the Wily Egg, only to be confronted by yet another of the Egg Denizens about halfway there. This one looked like a buff, bearded man wielding a sort of zig-zagged javelin. His lower body was either hidden by the lightning-spitting could he rode, or the cloud itself was the robot's lower body. It was hard to tell.

"Tremble ye mortals at the power of the chief servant of Eggman and Wily!" the figure boomed with a voice like thunder. "For I am Egg Denizen: Storm and none shall not pass!"

"Very," Sonic replied, getting a sinking feeling in his gut as Big Man's fishing rod began to jerk and bend as the roboticized master got a bite.

Shadow and Rouge had finally recovered enough from their mild involuntary intoxication to proceed without issue. Leaving the scattered remains of Vengeance behind, the three sometimes known as Team Dark made their way out of the twisted forest and towards the Wily Egg.

Only to meet a terrifying robot standing in their path.

The fact that the three were terrified immediately told them something was up. They'd seen too much, fought too many deadly foes, to feel this kind of fear permeating their bones. There was no explanation except that it was being induced artificially.

"Malevolent empathic aura detected," Omega droned, only the shaking of his armor indicating that he felt the effects as well.

"You are every bit as good as your files say," the voice of the robot replied as it turned towards them. Shadows clung to the robot like a cloak, obscuring its precise form from view save for a single arm that held a two-pronged pitchfork with a wickedly curved scythe blade at one end. Red eyes glowed sinisterly from beneath a pitch black helm that looked as if it belonged only on the most evil of undead warlords.

"We are better than anything you've heard," Shadow shot back with confidence he barely held onto. "We will be victorious."

"No," the figure rebutted as its second arm came out to grasp its weapon, a glowing orb at the center of the robot's torso that pulsed like a living heart was revealed by the movement. "You will be dead. So says Egg Denizen: Reaper."

Rock, Roll, and their allies watched as Big Man reeled in his catch... and the water of the 'lake' crest upwards as something huge was pulled out of it.

The robotic fish/squid-thing that broke the surface towered over the figures below it, and both Sonic and Tails reacted without thought and attacked it. Rock and Roll followed their lead and fired on the leviathan, causing it to roar as if in pain and fall back into the lake. Damaged, but nowhere near enough to defeat it.

"Reevaluating orders," Big Man intoned as he stared at the downed robot that could only be an Egg Denizen. "Unit Big Man was ordered to do what unit Big Man does best. What unit Big Man does best is fish."

Roll wasn't sure she liked where this was going and began charging up her Mega Buster.

"What unit Big Man also does best is protect 'friends'. Unit Big Man serves Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily."

"Aww... no ," Rock heard Sonic whisper off to the side where he and Tails had landed.

"Egg Denizen: Kraken also serves Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily," Big man began to turn around to face the group of heroes. "Conclusion. Egg Denizen: Kraken is unit Big Man's 'friend'."

Roll fired her charged Spin Dash Blast to restore Big Man before things progressed any farther. But even with a direct hit, he didn't revert to normal. He just sparked a bit from the stunning properties, and didn't even slow down as he faced the opposing group, the form of Egg Denizen: Kraken rising up behind him. (13)

"You shall not hurt unit Big Man's friend!"

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 22%

"It's confirmed," Hephaestus grumbled. "I just finished running the analysis. All of the higher success paths that keep getting bypassed involved losses on the part of Sonic and his friends or outright capture of Rock and his siblings as well as Sonic. These paths would have led to overconfident doctors ripe for a last-minute reversal of fortune. But the continued victories and successes are pitting them against much more dangerous foes and driving the doctors towards as-yet undetermined desperation tactics which have a much higher chance of resulting in the failure of this attempt."

"And it would be wrong to tweak things towards such a scenario now," Hermes sighed. "They'd never forgive us. Even if they knew it was hurting their overall chances, they wouldn't have it any other way. For all Sonic and his pals are willing to do the 'heroic sacrifice' bit, letting others, especially friends, die to increase their chances of success kind of goes against their grain."

"Goes against their grain?" Hephaestus raised an eyebrow. "The Light family and 'acceptable losses' haven't been on speaking terms for generations ."

Rock and Roll high-fived each other to pass on the weapons they'd collected and agreed to double team Big Man while Sonic and Tails took Rush and Tango to deal with Kraken. At least, that's how it was supposed to work. Big Man, it seemed, had other ideas.

Shrugging off a double barrage of the Omega Gatling, Big Man cast his fishing rod at Tails, entangled the flying fox, and swung him straight into the ground.

The Freedom Fighters were getting nowhere against Consort. Everything they threw at her simply... slid off. The only thing that was saving them right now was that she didn't attack back. She just stood there and let them waste their energy against her.

But NICOLE had confirmed the existence of a barrier around the mountain that was their goal. A barrier maintained by Consort. So they had to figure out some way of rendering her inoperable.

If they didn't, then there was no hope for any of them.

Rock and Roll attempted the Black Wave next, but the stunning weapon didn't even make Big Man pause as he repeated his fishing attack on Sonic. Both of the siblings motioned for their animal companions to back off from the battle and support from outside the range of Kraken's thrashing tentacles and Big Man's Fishing Rod.

The two siblings nodded to each other. They needed to run through their weapon options a little faster to find something that worked against the sumo-sized Big Man.

Shadow sneered at Reaper and tried to suppress the shivering the robot's unnatural aura produced in him. Ha and Rouge had barely dodged a swipe by the Egg Denizen's scythe as Omega fell back and opened fire.

"Your pitiful metal balls cannot harm me," Reaper taunted as his shadowy cloak absorbed Omega's bullets. "They are of the dark earth and fall within my domain. As shall your bodies when your fleeting lives have left them. Submit and spare yourselves unnecessary pain."

"You don't know us too well, do you?" Rouge taunted back with confidence Shadow could clearly see she didn't feel. It didn't matter, the minor distraction gave him a moment to access his subspace pocket and pull out a few weapons of a... different sort.

Shadow only rarely encountered the alien race known as the Black Arms who claimed he was secretly an agent of theirs in the Loops. They hadn't shown up this Loop to gather weapons from, but they had in the last one after Hermes dropped by to ask if they'd help this place start looping. By Shadow's count, it had been the 326th time he'd encountered them. Every time different, and to date no clear resolution to the questions they raised about his pre-Loop origins.

But trying to discover what the secret behind the Black Arms was last Loop had taken a back seat to Shadow plundering every member of the hostile alien race he ran across for their unique energy weapons and shoving them in his subspace pocket (14). And now he brought them out.

Time to see how Egg Denizen: Reaper handled lasers instead of bullets.

Roll's use of the Rapid Stinger and Rock's attempt with the Omochao weapon simply bounced off of Big Man's armor. He ignored the hits as he sent Sonic in full Spin Dash mode rocketing back with a palm strike.

(This section by masterofgames)

Water and other attacks flew fast and furious across the battlefield between Egg Denizen: Tide and his three female (and one chao) opponents. The piratical insults between the robot and Marine flew even faster. Tide had fired off a few good ones, but Marine finally decided to stop holding back. "That be it! No more miss nice gal! Remember me name in the scrap heap ya' fact'ry reject! I be Marine, and I be a Mighty Pirate™!"

Tide simply laughed. "Har! Try say'n that again when ye be taller than a trout, ya shrimp!"

Marine simply grinned, thinking back to a loop long ago. "Size is nay important! A fight is more than just wavin' about yer weapon. It actually be a lot like a romant'c date. It be not so much what ye do, as what ye say!"

Tide simply scowled. "Tha' be making no sense! Shut ye yap and fight! I swear, ye fight like a dairy farmer!"

Marine's eyes twinkled. She was in the zone. "How appropriate, ye fight like a cow!" she quipped.

Tide paused, blinking as he thought over the insult thrown back in his face. Which gave Marine an easy shot to kick him in the face.

"Ha! Ye see? Sharp tongue beats sharp steel!" she whooped as Tide recoiled.

"Ye'll pay for that dearly! Me attacks have left entire islands depopulated!"

"With yer breath, I bet they all suffocated!" Marine smirked, her cutting barb leaving him open for a cheap shot once more.

"Aargh! Stop that! I be able to out-wrestle octopi!"

"Aye, and I be sure spineless creatures everywhere be tremblin' at yer might!"

"Yarr! Soon ye be wearing me trident like a shish-kabob!"

"Not if ye keep wavin' it 'round like a feather duster!"

"Bah! Ye be outmatched! Just earlier t'day, twelve men I've beaten!"

"By the size of yer gut, I be guessing they be eaten!"

"Ye got a real attitude problem, ye know that?"

"Well ye have a real hair problem!"

"Ye just don't know when to stop, do ye?"

"Nay, An neither did yer barber I think!"

"Grr... Look over there!"

"Aye, aye, I know, it be a three headed monkey..."

"Oh... ye heard that one before, eh?"

"EVERYONE be hearing that one before! Step up yer game!"

Roll fired the Acoustic Blaster at full charge while Rock unleashed the Shockwave Boomer. Big Man didn't even seem to notice he'd been hit as he snagged Tails in his fishing line and swung him around into an already dazed Sonic.

Actually hitting Egg Denizen: Storm was going to be a problem. He was deadly accurate with the lightning bolts he flung out and even Beat hadn't been small or fast enough to evade them in time to inflict damage on their floating opponent. And it seemed he could deflect Blues's buster shots as well as return fire at the same time.

The group had scattered, taking advantage of the fact that they now had a wide open space to keep from being corralled as with their previous opponents. But even splitting themselves as targets and dividing Storm's attention was only giving them momentary reprieves.

They needed to come up with something fast.

Roll swore as the Psycho Burst failed to have any appreciable effect on Big Man, and signaled for her brother to use Hydrokinesis to cover for Sonic and Tails while they tried to keep Egg Denizen: Kraken busy. The torrent of water seemed to hamper Big Man's movements a bit, but it just wasn't dealing more than superficial damage.

The siblings cursed and switched weapons again.

Bunnie was starting to crack. None of them could figure out how to get past Consort's defenses enough to even scratch her, much less take her out of commission. They were going to fail. Even if everyone else succeeded, they would all fail unless the Freedom Fighters could defeat this foe.

She put her head in her hands to hide the tears she felt coming, and spotted a particular something on her finger. Her wedding ring.

Only a symbol of eternal love can pierce my protections. (15)

Rock swore internally as the Trick Sword barely nicked Big Man's armor. He'd picked an ineffective close range weapon against a powerful opponent. This was going to hurt .

"CHAOS CANNON!" came Roll's cry as Big Man wound up for a retaliatory strike. The shot was dead on for the roboticized master's arm, which made it incredibly surprising when that arm didn't even slow down as it passed through the temporal distortion projectile and clotheslined Rock, sending him flying across the battlefield.

Rock rubbed his neck as he switched to the Stealth Mine while his sister chose the Tail Wind. As Big Man again tore Sonic and Tails away from assaulting his giant aquatic partner, they hoped that maybe these weapons would fare better.

Shade knew she was in deep trouble. She'd left on her own to scout the way to the Wily Egg given that she could move faster solo than with a group, but getting to the destination quickly had been the only thing to go right for her.

She'd been in the middle of cracking the password for the doctors' teleporter when the barrier around the surrounding mountain had gone up (16). Trying to contact anyone outside had only gotten her the gloating laughter of the two mad doctors joyfully informing her that their two most powerful Egg Denizens, Mother and Father, were inside the barrier with her. And actively looking for her.

So far, she'd managed to stay ahead of the two robotic behemoths and not engage them. Her comparatively little Loop experience hadn't allowed her to gain anywhere near the power or tools to take out even one of those monstrosities on her own, much less both at once.

The problem was that she was running out of places to hide on the mountain while they stomped around in search of her. She needed to call the cavalry in, and soon.

Rock and Roll switched out their weapons again. Tail Wind hadn't even made Big Man budge, and getting him to step on a Stealth Mine hadn't fared any better.

Rock opened fire with the Rabbot Laser as Roll unleashed the Fire Tornado. When the flames died down, Big Man was only a little singed around the edges.

Big Man ignored the two in order to try and again interfere with Sonic and Tails' attack on his robotic leviathan companion. Rush and Tango had long since given up supportive fire after nearly hitting one of their other-dimensional allies amidst the chaotic melee.

Bunnie hadn't been a looper long enough to get the kind of goodies the more experienced of her friends and allies had access to, but Tails and Sonic were perfectly willing to share some of what they'd come across. Earlier this Loop, Tails had installed a setting for something called a rail gun on her cybernetic arm, but with some of his own personal improvements so it didn't do things like produce heat in quantities that would fry both her flesh and metal bits alike. Bunnie didn't understand all the terms he'd used, though she thought she'd heard 'technomagical' in there somewhere, but the thing worked.

Hoo boy, did it ever work.

And the best part? Whatever Tails had done with his improvements meant it could fire anything metallic and conductive. Like her wedding ring.

Even knowing what she needed to do, regardless of any lack of guarantee it would work, the act of removing the ring for this purpose was still painful. Bunnie fought back tears as she loaded it into the weapon and began charging the magnetic accelerators.

"Ah'm sorry sugah 'Twan," she whispered as she took aim. "Ah hope ya can forgive me luv."

The recoil from firing nearly knocked Bunnie off her mechanical feet, but she remained standing long enough to see the shot rip through Consort's barrier and her torso both.

And to see that the Egg Denizen still stood in spite of it. Her barrier once again inviolate.

'No...' Bunnie thought in despair as a tear escaped her eye.

Roll came in from one side with the Sharp Knuckle while Rock came from the other with the Mighty Blow. Big Man simply held out his hands and caught both of the robots' fists, and turned the action into a grab before either could disengage.

Heaving his arms upwards, Big Man flung both of the robots into the air where Kraken then slammed both back into the ground many yards away with its tentacles.

"We can't take much more of this," Rock groaned as the pair got to their feet.

"Then I guess it's a good thing I snagged a few of these before we left your place," the voice of Sonic came from right next to them. Turning, the robotic siblings saw their hedgehog ally holding out a pair of E-Tanks.

"It's a very good thing," Roll agreed as she grabbed the one for her and eagerly guzzled its contents.

Reaper had been good, very good, at deflecting the energy weapons with his scythe and retaliating in kind. The robot could probably have given General Grievous a run for his money despite having fewer limbs.

But once Omega had gotten a hold on the polearm and grappled the Egg Denizen for it, it was all over. Unable to dodge and unwilling to release his weapon to fix that, Reaper had been shot full of so many holes that even his apparently rapid self-repair systems couldn't keep up. In short order, all that was left was the pulsing core which Shadow collected.

"Starting a trophy collection are we?" Rouge teased the dark hedgehog.

"Thought it would go with my curtains," Shadow smirked. (17)

Rock went at Big Man's back with the Electric Blades, and barely managed a scratch. Roll's attempt at hitting the roboticized master over the head with the Piko Hammer met with similarly disappointing results.

The only saving grace was that Sonic and Tails both managed to cover their retreat despite interference from Kraken so they didn't suffer another of Big Man's retaliation strikes.

Tide had indeed stepped up his game, and had dropped all pretense of trash talk to focus solely on battle. He was proving not only able to match Marine's water abilities blow-for-blow, he was also able to fend off Amy's Piko Hammer with his trident and keep Cream at bay with his bladed claw. Which left Cheese free to take free shots at the robot's face. They weren't doing any real damage, but it was clear that the Egg Denizen was getting very annoyed with the chao.

"Enough!" the robot bellowed, and spun around in a way that forced his two melee opponents to back off, and allowed him to backclaw the plucky chao into a nearby rock.

"CHEESE!" Cream gasped, and turned an angry face towards the pirate-bot. "You..."

"What of it, wench?" Tide spat. "Yer little beastie got what was comin' to 'im and no less."

Cream's body twitched, her fur puffing out messily and her whole posture changing to a much more wild one. She then turned her now feral gaze on the Egg Denizen and screamed her displeasure. "YOU MEANIE!"

Egg Denizen: Tide reflexively backed away from the sudden alteration in his opponent as the feral Cream leaped at him with wild red eyes, bared claws, and big sharp pointy teeth. (18)

"Strewth!" Marine stared in shock.

"S-s-s-s-shiver me timbers-s-s-s-s!" Proclaimed the severed head of Egg Denizen: Tide before it went offline.

Rock landed from using Ray Glide to dodge an immense assault by Kraken, and Roll similarly decloaked from the Chroma Camo beside him. The two weapons were great at helping them avoid attacks, but they simply didn't have the kind of offensive ability they needed right now.

Big Man was taking damage, sure, but nowhere near enough to where he'd be vulnerable to a use of the Spin Dash Blast. Or at least not a single use...

"Are you thinking what I'm thinking?" the two siblings asked each other at the same time.

As the Chaotix attempted to discuss options for retaliating against the airborne elemental artillery platform that was Egg Denizen: Storm, Charmy was trying to recall that Loop where he'd been a secret agent. He'd handled this kind of situation all the time then.

"Better put the suit on so I can get the right mindset," Charmy said to himself as he pulled on a tuxedo from his subspace pocket. "Riiigghht. That's how I did things that Loop."

Turning sharply, Charmy zipped up towards his hovering opponent in a wild zig-zag that proved impossible for the robot to lock onto. As he got close, Charmy began to zip around Storm in search of a weak spot.

"Who art thou to challenge me like this?!" Storm demanded.

"Bee," Charmy told him suavely as he continued zipping around his opponent. Just a little longer... "Charmy Bee. Agent 007 of Angel Island Secret Service." (19)

"And you would dare defy the will of the Destined Masters of All Creation?!" Storm boomed, causing the Chaotix member to stop in front of him and turn a puzzled look his way.

"What did you expect us to do?" the formally attired bee questioned. "Surrender?"

"Yes."

Charmy shook his head. "No, no, no. You're supposed to say 'No, Mr. Bee. I expect you to di–'AGH!"

Charmy was cut off as a lighting bolt finally struck him and he began falling to the ground below, trailing smoke.

"Fool!" boomed the robot. "I am Egg Denizen: Storm! I AM INVINCIBLE!"

"Heh," Charmy chuffed as he fell and pointed a finger gun at the weather-bot. "Bang."

Multiple explosions lit up the airborne robot an instant later from the devices Charmy had pulled from his subspace pocket and planted as he'd flown around the robot.

"Okay," Tails said from where the four had momentarily fallen back to hash out their strategy. Fortunately Kraken didn't seem too inclined to leave the water and Big Man seemed even less inclined to leave Kraken's side. "What's the plan?"

"Big Man's resistant to the Sonic Shot," Rock informed the mobian duo, only for Sonic to interrupt him.

"Admitting that 'Spin Dash Blast' doesn't exactly roll off the tongue, just like last time, eh?" Sonic teased.

"Something like that," the blue bomber rolled his eyes.

"Anyway," his sister picked up for him, "we came up with the idea to hit him with both of ours at once, but we'd like to hedge our bets."

"You want us to team up for a quadruple-whammy, right?" Sonic grinned. "Me with blue boy and Tails with miss golden gladiator?"

"Yep," Rock nodded.

"Well let's do it to it!" Tails cheered and led the charge back into battle.

"Hey!" Sonic playfully called after his friend as the Light siblings followed behind, charging their Mega Busters. "Stop stealing my lines!"

Dodging around the strikes of Egg Denizen: Kraken, Rock and Roll reached full charge as both Sonic and Tails revved up their respective Spin Dashes. As one, all four attacked and struck Big Man from both sides simultaneously, causing a cloud of smoke to envelope the roboticized master.

'Ah failed...'

No other thought would penetrate the haze of despair that was Bunnie's mind right now. Her friends shaking her and calling to her elicited no response. It wasn't until Antoine got the idea to kiss her, the kind of kiss they usually reserved for when they were alone no less, that she snapped out of it.

"SUGAH 'TWAN!" She sputtered indignantly as she shoved her husband off of her. "THIS AIN'T THA TIME!"

"Ma chérie," Antoine told her tenderly. "You were not respondink to anythink else, so I figured I would try somethink a little more... persuasive."

"But... Ah failed," Bunnie began to cry as what had happened came crashing back onto her. "Ah'm sorry 'Twan... Ah shot her with mah wedding ring ta give us a chance and it weren't enough... "

"Ma femme," Antoine cupped her cheek.

"Don't ya get it luv?!" Bunnie wept. "Ah took tha ring ya gave me when we got married and Ah wasted it. FER NOTHIN'!"

"Not for nothink," he told her gently. "Ze Egg Denizen, she eez immobile. She cannot flee. She eez, how you say, ze sittink duck. Ze shot waz not wasted."

"But," the cyber-rabbit sniffed. "Ah don't got another ring ta shoot her with."

"Mon ange," Antoine kissed her tears tenderly. "Ma petite. Mon lapin vaillant. How silly you can be at times."

"Huh?" she stared at her husband blankly.

Antoine smirked and held up a golden band of his own. "Did you forget zat weddink rings generahlly come in pairs?"

Bunnie stared at her lover as what he'd said sunk in. "But..."

"Mon cher cœur," he halted her protest. "Zese rings are a symbol of ze vows we said for each other, assurément. But zat eez all zey are. We are Freedom Fightairs. The peace and well-beink of others haz always come before such baubles and always will. We have known zis all our lives, each of zem. Zeir absence does not and cannot diminish ze love between us. And besides, we are loopers now, corriger? We shall have many more lifetimes to be married again, in as many ways, with as many vows, and as many rings as we wish. All zat truly matters eez our love, and zat eez somethink zis scélérat cannot make us surrender."

Bunnie couldn't help throwing herself at her husband and kissing him. Antoine could be such the romantic when he wanted to be. A discreet cough from Sally reminded them what the current situation was, and they parted with a wordless promise to pick back up where they'd left off later.

"And mon amour?" he whispered to her as he loaded his symbol of their vows into her weapon. "Zis time... aim for ze head. For clearly zis Consort, she haz no heart."

A robotic tentacle lashed out at the heroes who had stopped to catch their breath, only for a furry arm to grab it.

"Those are my friends," a voice familiar to both Sonic and Tails admonished the creature. (20)

The smoke cleared to show a hale and hearty Big the Cat firmly grasping the tentacle of Egg Denizen: Kraken. When the robot tried to continue attacking the quartet, Big's eyes narrowed.

"You're trying to hurt my friends," the sumo-sized cat turned and grasped the tentacle he held in both hands. "It's not nice–"

He flexed his muscles. "–to hurt–"

He pulled, and the massive robot was lifted out of the water and over his head. "–my–"

And slammed straight into the shore on Big's other side with a mighty crash. "–friends!"

Bunnie calmly eyed Consort as she lined up her shot. Consort wasn't completely immobile, but Bunnie's first shot had clearly severed something that allowed for control of her limbs. There was no possible way she could dodge this.

"You cannot win," the robot stated defiantly.

"That's what they all say, sugah," Bunnie retorted as she finished aiming, and fired.

Consort's head practically exploded as the golden band ripped through it at ridiculous speeds and continued off into the Zone, never to be seen again.

"A superb shot, ma belle guerrière," Antoine observed.

"Urgent transmission detected," NICOLE suddenly cut in. In an instant, each of the Freedom Fighters were all business.

"Play it, NICOLE," Sally requested.

NICOLE switched to the transmission, and the voice of Shade the Echidna came forth. "–assistance needed! Repeat: This is Shade. I'm trapped on the mountain beneath the Wily Egg by two immense robots named Egg Denizen: Mother and Egg Denizen: Father.

Cannot engage on own. All avenues of retreat cut off. Immediate assistance needed! Repeat: This is Shade–"

"NICOLE, relay that message and our position to the others. Tell them we're engaging the hostiles," Sally ordered even as the team of four began moving. Knowledge of Shade's position wasn't really needed right now. All anyone had to do to find her was head for the two fifty-something foot robots.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 20%

Sonic and the rest of his companions were heading for the mountain under the Wily Egg as fast as possible. Right after they'd gotten Big Man's weapon, Rock and Roll had gotten a transmission that the Freedom Fighters were moving to rescue Shade from a pair of robots even bigger than Kraken had been, and were requesting immediate reinforcements. Rush and Tango had transformed into their jet modes in order to keep up with Sonic and Tails as they zipped across the landscape.

"Whoooaaaaa...!"

And Big... Rock had made an Item-2 ride for him to use. Apparently the kid kept the thing in his database just in case despite the fact that with Rush he didn't ever need it. Big wasn't exactly handling the thing like a pro on Extreme Gear, but the Item-2 jet was a fair bit more stable, making it perfect for the generally ground-bound fisher. And Rock could guide the thing remotely on top of that to keep Big from veering off into the wilds of the bizarre Skaia-fused Skull Egg Zone.

Sonic estimated that they'd be at the base of the mountain in a few minutes, and prayed they weren't already too late.

Team Dark was making much worse time than Sonic and friends. For whatever reason, they kept getting accosted by robots, many of which looked like they shouldn't even be functional.

"I did not sign up to fight zombie robots!" Rouge complained as she kicked another... something to pieces.

Silver and Blaze still had some ringing in their heads, but they were conscious. And able to fly their custom Extreme Gear; along with Amy, Marine, and Cream; towards the coordinates Sally had sent them.

Aside from that, everything seemed smooth sailing until then.

Being the next-closest team to the mountain, Blues, Knuckles, and the Chaotix were already there, mixing it up with the towering robots. But even though they could easily reach these opponents, it's rather hard to fight something that can flatten you simply by taking a step in the right place.

"I've got Shade!"

"Excellent! Fall back and regroup!"

"Where?! With the weapons these things have, the safest place is right beneath them!"

"We gotta do something! We're just not doing enough damage right now!"

"I'm open to suggestions!"

"As of right now, all of the Egg Denizens have fallen except for Mother and Father," Orbot informed the two doctors. "And if you don't mind me saying so, it looks like only a matter of time before they fall as well."

"Hmph!" Bass scoffed. "That's what you get for sending those weak roboticized masters instead of me. I'd have finished off both Mega Man and Mega Wo–"

I think I'm...

–man as well as Sonic and his allies by now." (21)

"Blast it all!" Eggman fumed, ignoring Wily's 'son', before turning to his friend. "They're almost at our doorstep, Albert! What exactly were you working on while I was converting those 'Denizens' to our cause? Because I don't see it stopping them! "

"Calm yourself, Ivo," Wily sipped some coffee from his skull mug as he typed. "We've got our best traps and minions to waylay them saturating the Wily Egg should they get inside, not to mention our various lines of defense. And even if they get past all that, I've spent my time getting this ready."

Eggman stared at the schematics of what Wily had brought up on screen.

"Oh-ho!" he exclaimed in glee. "Albert, that is brilliant! Positively genius! I'm sorry I doubted you!"

"Just a little contingency plan I cooked up," Wily smirked at his friend. 'Along with a few other little surprises,' he added to himself. Assuming all went well, Ivo would never need to know about those. "I couldn't have done it without your original notes about that positively inspiring invention of yours though!"

Even the addition of Blaze's group to the melee didn't seem to be turning the tide. The armor of Mother and Father was too thick for anyone's standard offense and their combined weapons fire was handily preventing anything stronger from being deployed.

"What's the biggest explosive you have that won't necessarily blow us to smithereens along with them?" Blues asked Shade. He'd determined that prepping a bomb would likely be their best bet at dealing significant damage to one of the two, and Shade seemed to be the explosives expert among her allies.

"It could probably level a small building," Shade responded as the two dodged beneath their massive opponents, "but I'm not sure it's enough to get through their main armor."

"Not from outside at least," Blues agreed. "Which brings me to the next question: How good are you at holding on to a moving vehicle?"

"Pretty good," Shade puzzled. "Why?"

In response, Blues whistled sharply, causing his robot avian companion to dive down towards them both. "Beat! Plane!" (22)

At the order, the bird glowed and seemed to... expand. To an ovular one-seat aviation device that looked a lot like the bird's normal form. Blues jumped in and Shade, for lack of any better ideas, jumped atop the back behind his head and held on tight.

"Keep them distracted!" Blues called to the rest of the fighters as he climbed hard and fast, Shade hanging on for dear life as she prepped her explosive.

Banking around, he dove for Egg Denizen: Father and took careful aim before firing the Beat Plane's main weapon. The plasma fire rained down on the Godzilla-wannabe robot's head and a few hit the behemoth's eye. The kaiju knock-off roared in pain as the Beat Plane flew in front of its face.

"Now!" Blues ordered, and Shade threw her bomb for all it was worth down the gullet of the beast, just as a glow of charging energy began in the back of the throat.

The explosion went off, Father staggering as smoke poured out of its mouth. Then another explosion sounded as the energy weapon it had been priming misfired as a result and began a chain reaction that left little more than a smoking ruin to topple mightily to the ground.

"Thank you for your assistance," Dr. Lalinde told Dr. Cossack as the latter helped her prepare.

"Think nothing of it," the Russian scientist waved off the thanks. They both knew that Dr. Light and his family were quite capable, but the current situation was unlike anything else in their experience. Thus they were determined to send some form of backup to aid their friend and colleague.

As if summoned by that very thought, a blue glow appeared none too subtly in the lab, resolving itself into the alien robot known as Duo. Given the robot's last known location and the speed he traveled at (at least in-system), Dr. Light must have sent a message to the robot before he'd been captured.

"I have been alerted that there is trouble on Earth!" Duo declared with all the drama he seemed predisposed towards. "And I sense Evil at work. Where shall Justice be served?"

Rock had wondered if Big Man's weapon, the Fishing Rod, would prove useful, but he and Roll had collected it anyway. They'd been in too many situations where a seemingly useless weapon turned out to be invaluable to disregard any master weapon, no matter how ridiculous. Though, as they approached the mountainside melee with Mother, he admitted that if the Fishing Rod had a use, it wasn't going to be here.

Without Father to cover her, Mother was slowly being overwhelmed by the combatants already present. But some more firepower would surely make the fight go even faster.

He and Roll came in Mega Busters blazing, Sonic and Tails Spin Dashing straight into Mother's unguarded torso, followed by Big in a similar move. Everyone already there seemed to be avoiding the razor spines on her back, and the newcomers hardly blamed them. Each one of things looked like they could bisect any of the other Egg Denizens save Father in a single swipe. Avoiding them was just common sense. And with all of the combatants ganging up on her and frustrating her attempts at counter-attack, it was only a matter of time before she went down.

"Are you all ready?" Bass glared at the gathered defenders of the Wily Egg alongside his 'partner' Metal Sonic. He was a little unsure about some of them, but orders were orders. "Good, because the enemies of the doctors have arrived. Your orders are to keep them from getting to our masters by any means necessary."

'Why do the two of us have to be the last line of defense?' he grumbled to himself.

"Look who finally got here," Shadow taunted his collected allies as they reached the top of the mountain. He idly spun the still-pulsing core of Reaper on his finger while waiting on them. He and his team had been held up by the zombie robots for a while, but they'd eventually decided to stop trying to stem the tide and just get to the destination as fast as possible. The things hadn't been able to follow them.

"Eh," Sonic shrugged, "you know how it is. You're cruising right along and then the doctors drop something nasty in your path. How'd you all get here?"

"We came up the mountain by a different route," Rouge admitted. "Let us scout the area while we waited on you all to finish up."

"Well, thanks for waiting on us," Roll offered politely.

"Multiple incoming hostiles detected," Omega interrupted, looking straight at the Wily Egg.

"Oh, look," Sonic smirked as he saw a stream of figures emerge from the Wily Egg. "Here comes the welcoming committee."

"Even knowing this was coming..." Rock readied his buster nervously, his siblings doing the same.

"Too late for cold feet now," Sonic stood there casually. "Besides, it's like I told you last time we did this dance, we've spent our whole lives, several of them, trashing evil robots, overcoming impossible odds, and fighting the good fight."

Descending upon the gathered heroes was the robot master army being fielded by Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily. Some flew under their own power, while others rode levitating platforms down. Almost everyone Rock and Roll had ever fought was there: Dr Wily's first set of original robot masters, Metal Man, Air Man, Bubble Man, Quick Man, Crash Man, Flash Man, Heat Man, and Wood Man; the second set whose designs he'd co-developed with Dr. Light, Needle Man, Magnet Man, Gemini Man, Hard Man, Top Man, Snake Man, Spark Man, and Shadow Man (riding a Kerog); Dr. Cossack's set of stolen robot masters, Bright Man, Toad Man, Drill Man, Pharaoh Man, Ring Man, Dust Man, Dive Man, and Skull Man; Dark Man's followers, Gravity Man, Wave Man, Stone Man, Gyro Man, Star Man, Charge Man, Napalm Man, and Crystal Man; the robots from the World Tournament, Blizzard Man, Centaur Man, Flame Man, Knight Man, Plant Man, Tomahawk Man, Wind Man, and Yamato Man; the robot masters that had sprung Dr. Wily from jail after his capture and from when Bass had first appeared, Freeze Man, Junk Man, Burst Man, Cloud Man, Spring Man, Slash Man, Shade Man, and Turbo Man; the robot masters who had once been powered by Evil Energy, Tengu Man, Astro Man, Sword Man, Clown Man, Search Man, Frost Man, Grenade Man, and Aqua Man; Dr. Light's creations who had been co-opted after an enforced decommissioning, Concrete Man, Tornado Man, Splash Woman, Plug Man, Jewel Man, Hornet Man, Magma Man, and Galaxy Man; those that had been infected with roboenza and gone renegade, Blade Man, Pump Man, Commando Man, Chill Man, Sheep Man, Strike Man, Nitro Man, and Solar Man; the freshly revived Genesis Unit, Buster Rod G, Mega Water S, and Hyper Storm H; King's revolutionaries, Dynamo Man, Cold Man, Ground Man, Pirate Man, Burner Man, and Magic Man; the Dimensions, Dangan Man, Konro Man, Aircon Man, Komuso Man, the twin Clock Men, and Compass Man; CRORQ's minions, Sonic Man, Volt Man, Dyna Man, Bit Man, Shark Man, Wave Man/Water Man, Oil Man/Grease Man, Blade Man/Razor Man, and Torch Man; and the Constellation Droids, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricorn, Aquarius, and Pisces rounding out the army. None of the Stardroids thankfully.

And leading the charge instead of a roboticized master was the unmistakable form of Doc Robot.

Everyone braced themselves for the oncoming clash, and Sonic continued where he'd left off.

"This is what we live for."

---

1) Hermes is exaggerating. They'd eventually recover, but it still wouldn't be pleasant to experience.

2) Oh, so the Egg Denizens weren't a throwaway reference?

3) Honestly, Vector seems like a typical bumbling detective, and then he goes and pulls of stuff like this.

4) Looper? Possible end of a universe looming? Sonic's still Sonic.

5) Omega has to be an incarnation of the Moar Dakka trope.

6) You have to admit, it's not like him to pass something like that up.

7) Whoops.

8) The CRORQ Numbers occasionally get hit by the One Steve Limit in-universe. Just because.

9) Big Man was a gag character in Mega Man issue 27's Short Circuits section. How hard could he be?

10) And it's a long fly ball to left field... HOME RUN!

11) I suspect he wasn't the only one either.

12) Aw, nuts. A puzzle boss... And I don't think they picked up anything that fits that criteria in their inventory... Crap, an unsolvable puzzle boss.

13) Oh. That's how hard.

14) Shadow's subspace pocket is host to one of the fastest growing gun collections in the multiverse.

15) Maybe not so unsolvable after all...

16) Oh, that's what happened to her. I was wondering about that.

17) Interior decorating for the blooded warrior.

18) Guess who Cream replaced one Loop.

19) Wait... Charmy Bee was James Bond once?

20) Ladies and gentlemen, Big the Cat. Debuting in Sonic Adventure , he's a simple guy who enjoys fishing and hanging out with friends. His life outlook is so simple in fact that no one can tell if he's looping because his behavior wouldn't be any different. Big's also a freaking tank of a warrior, and he's never happy when people try to hurt his friends.

In case anyone's wondering, his pal Froggy was left back home for this adventure when Big was captured.

21) Bass definitely has the Wily family ego…

22) I had to do this. Blues already has the scarf for it after all.

And, for the curious, here's the Egg Denizen List:

Mother - Echidna

Father - Typheus/Typhon

Kraken - Cetus

Dawn - Hemera

Dusk - Nyx

Flower - Persephone

Wild - Pan

Box - Pandora

Crossroad - Hecate

Gorgon - Medusa

Cyclone - Aeolus

Joker - Eris

Barbarian - Heracles

Cup - Hebe

Meme - Mnemosyne

Vengeance - Nemesis

Storm - Zeus

Consort - Hera

Tide - Poseidon

Harvest - Demeter

Knight - Ares

Princess - Aphrodite

Prophet - Apollo

Hunter - Artemis

Forge - Hephaestus

General - Athena

Racer - Hermes

Vine - Dionysus

Hearth - Hestia

Reaper - Hades

Loop 1 Part 5: Final Showdown!

Mega Loop 1.0 Part 5: Final Showdown on the Wily Egg!

Dr. Light sighed to himself in his new, more spacious, cell. Not that this change was for his comfort, of course. No, it was because Ivo and Albert each wanted to sic one of their minor robot minions on him for sport. Luckily for himself, the motobug and metool had bumped each other and started fighting amongst themselves, leaving him alone to try and talk reason to his captors.

He wasn't sure how, but he knew some of what the forces they were playing with were supposed to do, as well as a fair amount of Ivo's history. For some reason, it felt like the information had come from Rouge, but the woman hadn't had the time to speak to him about such matters.

Regardless, his pleas for reason had fallen on deaf ears. Albert had glared at him in defiance when he dropped the name of Ra Moon and the rest of the forces he'd tried to control and failed. After a similar treatment, Ivo had given him a calculating look that gave Thomas chills he only managed to hide due to years of martial arts meditation practice.

Dr. Thomas Light turned to look at the decimated remains of his two attackers, and pondered. His captors were beyond reason, not that he'd held much hope for better after so many years of failed attempts, but he'd had to try. Now it was time to see if he could perhaps take a slightly more active role in the current conflict.

With that in mind, Dr. Light bent over the remains of the two robots and went to work.

The war against the robot master army was underway. Duels were breaking out between members of each faction left and right, powers and weapons were flying fast and thick, groups of robot masters were pressing in on the heroes' outnumbered allies, the animal support units were harassing various robot masters, and in general the chaos was total.

Rock had found himself facing off against the multi-weapon robot master known as Doc Robot, rebuilt and refitted to wield the full array of roboticized master weapons. Acoustic Blaster met Mighty Blow met Piko Hammer met Rabbot Laser met Black Wave met Omega Gatling and on and on in a seemingly endless dance of weapons and violence.

"Give it up Doc Robot!" Rock yelled defiantly as he countered Rapid Stinger shots with the Trick Sword. "You can't stop me from defeating you and getting to the doctors!"

"Gya-ha-ha-ha!" Doc Robot laughed at him, switching to the Ray Glide, causing Rock to counter with the Tail Wind. "I know you'll get past us! It's what you do!"

"Then why fight me like this?" Rock demanded as he used the Chroma Camo to dodge a shot from the Chaos Cannon and then fired back with the Shockwave Boomer.

"Because!" Doc Robot cackled, countering with the Sharp Knuckle and switching to the Electric Blades as Rock switched to the Omochao weapon. "I don't have to stop you from getting to them! I just have to force you to drain your weapon energy before you get there!" (1)

Rock winced and changed to the Stealth Mine as Doc Robot opened fire with the Psycho Burst. 'And it's working too,' he realized. Doc Robot was too unpredictable to continue on without disabling, killing him would allow the doctors to simply time clone him and send him right back out, and fighting him like this was causing Rock to burn through his weapon energy much faster than he'd like.

Hydrokinesis met Fire Tornado as Rock tried to figure out how to end this faster.

E-123 Omega and Napalm Man stood fifty paces apart and did their level best to shell each other.

"None can stand against a walking arsenal like me!" Napalm Man declared, firing a barrage of explosives,

"Please. Back of the line, pea-shooter," Omega shot back both verbally and with his numerous automatic weapons.

Blues was busy dueling both Yamato Man and Knight Man at once, fending off attacks with his shield on one side and his buster on the other while Beat covered him from the air.

Shadow focused as he and Top Man raced around the battlefield neck and neck. 'I am not letting Sonic interrupt our duel this time!'

Shade raced around the side of the crater towards the giant statue of Eggman (a matching one of Wily opposite) where she planned to run up the arm to the platform in the center that held the teleporter into the Wily Egg. She needed to decode the password so that a small strike team consisting of Sonic, Rock, and Roll could infiltrate the battlestation and confront the doctors while the rest of them kept the robot master army busy.

"Gah!" Sally cried as she was hit with a blast of sound from the trident of an aquatic-themed robot that had snuck up on her.

"Hey, poser!" Sonic yelled as he Spin Dashed straight through the robot master known as Sonic Man. "Hands off my girl!"

"What do you mean your girl?!" Sally yelled back, fending off a sudden attack by the electrified stretching arms of Clown Man with her energy blades. "Check the ego, mister!"

"Hey, the ego's always been my little problem," Sonic grinned at her as he pounced on a robot with a light bulb head, Bright Man if he recalled correctly. "Besides, you know you love it!"

'Some might say that's my little problem,' Sally retorted silently as she fought on. (2)

Antoine glared at his opponent as they crossed blades. Sword Man was proving to be quite skilled.

"You are quite the worthy opponent," the robot master complimented him.

"You are ze digne adversaire yourself, yes?" he allowed as the two continued to duel.

Blaze sweated from where she was pinned down by the combined flames of Heat Man, Flame Man, Solar Man, Pharaoh Man, Magma Man, Torch Man, Konro Man, Aries, and Burner Man.

"I am the guardian of the Sol Emeralds..." she stated defiantly. It was more true now than it ever was in the baseline with a set stored safely in her subspace pocket. She could feel their power, but initiating a super transformation now would be wasteful. Her own would be plenty. "... I command their firey power..."

A pillar of flame erupted from her and engulfed the surrounding robots.

"I command all fire! "

Marine was in a similar situation as her friend. Surrounded on all sides by aquatic robot masters; Aqua Man, Pump Man, Wave Man, Mega Water S, Pisces, Virgo, Splash Woman, Pirate Man, and Shark Man; attempting to drown her or otherwise use the deluge of water the others were putting out against her.

Concentrating as hard as she could, she forced the water to burst outward and sweep her adversaries away.

"Ha!" she pointed dramatically. "That's what ye get when ye challenge the great captain Marine!"

" Ha! " Silver taunted as he immobilized Magic Man, Dyna Man, and the twin Clock Men with his psychokinesis. "The doctors are fools to send you against me! No robot is immune to my power!"

A sudden sensation of temporal manipulation swept over him and Silver found himself frozen in place. He cursed mentally for forgetting about this guy.

"Nor are you immune to ours ," Flash Man sneered.

As the robot proceeded to then obsess over Silver's hair, for whatever reason, the temporally displaced hedgehog did his best to access the Time Stones he'd become guardian of over the course of the Loops and use their power to break the temporal freezing holding him in place. Actual time travel outside what was 'supposed' to happen in a Loop iteration tended to cause him to 'exit' that Loop and Awaken in a later one. Plus, Hermes had 'politely' informed him that the full extent of the Time Stones' temporal abilities were sealed off for the duration of the Loops to prevent paradoxes. But they still should be able to counter the robot's time manipulation... (3)

If only he could get them to work... Damn but his time powers were rusty from disuse.

Rotor twitched as Oil Man (or was it Grease Man?) doused him with a stream of foul-smelling crude. He might be a mechanic, but dealing with Eggman's environmentally unfriendly operations had left him with a special burning anger for those who polluted.

He was going to leave this bot in so many pieces that the doctors wouldn't be able to reassemble him with two factories and the relevant blueprints.

Espio and Shadow Man bowed respectfully to each other before blurring into motion.

Snake Man fired his Search Snake weapon wildly, but his adversary was just too close and too relentless to actually aim in the right direction.

"Yer a disgrace to reptiles everywhere!" Vector spat as he continued brawling with the serpentine robot master.

"Whoa-oa-oa-oa!" Charmy yelled as he flew through air, dodging the drones Hornet Man was firing at him. 'Why did my spy tux have to be incinerated? I could have used it right about now!' (4)

When faced with Gravity Man, Big did the first thing that seemed like it might work.

He sat on the spacetime robot.

Stone Man's fist met that of Knuckles, and the former shattered into a slew of bricks.

"This guy hits like Guts Man!" the robot master worriedly reformed his arm while his echidna opponent whipped around to shatter a block fired at him by Concrete Man.

"Ha!" Volt Man proclaimed to his opponent. "Nothing can get through my Force Field!"

"We'll just see about that!" Mighty challenged and punched the energy barrier as hard as he could.

Volt Man went flying, Force Field and all, into several robot masters a fair distance away. (5)

Rouge grimaced as she evaded the sound wave attack of her pursuer.

"Come now, m'lady," the vampire-like Shade Man grinned after her, "give up this pointless resistance and rejoin the classier company of our side!"

'That's it,' she declared mentally, 'I'm putting one of my heels through his CPU.'

As soon as the battle has begun, Tails had whipped the Tornado out from his subspace pocket and taken to the skies. He was currently engaged in an aerial dogfight against Tornado Man, Wind Man, Gyro Man, Tengu Man, and Cloud Man.

"Come on!" he shouted at the robots as he evaded their weapons and returned fire with the Tornado's main gun. "That all you got?!"

Amy's Piko Hammer struck the chin of Taurus, the minotaur-form Constellation Droid, and laid him out flat. The pink hedgehog then charged off to engage her next opponent.

Ray wondered what he was doing here as he struggled against the immense winds produced by his opponent, Air Man. Both Sonic and the Chaotix kept telling him that he was as capable as anyone, but he really didn't feel it. They told him he was 'brave' and 'awesome', but he shook with fear when facing nearly every opponent, stuttered over every other word that came out of his mouth, and every victory he gained seemed like a convergence of luck and idiocy from his perspective.

But... his friends needed him. He'd give it everything he had.

Cream had shifted to what the others called her 'were-rabbit' form for the fight. She didn't like hurting others, but these robot masters wanted to help the mean doctors hurt everyone in two universes, so they had to fight them.

She'd actually been doing rather well until her current opponent entered the fray.

"Heehee! You got big sharp pointy teeth, eh?" Grenade Man giggled as he fired Flash Bomb after Flash Bomb at the frantically dodging young rabbit and her chao. "Well just call me Antioch!"

Bunnie was carving a swath of destruction across the battlefield with her cybernetic enhancements when the Dimension known as Compass Man knocked her off balance.

"Oh, that's how ya want it, eh?" she narrowed her eyes. "Well, bring it, varmint!"

"I don't want to hurt you all again, but I will!" Roll shouted as she cut her way past several electrical robot masters with the Trick Sword, Tango following along in his spiked ball mode.

"I've got a bunch of powerful new weapons," she continued, switching to the Fire Tornado when she spotted a group of ice-themed robot masters, "and even more allies on my side! There's only one way this can end!"

Sonic grinned as he ran. He'd caused a multi-robot-master pile-up with the speedster crowd, and a couple of others who'd hitched a ride with the first, before going after the poser who shared his name.

But it seemed Quick Man had recovered from the pile-up and come looking for round two, and so Sonic took it as an invitation to show off a bit by running back and forth across the speed-focused robot master's pursuit path. And just to taunt him, he took potshots at a bunch of other robot masters along the way.

Laugh at Skull Man being chased by Rush, cheap shot at Bubble Man's back, duck under Needle Man's spikes, run over some red dude who dropped a couple of rings he couldn't use...

'Ah, right;' he thought as he ditched the useless rings, hopped over a water attack, slid under Tomahawk Man's axe, smashed both of Search Man's heads together, Spin Dashed Junk Man to pieces, and made a face at Wave Man (or was it Water Man?) for shooting at him and missing; 'Ring Man.'

Shaking off the stray thought, he wiped some sweat from his forehead while jumping over Ground Man, pulled a homing attack on Jewel Man, goggled at Strike Man's terrible aim as he hit Buster Rod G instead, ground his way down the monkey-robot's staff into a flying kick at Quick Man.

"YOW!" the boomerang-slinging robot master yelped as he was knocked off balance.

"You're quick Quick Man, but you're not fast !" Sonic chortled to himself as he whipped out the old taunt from when he'd last done this verbatim, coasting over a missile from Dive Man that went straight for Drill Man as he did so. 'Ah, nostalgia. Hmm... Better not get too caught up in this. Shade should be finished cracking the password soon and we'll need to move fast when that happens.'

"Really! Hate! That! Hedgehog!" Quick Man cursed as he tumbled along the ground again.

Bass leaned against a... large cylindrical object (heck if he cared what it was for) in the Wily Egg's command center, brooding while the doctors watched the massive brawl going on below. His father was cheering like a maniac, which was really rather embarrassing, and Eggman...

Eggman had been watching the whole thing calmly when all Bass's experience with the man said he should be acting just as loony as Bass's old man was. Something was up.

"Not enjoying the show?" he prodded his dad's 'friend'. Yeah, like that was gonna last.

"Just teasing apart a mystery..." Eggman replied, sounding a little distracted.

Bass was about to follow up on that when the man's servant, Orbot if he remembered right, came in to give a report. Bass idly noted something about an unauthorized transmission when Orbot's fellow lackey, Cubot, was dragged into the room by Treble, the accent-prone robot trying desperately to pull Treble back with a leash.

'Why that...' Bass saw red. 'No one does that to my dog!'

Bass was too preoccupied with trying to stomp the small yellow bot's cube form to note Eggman leaving the room with Metal Sonic.

Rock got an interesting idea and switched to Big Man's Fishing Rod weapon, turning indigo and purple with white trim, to try it out.

"Huh?" Doc's eyebrow went up in confusion. "I don't recognize that weapon..."

"Good," Rock proclaimed as he took full advantage of the Doc Robot's convenient distracted state. The industrial-strength fishing line wrapped around the multi-weapon master and bound his arms to his side, and then Rock yanked with all his might to drag his opponent to him. (6)

"Gya-ha-ha-ha! You should have said you wanted to make this up close and personal!" Doc Robot exclaimed gleefully as his body flew towards Rock and collided with the smaller robot who had switched back to his base weapon.

"I just needed to make sure you couldn't dodge," Rock replied flatly, bracing himself from falling over, as his Mega Buster finished charging and he fired straight into Doc Robot's waist from point blank range.

Doc Robot's lower half was separated from his top half rather spectacularly and the bound half-a-robot fell to the ground, cackling. "Gya-ha-ha! Not bad, Rock old boy! Ruthless and efficient! Just how it should be! Come on and finish me off! You've earned it!"

"No," Rock's statement shut the insane robot up. "As long as you're still functioning, the doctors can't time clone you. So I'm just going to put you out of the way for now and see what we can do after all this is finished."

Rock tuned out Doc's outraged ranting as he looked around for a good spot to stash him. By coincidence, he was near the spot where the entire group had reconvened. He could tell from the pulsing orb Shadow had casually tossed behind him when the robot master army had descended. Why he'd done that instead of put it in the subspace pocket Sonic had told him nearly all loopers had (and had told him the basics of performing), Rock didn't know. He could have just been trying to look cool. It certainly wouldn't be the first case of showboating overriding common sense in that group.

"Here, you can keep the glowing orb company," Rock propped Doc up on a rock near the object and proceeded to return to the battle.

"Damn you!" Doc yelled after him. "You get back here and kill me proper before I come and bite your legs off!"

Sonic was standing atop a downed Crash Man when Shadow called him over.

"Sonic! Shade's contacted Proto Man," the currently gun-toting black hedgehog informed him, and Sonic immediately raced over to where the red robot was convening with Rock and Roll while Beat, Omega, Knuckles, Rotor, and Vector – the latter spraying the fire breath technique he'd picked up somewhere Sonic couldn't recall at the moment – covered them.

"Blues?" Roll questioned as the two hedgehogs skidded to a stop, Shadow joining the group covering them.

"Shade's cracked the code," Blues informed them, all business. "We need to get you three up there now to strike at the doctors while we have the opportunity."

"All right," Rock agreed, not even bothering with the argument for staying to help against the robot master army he'd tried in the baseline. Blues was right, the doctors came first. Plus, everyone down here was perfectly capable of handling the situation.

"Tango!" Roll called her support unit over while Rock called for Rush as well. "I need your jet mode!"

" Yo Ray! I need a pick-up!" Sonic called out to his old friend to fly him to the teleporter platform over the middle of the crater. He vaguely recalled asking Tails in the baseline, but the fox was currently in a dogfight with multiple robot masters in the Tornado. In short order the three of them were rocketing over the crater towards the teleporter.

"Y-y-you sure this is a g-good idea, S-Sonic?" Ray stuttered as he carried the hedgehog. "I-I mean, th-there's a l-lot of r-r-robot m-masters still there..."

"Which is that much less standing in the way of the me and the wonder twins once we get inside that big battle station," Sonic reminded the nervous squirrel, before grinning. "Besides, I know you can handle 'em."

The success chance had been on a steady decline ever since the combined heroes of both Loops had engaged the robot master army. As Eggman began his trek down towards the prison cells, the rate at which it dropped accelerated.

And then Eggman made an unscheduled stop that caught Hermes' attention. "Is that what I think it is?"

Hephaestus diverted some of his attention to check, and swore. "Aw... nuts. I was hoping the changes had prevented those from occurring..."

"No such luck," Hermes winced. "And they are changed. Otherwise we'd have seen this coming..."

"Drat! Let's see... Blues? No! Duo? Anyone?"

"Well-well-well," Eggman interrupted Dr. Light's attempt to communicate with the forces outside the Wily Egg. The captured scientist hid the device he'd cobbled together with a speed almost worthy of the hedgehog, but in an effort that was ultimately pointless. "Aren't we resourceful?"

The wall to the cell slid up as Eggman and Metal Sonic stared sinisterly at the prisoner while the eternal adversary of Sonic continued. "You know, it's rather strange. You knew things about what we were doing here that were simply impossible to divine yourself. I might have believed that Rouge had relayed this to you had we not captured and roboticized her before she even had the chance. It's quite the mystery you see. But it's clear that you're a very resourceful man, Thomas. The communicator you built from scavenged robot parts proves it. But knowing what you do? Perhaps a little too resourceful. Yes..."

Dr. Eggman turned and ordered Metal Sonic to bring the doctor along, as well as gesturing to a third figure to follow as well.

"What in the world...?" Dr. Light exclaimed upon seeing the additional member of the group.

"Just a little side effect of the unique Zone we're in," Eggman waved Light's surprise off. "Not as important as the fact that Albert was right about you being trouble. I'll admit, I've clearly underestimated you. A mistake I won't make twice, not when I'm this close to winning."

"Wait a moment!" Dr. Light struggled futilely against Metal Sonic's hold as Eggman went up to a button on the wall with clear warning labels and pressed it, the floor of the immense chamber opening up to reveal the air beneath the battlestation as he did. The wind rushed past as the pressure inside and outside equalized. "You don't need to–"

"Probably not," Eggman interrupted the man, "but I want to. Goodbye Dr. Light."

And with that, Metal Sonic threw the good doctor through the opening towards the crater below.

"Go after him," Eggman ordered the other figure as he waved cheerfully at the falling doctor.

"Of course, sir," the figure said with Dr. Light's voice and jumped out as ordered.

Hermes swore as he and Hephaestus typed furiously at their terminals. The moment Dr. Light had been tossed out of the Wily Egg, the success chance had begun plummeting . At this rate it would hit zero about the same time Dr. Light hit the ground.

SAVE DR. LIGHT!

That was the thought that flashed through everyone's minds at the same time that the simultaneous cry of "DAD!" from both Rock and Roll was heard all across the battlefield.

Sonic swore to himself as he landed on the teleporter platform. How the hell had he forgotten about this?! Rush and Tango had apparently hit their afterburners, but it wasn't going to be enough of a boost.

"Mega Man to anyone! " he could hear the blue bomber plead over his radio. "Dr. Light is in free-fall on the north side! Roll and I are en route, but were not gonna make it! "

"Somebody help!" he heard Roll pleaded over her own radio. " Please! "

"C-can you–" Ray started to ask Sonic before being cut off by the also-panicking hedgehog.

"The dude's falling right into the crater!" He yelled as he raced back and forth across the platform, nearly running Shade over as he did. "I can't – somebody get up there!"

Blaze was halfway to a super mode transformation, the only thing she knew fast enough to make it, when she heard Shadow make his own attempt.

"CHAO–ung!" the dark hedgehog fell, dazed, from a lucky blow to the head.

Looked like it was up to her after all. She finished calling on the full power of the Sol Emeralds and sped off as Burning Blaze, reaching mach speeds in an instant.

She reached the father of the one who had restored her in moments and slowed down enough to catch him without doing the man injury. She pulled up in her flight... and spotted a second Dr. Light falling above the first.

It was obvious to anyone that one was a fake, but she simply didn't have time to work out which at the moment. She grabbed the second Dr. Light and accelerated back across the crater. It was towards the battlefield, yes, but it was also the only place with people who could defend the good doc–

GET DR. LIGHT AWAY FROM THE FAKE NOW!

The sense of panic that surged through her caused her to look back at her passengers just in time to see the face of one detach and begin to flip around. Without hesitation, Burning Blaze flung the other Dr. Light towards her allies as hard as she could without hurting him while also halting the forward movement of herself and the fake.

"Paradox Light is happy to be exploding on you today," came the cheery voice of her remaining passenger. (7)

Whether it was feline curiosity or sapient reflex didn't matter. It still meant that Burning Blaze looked back at the fake she held to see its face had been replaced with a digital readout.

A digital readout with a countdo–

KA-BOOM

(Commercial break by LordCirce)

A group of students in coal-grey uniforms sit in a classroom. All of them look bored, staring blankly off into space. A solemn, slightly grating violin plays in the background.

At the front of the room, a blonde woman dressed in a grey schoolteacher uniform sits at her desk. Slowly, she looks up.

"Do your days feel gloomy and grey? Do they lack a certain bounce and jiggle? Do they seemed to be filled with endless studying, with no breaks in sight?"

"Well not anymore!" She stands and rips off the uniform, revealing a sparkling pink bikini, dotted with sequins. Color seems to fly through the classroom, causing the students to sit upright. The doors to the classroom burst open, and several bouncy girls bearing banners proclaiming "Eiken Club!" danced into the classroom.

The blonde woman turned to face the camera. "Hi, I'm Aphrodite, and I am here to brighten your day. Too often, school days are boring and grey. Now, they will be bright, pink, and bouncy! With the Eiken Club, you will get to explore new places," the camera pans to several boys falling into the cleavage of some of the Eiken girls, "meet beautiful people," a circle of boys stand staring at some of the girls, "and maybe, even meet the woman of your dreams." Aphrodite turns and winks, causing several of the boys to faint with nosebleeds. She giggles.

Then, a hole rips in the air over the desk, and Haruhi Suzumiya leaps through, landing in a pose, before giving a thumbs up. "I'm Haruhi, and I approve this message!"

(End commercial break)

Hephaestus twitched at his terminal. Whoever taught his wife how to send spam mail that opened itself was going to die.

Painfully.

Dr. Light felt more than heard the explosion behind him as he hurtled unaided through the air towards the battlefield below. Or the crater. He wasn't sure if he'd impact the ground at the peak or the cliffside below it. And then he was cut out of his musings by a pair of hands grasping his arms.

"Gotcha!" his savior, a yellow-furred squirrel – flying at that – proclaimed as he desperately wrestled with Dr. Light's momentum. He managed though, and the two were rewarded with a rough, but thankfully injury-free landing.

"–CONTROL!" finished Shadow as he warped in next to them, carrying an unconscious, and decidedly non-Burning, Blaze in his arms.

"Stay down, doctor," Shadow ordered. "Our comrades will provide cover for both you and Blaze."

"I will protect the flabby, hairy man and the burning lady of beautiful destruction!" (8) Omega proclaimed in his typical monotone from one side of the group as Blues took up guard on the other.

"Proto Man to Mega Man and Mega Woman – We have Dr. Light," Blues then turned to the father he'd estranged himself from. "...Are you hurt?"

"I'll be fine," Dr. Light told him a little breathlessly. He might have a few nightmares over this later, but for now he could hold it together.

"He's unharmed, and it looks like Blaze will recover as well," Blues reported over the radio to his brother before detaching his Sit-Rep shades from the helmet – that particular upgrade had been a gift from Dr. Cossack immediately after he'd been acquitted for his actions when Wily blackmailed him with his daughter's safety – and handing the shades-less helmet to Dr. Light. "Here," he told the surprised scientist, who'd been about to request exactly this as a blast of water from Pump Man splashed against the shield before Shadow could engage the robot master. "Make it quick. We're in the middle of a war zone."

Mighty arrived to reinforce the defensive formation in time to fend off Knight Man as Dr. Light made the call.

Doc Robot cackled as the orb finished grafting itself to the shattered base of his torso. "Who'd have guessed that they'd have kept you around? Gya-ha-ha-ha!"

The programming from the orb attempted to infiltrate his neural net and take over, but he'd been designed by Dr. Wily to be intamperable. Or rather, unreformable. It amounted to almost the same thing in the end.

"Gya-ha-ha! Not bad... Reaper, is it? Yes... we're the same now aren't we?" the mad robot spoke with himself. "Not quite mad Doc Robot, but not entirely the Egg Denizen known as Reaper either... We shall be known as Doc Reaper! All shall tremble in fear as we cut them down! Oh, Rock old boy, I'm gonna have to thank you for this! Assuming you live... Hehehe."

'Doc Reaper' produced a pair of scythe blades from his arms that shredded the fishing line binding him... and promptly fell over as he tried to move. "Gya-ha-ha-ha-ha! That's right! We still don't have any legs! We'll go and collect our old ones, and then we'll carve down all in our path!"

With that, the mad conglomeration of two machines crawled along the ground to where Rock had left the shattered remains of Doc Robot's lower body. (9)

"Mega Man, Mega Woman, do you copy?" came the welcome voice of Dr. Light over the radios of Rock and Roll as they approached the teleporter platform once again.

"Dr. Light!" Roll choked down a grateful sob, making to continue past the platform and towards her father. "Hold on, I'll be right there and–"

"No," the no-nonsense tone of their creator cut her off. "I'll be fine. Right now you both are needed on the Wily Egg, the doctors' flying fortress. You need to stop Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily. You need to save our world and Sonic's world, and all the worlds in our two universes! Go, my children. Be the heroes we need you to be."

"O-okay," Roll wiped her tears away.

"Stay safe!" Rock offered as he and his sister descended towards the doctors' teleporter platform. "We'll see you when this is done!"

"Hey you two," Sonic greeted them as they landed. "Ray lit out of here in the direction Blaze tossed your dad like someone strapped a rocket to him. I think he might have been moving before she even tossed him. Your dad okay? Any word on Blaze?"

"Yes," Shade cut in. "Dr. Light is uninjured and while Blaze was knocked out of her super mode by the blast, she is otherwise unharmed."

Sonic whistled. Super forms were practically invincible. Actually knocking someone out of one instead of running the transformation out? That took some serious force. Being in super mode was probably the only thing that had saved Blaze's life.

"Too close for comfort," Rock's eyes narrowed. "We need to end this."

"I would like to come with you and sabotage the doctors' fortress from within," Shade offered.

"Not that good an idea," Sonic grimaced. "No offense, but Rouge is at least as good a saboteur as you are, and she came out a robot when she tried. No telling what they have off whatever obstacles are set up for me and the Lights."

Shade was silent for a moment. "Point taken. Please step onto the teleporter."

"Rush, Tango," Roll told their support units. "Stay here and take Shade back with you. Help her out as much as you can."

Shade huffed indignantly. "I am perfectly capable of–"

"We know," Rock cut her off, "but there's a good chance we may need them to fly up reinforcements to save us at the last minute and they can't do that if they're with us."

"Very well," Shade sighed as she activated the teleporter and sent the trio on into the Wily Egg.

The rescue of Dr. Light had stopped the rampant freefall the success chance had gone into, but it was still dropping. Much slower than it had been, but the downward trend continued nonetheless. As the trio of heroes entered the Wily Egg, the success chance reached half what it had been when the battle with the robot masters had begun.

Hephaestus scrambled to analyze data and figure out just what it was that his potential loopers were headed towards.

Rouge descended towards the scientist she'd once again gotten captured while trying to help. Her own fault, really, for not paying more attention to things. "Long time no see, Doc!" she greeted the man who was still wearing his eldest son's helmet while said son shielded the scientist from an attacking Gemini Man.

"Good to see you're safe, agent Rouge." Dr. Light returned her greeting as he finished scavenging robot master parts from downed robot masters (who had been time cloned and sent right back out).

He began to tinker with them as she came lower. "How goes the battle?"

"Not so hot. We're severely outnumbered. Any one of these robot masters would be a challenge," she replied, seeing an opening to dive towards one of the Gemini Men she saw. It was true enough. Even though most of them were experienced loopers, Dr. Wily did really good work with his robot masters. Their biggest saving grace was still the fact that each member of the army was designed to fight solo rather than as a united force. They were getting in each other's way as often as not. "We can't – ugh , stupid decoys!" Had she mentioned lately that she hated holographic opponents?

"Don't give up," Dr. Light encouraged her from his tinkering while Blues shielded him from a laser fired by the real Gemini Man. Rouge took a moment to admire the red raider. Blues actually made the pompadour hairstyle work.

"The boys have made it into the Wily Egg, so this should be over soon. And I'd anticipate reinforcements any time now," the scientist continued as he stood up, revealing a cobbled-together Mega Buster over his left forearm, turned, and fired on Gemini Man who fell over stunned and immobile.

Rouge gaped at what she'd just witnessed the man do. Even knowing he'd performed that same feat in the baseline failed to make it any less impressive. (10)

"Give us a second to stabilize the portal," Dr. Lalinde informed Duo as she and Tempo worked on the task, Dr. Cossack working with Auto on a different project off to the side. "The lab's computers have only done this once before."

Duo said nothing as he watched the energy form into a swirling portal framed by a golden ring.

"There," Noele Lalinde nodded with satisfaction, "That should be stable enough to–"

"Thank you doctor," Duo interrupted. "I will handle things from here. Please do not follow me until I have forwarded the environmental data back through the portal. I can sense something not right about what is on the other side."

"Understood. Be careful," Lalinde agreed as the space robot flew through the portal. "And good luck."

"How's the battle going Albert?" Dr. Eggman cheerfully strode back into the command center, totally missing the frantic gestures of his lackeys Orbot and Cubot to remain silent and turn back. As a result, he was caught completely off guard when Albert grabbed him and slammed him against the wall in fury.

"YOU TRIED TO KILL THOMAS!" Dr. Wily roared, sending Ivo's lackeys into their geometric forms in fear. Even Bass's eyes were a touch wider than usual at the unexpected ferocity his father was showing. (11)

"Of course!" Eggman admitted in surprise and confusion. "He knew too much and was trying to contact our enemies! He had to be dealt with!"

" NO! " Wily roared again, throwing Eggman bodily to the ground in his adrenaline-fueled rage. "Not like that! Thomas is a nuisance, but I won't see him MURDERED! "

Metal Sonic simply floated off to the side observing the confrontation and making no move to help his creator.

"What?" Eggman cried in bewilderment as he got to his feet and pointed accusingly at his partner. "You hate him! I thought you'd be happy! "

" IDIOT! " Wily roared back, as opposite of happy as humanly possible. "I want him embarrassed, humbled, and defeated, not dead! "

"What about the whole 'eyes on the prize' line you gave me?" Eggman accused, preparing to defend himself.

"Thomas on his knees is my prize!" Wily screamed back as he leapt bodily at his partner.

" Hey! Old guys!" Bass decided to break this up before the doctors completely forgot why they were originally here in their efforts to maim each other. "Mega Man, his sister, and his animal pal are on board, or are you too busy slap-fighting to care?"

Reminded of what was happening by both Bass's words and the monitor's display showing exactly that, the doctors broke up and attempted to act nonchalant.

" Hmph ," Dr. Wily straightened his labcoat. "Send the Mega Man Killers and tell those other three to get ready. That should at least slow them down long enough for us to finish preparations."

"Yes," Dr. Eggman begrudgingly agreed as he dusted himself off. "Metal Sonic, take Bass and guard checkpoint X. If they defeat Albert's pet project there, then it's up to you two to finish them."

Bass didn't miss the ugly looks the doctors shot each other before they exited the room. However, nearly everyone was so preoccupied with the drama between the doctors that they didn't see the notice on the console regarding the detection of a new 'denizen' forming. And everyone else also missed Metal Sonic pressing a few buttons to begin the conversion of this new denizen into a mechanical weapon to be teleported to the battle below before he moved to obey Eggman's orders.

The battle halted as the roar of something enormous emerged from the crater, and every eye turned towards it to see if it would prove friend or foe. The ground rumbled as a figure at least a giant head taller than the Egg Denizens: Mother and Father climbed its way up onto the plateau.

It was humanoid with a permanent scowl upon its face, each massive hand holding an equally immense curved sickle blade. It finished its climb and stood to its full height, towering over the warriors below it.

"Tremble, mortals, before Egg Denizen: Titan!" the giant robot bellowed.

Duo sat in a meditative pose midair as he scanned the twisted dimension he found himself in. Immediately upon entering, he had felt the dimension scan him and then attempt to take something from him. Something he did not possess, which apparently frustrated whatever force was behind it.

It mattered not. The force, while certainly not benevolent, was not self-aware. It would not impede his mission. A mission that remained firm in his mind regardless of whatever force had twisted time back upon itself.

He could feel everything about this dimension. How it was originally meant to be a proving grounds for mortal supplicants; full of hazards, dangers, and evils; but also with the potential to create something wondrous at the end. Provided that the soul who gained such a boon proved Good and Just of course, otherwise it had an equal potential to create something poisonous and foul. He also felt how it had become corrupted upon fusing with a chaotic force it was never meant to mesh with, and had then become poisoned by the Evil of the doctors until the entire thing was nothing more than a parasitic tumor upon reality. A tumor poised to corrupt and destroy, or worse, no less than two entire universes.

Whatever this dimension was originally supposed to be, it had become nothing more than an abomination upon the fabric of reality.

He could sense dozens of robotic lifeforms in the distance, most of which seemed to be just beneath the notice of whatever force had tried to take from him when he arrived. And there was also a spirit of malevolence in the distance which had not existed prior to his arrival. It seemed the unknown force had taken something from him after all.

He sent a message back through the portal that no human should come through the portal until he signaled it was safe to do so. There was already Evil aplenty and Justice needed to be served.

Shadow grinned. Finally , something to use that special gun he'd begged off of Tails on. Whipping the thing out of his subspace pocket caused nearly every eye in the vicinity to widen comically. It was: A. Really. Big. Freaking. Gun.

It was at least three times Shadow's size, with at least four lesser cannon barrels attached to the main one, a few machine gun attachments, a couple of missiles mounted on it, what looked like a swiss-army bayonet, and the words 'Big Bad Mamma Jamma!' painted on the side.

Save for two individuals, everyone else, organic and robot alike, backed away from Shadow.

"It is gorgeous," monotoned Omega, transfixed by the sight of the weapon.

"Aw, yeah! " cheered Grenade Man. "Shoot it! Shoot it!"

The Freedom Fighters recognized Rotor's work, and as one turned to the walrus.

"Hey, I only loaded it with enough ammo for one pull of the trigger," the battle mechanic defended himself as Shadow took aim at Titan and did exactly that.

It was hard to say exactly what kind of overall blast erupted from the weapon, but it tore a hole straight through Titan's torso shaped like a cat's pupil. The previously fearsome giant robot finished splitting in twain as it crashed to the ground.

"Gya-ha-ha-ha-ha!" 'Doc Reaper' whisper-cackled as he saw the immense body of Titan fall to the ground. Forget the legs he'd just finished reattaching, that would be the perfect body to graft himself to and lay waste to the allies of Mega Man with. He'd just have to get across the battlefield in one piece without drawing attention to himself. Considering the chaos rampaging unchecked, no one would so much as spare him a second glance so long as he controlled himself enough to not attack them outright.

And for the kind of body he'd get as a reward, he could manage to control himself that long.

Roll tried to suppress her exasperation with her brother and his friend from another Loop. From the moment all three of them had gotten aboard the Wily Egg, those two had been such boys .

They had been arguing back and forth about whether or not their resident mad scientist was the driving force behind the Wily Egg's design. And not only could neither accept the other's valid points, they had these stupid grins on their faces the whole time.

All of a sudden, she was struck by the thought that if the subject they were debating had been social gossip and dating prospects, they'd have sounded just like stereotypical teenage girls. Roll had to fight a sudden a fit of giggles at the mental image of her brother and Sonic in the latest teen girl fashions going 'no way!' and 'ohmygod!' at each other. (12)

"It's the Mega Man Killers!" her brother's shout broke Roll out of her musings, and she reflexively brought out the weapons-grade broom she carried with her and telescoped it to full length.

Poking fun at her brother and his friend could wait until after the worlds were saved.

"The genesis chamber," Hephaestus suddenly said. The place where the doctors had their Chaos Emerald powered Genesis Wave device that could rewrite the local reality of both universes the Skaia/Zone pocket dimension was attached to from the ground up. The Chaos Emeralds were prevented from rewriting their universe's base code in Yggdrasil's system, but even one would allow this device to 'shuffle' history and people around. All seven would let the doctors use the device to basically define their own personal variant of the current iteration, which would likely be game over for the 'Mega' branch. And that was before taking Skaia's presence into account.

"Huh?" Hermes absently inquired from where he was trying to follow his loopers' battle with the robot masters.

"Yggdrasil just finished running the numbers and every single path worth mentioning puts our Anchors in the genesis chamber about the same time that the success chance will hit zero at its current rate of decline," Hephaestus continued. "The only explanation is that it's something in the genesis chamber itself that's a threat."

"Then we better get on finding it," Hermes admitted.

The Genesis Wave device was the most likely culprit for causing this attempt to fail, but... it was too obvious. It would have featured in all of the possible paths Yggdrasil had calculated since the beginning. So Hephaestus had a feeling that there was something else the doctors were going to try and use. Something he and Hermes hadn't noticed yet amidst all the data they had to sift through.

'One good Punk deserves another?' Sonic thought as he and the crimson blade-wielding robot went at each other. 'Cute, guys. Real cute.'

Sonic decided to take this aerial and Homing Attack the guy to death, only for the robot to curl himself into a whirling spiked sawblade ball and come after him. Sonic twitched as he and his opponent ricocheted around the room. The two opponents repeatedly crashed into each other, bouncing off with little mutual harm as they did.

"STOP!"

Seriously, it wasn't enough that Wily had a robot with his name?

"STEALING!"

Nor enough that the nutcase had made a half-dozen or so speedsters of his own that had felt like challenging Sonic?

"MY!"

Who cared if this had all happened in the baseline? Did he have to suffer through having everything that defined him stolen by this guy again ?

"MOVES!"

Honestly, he got enough of that from Eggman already!

'Doc Reaper', as he now called himself, did his best to cross the battlefield undetected. It was beginning to get tiresome though. There was only so long that avoiding stray shots remained entertaining.

Something suddenly impacted the back of his head and pushed off.

"Sorry Mr. Robot!" the rabbit-thing called back as it continued to flee with a small blue... something.

"That's Doctor Robot!" he yelled after her despite himself. He was about to correct that too when another figure crashed into him and knocked him down.

Laughing where he lay, he swore that whoever that had been, enemy combatant or robot master, they were going to die.

Broom clashed against Barrier Spear in a rapid staccato as Roll and Enker dueled ferociously back and forth across the corridor.

"Your skills are no match for mine!" Enker boasted as he turned aside Roll's every strike, occasionally also lashing out with the Mirror Buster using the kinetic energy his spear absorbed.

"Bring it!" Roll shot back as she continued to deflect Enker's attacks in turn.

(Sneaky Doc Reaper part 2 thanks to Dalxein)

This was beginning to become tiresome again. The mad robot had taken to making a game of it, seeing how close the other combatants could get before he had to stop moving, or testing his luck and continuing to move while the battle raged around him. He'd even kept right on moving once through a mess of elemental-based Robot Masters as they were cut down, and one had stepped on the back of his head without noticing he was active. He would giggle about it if only it hadn't scuffed his skullplate. (13)

But now even that was growing tiresome. His need for stealth was paramount, and he'd run out of games that would only reasonably endanger his chances of making it through the battlefield unseen. It was like–

"Hey there, Doc Robo. You... you look terrible. You okay? Need some hel–" PRREEEXCHRANG Blade Man's question was cut off as his two halves parted from one another, a sickle blade retracting into Doc Reaper's arm. Stealth was paramount, after all.

...then again, a better set of legs than he was currently making do with might've been appreciated, and while not a speedster, Blade Man wasn't slow.

Oh, blast it all, he was starting to regret that.

"Gya-ha-ha-ha~" No, on second thought, no he didn't.

Absorbing Blade Man's Blades had nothing to do with it, he insisted to himself.

"Ballade, stop!" Rock pleaded with his opponent even as he shot the robot's explosive Ballade Crackers out of the air. "Don't you remember? You once turned against Wily to save me! You can do it again!"

"I have no idea what you're talking about!" Ballade sneered as he continued his relentless barrage. "Now stand and fight me like a man!"

'Right,' Rock thought to himself as the relevant memories became clearer. 'It's not just a revised timeline. Wily's time cloned all of his robot masters from the point where they were most loyal to him. I'm just glad he stopped bothering with the original set dad made after we undid his reprogramming.'

Ivo is a liability. A loose cannon. His actions prove it. He must be disposed of.

Dr. Wily's headache was pounding stronger than ever as he and Ivo put the finishing touches on their joint creation, the Egg-Wily Machine X. He could almost swear that his headache was forming words now, but that was ridiculous. Even for him.

He will betray you. He has betrayed you. He tried to take from you the victory you always deserved.

Their partnership now was strained at best, and only the promise of ultimate power and the threat of their enemies closing in combined was keeping them working together.

He is no better than the rest. He does not truly respect you like he should.

Ivo had one more chance. One. If he proved unworthy of it, then...

Eliminate him.

Then Albert W. Wily would do what he had to.

"Follow the bouncing hedgehog!" was the only warning Roll got as Sonic came ricocheting around the corner with Punk hot on his trail.

"Rock!" she called to her brother as she sidestepped out of Punk's path with reflexes honed from years of fighting all manner of robots. As Punk's blind pursuit of Sonic caused him to bisect Enker, she swung her broom-staff and knocked the Killer off-course. "Heads up!"

Rock didn't even turn as he dashed to the side and let Punk run straight into one of Ballade's explosives.

"Mega Man!" Sonic called out as Punk unwound from his ball form. "Switch!"

"Right!" Roll's brother replied as he slid under Sonic's Homing Attack on Ballade to fire on Punk who was readying a Screw Crusher.

As Punk fell to her brother's Mega Buster, Sonic's assault on Ballade caused his fired explosive to be sent off course. Straight at Roll. (14)

Roll casually deflected the bomb with her broom-staff and fired her own Mega Buster at Ballade, finishing the Killer off.

"Rock, buddy," Sonic looked impressed. "Your sister is officially awesome."

"You say that like it's news," Rock shot his sister a teasing grin.

" Boys ," the lone female rolled her eyes as the two males laughed.

The self-proclaimed Doc Reaper finally made it through the raging battlefield and stood before the ruin of the giant Egg Denizen: Titan. The mad robot chuckled sinisterly as the orb comprising his gut pulsed and wires snaked from the wreck to attach themselves to him.

"Gya-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!"

The trio of infiltrators into the Wily Egg stopped as the room they had dashed into was suddenly sealed off at both ends. A trio of figures that neither Sonic nor Rock recalled having faced in the Wily Egg in the baseline dropped from the ceiling.

"Sonic?" Rock asked. "Remember saying that 'all we needed now was a 'Silver Sonic"?"

"Yeah," Sonic apologized. "I really should know better than to tempt fate by now. Though I'm curious as to who the other two are. Kinda looks like we've got a twisted evil doppelganger theme here."

Before the trio stood their warped doubles. The massive gleaming steel Silver Sonic, spine-like blades emerging menacingly from its back, stood over twice as tall as his two companions. Two robots who were very familiar to Rock and Roll.

"Sonic, meet Quint, my future-tech clone. And Roll's future-tech clone..." Rock introduced the opponents Sonic hadn't met.

"...Waltz," Roll finished for him.

Dr. Eggman scowled from where he was personally working on the Egg-Wily Machine X at the insistence of Albert. He'd have had a badnik do the detailing, but for whatever reason Albert was adamant about a 'craftsman's touch' before he'd deign to pilot the thing into battle.

He'd had such high hopes for the man too. The first person he'd met who could not only match his own genius, but also seemed to understand the kinds of trials men like them were subjected to. Someone who had also gone through the constant battle to keep the rabble in its place and gotten nothing but grief for it.

The first man Ivo had ever known that he could call a peer. An equal. Maybe even a friend.

And yet Albert just had to cling to sentimental weakness!

Well, the Eggman knew how to deal with that.

"Welcome, Mega Man, Mega Woman, Sonic the Hedgehog," Quint greeted the trio calmly. "Welcome to your doom. There is no chance for victory, no way to escape. Our final duels will play out in this chamber."

"This guy fight half as well as he blabs?" Sonic yawned.

"Do you?" Quint's verbal jab nearly goaded Sonic to attacking in a rage, but a firm hand from Rock and a solemn shake of the blue bomber's head forestalled it. The message was clear, these were dangerous opponents not to be underestimated. Quint ignored the exchange and turned to Waltz. "You remember the plan, Waltz?"

"Of course, dear brother!" Waltz smiled and patted Quint on the back in a manner that would have seemed comforting if the divergence from the personality Rock and Roll were used to wasn't setting off alarms in their heads. "We duel them, kill them if we can, waylay them if not. Just like you said: No tricks. No games. And..."

At this, Waltz leaned over and spoke the last part right into the audio receptors in Quint's helmet.

"...No more distractions," Waltz purred.

The heroes barely noticed the start of Quint's expression changing to surprise before his forehead exploded outwards. The limp body of Rock's future double fell to the ground, revealing the smoking finger cannons of Waltz that had been at the base of his neck. (15)

"What in...?" Sonic blurted in shock, before Waltz raised her other arm towards the final companion and began pumping rapid-fire plasma shots into Silver Sonic's cranium. And all the while, she was looking at the trio of heroes with an insane grin on her face.

"Don't look so shocked!" Waltz giggled insanely as the robot hedgehog fell to the ground, its head reduced to so much scrap. "It was only fair that I got to kill him when he killed me first! And the big guy was just an eyesore, really."

"What do you want, Waltz?" Rock asked, not trusting the current turn of events in the least. Waltz was not an altruist. By any stretch of the imagination.

"Hmph. Party pooper," the mentally unbalanced robot scoffed. "I just want to play."

That set both Rock and Roll on edge. They knew how Waltz defined 'play'. For that matter, her tone wasn't exactly putting Sonic at ease either.

"Don't be like that!" Waltz grinned at them with an innocence no one bought. "If one of you agrees to stay and play with me, the other two can go on ahead. No strings attached!"

"And what if we say no?" Sonic glared.

Waltz's grin grew bigger. "Then I get to kill all three of you instead of just one. Makes no difference to me. I just felt like giving it the personal touch today you see, but if you don't wanna play that way, I'm good for the usual."

The stand off continued for several seconds before one of them stepped forward.

"Okay, Waltz," Roll told her counterpart. "You've got yourself a duel."

"Roll!" Rock tried to talk her out of it. "No! You know what she's like, an–"

"Yes, I do," Roll cut her brother off and modulated her voice so only Rock and Sonic would be able to hear. "Rock, you haven't seen her at her worst. I have. Her loose-cannon style thrives on multiple opponents. She fires too randomly to coordinate efforts, and if it's all three of us then we will be hurt. Badly. But one-on-one? I can take her. Please, brother. I... I need to do this. For myself."

Rock gave her a hug. "Don't die, sis."

"Aww..." Waltz interrupted. "How sweet! But this offer expires soon! Tick-tock!"

"Hold your horses," Roll glared. "I'll duel you. As soon as you let my brother and his friend go on ahead."

"Deal!" Waltz snapped her fingers and a door at the far end of the room opened up. With only a single backwards glance that silently asked if she knew what she was doing, Rock and Sonic went through the door, which closed behind them.

"Now, little Roll," Waltz taunted her opponent, "it's just you and me. And soon it'll be just me and some fashionable new accessories made from your charred remains."

Roll simply snapped out her broom-staff and made a 'bring it' gesture.

"GYA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA!" the booming cackle echoed out over the battle between robot masters and the gathered allies of two worlds arrayed against the doctors. Once again, the fighting halted as participants prepared to evaluate this new development.

The body of Titan seemed to rise, not only reforming itself, but sending wires towards every downed robot master – several of which had been downed multiple times due to time cloning – and absorbing their wreckage into itself. As the thing finished standing, the cackling form of Doc Robot could clearly be seen fused in a position on the torso roughly correlating to the sternum, a pulsating orb in place of his own lower torso.

"Shadow," Rouge began dangerously. "Is that...?"

"How was I supposed to know it reanimated dead robots?" Shadow defended himself. "Besides, Sonic said not to put anything from here in our subspace pockets unless we wanted Hermes to give us a full metaphysical cavity search. And while I have no clue what that means, I have zero intention of finding out."

Further debate was cut off as the giant reanimated robot bellowed its voice over the battlefield.

"Prepare yourselves for the ultimate battle!" the figure cackled. "For I am no longer merely Doc Robot. No longer solely the Egg Denizen known as Reaper. I'm not even Doc Reaper now! With the body of Titan and the scavenged weapons of every fallen robot master, I am ultimate! I am supreme!"

"I am WILY ROBO EGG TARTARUS! GYA-HA-HA-HA-eh?"

Immediately after that confused shift in tone, a blue-white streak of light blasted right through the spot on 'Wily Robo Egg Tartarus's' body that 'Doc Reaper' was fused to. A moment later, the once-again lifeless form toppled over backwards into the crater as the streak of light turned around and came to a halt before Dr. Light, resolving itself into a floating blue, red, and gray robot that had to be at least eight feet tall.

"Dr. Light," Duo greeted the armed scientist formally. "I am here to help."

In the empty command room of the Wily Egg, a lone notice on the computer went unseen:

TIME-CLONE RESTORATION OF FORTRESS GUARDIANS 'ENKER', 'PUNK', 'BALLADE', 'QUINT', AND 'SILVER SONIC' AWAITING AUTHORIZATION.

AUTOMATED TIME-CLONE RESTORATION OF ROBOT MASTER 'DOC ROBOT' FAILED DUE TO CONTAMINATION BY ZONE-NATIVE ENTITY.

"Okay, seriously," Sonic prodded Mega Man as the two ran down the corridor, " why are we leaving your sister alone with the psycho back there if she's as bad as you say?"

"Because..." Rock sighed. "You have to understand, we don't just remember the Loop where the Crash happened. Each of us remembers a series of what might have been attempts to make us solo Anchors, all of which ended in reality crashing like an over-taxed computer program."

"Okay... That's creepy," Sonic allowed. "But what does that have to do with anything?"

"I got through mine reasonably fine, all things considered," Rock informed the hedgehog. "Roll and Blues... not so much. Blues refuses to talk about what happened to him, but Roll... The whole reason Roll is doing the hero thing with me is that she lived through a couple of lives where Dr. Wily won . As in, 'my head mounted on a pike' won."

"Ick," Sonic made a grossed-out face. "What's any of this have to do with Waltz?"

"Because her last one featured Waltz as her version of Quint," Rock continued, "and that life traumatized her more than any of the others for some reason. All because of whatever Waltz did during it. She told me some, but I know I didn't get the whole story."

"I repeat," Sonic gave him a flat look, " why did we leave her there?"

"Because Roll needs to work this out at some point," Rock admitted. "And if we'd told her no, she'd have booted us out of there herself."

"Okay," Sonic agreed, getting an incredulous look from Rock as to how fast his attitude had reversed itself. "Hey, I know a number of ladies like that. They get an idea in their head to do something for their own good and you get between them and it at your ow–."

An immense tremble in the floor under their feet halted the conversation and nearly caused the two blue heroes to stumble over themselves.

Duo had been in the middle of listening to Dr. Light inform him that he and his allies could properly handle the situation now, and that his power was best spent aiding Mega Man, Mega Woman, and Sonic when he sensed it. An entity aboard the flying fortress above him.

The entity's presence had been masked until something had disturbed it, and then it blared in Duo's senses. It was strong.

Powerful. Evil. Much more so than the reanimated abomination he had slain.

The doctor was right. He was needed up there. (16)

Rock and Sonic stared up at the terrifyingly immense one-eyed blue form before them as both of their memories, partially restored and rusty alike, recalled what it was.

The Chaos Devil roared back at them with a force that shook the walls.

Roll's broom-staff twirled and deflected Waltz's plasma barrage in an intricate dance worthy of a Jedi.

'I don't care if you're the worst opponent I've ever faced,' the former household model thought in regards to her insane adversary. 'I don't care if you view murder as some form of hobby or recreation. I don't care if you might actually be able to beat me.'

Roll's face hardened as she prepared to go on the offensive. 'I'm done letting fear control me.'

"Yes!" Waltz cheered as Roll charged her through the rapid-fire finger cannon blasts. "Come closer so I can see your pretty little face better as you die in agony!"

"How do you beat these Devil things again?" Sonic yelled to Rock as he frantically dodged around watery tentacles. Damn, but he hated his rusty baseline memories. He should know this already!

"Expose the eye!" Rock shouted back as he fired repeatedly on the magitech hybrid monstrosity. Unfortunately the liquid was reforming as fast as his Mega Buster could part it. Right, it hadn't gone any better last time. Why couldn't his memories of this portion of his original lifetime restore themselves just a little faster? "Which isn't working as well as it usually does! How about you and Chaos?! Something about going 'super'?!"

"Last time I used the Chaos Emeralds in my subspace pocket to go super near another full set, I broke my universe and wound up in Eiken!" (17) Sonic loudly informed him as the Chaos Devil formed a few extra tentacles to lash out with, making conversation very difficult.

Rock filed that away for later inquiry as he formed a plan. "I got an idea! Go for the eye on three!"

"Got it!" Sonic agreed, getting an odd feeling for how this was going to go and adjusted his aim accordingly.

"One!" Rock began counting and charging.

"Two!" Sonic's Spin Dash revving kicked up sparks on the metal floor.

"THREE!" As one, both heroes unleashed their attacks. The double strike of Rock's charged 'Sonic Shot' and Sonic's own Spin Dash blew a hole in the living water body of the Chaos Devil and struck the ocular control unit hard enough to make the beast roar in pain. Rock's blast burst in a flare of energy and Sonic's adjusted aim allowed him to ricochet back the way he came instead of trying to power through the living water behind the creepy robotic eye and risking being trapped in it.

"Move!" came Rock's sudden shout as the Chaos Devil retaliated with numerous limbs formed from its body. Sonic reacted without thought and dove to the side...

Just in time to be out of the way as a flaming blue fist larger than his Spin Dash form burst through the floor in an uppercut that splashed the liquid body of the Chaos Devil all over the room.

'Scrap,' Roll swore silently as Waltz caught a swing of the broom-staff in her open hand, leaving nothing between Roll and Waltz's finger cannons.

Duo focused his Justice energy on healing the bodies of the two brave souls before him as the Evil abomination slowly pieced itself together.

"I know not how events may have played out in previous instances of our lives," he calmly told the two, ignoring their looks of surprise. Ultimately, it mattered little. The events of now were of paramount concern. "However, this time the dimension we find ourselves in is worse than the parasite it might otherwise seem. It is a vile tumor upon the fabric of reality, and if it is left to grow unchecked it will poison all realities it comes in contact with. Its influence cannot be allowed to spread further. If this corruption is not cleansed and both universes rebalanced, the consequences will be beyond dire."

Duo looked the two heroes in the eye. He could sense that their souls and minds were older than their bodies would suggest. How and why this had happened was not a mystery for him to unravel. The avatar of Justice knew his place in the cosmos, and delving into the mysteries of a timeline that seemingly folded back in on itself, much less those who were caught in the repeating folds, was not it. His place was to administer Justice and maintain the balance. (18)

"Go!" he told them. "I will handle this... thing... and join you when I can."

"Thanks Duo!" Mega Man called back as the two heroes sped out of the chamber and on their way just as the 'Chaos Devil', as they called it, finished reforming and surged towards him in its tainted rage.

"I sense Evil – but also nobility," Duo told the beast as he prepared to meet its charge. It was also chaotic, but it was a noble Chaos that he sensed. The rarest and most precious kind. Something well worth his efforts to free from its unnatural imprisonment. "You are a creature conflicted. I will purge the Evil from you."

Duo's glowing fist met the living water of the Chaos Devil's body with a tremendous splash, only for Duo to be thrown back by a swipe of multiple tentacle limbs from the beast. The space robot braced his landing with his knees and looked up to see the beast pointing a limb at him that formed a mouth in which a torrent of water was preparing to fire.

The beast roared at him, and the avatar of Justice clenched his giant glowing fist and smiled.

"I fear no Evil."

"So, what's Eiken?" Rock asked as he and Sonic raced further into the Wily Egg, blasting their way through an infestation of motobugs. "And what does it have to do with breaking the universe?"

Sonic winced. "Pretty much everyone ends up doing something sooner or later that causes a Loop to end pretty abruptly. Used to be people tried to end the Loops in creative and destructive ways before the admins got their act together and started telling people what was going on. But even now a lot of us loopers do crazy junk when we get bored that we'd never do if death was still permanent for us. Eiken's the Loop we tend to end up in when we do something really stupid. It's practically a rite of passage by now, so I'm not gonna spoil it for ya."

"Huh," Rock digested that.

"Anyway, how do you think your sister's doing?" Sonic asked.

Waltz stood above Roll as the heroic sister of Mega Man glared from where she was pinned. Waltz had one leg holding down her waist, the other firmly planted on her Mega Buster, one hand restraining Roll's other arm, and the last hand caressing Roll's face tauntingly.

"Did you think this was going to go any other way?" Waltz taunted. "I told you. I told you it was only a matter of time until I started repeating too, right? These... Loops your brother's friend called them?"

Roll's eyes widened. 'No...'

"I have to thank you for carrying my past self with you like you did," Waltz grinned maniacally. "I'd have never remembered if you hadn't let me scan you with the Copy Chip father gave me."

Few really understood how the Copy Chip worked. Some thought it was a part of the Variable Tool System Dr. Light had developed for Blues and adapted for her and Rock to better aid their household duties. Others believed it merely copied weapons.

But that was a fraction of what it really did. The Copy Chip allowed her and Rock to scan nearly everything about a robot they came in physical contact with. Their systems, sure, but also their data. She and her brother could even touch a robot's spirit and take with them an echo if that robot was advanced enough to have such a thing. Most robot masters barely had one, but some had more developed spirits, and a precious few like she and her brothers seemed to have true souls.

But Waltz... Waltz had something Roll could only describe as foul. Foul and wrong .

And... And it seemed that a small piece of that had trojaned itself in Roll that failed life when she'd scanned Waltz, and had now found its way back to Waltz. Something that could survive through the Loops. Something that could effectively Awaken any version of Waltz who came in contact with her. (19)

"I bet you thought you'd make a heroic charge, right?" Waltz abruptly shifted topic, seemingly content to torment Roll before finishing her off. "A series of 'this one's for this guy', 'this one's for that gal', 'this one's for someone I met on the subway one Thursday when it was raining', 'this one's for everything else', and of course 'this one's for me'. A fury of righteous anger, right?"

"Wrong," Roll retorted, cutting off whatever came next. There was only so much of Waltz's inane ramblings she could take, Awake or no. "I don't have any fury for me."

The musing about Waltz Awakening had reminded her. There were other souls she'd touched, other echoes she'd gained, and recently at that. Her colors shifted to cream and red as she recalled a young rabbit girl who wished for nothing so much as a world where everyone could get along and be friends, only to have people like Waltz continually tear it away from her and force kind souls like hers to fight wars they were never meant to.

"This one though," Roll glared at her tormentor. "This one's for what you tried to do to my brother."

Waltz attempted to stop Roll's legs from coming up in a kick, but she shouldn't have bothered. The Omochao drone fired from Roll's pinned arm cannon pulled a sharp turn and uppercutted the insane female robot, causing her to flail wildly and fire her finger cannons at random, not a single shot coming anywhere near the drone in her face or the captive under her feet.

Roll surged upwards as Waltz stumbled back, turning red and yellow as she channeled the spirit of the Mighty, the armadillo as kind and gentle to those in need as he was stalwart and strong in the face of adversity.

"And this one's for what you did do to Quint!" she roared, sinking the Mighty Blow into Waltz's gut.

"I'm still worried, but that's because she's my sister," Rock told his friend as the two dealt with a colony of battons. "I'm sure she's fine."

Ray charged into battle alongside Beat who had joined him for whatever reason. He was nervous as hell, but no one would have been able to guess as he jumped on the back of Aircon Man and began to wail on the robot master.

"And while we're on the subject of your brothers," Roll continued, shifting to yellow and white for the gift from Ray, the eternally nervous and frightened flying squirrel who nonetheless always stepped up to help his friends in times of need. She zoomed forth on the Ray Glide, closing in on the opponent she'd sent flying with her last blow, ramming into her and climbing still higher. " This is for what you did to Bass and Treble in that other life!"

Indiana Charmy dove stinger first at Plug Man, readying his whip. 'So glad I remembered I had this outfit!' Charmy thought to himself.

"Actually, I'm kind of curious about the super form I'm starting to vaguely recall from last time," Rock continued as the two dodged an assault from several buzzbombers. "Any reason you haven't used it yet?"

"Yeah," Sonic replied as he did a Homing Attack combo. "Those things have a cool down period before you can use them again, so you only want to use them if you have to or know you can finish the fight with 'em."

Espio stared calmly at Crystal Man as he ninja-chopped several of the robot's Crystal Eye projectiles in half.

Roll turned black and gray as she and her opponent fell towards the ground. The spirit of Shade, an echidna stealth expert who had been caught between the order that had raised her and doing the right thing by others, echoed through her. "Speaking of the other lifetime, this is for the mall full of people you had Dangan Man gun down in cold blood!"

Waltz moved her head to the side and kicked Roll away from her, the Stealth Mine continuing on to latch into the ground and arm itself.

Marine stood protectively over a recovering Blaze as she blasted Star Man with a torrent of water. None of these bloody bounces were getting her best mate. Not while the great captain Marine had anything to say about it!

"I actually kinda collect super forms and things that can induce one," Sonic relayed as the two heroes climbed up a ladder while under fire. "Which is how I discovered 'super sickness'."

"Let me guess," Rock smirked. "You use too many super forms too fast and your system crashes hard?"

"Worse than any hangover in the multiverse," Sonic nodded. "With the possible exception of one caused by that Pan-Galactic Gargle Blaster stuff."

Blade Man (or was it Razor Man?) fell to the ground as he was blasted by Bunnie Rabbot.

Roll touched upon the spiritual echo of the hyperactive raccoon captain, Marine, as she turned green and brown. Emotional. Dedicated. A skilled sailor and true friend.

"This is for sending Aircon Man into traffic and having him blow around cars with the people still inside!" Roll yelled as she unleashed a torrent of water at her opponent with Hydrokinesis.

Amy fought back the urge to whip out one of the big techniques she'd picked up in the Loops as she bashed yet another robot master into the ground with her hammer. Restraint. She needed to prove to Sonic and the others that she knew restraint. Over and over for however many Loops it took for them to forget any resemblance to that other looper known by her pink hair. (20)

"Which reminds me," Sonic hopped across a series of metools like that Mario guy had taught him one Loop for fun, "your space buddy Duo is kind of interesting. He always been like that?"

"Ha!" Rock laughed. "I remember this conversation from the baseline! We ended up talking about Wisps or something."

Shade crossed her energy-draining blades with Slash Man's claws while Rush and Tango both pounced on Centaur Man nearby.

Purple and yellow. The colors of Rotor, the walrus mechanic who would rather be tinkering in a shop and had instead been thrust into a war as a child.

"This is for the factory workers you had Konro man burn alive!" Roll fired the Shockwave Boomer, clipping Waltz as the insane robot attempted to bum rush her.

But she kept coming, firing wildly the whole way.

Knuckles grinned as his punch shattered the crystal-shaped dome protecting Chill Man's head. Man, but he loved being able to cut loose without needing his Guardian powers!

"That's right!" Sonic recalled as the two heroes slid through a twisting pipe and out into an area bombarded by energy blasts from some sort of screw-like turrets that shot in six directions.

Rock chuckled at Sonic's enthusiasm as he blasted the turrets apart.

Sagittarius's eyes widened as Antoine cut his Blazing Arrows out of mid-air and closed in on him.

"This..." Roll began, turning brown and blue as she was filled with the echo of Sally, the ground squirrel princess turned revolutionary leader. A girl forced to grown up far too fast for the sake of her friends and people. "...is for the emergency response teams..."

As Waltz leapt at her, she ducked and then rose again with the Electric Blades, severing Waltz's right hand from her arm. " ...that you had Komuso Man slaughter! "

Waltz stumbled backwards in pain, and tripped over the Stealth Mine that had been armed earlier.

BOOM!

Silver's Psychokinetic power clashed with Pharaoh Man's Pharaoh Shot while Vector clutched his arm where he'd been clipped by a lucky shot behind the time traveler.

"Man," Sonic continued as the two dodged around a slew of drills that flew from the floor to the ceiling, or vice versa, "you have got to find a way to my Loop sometime so we can see what you can do with one."

"Ha ha!" Rock laughed. "You never told me what they did last time!"

(This battle by masterofgames)

"Gotcha!" Rouge grinned wildly as she tackled yet another Jewel Man.

"No! NO! Not again! Get her off me!" he screamed, crying like a baby as Rouge disabled his limbs.

"Oh relax, would you? A girl has needs." Rouge rolled her eyes as she gave the enormous jewel on his head a loving caress. "We've done this a dozen times, and we'll do it as many times as I feel like. This pretty little ornament of yours gets pulled off, and goes in my pocket. Then, I finish you off, the docs time clone you in, and we do it all again! And you can't do a thing to stop me!" she teased. "Now, enough chit-chat, let's get... huh?" Rouge blinked, pausing and glancing down at her hand ruffling through her, in hindsight clearly lighter than before, belt pouch. "Great, dropped my tools somewhere..." she huffed, folding her arms in a pout.

"Oh thank the maker!"

"You hush!" she scolded, putting on a radio headset. "Tails, hun, I know you're busy, but would you be a dear and toss me a screwdriver?"

"Seriously!? Now!? I'm a little busy Rouge!" came the disbelieving response, as Tails somehow managed to swerve through the airborne robot masters in the airspace above her.

Rouge just sighed, pulling a red fedora out of her subspace pocket and plopping it atop her head. "Tails, look at me." she ordered.

Up above, Tails managed to find enough of a break in the dogfight to glance down.

Rouge grinned, she could see his eyes bulging from clear down here. "Screwdriver. NOW!" she repeated.

"Y-yes ma'am!" he squeaked, swerving to fly over her, flipping upside down, and letting one fall free from his tool belt down towards her.

Rouge snatched it out of the air with a grin. "That's a good boy."

Really, that hat was a godsend in getting the fox to do what she wanted. Tails had been in Hellsing loops before, and wanted as little to do with them as he could. And as a bat, who else was she going to be from those loops?

It would be a darn shame the day he found out it was really from her time spent as Carmen Sandiego.

'Ah well, best to deal with that when it comes.' she thought to herself, jabbing the screwdriver into Jewel Man's head and humming 'Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend' with a smile as she started prying her prize free, while he futilely begged his fellow robot masters to help him.

Roll turned brown and pink for the cybernetic Bunnie Rabbot-D'Coolette. The lapine southern belle with a temper that burned as bright as her passions. Targeting the still-recovering Waltz, she fired the Rabbot Laser at her leg.

"This is for what you had the Clock Men do to that hospital!" she cried as she took out Waltz's mobility.

E-123 Omega and Dangan Man both attempted to redefine 'bullet hell' as they dueled each other.

"It's awesome!" Sonic exclaimed as he bounced off the shield of a Sniper Joe, knocking the green robot prone. "They bond with those they like and give them these wicked cool powers!"

"That sounds great!" Rock grinned, running past the downed robot. "It's a deal then!"

Big smiled to himself as he caught a big fish that was trying to hurt his friends. Shark Man just thrashed and cursed from where he was bound tight by the extra-tough fishing line.

Waltz desperately tried to fire back, but Roll turned red and brown for the coyote guard Antoine D'Coolette. Former unintentional laughingstock turned noble romantic and master swordsman.

The Trick Sword flashed out, deflecting the shots from Waltz's remaining finger cannons, one of which was reflected back into Waltz's eye.

"And you can consider that for sending Compass Man to massacre the police!"

Charge Man's face met Mighty's fist in a head-on collision.

A gate in the style that Rock was exceedingly familiar with stood in front of the true blue heroes. Upon it was the left half of the self-styled symbol of Dr. Eggman and the right half of Dr. Wily's skull emblem, a lightning bolt dividing the two as well as uniting them in a single icon.

"I take it this is the place?" Sonic asked rhetorically.

"Oh, yeah," Rock replied as the two approached. "I've seen enough of these doors to last me several lifetimes."

The gate slid up, revealing a pitch black room beyond.

Rotor grunted as he held on tight to Frost Man and tried to sabotage the giant robot's systems.

"And this," Roll stated to her recovering opponent as her colors turned red and black with yellow trim, the colors of Omega. The little bird in a robot who understood and respected the value of life and peace, but still could not help but see inherent beauty in acts of destruction. "This is for the little girl whose family you murdered in front of her."

The Omega Gatling punctuated the statement repeatedly as Roll fired it into Waltz's face and upper torso.

"M-m-m-mercy!" The decimated Waltz sputtered and sparked.

KA-CHUNK

The sudden light blinded Rock and Sonic, but the sight it revealed was not what either of them were expecting.

"Teleporters?" Rock puzzled over the sight of teleporter units ringing the room. Twenty-two in all, with an inactive one in the center. 'This isn't what's supposed to be here...'

"Where's Metal Sonic and that Bass guy?" Sonic scratched his head.

"Not here," replied the voice of Sonic, but from one of the teleporters instead of the hedgehog himself.

Each of the other teleporters flared with light until replicas of the roboticized masters plus one extra stood before them.

"You'll have to settle for the Paradox Masters instead," Sonic's own double declared.

Dr. Light stood back to back with his eldest son, each fighting off the army of robot masters with their respective arm cannons. His son's built-in and his own hastily pieced together.

There were times when he despaired of ever reconciling with his eldest child, but he had two beacons of hope: The shades and the scarf.

The original scarf had been damaged beyond repair in the battle with Ra Moon, but it had been a gift from Dr. Light to his son when the boy spotted it in a window and asked if he could have it. He'd loved that scarf and had worn it everywhere, even to the ill-fated test run for the military. That he'd replaced it as quickly as possible told Dr. Light that he valued what it stood for.

The shades had been a similar gift, given to Blues on a day out when the sunlight had been a bit brighter than his experimental ocular sensors could tolerate. Blues had so loved those that he'd insisted on a shaded Sit-Rep visor for his helmet. The doctor had no idea what had happened to those original shades, but the fact that his son still insisted on wearing a pair told him the same thing as the scarf.

If his son needed time to sort out his feelings, Dr. Light would give it to him. He'd give his son all the time he needed.

Sonic looked at the gathered robotic versions of his friends and allies that surrounded him and Rock. He glared at the one of himself in particular.

'Paradox clones,' he groaned mentally. He'd been hoping that particular Skaia staple had been derailed with the oddities pervading this place. It seemed there wasn't going to be any such luck. 'Paradox robo -clones at that. As if I didn't have enough headaches to deal with right now.'

At least the place didn't seem capable of paradox-cloning robots. Probably because they didn't have any DNA to clone with.

"They're not roboticized," Rock told him, the Sit-Rep shades sliding back up into his helmet. "They're just robot replicas with barely decent AIs."

"Good," Sonic growled. "Because I've had just about enough of this. SPEED BREAK!"

Sonic vanished in a blur, zig-zagging around the room and cutting through all twenty-two robots in the space of a few seconds before reappearing next to Rock and falling to his knees.

"You okay?" Rock asked, wide-eyed.

"I'll be fine," Sonic waved him off. "Just a little light-headed. Memo to file: Speed Break is not meant for cornering more than ninety degrees."

"I can imagine," Rock helped the hedgehog to his feet.

"I'll bet you can," a new voice interjected from the middle of the room.

Roll stared at the insane robot, who seemed just as surprised as she was with the plea for mercy. Waltz. The unrepentant killer who Roll would have sworn didn't even possess the word in her vocabulary.

And yet...

"Alright," Roll agreed as she turned her buster back into a hand and powered down her weapons. Rock had always believed in giving his enemies a chance to reform. Even those who had done terrible things or maliciously hurt others. And even though she'd suffered so much pain and trauma across multiple lifetimes, it was an attitude she couldn't find fault with. The drive to save everyone was as much hers as it was her brothers'.

Even if that someone was Waltz.

"I s-s-sup-pose this i-i-is for-r-r-r you-u, rig-ght?" Waltz giggled and sparked, trying to regain some sense of superiority in the situation. Roll moved to stand over her and perform some quick maintenance to ensure Waltz didn't shut down after asking for mercy. "Got-t-t-t-ta mak-k-ke yours-s-self fe-e-e-el bet-t-ter-r? Sh-sh-how m-me how-w much-ch-h I-I-I'm n-not a t-t-th-hreat?"

It was a kindness Waltz found she couldn't stand. "YO-OUR MISTA-A-AKE!" she yelled and lunged her one good hand in a final effort to kill Roll by shooting her through the head.

"No," Roll disagreed as she casually caught Waltz's one working hand in hers. An instant later Waltz's five remaining finger cannons had been crushed, leaving the insane robot weaponless. "This is for you. Because for all your madness and all the misery and pain you've wrought, you never had another choice. Whatever screw-up Wily made when programming you left you unable to take another path in life. You are the one who suffers for another's mistake."

"THE-3-e-ERE IS-s-$-S NO-o-0-O MI-!-I-i-ISTAKE!" Waltz screamed and shorted. "I A- -AM W-w-\/\/-WHO I-i-1-!-I SHOUL-l-LD-d-|)-d-D BE!"

"I don't think you're who anyone should be," Roll retorted as she patched the shorts and sparks. That would hold Waltz together until she got back. If she got back. "Not without being able to choose for themselves."

"I'LL NEVER CHOOSE ANYTHING ELSE!" Waltz screamed after her, her shattered body prone and helpless. "I EXIST TO SPREAD PAIN AND SUFFERING! IT'S POINTLESS TO TRY!"

"Well," Roll threw back over her shoulder with a sad smile, "we're in the Loops now. I have eternity to find out for sure."

"I'LL BRING ALL OF REALITY CRASHING DOWN FIRST!" Waltz screamed, barely coherent. "DO YOU HEAR ME?! YOU'LL NEVER REFORM ME AND YOU'LL NEVER BE RID OF ME!"

But Roll was already dashing down the corridor in the direction her brother had gone and paid her former opponent no more mind.

'I'm coming, brother.'

The light of the formerly inactive central teleporter died down, revealing the very robots the two heroes had been expecting in the first place: Bass, Treble, and Metal Sonic.

"I've really been looking forward to this!" Bass grinned as he led the charge.

The two doctors alternated between finishing up their joint war machine and sniping each other with thinly veiled antagonistic remarks as the walls of the Wily Egg reverberated with the sounds of battle between Duo and the Chaos Devil.

Rock wasn't having an easy time of things against Bass and Treble. Bass's general arrogance when he felt he was in control of a situation made it all too easy to forget how dangerous an opponent Wily's 'black prince' (21) could be when he dropped all pretenses and fought seriously.

Behind him, he heard the crash Sonic made when his own opponent managed to catch the hedgehog off guard in the middle of gloating.

Most of the Wily's altered timeline from the 'Genesis Wave' Sonic had told him of was pretty minor, the biggest difference being the presence of the Constellation Droids on Earth rather than... wherever it was they were from originally. But Bass... Wily had clearly gone above and beyond when altering Bass's life.

For one, Bass's rapid fire upgrade that he was pinning Rock down with hadn't been developed for him until right before the incident with King. The event that was the start of Bass's move from working with Wily to kinda-sorta working with the Light siblings. But that hadn't happened in the new timeline, and Bass had remained completely loyal to Dr. Wily.

"Stop hiding and fight me! Coward!" Bass yelled as he continued to unleash a continuous rain of buster fire.

What also hadn't happened was Bass's fight with Roll, and apparently his resulting crush on Rock's sister. Bass wasn't a time cloned servant of Wily, he was Wily's own son with a newly rewritten past and memories courtesy of his father.

And all the more dangerous for it.

Rock cut off his reflections and ducked a pouncing strike from Treble and turned to fire on the robotic wolf.

"Maybe if you stop sending Treble to do your dirty work!" Rock shouted back as Treble yelped in pain, knowing exactly the kind of reaction this was going to produce. After all, he tended to act the same way when it was Rush being hurt.

" DON'T TOUCH MY DOG! " Bass roared as he leapt down, charging his buster at the same time.

Rock jumped to the side of the charged shot as it melted through one of the steel boxes littering the chamber, and heard Sonic shout in pain as the hedgehog was clipped by the thermal backwash of the blast.

"You okay, Sonic?" Rock asked while taking in the situation. Odd. Bass was checking on Treble rather than pressing the attack, which was to be expected, but Metal Sonic just seemed to be hanging there for no apparent reason.

"Little crispy, but I'll be fine," Sonic replied, a few of his quills smoldering. "Whaddya say we mix it up a bit and take each other's usual dance partners? See if that makes this go a bit faster."

Rock had a feeling, or maybe a partially restored memory, that it wasn't going to go like that, but he was game to try if Sonic was.

Duo was no longer sure exactly where in the battlestation he was, and he really didn't much care. The mechanical ruin all around him and his opponent made it rather difficult to tell in any case.

Sonic's baseline memories may be rusty, but he was pretty sure he knew how to handle this chump.

Zig-zag around his rapid-fire energy blasts at high speed, pointedly not think about what would happen if this dude and Omega ever got together, perform a sweet Time Break slide under a pouncing robo-wolf, pop up and–

"– OOF! "

'Run gut-first into this guy's power kick,' Sonic mentally griped as he flew back in an explosion of rings. 'Thank you, rusty baseline memories.'

Dr. Light and Blues whipped around as one to fire behind the other's back at advancing opponents.

As soon as Rock had moved to challenge Metal Sonic, the robot hedgehog had begun racing around the circular wall of the chamber at incredible speeds. Clearly the room had been designed to allow exactly this for the mechanical double of Sonic quickly accelerated to speeds that Rock couldn't properly track or target.

But he knew that his opponent eventually had to break the pattern and that would be when he would strike with the shot he was now charging. Almost as if his thoughts triggered the reaction, Metal Sonic broke from his path to fly at Rock.

" Gotcha! " Rock declared as he fired straight at his oncoming opponent. And an instant later, he got a flash of what was about to happen and began moving to counter.

Metal Sonic powered through the shot encased in an eight-sided dark energy diamond-shaped barrier and reached out for Rock's face with his metal hands.

" Gah! " Rock couldn't dodge the speedy assault, but neither could Metal Sonic avoid the counter-kick Rock had begun. Both combatants tumbled, with Metal Sonic managing to arrest his movement and Rock continuing on into a metal crate with enough force to crack it in time for Sonic to dive behind the crate for cover from Bass's buster fire.

"Okay, the switching opponents idea was my bad," Sonic huffed and puffed, next to where Rock was kneeling.

Rock took a moment to give thanks for overconfident opponents as Bass ceased firing and, by the sound of his footfalls, simply walked up from behind where he and Sonic were while Metal Sonic simply hovered stoically in place ahead of them. "What's up with the rings?" he asked while thinking on options. "I didn't see you drop any on the way here."

"Eh, they have a weird tendency to pop out of subspace pockets when whoever has them takes a hit," Sonic admitted. "I'm usually focused enough to hang on to them anyway, but your boy Bass blindsided me with a good one. I still think Hermes is somehow responsible for them doing that though."

Hermes took offense at the look Hephaestus was giving him. "What? I'm not! I swear! The things naturally form their own subspace pocket when collected and eject from it to save the holder from harm! Honest! It's not my fault Sonic and his friends used that as a base to form their own subspace pockets! Why won't anyone believe me on this?!"

"The girls back at the nurse school made a list," one of the nymphs piped up cheerfully as she walked in from the outer office. "You wanna see it?"

"If you could forward it over after this is finished, I'd appreciate it," Hephaestus grinned, going back to analyzing the genesis chamber's code.

"Oh," the nymph continued a little nervously, "the valkyries wanted you to know that if you don't come up with a better solution for..." she paused for a moment and checked the room over before deciding to be cautious anyway, "...mistress Aphrodite's, ah, messages than rerouting them to the outer office once you're done with the current problem then they'll, er, take action against the source."

"I'll help them pick out weapons," Hephaestus replied darkly.

" No ," Hermes admonished forcefully. "Accessory to deicide is not the answer! I know you can upgrade your spam filter as soon as the situation stabilizes so there's no need to do something drastic."

"Killjoy," Hephaestus grumped.

"How many rings do you have?" Rock asked as a plan formed.

"Dunno," Sonic shrugged. "I stopped keeping track a long time ago. I just know that every billionth one comes mounted on its own plaque for some reason. So, double team one at a time I take it? We did your guy first last time if I recall, so let's go with mine this time."

"There was a reason we did Bass first," Rock argued.

"Fine," Sonic huffed. "Rock, paper, scissors."

As one, the two both threw scissors, and then paper. Sonic grinned as he recalled what was about to happen and realized that Rock didn't remember the exact outcome. Rock was gonna throw rock, so all he had to do was throw pa– –per?

Scissors.

Sonic stared at where he'd thrown scissors against his friend's rock. "Nertz," he swore. "Fine."

"And you wonder why we believe you'd sabotage a subspace pocket for laughs," Hephaestus teased Hermes.

"Hey," Hermes defended himself. "Rock has the right idea and it's a path we already know leads to success. Perfectly good reason to slip Sonic a subconscious suggestion message and influence his reflexes."

"Right, you keep telling yourself that."

"Cover me!" Sonic called as they both dove out of the way of Metal Sonic and let the robotic hedgehog embed himself in the metal crate behind them.

Bass opened fire on both of them and Rock began returning it as Sonic revved up a Spin Dash and sped past the black-armored robot and into his canine support unit. That got Bass's attention and Sonic ricocheted off of several crates and towards his and Rock's joint opponent.

Roll swore to herself as she battled her way past a small army of various Joe units with her broom-staff. Rock and Sonic had obviously already been this way from evidence she'd seen earlier but of course they couldn't clean up after themselves!

Rock turned black and red as he called upon the weapon of Shadow, the brash and arrogant rival of Sonic and dark defender of their world. Should he and Bass ever meet they'd either be fast friends or flat out try to kill each other.

"CHAOS CANNON!" Rock yelled out as Bass casually backhanded Sonic's Homing Attack out of the air.

As focused as he was on the hedgehog, Bass failed to dodge and was frozen in place by the weaponized temporal distortion. Sonic took quick advantage and Bass cried out in pain as Treble leapt for Rock.

Turning teal and white, helmet colors reversed, Rock channeled the echo of Silver, the psychokinetic displaced from his own time and, prior to the Loops, working to ensure the safety of his future era by aiding the heroes of the past.

Treble yelped as the Psycho Burst encased him and shoved him across the room while Bass single-mindedly continued to fire on Sonic. Rock turned to his rival and fired on him while he was distracted.

"Time to drop the Bass!" Sonic grinned as said robot was lifted into the air by the borrowed psychic power Rock was using. Leaping up after him, Sonic then drove Bass back into the ground with a Homing Attack.

Off to the side, Metal Sonic finished extracting himself from the crate he'd gotten stuck in and flew at Rock at the same time Treble charged from the other side.

Rock immediately shifted to purple and black for the honorable Chaotix ninja Espio and engaged the Chroma Camo. He backstepped out of the path of both assailants and winced as they crashed face first into each other. Not even missing a beat, he turned the green and lime of the music loving brawler-turned-detective leader of the Chaotix, Vector, and fired the Acoustic Blaster as he shouted a warning to Sonic.

Thanks to the warning, Sonic sidestepped the shot and gave Rock a thumbs up as Bass was hit right in the face with the sound-based weapon. Taking the opening, Sonic kicked Bass back towards Rock who had changed to red and pink as he called up the chosen weapon of Amy, dedicated friend and defender as well as Sonic's occasionally disturbing stalker/paramour, and smashed Bass's head into the ground with the Piko Hammer.

PIKO!

Shade had joined up with Ray and Beat at some point with Rush and Tango in tow. She'd often been somewhat puzzled by the flying squirrel's insistence that he wasn't a useful asset to his team or allies. From where she stood, the boy was at least as skilled in martial combat as many of her former clan and was an asset that any group would be proud to claim. Yet he constantly claimed inferiority. Sure, most of his peers were loopers with many lifetimes of experience over him, but the boy seemed to think that he was the weakest of their extended group even in the baseline.

Not that such was really helping one way or the other. Loopers or not, experienced warriors or otherwise, they were all beginning to tire. The robot masters were coming that little bit closer, doing just a touch more damage with their efforts. And her allies were beginning to group together in an effort to find some respite against the endless onslaught. Bigger assaults in response would either drain them faster or leave them open to counterattack. And still make no overall dent in the number of the enemy.

What they needed was reinforcements.

"Bass is down!" Rock declared as he switched weapons again and took aim at Metal Sonic.

"Keep up the pressure!" Sonic reminded him redundantly as he raced towards his usual foe.

Rock's colors of orange and white denoted the power of Tails, the high-flying young fox genius and Sonic's longest standing friend and ally. He unleashed the Tail Wind upon the recovering Metal Sonic as Treble, sparking from one of his hind legs, barked fruitlessly at him.

Sonic came up behind his robotic double as he was hit and drove both feet into the robot's back, driving him into the ground and riding him across the floor like a skateboard.

"This is your stop!" Sonic called to his foe, hopping off as a red and white Rock; flush with the favored weapon of Knuckles, the eternal and sometimes lonely guardian of the floating island; drove the Spiked Knuckle into the back of Metal Sonic's head.

Except that Metal Sonic had apparently had enough, and rose into the air with an aura of energy that Sonic recognized as the V. Maximum Overdrive Attack and drove himself straight into Rock's torso. Sonic raced after the two as they rocketed across the chamber and through a metal crate or two before the overdrive cut out.

Rock was ready when it happened and switched to the black and yellow of the Rapid Stinger. Flipping around in an acrobatic maneuver as Metal Sonic flew by, he could feel the echo of Charmy, the childish member of the Chaotix, give Metal Sonic a raspberry even as the needles peppered the malicious robot repeatedly.

Sonic raced past the bouncing Rock and drove a Spin Dash into his robotic rival as hard as he could.

Bass growled impotently where he lay, until Treble manage to limp over carrying a pair of E-Tanks Dr. Wily had given the wolf 'just in case'.

'Alright, pops,' Bass thought to himself as he popped one of the cans for Treble and the other for himself and began drinking, 'just this once I'll accept your help in beating Mega Man.'

"I think Metal Sonic's down for the count," Sonic spoke up as he finished his post-impact skid, seeing the sparking form of his robot double try and fail to stand.

Rock switched back to his default Mega Buster at the announcement. "And Bass is–"

"–JUST GETTING STARTED!" said robot called out from where he was just finishing his fusion with Treble. Immediately, Bass in his super adapter form flapped his wings and flew into the air where he fired a charged shot upwards. That shot hit something in the ceiling which absorbed it and began raining down refracted energy bursts.

" Holy! " Sonic yelped, frantically dodging the energy rain.

Weaving through the bolts from long experience, Rock changed weapons again. This time to the white and black with pink trim that represented Rouge, the part-time secret agent and part-time jewel obsessed master thief. Firing the Black Wave at Bass scored a hit and caused Wily's dark enforcer to seize up as the stunning properties of the weapon coursed over his systems.

Unfortunately, both Rock and Sonic took lucky blows from the energy rain and it looked like Bass was going to recover from his stunned state before they could take advantage of it when the gate to the chamber opened and a yellow figure dashed in.

Bass strained against the shorts in his system that Mega Man's weapon had produced, determined to break free and take out his opponents before they got back to their feet. As he regained mobility, he laughed.

"This is it, Mega Man!" he yelled as he charged up for another blast. "I've finally won! There's no way you can dodge this!"

"Hey, Bass!" a female voice interrupted him. Turning, Bass saw Mega Woman leaping for him with her ridiculous broom weapon. "SHUT!"

The female robot swung with all her might before Bass could retarget his buster and crac–

I think I'm in...

–ked him hard on his chin, whipping his head back and making him lose control of his flight.

" UP! "

Rock couldn't believe their good fortune. Roll had arrived in the nick of time and used her broom-staff to knock Bass out of the air. She was wailing on him, driving him across the room without letting up and allowing him and Sonic to get to their feet.

"Rock," Sonic grinned as he revved up to charge into battle and help their mutual savior, "I said it before, but it's worth repeating: Your sister is officially awesome."

"Preaching to the choir," Rock told him as he switched to the weapon of Blaze; the refined, level headed, and at times strict ruler and pyrokinetic of a dimension parallel to Sonic's; turning violet and white.

As one of Roll's strikes knocked Bass back further than the others, Sonic took full advantage and hit the currently winged robot full in the torso with a Spin Dash. With Bass knocked even further back, Rock had a clear shot for the Fire Tornado and took it with extreme prejudice.

When it was over, the smoldering form of Bass combined with Treble fell to the ground.

"Now, Albert?" Dr. Eggman asked impatiently. Their machine was finished, so what was he waiting for?

"Not yet, Ivo," Dr. Wily calmly observed the events in the room on his monitor.

As the trio of heroes were celebrating, a torrent of what looked like metallic parchment fell from above. All three dodged, only to find that they weren't the targets. Instead, the 'metal paper' wrapped around Bass and Metal Sonic and retracted towards a new figure where it unwrapped and set them down gently.

The new figure was a red-eyed robot with parchment colored armor over a black body.

"Is it just me, or does this guy's armor look like folded paper?" Sonic jerked his thumb in the direction of the newcomer.

"I am Origami Man," the robot declared. (22)

"Now."

The wall behind the three exploded before any further action could be taken by or against Origami Man. A massive beam of energy erupted forth and struck Sonic head on, knocking him out and resulting in a deluge of rings erupting from the point of impact. Rock and Roll managed to catch a glimpse of a skull-shaped head on the robot with gray horns reminiscent of Wily's hairstyle and a metal orange mustache clearly meant to represent Eggman.

However, the glut of rings that fell around them prevented them from defending themselves as a pair of giant spiked rocket fists slammed fully into them. The spikes were far enough apart that they only took the blunt force of the impact, but they were still rendered as unconscious as Sonic had been.

The Freedom Fighters had grouped back together and were covering for each other as they fell back towards Dr. Light. Across the battlefield others were grouping together and doing the same.

The suggestion had been brought up by a few to break out weapons or techniques capable of widespread destruction to deal with the army of robot masters, but Sally and others had backed up Sonic's request not to. The mad doctors had apparently destroyed a pair of city-moons and their respective armies and fleets, and the army of robot masters alone was nowhere near capable of such a feat. The possible reasons for holding something like that back made no sense, but then again, neither did much of what the doctors did. Unleashing larger firepower could entice the doctors to call forth whatever they might have in reserve.

"Cerebral download complete. Self-repairs at 90%."

Bass came to at the sound of Metal Sonic speaking from across the room. He opened his eyes and spotted his assigned 'partner' drop the head of one of the Paradox Masters that Mega Man and Sonic had defeated before they'd been allowed to come in. The robotic hedgehog then began making his way towards another.

"I will surpass Sonic. I will surpass Eggman. I will surpass all," the robot stated as he picked up the head of Paradox Sonic and extended his clawed fingers into the cranium. "Cerebral download commencing. Self-repairs at 95%."

"Well," Bass grinned to himself. He hurt all over, but he was still fused with Treble and functioning. "Looks like we have a traitor in our midst."

"Yes," said Wily's paper-themed hobby robot next to him. "Action needs to be taken. Here, you will need this."

Bass almost considered slapping the S-Tank away, but the robot was right. Bass hated to admit weakness, but it hurt to move right now. And this opponent wasn't Mega Man, or his sis– –ter. He wasn't an honorable – where did that thought come from? – rival. He was a threat to the mission, his dad, and everything else. He was going down hard. So Bass took the S-Tank and drank it, as well as accepted the offered had from the robot master to get up.

I think I'm in l...

He then copied the robot's master weapon and shot the weak piece of scrap in the head. Bass still had his pride after all. Plus Metal Sonic seemed to like hijacking robot brains for some reason, so best not to leave any lying about, right?

"Cerebral download complete," the metal hedgehog intoned as it dropped the final Paradox Master's head. "Self-repairs complete. Targeting unit Bass for elimination and download."

"Not gonna happen," Bass sneered at his newest enemy.

The three heroes had woken up in a trio of capsules bound by energy restraints. That they were still alive was a pleasant surprise, but not unexpected. If there was anything the doctors loved to do, it was gloat.

And gloat they did. Another common trait between the two was that they were long winded and loved to hear themselves talk. (23)

The combined allies of Sonic and Mega Man had all fallen back into a single group surrounded on all sides by their foes. Even Tails had transformed the Tornado into its ground walker mode and joined the rest. Powers, weapons fire, and explosives peppered the surrounding robot masters as the group attempted to keep them at bay.

"Don't worry doctor," Cream told the Light patriarch as she and Cheese helped him fend off the advancing army, "Sonic and the Mega Twins will save us!"

"Oh, I have faith that they'll save our worlds ," the scientist said as he used his knowledge of his own designs' weak points to disable Galaxy Man, "but right now we need a miracle."

As if something had been waiting for precisely that cue, the surrounding robot masters were bombarded with ice, scissor blades, explosives, fire, blobs of oil (some of which had been lit on fire), glowing energy arrows, and electricity.

"Mind if we cut in?" a voice drew the eyes of the allied group skyward.

"One miracle, coming right up!" declared Elec Man riding upon an Item-2 jet as he charged up for another shot of his Thunder Beam. Behind him, all on Item-2 jets, came Cut Man wielding a Rolling Cutter in each hand, Fire Man continuing to pour on the flames of his Fire Storm, Ice Man targeting for another Ice Slasher, Bomb Man throwing Hyper Bombs like they were going out of style, Guts Man loosening up his massive arms, Oil Man striking a pose, and Time Man looking focused.

"So..." Knuckles addressed Dr. Light, "these robots friendly?"

"Yes!" Dr. Light replied enthusiastically. "Elec Man! You're a sight for sore eyes! How?"

"Dr. Lalinde put in the call after Mega Man and Mega Woman went through," Elec Man filled the doctor in as he landed, his brothers joining the rest of the forces in pressing back against the robot master army. "She was certain you'd need back-up, which seems to have been the right call. We followed Duo's trail to get here. How are Mega Man and Mega Woman doing?"

"Not well," Blues cut in. "Duo went in a while ago and we've gotten no sign since. Something's gone wrong." 'Just like last time,' he thought to himself.

"Well, you're the robot scientist, right?" Knuckles asked. "Me and Proto-Guy can get you in there and you should be able to wreck whatever the doctors have in the works, right?"

"I'm coming too," Shadow interjected. "In case the doctors have any nasty surprises." ' Not to mention if we save Sonic, he'll never live it down,' he added silently.

"Sounds like a plan," Elec Man agreed, turning to Knuckles. "Here, you can use my Item-2."

"Works for me," Blues agreed as he whistled for the trio of support units. "Dr. Light will take Rush and Shadow can ride Tango. Beat? Board."

As Rush and Tango turned into their normal jet modes, Knuckles and Shadow raised an eyebrow as Beat turned into something resembling Extreme Gear.

"Little something I picked up from your friends," Blues grinned at them. (24)

"I have the victory," Metal Sonic declared from where he had driven Bass into the wall during their battle. That 'cerebral download' of his apparently allowed him to copy the master weapons of the downed Paradox Masters. And Bass mused that they didn't hurt any less from him than they did from Mega Man. "And soon your knowledge and abilities."

"Yeah? You want my powers?" Bass grinned as he grasped Metal Sonic's arm and activated his Copy Chip. "Well now I've got yours ." (25)

"What?" Metal Sonic expressed confusion as Bass's colors shifted. That ability wasn't in his data banks.

"Dad upgraded the super adapter so I can use master weapons with it," Bass's grin widened as Metal Sonic tried to disengage and failed due to Bass's death grip on him. "And it looks like you've got three . Let's try the 'joint matrix' first."

The Burst Shield that Metal Sonic used as his joint offensive and defensive matrix flared from his opponent and blasted him back. He quickly righted himself and unleashed the Fire Tornado back at Bass.

"And here's the defensive one!" Bass laughed as he used the Black Shield to power through the flames and tackle Metal Sonic head-on. Eggman's dubiously loyal enforcer activated his own Burst Shield to throw his opponent off of him.

"And my personal favorite!" Bass proclaimed with glee, ignoring the damage he'd taken and charged at Metal Sonic in full V. Maximum Overdrive mode. " Pure offense! "

Rock, Roll, and Sonic rolled their collective eyes as the doctors began arguing with each other over apparently withheld details of their evil plan.

"Can either of you move?" Sonic asked hopefully.

"Nope," Rock replied.

"Me either," Roll agreed.

"Well, drat," Sonic sighed.

Blues finally accepted his helmet back from Dr. Light as they approached a thin area in the Wily Egg's armor roughly where his siblings' locator signals pointed to them being. He almost said something to his father, but the words died in his throat. Now wasn't the time. Besides, with the way the Loops supposedly worked, nothing he said to the man would mean anything until he was Awake to remember it.

He almost believed himself.

Knuckles led the way and punched through the battlestation's armor, with Blues right behind him, buster blazing. "Someone order an extra large beatdown for two, heavy on the boom?" the echidna cracked.

"Blues! Knuckles!" the red raider heard his siblings cheer from where they were imprisoned as he and the echidna attacked the doctors.

"And Shadow," Sonic could be heard lamenting good naturedly as the dark hedgehog took guard of Dr. Light as they went over to free the captured heroes. "Man, I am never hearing the end of this."

"No, you aren't," Shadow's grin was audible as he and the doctor went to work on freeing the three.

" No no no! " Wily frantically interposed his saucer lid between himself and Blues's buster fire.

"To the Egg-Wily Machine X!" Eggman maneuvered his own personal craft away from Knuckles. "Hurr– eeeeeek! "

"I'll do better than that!" Wily declared as he pressed a button in his saucer. Near the ceiling of the chamber, a device whirred to life and began to take aim at the captive heroes.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 2%

"Damnit!" Hermes swore as he saw the device become active. "We were so focused on finding something Category 3 or worse that we overlooked the Category 4s the doctors brought with them!"

"What is it?" Hephaestus yelled back across the office as he began to analyze the code of the device. The moment it had activated, the success chance had hit 2% and stopped dropping. The number tickled the back of his awareness for some reason.

"It's Dr. Robotnik's Ultimate Annihilator modified for projectile assault!" Hermes shouted. " It's a retcon-class weapon! "

Hephaestus froze. Retcon-class weapons were perhaps the nastiest things mortals could get a hold of. They couldn't hit Yggdrasil's code directly; even the Anti-Monitor, arguably the biggest retcon-class threat in Yggdrasil's system, couldn't do that; but they could stop a target's code from running in the current reality and sometimes even wipe all traces of them from the reality that was running. For an active looper, it was only a bit more of an inconvenience than death was. Even damaged, Yggdrasil's built-in safeguards prevented such things from ever being worse than a high-tier category 4 threat, but with his Anchors not yet properly set in place, such an event was very high on the list of problems.

"TARTARUS!" Hermes swore. "He's going to fire on the captive Anchors! Yggdrasil's still locking out changes to the local reality and there's no one close or fast enough to stop it!"

Hephaestus noted that Blues had spotted the weapon and was moving to intercept. Too bad him being hit would be no different than his siblings being hit at this stage. Unless...

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 2%

It dawned on him why the success chance had stopped dropping and his fingers flew across his terminal as he slowed relative time in regards to himself to a crawl. He needed to do this at exactly the right moment. Too early and he'd lose the tertiary candidate, whether or not his trick worked. Too late and the tertiary candidate would be erased before his gamble could work and the entire Loop would collapse.

Blues flew directly between the unknown weapon and his family and raised his shield right as it fired.

Hephaestus pressed Enter. (26)

Reality itself lurched and both Rock and Roll stumbled under a sudden increase to an invisible burden they hadn't noticed before. Both of their eyes widened with unspoken alarm and they turned to look for their elder brother.

"BLUES!"

"The volt was that?" Elec Man blinked in confusion. The battle had paused after space itself had jolted like the Enterprise under enemy fire.

"Don't know," the squirrel that had introduced herself as Sally told him as the opposing army of robot masters began attacking again, "and we're a little too busy to go and find out."

"Right," Elec Man agreed as he unleashed his Thunder Beam on Cold Man and a few surrounding foes.

(Eiken commercial by WyldeHorse)*

A beautiful, scantily-clad blond woman stands on a street, with grey-toned buildings to either side while similarly grey-toned people performing various monotonous actions in the background.

"Is the cycling of the multiverse getting a bit repetitive? Are your loops full of stale old enemies and boring rivalries? Could you use something different in your endlessly repeating existence? Well, have I got something new for all of you! I'm Aphrodite, Yggdrasil Admin, and I have a completely different sort of loop for you!"

Aphrodite walks down a street, buildings and people gaining color and vigor as she does, and a high school comes into view. She stops in front of the front gates.

"In the loops set in Eiken, you don't have to worry! There aren't any villains here to ruin your day! You can set down your weapons, ease up on the magic, and just relax! In fact, to help you relax, this loop is limited- you won't have to worry about any fighting, because anything foreign to the loop is disabled! So just sit back, relax, and enjoy a quiet Loop here!"

The gate opens up, and Aphrodite enters, showing the front yard to be full of attractive young men and very, very busty young women in all sorts of poses and activities. The view pauses for a long moment on a group of the young women playing volleyball to watch the bouncing occurring.

"In fact, it's more than just a chance to relax- it's a chance to have a bit of fun, too. There are all these lovely young ladies and gentlemen, just waiting to make your acquaintance! They'd love nothing more than to get to know you, and to help out with that, there's openings in clubs to help you fit right in. Don't worry- they'll all love to have you!"

She finally next to a window, and the view pans so the window fills the whole screen, showing a classroom full of even more impossibly chest-heavy young women, these all posing in front of the camera.

Aphrodite's voice is heard one last time, this time very softly and speaking very very quickly. "Yggdrasil is not repeat not liable for any back pain, paranoia or inappropriate groping or other adult-rated activities or psychological damages appertaining thereunto that occur in loops that take place in Eiken!"

(End Commercial)

Brynhildr turned to her fellow valkyries. "Sword or spear?" Honestly, did Aphrodite not have any actual work to do? (27)

"Depends, do we want to gut her or roast her on a spit?" Herfjötur glared at the latest piece of garbage Hephaestus's bitch of a wife had sent over the office mail accounts that they'd been forced to at least listen to. This would not go unpunished.

"Both of them are too quick. I vote we chuck her in Valhalla's drunk tank overnight. And leave her for a few weeks," Eir carefully tallied the items against the Olympian love goddess for later retribution. Heck, with this obscene misuse of office resources they could probably get Tyr to put some pressure on Zeus to allow something really creative. The head Olympian's skill for throwing others under metaphorical buses to save his own skin might actually prove useful for once.

"CHAOS IMPACT!" Shadow yelled as he unleashed his power on the unknown weapon, crushing it utterly. The sudden inexplicable surge of panic he'd gotten right after the doctors revealed the thing subsided as he did. He'd been too late to keep it from firing initially, but the thing certainly wasn't going to get a second.

He'd seen Blues move to intercept the shot and hoped he was alright. Especially after reality shook like that. That couldn't be a good sign for the state of the Loop.

Further musings were cut off as he Chaos Controlled over to help Knuckles with the Egg-Wily Machine X.

" Launch already! " the two doctors yelled at each other from their separate cockpits behind each eye of their machine as they frantically finished rebooting their war machine.

The Egg-Wily Machine X rocked under the missile assault the dark hedgehog launched from the weapon he'd suddenly gotten from... somewhere before he dismissed it and launched a sphere of pure chaos energy at them.

"CHAOS BALL!"

The doctors began arguing over how much chaos energy they should be drawing from the genesis chamber to power the machine before it disrupted the charging Super Genesis Wave, when Knuckles landed directly on the machine. Apparently he'd given up his Item-2 ride to Shadow at some point so he could get up close and personal while the dark hedgehog supported from range.

"You two ready to throw in the towel, or do I have to come in there and make you?" the guardian of the floating island cocked his fist back threateningly.

"I'm sorry," Dr. Wily cackled as he pressed a button on his console, "but we're fresh out of towels! How about fifty thousand volts of protective shielding?!"

Wily bilinked and pressed the button again when nothing happened.

Told you so.

"Ivo..." Dr. Wily began dangerously. "Why are my defenses offline?"

"Nothing personal, Albert," Dr. Eggman grinned from his cockpit as he operated his own console. "But I'm afraid you were starting to hold back the operation. He's all yours Knuckles. As for you, Shadow, how about a face full of death las–eh?"

Metal Sonic had proved too fast to catch with the V Maximum Overdrive, so Bass had instead redirected his charge upwards. At the energy refractor his father had installed in the chamber's ceiling. The results didn't disappoint.

Energy beams fell thick and fast around the chamber, hitting nearly everything not directly under the center of the device like Bass himself was. Except Metal Sonic seemed to be avoiding the worst of it.

When the rain began to let up, the mechanical hedgehog swerved sharply towards his hovering opponent and blasted him with one of the Paradox Masters' ranged weapons and then tried to tackle him to the ground. Bass responded with a bicycle kick that launched his opponent halfway across the room before he managed to arrest his momentum in midair.

"Futile," Metal Sonic declared. "Your skill with my abilities is lacking."

"Well," Bass said, switching to the brand new Paper Folding weapon he'd gotten from his dad's hobby robot, "let's try a Wily original then!"

Metal Sonic raised his Black Shield as the parchment-like weapon snaked its way towards him.

'Just as planned,' Bass smirked as the weapon wrapped his foe up, shield and all, with a nice firm tether to boot. Hefting, Bass swung the wrapped-up robot and shield towards the ground, hitting just after Metal Sonic dropped the Black Shield in hopes of escaping.

And then the wrappings burst in a flash of energy as Metal Sonic rose high out of the impact site on his own V Maximum Overdrive aura and dove down towards Bass. The son of Wily grunted from impact as he was driven towards the ground, through a metal crate, and began to carve a furrow in the floor.

Bass grunted as his systems blared damage reports before his hand reflexively grabbed something right as Metal Sonic began to run out of steam. Sparing a glance at the object, and some mild surprise that Ro– –ll had somehow dropped her attack broom, Bass performed an acrobatic recovery as he and his foe tumbled across the floor and swung the weapon into Metal Sonic's head with all his might. Metal Sonic careened even faster across the floor and impacted the wall hard enough to crack it.

I think I'm in lo...

The robotic hedgehog managed to lift his head just in time to see Bass's foot approaching before it crashed into, and through, his torso.

In another chamber of the Wily Egg, a capsule lit up.

UPLOADING...

UNAUTHORIZED DATA DETECTED.

PURGING UNAUTHORIZED DATA AS PER EGGMAN PROTOCOL.

DATA PURGE CANCELED AS PER UPDATED WILY PROTOCOL.

METAL SONIC UPLOAD COMPLETE.

"Heh," Bass chuckled as he stood over the remains of his opponent. He disengaged from Treble and found he was damaged enough to need to lean on the canine for support. "Thanks Treble."

The wolf robot barked sympathetically as a few of his own systems sparked from damage. Bass trusted few things in life, but Treble was unquestionably at the top of that short list.

"Yeah, we're gonna need some decent repair after all this boy," Bass patted his companion and examined the broom weapon he still held. He'd never ridicule Roll's choice of weapon again. Not after getting smacked around like that earlier, and certainly not after seeing what it let him do to his latest adversary. She was... quite the woman. "Heh. I think I'm in–"

I think I'm in love...

Bass clutched his head as he collapsed under the sudden onslaught of memories, Treble barking furiously in worry.

Rush and Tango brought a worried Light family, along with Sonic, down to the floor of the chamber just as Beat finished setting down an unconscious Blues.

"Is he gonna be okay?" Roll asked worriedly as her father examined the red raider.

"I think so," Dr. Light worried. "His systems look fine, but I have no idea what he was hit with in the first place."

"Sonic?" Rock turned to the blue blur. "Do you...?"

"Rock, buddy," Sonic informed the blue bomber gravely, "your brother just blocked what looked like the Ultimate Annihilator in laser mode. I've been on the wrong end of that kind of device before and it ended those particular Loops real fast. Your bro's lucky he still exists in this iteration."

"I..." Dr. Light continued to look his eldest son over as best he could. "I don't know what to do. Even if we can get to the device before the doctors activate it, I have no way of being certain I could shut it down. And I think it may already be in the process of activating anyway..."

"Chill, doc," Sonic told him. "Even if we can't take the device out, I've got a sweet idea that'll take care of everything."

Dr. Light mulled those thoughts over before becoming all business. "I'll trust your judgement. Rock? Roll? I'm afraid I don't have any E-Tanks, but your super adapters with Rush and Tango should give you enough energy to continue fighting. I'll stay here and do what I can for Blues. You go with Sonic and save our worlds."

"Right," the Light twins replied as they began the process of combining with their support units.

Hephaestus continued to get his divine heart rate back under control as he slumped back in his chair. His gambit had worked. Barely, but it had worked.

PRIMARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE ROCK LIGHT SETTING AS JOINT ANCHOR IN DUAL ANCHOR CONFIGURATION FINALIZED.

SECONDARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE ROLL LIGHT SETTING AS JOINT ANCHOR IN DUAL ANCHOR CONFIGURATION FINALIZED.

TERTIARY ANCHOR CANDIDATE BLUES LIGHT DOWNGRADE TO STANDARD LOOPING STATUS SUCCESSFUL.

WARNING: DAMAGE TO HOME REALITY SETTINGS FOR LOOPER BLUES LIGHT. LOOPER MAY NOT LOAD IN CORRECT

LOCATION.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 80%

"I can't believe what I just saw happen," Hermes stared at him in awe. "You waited until the retcon effect started to erase his presence from the current iteration, and then you initiated your 'one-time downgrade to normal looper' so that Yggdrasil would adjust his code before it finished, essentially re-loading him into the Loop before he was completely removed from it . And even if that didn't work, upgrading Roll to joint Anchor status with her brother and adjusting them to a standard dual Anchor configuration pretty much saved the whole attempt."

" I can't believe it and I coded it," Hephaestus moaned. "I hope that's the last big curve ball this activation attempt's going to throw at us, because I surely just went over my miracle quota."

" You sabotaged me?! " Eggman yelled at the other cockpit as Knuckles began to crack the armor with his punches.

"Off course, Ivo," Wily replied as he ignored Knuckles's pounding on the exterior and the cracking of the armor and fiddled with some wiring. "Now check your readout while I exchange these relays and fix the confusion in the 'Battle' and 'Chase' programs."

Eggman did so, and was alarmed at what he saw. "YOU PUT THE ULTIMATE ANNIHILATOR IN MY COCKPIT?!"

"Yes," Wily declared as he finished up. "I am not as weak as you think Ivo. I tolerated Thomas because while he has stolen adulation, credit, and respect due me, he has never once outright betrayed me. Not like you. Goodbye my friend."

Eggman was silent for a moment, and then he began to laugh. He'd finally lost the game. The game he played with every single commander in his Eggman army back home. The game of deceit and betrayal that kept maintaining his rule over the parts of the world he controlled interesting. And he'd lost to Albert, the first genuine peer he'd ever found. The sole man who could match and understand his genius.

His one true equal.

'How appropriate!' Eggman continued to roar with laughter as the energy of the Ultimate Annihilator permeated his half of the cockpit. 'I finally lose the game to my only real frie–'

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 60%

"You were saying?"

Hephaestus swoaned (28) as he saw what his companion was talking about.

Orbot and Cubot stared in total silence at the spot where Eggman had just... been erased from existence. Even Knuckles and Shadow had stopped trying to attack the war machine in shock.

"Boss..." Orbot lamented.

"Oh, ain't we in trouble now!" Cubot managed to drawl in panic. "These here systems need two operators, don't they?"

"Oh my, yes!" Orbot agreed. "The Egg-Wily Machine X cannot function at full capacity without both doctors!"

"Bad luck for you, Wily," Knuckles growled as he prepared to crack open the machine's cranium armor liek an eggshell.

"Ah, but I prepared for everything!" Wily retorted. "Backup driver teleport system engaged. Full system restore – NOW! "

The eyes of the machine flashed blue while the rest of it flared with a bright yellow energy that threw Knuckles off towards Shadow and the Item-2 jet he currently rode.

"Damni–what?" Shadow began to curse, only to cut himself off in shock at what he saw in the cockpits. Dr. Wily was in one like before, but in the other...

"Boss?" Orbot questioned in surprise.

"We thoughtcha was erased or somethin'!" Cubot added.

...was Dr. Eggman. Like nothing had happened.

"Hohohohoho!" the new Eggman laughed. "Paradox Eggman reporting for duty Albert!"

"Great to have you, Ivo!" Wily replied cheerfully, seeming to be completely unaffected by what he'd just done. "Shall we?"

"Of course! Self-repair systems running at 251%!" Paradox Eggman cheered. "We're invincible!"

"SUPER GENESIS WAVE ACTIVATED" a computerized voice echoed across the room.

"Hah!" Wily exulted. "Checkmate!"

WARNING: EVENT DESIGNATED 'SUPER GENESIS WAVE' GENERATED BY LOCAL ARTIFACTS DESIGNATED 'CHAOS EMERALDS' CORRUPTED BY INTERACTION WITH SKAIA PROTOCOL.

CATEGORY 1 EVENT COMPARISON: 7% MATCH.

TOTAL CATEGORY 1 EVENT MATCH WITH SKAIA: 27%

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 50%

Duo clenched the cracked and battered control eye of the Chaos Devil in his giant hand as his opponent reformed into what Duo could tell was his untainted body. He'd have loved to meet and greet what was clearly a guardian of purity like himself, but he could feel something very wrong happening.

He would have rushed to help, but his place was administering Justice. Putting a reality in the process of breaking back together was both outside his job description and beyond his abilities.

"Damnit!" Hephaestus swore as he and Hermes were again denied from making changes to the Loop. Skaia's influence on the Super Genesis Wave was causing it to react poorly to the established code in the branches. Data corruption in the two Loops was already happening and if this wasn't stopped, they could lose both of them. "There's a category 2 event in progress and Yggdrasil still won't give us the access needed to stop it!"

Hermes was quiet for a moment. "What if we used the loopers?"

The forge god turned to look at his companion for this endeavor.

"Yggdrasil might not be letting us do anything," the god of travel continued as his fingers flew across his terminal, "but they don't have any such restrictions."

Use the Time Stones. All of them. Full power.

Silver started in confusion as the thought crossed his mind. Hermes had warned him not to use the full power Time Stones in the Loops. Heck, the god of travel had put the limiters preventing full power use on the things himself to prevent anyone from using them. So why–

Limiters temporarily off. Super Genesis Wave tainted. Will Crash both Loops if not stopped. Halt the progression of time for the machine and event. Buy Sonic and the others the time they need to stop it. NOW.

"Time Man!" Silver called out to the allied robot master, a supreme sense of urgency overtaking him as his mind formed a plan of action. "I need you to use your Time Slow again!"

"Very well," the robot agreed, not entirely sure why the hedgehog was asking, but complying anyway.

Silver closed his eyes and felt the effects of the robot's weapon with his mind, studying it in an instant and using it as a reminder and guide for how to perform Chronos Control to achieve the same effect. How it affected what the robot master wanted to affect while leaving the rest untouched. Pulling the power of the Time Stones into himself, Silver felt his body enter its super form and began to mold it and directed the effect at the Wily Egg and the terrible machine it was activating. The device's progress would be slowed to the barest of crawls for as long as he could manage it.

"CHRONOS CONTROL!"

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 70%

The doctors ignored the way that reality crackled ominously as their device activated in their enthusiasm to destroy their opponents. Nor did they particularly take note when the progress of their device slowed to a near halt.

They did, however, notice when a golden-yellow glowing ball struck their machine across the jaw like a left cross from a giant prize fighter. And the following blast of golden energy that came from the opposite side to similar effect. Nor did they miss the silvery-gray uppercut that rattled the systems and nearly knocked them out of their chairs.

"Okay you two," a silvery-gray and white glowing Roll in her super adapter armor told her golden-yellow and white super adapter brother and their golden-yellow hedgehog friend, "I'll admit this is pretty cool."

"Told you sis," Super Mega Man grinned at Super Mega Woman.

"Knux, Shadow?" Super Sonic told the other two allies in the chamber. "Thanks for the cover. Go help Dr. Light with Blues. We've got these two."

"S-super forms?" Paradox Eggman stuttered weakly. "They're all in super forms..."

" That's NOT fair! " yelled Wily in a tantrum.

"FIRE EVERYTHING! LAUNCH IT ALL!" one of the doctors screamed as the Egg-Wily Machine X opened up on its three opponents and let loose with a truly obscene amount of bombs, missiles, and lasers.

"Lord Hephaestus?" the voice of Eir came over the intercom. "You have a visitor. Says it's urgent."

Hephaestus blinked and stood up to head out into the office. Hermes, letting his curiosity het the better of him, and not seeing how he could help further at the moment, double-checked to make sure his terminal was recording the fight and followed.

"Very well, what is so damned urgent it couldn't wai–" Hephaestus started, only to cut off as he saw his visitor. Even though he was a volcano god, the expression that overtook his face still caused the temperature in the outer office to drop several degrees. "...Hello father."

"Hmph," Zeus snorted. "Some greeting. And after everything I've been through for you."

"Blast it, Beat!" Dr. Light glared at the bird that hovered protectively over his son from the alcove where he and Knuckles had carried the red robot. Shadow had said he wanted to check something and gone elsewhere. But Beat was refusing to let the doctor examine Blues's systems. "Let me help him!"

For a moment, Dr. Light regretted programming his children's support units for primary loyalty to them. But then he shook it off. That kind of thinking is what estranged him from his eldest son in the first place.

"Super shield is holding!" Wily yelled as Super Sonic bombarded the chaos energy fueled barrier protecting them. "Barely!"

A shot from Super Mega Man that blazed like a miniature sun crashed into the shield and caused it to buckle. Another from Super Mega Woman shattered it entirely.

"AHH!" Paradox Eggman panicked. "I hate that robot!"

"System overload!" Wily screamed as Super Sonic carved two new holes in the war machine now that the defenses were down. "Damnit! Do something about that hedgehog!"

"I'm trying !" Paradox Eggman shouted back. "Why don't you do something about your own nemeses?!"

"Fun as this is," the chaos-empowered hedgehog told his companions, "we need to wrap it up. No idea how long the time freeze on the genesis wave device will hold up and that thing of the doctors is regenerating as fast as we can damage it."

"No worries," the golden Rock grinned. "I remember what we did last time."

"...?" the silver Roll looked at the two curiously.

"Oh, don't you dare ...!" Paradox Eggman threatened as he saw what Super Sonic and Super Mega Man were doing.

"No worries, Ivo," Wily said as he frantically entered something on his control panel. "I've got just the thing..."

Super Mega Man finished charging his arm cannon as Super Sonic revved up his Super Spin Dash on the end of the barrel. The two attacks combined in a blast that lit up the chamber and dwarfed the intended target. The shot struck the body of the Egg-Wily machine head on and detonated beautifully, flinging pieces of it all over.

But the expected return of Super Sonic from the smoke cloud didn't happen, and the two super form robots became concerned.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!" came the laughter of Wily and Paradox Eggman from the still-intact head of their joint war machine.

"A noble effort, all of you!" laughed Wily.

"But thanks to Albert, all for nothing!" Paradox Eggman guffawed.

"Presenting!" Wily gestured grandly.

"The instrument of our ultimate victory!" declared Paradox Eggman.

"The greatest of the Eggman-Wily roboticized masters!" Wily cheered.

"The pinnacle of the EWN series!" Paradox Eggman continued for him with manic fervor.

"Specially reserved as EWN-011!" they both proclaimed together.

The smoke parted, and the chaos-empowered robots saw what the doctors were referring to.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 20%

"SUPER SONIC MAN!"

"Get to the point, father," Hephaestus cut off the Lord of Olympus from his 'beleaguered official' tirade.

"No respect," Zeus shook his head mournfully. "How did I ever raise such an ungrateful child?"

'You didn't,' or some variation thereof went through the minds of pretty much everyone else in the room. But no one voiced it in the interests of resolving this visit as quickly as possible.

"Oh, very well," Zeus finally relented under the collective gazes of everyone and produced a document. "Here. The Oversight Council's approval for necessary alterations to your branch, with authorization password to let Yggdrasil know it's been approved."

Hephaestus wordlessly reached for the document only for Zeus to pull it back.

"Of course, I'm sure you understand that rushing an audit like I just did is no small favor," the politically savvy storm god looked smug and expectant.

'You owe him the damn Olympian throne several times over, you pompous disgrace,' Hermes twitched from behind his friend.

"Roll! You handle the doctors!" Super Mega Man yelled to his sister as he charged at Super Sonic Man. He had no idea how Wily had managed to roboticize Sonic in super mode, but this wasn't the time to rail at the universe for being unfair.

Dr. Light ignored the way Knuckles was cursing at the turn of events as he wracked his mind for a way to help his son. After a moment, he hit upon an idea. The chances of it working were less than he'd like, but the odds of making Blues worse were non-existent.

"Beat," he addressed the bird. "I need you to initiate your super adapter mode for Blues. He's weak right now and it may give him just enough energy to bring him out of danger."

The mechanical bird took a moment to process that before initiating the process.

Super Mega Woman renewed her assault on the remnants of the Egg-Wily Machine X while her brother and Super Sonic Man clashed with enough force to shake the room.

The restored shields of the machine cracked under the assault, but held firm.

"HAHAHAHA!" Paradox Eggman laughed.

"We should probably thank you," Wily grinned. "With a smaller craft to distribute chaos energy across, our defenses regenerate even faster than before!"

Roll swore internally as she dodged a retaliatory laser burst. Apparently the good news was that the machine now had fewer weapons to fire at her. But as things went, a stalemate was not beneficial to her right now.

Super Mega Man fired his buster repeatedly at Super Sonic Man, but the super form robot was simply too fast to hit with every one and the near-invincibility allowed him to shrug off the ones that did hit with little problem. The same near-invulnerability was allowing Rock as Super Mega Man to similarly shrug off the blows his opponent landed.

However, he was quickly realizing what 'nearly invulnerable' actually meant. The energy of the temporary super form was finite, and every blow took away from the gradually depleting pool he had left. And Super Sonic Man was landing more blows than he was.

And then it happened. Mega Man's pool ran out first and he dropped to his normal super adapter state. The surprise allowed Super Sonic Man to land another blow that drove him to the floor.

'That wasn't nearly as hard as it could have been,' Rock thought to himself as the super roboticized master alighted a short ways away and began walking forward purposefully. 'And he's hesitating. Either the doctors programmed Super Sonic Man to rub it in, or Sonic's fighting it.'

Rock decided to bet on the latter and disengaged Rush, thankful the after effects of the transformation having left him with full strength.

"Go find dad, boy," he ordered his canine companion. Rush whined in protest, but still left. The super adapter had many strengths, but nowhere near enough to bridge the current gap between him and his opponent. Right now, he needed the extra maneuverability and access to his master weapons. Raw power wasn't going to cut it. Tactics and flexibility would have to pick up the slack.

Bass groaned as his memories finished realigning themselves. He recalled his life as Dr. Wily's loyal son, and also one where he'd fallen for his rival's sister. In that other life, he'd slowly begun to question his father's intentions as the man's plans began to exclude Bass more and more, until life fighting alongside his one time foes against his father was more appealing than staying loyal.

"Damnit, pops..." He groaned from where Treble supported him. At least his faithful support unit hadn't changed. Honestly, making the robot wolf loyal to Bass above even himself hadn't been one of Wily's smarter moves. But it was also the one that had made Bass question his decision to abandon his father's cause the most. Why would a man as evil as others say put so much trust in the one he'd called his son? Why not make Bass another in his line of Mega Man Killers? Why make Bass so unique out of his creations, not just in body but in mind as well?

And why did his 'father' feel the need to rewrite his past after giving him his own Will?

"Interesting..." a new voice cut into his thoughts. Treble growled at the newcomer and Bass looked up to see a black and red hedgehog similar to Sonic. Shadow if he recalled correctly. The so-called 'ultimate lifeform'. "What have we here?"

"You realize you have lost," Super Sonic Man declared. "Surrender and your end will be painle–"

Rock cut the super form robot off with a Sharp Knuckle uppercut, followed by a Mighty Blow to the abdomen. He moved into the Electric Blade, the Trick Sword, and then the Piko Hammer not letting up for a moment. He followed with a point-blank Shockwave Boomer, then the Rabbot Laser, the Acoustic Blaster, and finally planted a Stealth Mine on the robot's chest.

That was when Super Sonic Man managed to disengage. He fired off an Omochao and then activated Ray Glide and took to the air. Super Sonic Man ignored the attacking Omochao drone and came after him. Rock switched to the Rapid Stinger and fired repeatedly as he fell downwards towards his opponent coming straight up. The super form roboticized master was almost on him when the Stealth Mine he'd ignored went off. Rock angled himself and switched to the Chroma Camo and continued his fall towards his now confused opponent.

The blue bomber latched onto Super Sonic Man's back unseen and before the robot knew what was happening, he'd been hit with the Black Wave. Rock followed with the Psycho Burst and the Chaos Cannon to ensure immobilization, and then began firing the Omega Gatling as they fell together, continuing to fire until they hit the ground with his opponent under him.

Rock vaulted off of Super Sonic Man, turned, and fired the Hydrokinesis weapon in mid-air. He followed with the Fire Tornado to convert the lingering moisture to steam and obscure his opponent's vision and then unleashed the Tail Wind. Super Sonic Man braced against the impact, and then his form flickered.

'Yes!' the robot son of Light cheered mentally as his opponent's super form ran out and he became simply Sonic Man and was blown off his feet. Rock switched back to his Mega Buster and began charging up a Sonic Shot to restore the blue blur to normal. He took aim and fired as the Tail Wind died out.

Sonic Man hit the wall of the chamber feet first a moment before the Sonic Shot impacted. And when it did, he'd already moved out of the way.

'Scrap,' Rock swore to himself.

In the currently empty office, the success chance display ticked downwards, its drop rate mirroring the time left on Roll's super form.

"How about this, father?" Hephaestus interrupted the current head of the Olympian pantheon. "If you hand the file over and leave right now without coming back then I'll happily ignore mother's latest request indefinitely."

Zeus quirked an eyebrow in challenge. "What could she have possibly asked for that I would agree to this?"

Hephaestus gestured for Zeus to bend an ear so he could relay this information privately and began whispering the nature of the request to the divine politician.

Hermes, who had an eavesdropping spell active, winced in masculine sympathy as he heard what it was. (29)

Zeus's eyes widened and all of a sudden he couldn't hand the file over fast enough. "Wellthatsoundsfineson!Hereyougo!Bestofluck!"

And with that, the Lord of Olympus beat as hasty a retreat as he could.

Super Mega Woman sent a pair of Rocket Claws at the flying head of the Egg-Wily Machine X, only for them to be deflected by the shield.

Blues groaned as he sat up.

"Careful so–Blues," he heard Dr. Light worry. "You were hit with a rather formidable weapon. I'm not entirely sure what all it did to you."

That was right. He'd moved to block that weapon from firing on his siblings... And even though he'd blocked with his shield, it still felt like he'd been taken apart and put back together. At the atomic level. Simultaneously. While able to feel every excruciating step of the process. And–

Blues blinked and looked himself over. Why was he in super adapter mode?

Rock was arguably having an even harder time now. The end of the super form had dropped Sonic Man's power considerably, but it seemed whatever reluctance he'd had to go all-out was similarly gone.

Every shot he was firing was being dodged with Sonic's characteristic speed and ability. All he needed was for the hedgehog to hold still for a few moments so he could hit him with a Sonic Shot, but that was easier said than done.

Thinking through his options furiously as he did his level best to avoid retaliation, he nearly passed over the one weapon he hadn't tried. Again. But he paused mentally for a moment. Maybe that was just what he needed. The seemingly ridiculous weapon had already pulled him out of one jam, so why not another?

Mega Man calmed himself as he turned indigo and purple with white trim and felt the tranquil spiritual echo of Big. The gentle giant who would brave any hardship for a friend in need, without ever thinking twice. Focusing his senses, he waited for the right moment.

'Now!' Rock cast the Fishing Rod's line and lassoed Sonic Man's legs, causing him to trip and fall.

And with that, the only thing left to do was charge up and restore his ally. Then he could see what he could do to help his sister.

Sonic rubbed his head as he came back to himself, idly noting Rock pick up the weapon orb he'd dropped out of the corner of his eye. Wow had that been a trip. He'd managed to fight the programming while the super form lasted, but for the most part that had been like watching someone else drive his body. While half asleep and barely aware of what said someone else was doing.

"You okay?" Rock asked him.

"Yeah," Sonic told him, "just remembering why I hate being roboticized. First time it's happened while I was Super though. Anyway, how's your sister doing?"

"Still in super mode," Rock told him as they both looked upwards towards the fight, "but it looks like she's in a stalemate with their shield. She hasn't taken any hits, so she's got some energy left but no idea how much."

"Right," Sonic nodded. "Make this quick then. I've spent a bunch of Loops working on something to get through chaos energy and now looks like as good a time as any to try it out, so tell your sister to lure them a bit lower and get ready to throw me."

"Throw you?" Rock puzzled, turning to Sonic, only for what he was about to ask to terminate in his vocal processor. Sonic was turning into a were... something. 'Were-hedgehog? Does that count if he starts as one?'

"Ready?" Sonic asked in a deep, gravely voice. He'd lost count of how many Loops it had taken him to figure out how to hold on to Dark Gaia's energy so the beast didn't suck it out of him. Or knew he still had it so it would continue trying. And many more to work out the technique he was about to try. He'd been saving it for when it would get the best reaction from Eggman – something worthy of the album he'd been putting together – but it looked like it was needed now.

"Just a moment," Rock told him and radioed Roll the message.

Roll got the message and dove towards the floor.

"Running already?" Paradox Eggman laughed behind her.

"But this dance is just getting started!" Wily cackled as he commanded the machine after her.

She saw her brother and... was that Sonic? The currently beastial hedgehog gave her a grin and stretched his arm towards her. Super Mega Woman caught it out of reflex, and began to swing around. Sonic's arm acted like a whip and she cracked it straight at the doctors.

"Hey docs!" Sonic the Werehog growled as his hands glowed with dark energy, the antithesis of what the Chaos Emeralds produced. " Heads up! " Both hands clenched together as they hit the shield, and sent a dark energy spike right through it and into the systems, causing them to spark and short all across the board.

Silver strained to keep his technique up for just a little longer, but he was at his end. He was too far out of practice and had used too much to keep the technique going at the level he needed. His super form gave out, and with it his command over the full power of the Time Stones.

"Not bad," Rock allowed, observing the way the remains of the craft fell as his sister floated down towards him.

"Yeah," Sonic declared as he landed nearby, "your sister has a good throwing arm."

"Thanks you two, I–" Roll started when she was cut off by the renewal of reality's ominous crackling as the faulty super genesis wave started up again.

"Looks like we're out of time," Sonic observed. "Roll, you're the only one with any chaos energy left, so you'll have to use Chaos Control to reverse this."

"But," Super Mega Woman's eyes widened, "I don't know how ! I've never done this before!"

"Don't worry sis," Rock told her as he used one of his stored utility weapons to create a pair of Item-1 platforms for himself and Sonic to float up next to his sister. "We both have. We'll guide you through it."

"Looks like this is pretty dang generous," Hephaestus mused as he looked the approval over. "I know I wouldn't be allowed some of this leeway under ordinary circumstances."

"I'm still–" Hermes stopped as he saw what the terminals were displaying. " Holy ! What did we miss?! "

"Too much," Hephaestus declared as he practically leapt into his seat and entered the approval code as fast as divinely possible. Hephaestus began typing away at his terminal furiously. However poorly things had gone up to this point, this was an opportunity not to be missed. Roll was beginning the to locally load the restoration mode of Chaos Control, and he'd never be allowed to do what he was about to try under normal circumstances. As much as he hated to admit it, his father had come through in the nick of time on this. Not that the man would actually care about that beyond what he would be owed in return.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION PROTOCOL SUBSET 'MARVEL' LINKED TO RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'CHAOS CONTROL' CURRENTLY LOADING.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION PROTOCOL SUBSET 'DC' LINKED TO RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'CHAOS CONTROL' CURRENTLY LOADING.

UNIVERSAL RESTORATION SUBROUTINE OF 'KEY/LOCK' SYSTEM LINKED TO RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'CHAOS CONTROL' CURRENTLY LOADING.

"Geez," Hermes observed as Hephaestus attempted to link every known restoration protocol to the one the Anchors were attempting. "Overkill much?"

"With the state this branch is in?" Hephaestus retorted absently. "I'm not sure it'll be enough."

Wily was in shock. He'd lost. Again.

You shouldn't stand for this.

All the preparations he'd made. All the mysterious foreknowledge he'd acted on. He'd countered and beguiled his opponents at every turn and he'd still lost in the end.

They deserve to die.

This was it, wasn't it? Thomas was the superior scientist with the superior creations. He'd given it everything he'd had and his old friend's robots had come out on top again.

No, they deserve to be erased.

If only Ivo hadn't...

Ivo was right about one thing in the original run.

Hmmm? A memory of Ivo? Of what might have been?

If you can't have the universe your way, why should they have it at all?

Wily began cackling. Yes. One last push. Play every card he had left. Make them pay.

Make everything pay.

Reality crackled dangerously around them as Rock and Sonic guided Roll in super form through the process.

"Feel it," Rock told her, transmitting memories of when he'd done this himself to aid her. "The energy had purpose. Intent."

"It wants to set things right," Sonic continued. "But it needs you to let it."

"Focus," Rock's calm voice helped everything else to fall away except the goal.

"Aim it at the junction between our realities," Sonic urged. "We've only got one shot, so it'll have to be enough."

And throughout it all, she could feel other things joining with the energy. Many, many forces finding their way through the channel somehow. Each of them with the purpose of putting the universes to rights.

Hephaestus was so focused on what he was doing that he missed the development. But Hermes didn't. The advancing reality corruption was getting so bad that echoes of alternate events were popping up for instants all over the place. But even that couldn't hide the doctors' damaged craft rising back up and taking aim at the heroes about to restore reality.

'Oh no you don't,' Hermes glared as his fingers flew over his portable terminal. What he was about to do was highly ill-advised, but hey. That's what tricksters like him did. Besides, there wasn't much he could do to make the situation worse .

He isolated one of the glitching defunct probability echoes and dragged it over to a particular individual.

Dr. Light watched as Blues sat up groggily, Rush helping him as best as the robo-canine could. When out of the corner of his eye, he saw the head of the Egg-Wily Machine X begin to rise up and charge its main laser cannon, the clear intent to fire on the ones trying to restore the two universes to their proper state.

And there was nothing he could do about it.

"Oh no..." he began, when a blur of shining bronze zoomed past him.

Turning around in confusion, he saw a distinct lack of his eldest son.

"Knuckles, where...?"

"Proto Man just... went super," Knuckles stared incredulously after the bronze form. " Without the Chaos Emeralds..."

Blues had no idea where the sudden rush of energy came from, but he knew exactly what to do with it. The doctors were trying to interfere with his siblings' attempt to fix the damage they'd done to reality and he was going to stop them.

He activated his super adapter's blade more out of habit than anything, since it was most likely his shield that wou–

Program Advance: LifeSrd3

Blues had no idea where the ability came from, but he didn't particularly care at the moment. He interposed his energized 'super form' between the remains of the Egg-Wily Machine X and his sister and swung his blade for all it was worth at the same time the war machine's laser cannon fired at full charge.

The energy wave that erupted from his blade parted the cannon's laser right down the middle and bisected the machine as well.

And then Super Proto Man's transformation gave out. Because it technically hadn't really been there in the first place.

Hermes stared. Sure, reality was glitching horribly so what he'd seen probably wasn't impossible for the time being, but the sheer odds against a beneficial glitch hitting at that exact moment...

He looked calculatingly at his terminal. The only thing that could have arranged such a random-seeming event was Yggdrasil itself.

LOCAL RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'WORLD HEALING WAVE' LINKED TO RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'CHAOS CONTROL' CURRENTLY LOADING.

WISH PROTOCOL 'DRAGON BALLS' LINKED TO RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'CHAOS CONTROL' CURRENTLY LOADING.

(30)

"CHAOS CONTROL!"

The orb of reality-restoring energy left Roll's hands and hit the rift at the center of the disturbance, and the bright warm energy of a genesis wave reversing itself washed over everyone and everything.

LINKED RESTORATION PROTOCOLS SUCCESSFUL.

ARTIFICIALLY INDUCED UNIVERSAL DATA CORRUPTION REVERSED.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'SONIC' RESTORED TO FULL LOOP FUNCTIONALITY.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' ASSESSMENT:

SECTION 1 RESTORED TO PARTIAL LOOP FUNCTIONALITY

SECTION 2 CORRUPTION LEVELS REDUCED

STABILITY OF SECTION 1 REQUIRED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

SECTION 3 CORRUPTION LEVELS REDUCED

STABILITY OF SECTION 1 REQUIRED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

STABILITY OF SECTION 2 ADVISED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

SECTION 4 CORRUPTION LEVELS REDUCED

STABILITY OF SECTION 1 REQUIRED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

SECTION 5 CORRUPTION LEVELS REDUCED

STABILITY OF SECTION 4 REQUIRED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

SECTION 6 CORRUPTION LEVELS REDUCED

STABILITY OF SECTIONS 2 & 3 REQUIRED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

SECTION 7 CORRUPTION LEVELS REDUCED

STABILITY OF SECTIONS 2, 3, AND 6 REQUIRED FOR LINKED LOOP ACTIVATION ATTEMPTS

SECTION X PARTIALLY RECOVERED

Hephaestus breathed a sigh of relief as Hermes clapped him on the back. It was over. There was nothing worth mentioning between now and the end of the scenario that could possibly keep the Loop from stabilizing.

"Um..." came the voice of one of the nymphs. "Aren't they all supposed to be back in their home Loops right now?"

What?

Hephaestus blinked and grabbed for his terminal to examine what was happening. The reality-restoring powers of the Chaos Emeralds had worked as advertised, but everyone was still in the pocket Skaia Protocol/Special Zone reality instead of their home Loops.

SKAIA PROTOCOL PROPERTIES RENDERED INERT.

'SPECIAL ZONE' PROPERTIES RENDERED INERT.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: A8%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

WARNING: SCENARIO PARAMETERS HAVE CHANGED.

ALL PRIOR YGGDRASIL PREDICTIONS REGARDING SCENARIO RENDERED INVALID.

RECALCULATING...

'No,' Hephaestus thought in horror as he typed several lines into his terminal. 'No no no nonoNO!'

"What in Tartarus...?" Hermes stared in confusion.

PROJECTED UNIVERSAL DEGRADATION OF BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' IF ACTIVATION ATTEMPT IS UNSUCCESSFUL: TOTAL

"DAMNIT!" Hephaestus slammed his fists down on his terminal.

"What?" Hermes jumped. "What's going on?!"

"A virus slipped past the firewalls and infected the end of the scenario! The parameters are corrupted past this point!" Hephaestus panicked.

" Yggdrasil's running the Loop blind! "

---

1) I can't recall the title right now, but there was a Mega Man fanfic I read years ago that had a functionally insane Doc Robot as a recurring antagonist. And that characterization stuck with me so well that I have a hard time imagining him any other way.

2) Ship Teasing.

3) Because the Time Stones are supposed to grant control over time itself, and that's bad for the Loops right now. Silver's pretty much charged with making sure no one uses the things to crash (note the lower-case) the Sonicverse.

4) A lot of Charmy's Loop abilities seem to be psychosomatic. He has to dress the part to access them.

5) Steeerike!

6) "GET OVER HERE!"

7) I'm quoting some fanfic (I forget the name, which seems to be a recurring thing for me) where Rock went to a mirror universe and evil!Auto said more-or-less this exact quote when he was about to blow himself up in order to take the heroes with him.

And, yes, the Skaia/Zone fusion has caused the paradox clones from Homestuck to instead manifest as robot clones.

8) Omega finds destruction to be beautiful, as well as things that cause destruction. The more, the better. Blaze is an extremely powerful pyrokinetic. So Omega has something of a crush on her.

9) Yeah, this isn't encouraging...

10) This scene takes up exactly four panels in the comic, and the conversation here mirrors it word-for-word. I timed how long it took me to read the dialogue out loud, and then added almost ten seconds as a margin of error because I read fast. The conclusion? Dr. Light managed to go from scavenged robot master parts to firing a fully functioning Mega Buster in less than half a minute . In the middle of a war zone. While holding this exact conversation.

Angus Macgyver wishes he was this good.

11) I've taken a few liberties with the scene due to changes in events, but this is pretty much how it goes in Worlds Collide after Eggman tosses Dr. Light out of the Wily Egg (sans Paradox robo-clone) just like in the earlier scene.

12) Show of hands. How many of you can't get this image out of your head now?

13) Doc Robot's being vewwy, vewwy quiet.

14) In the baseline, Tails accompanied Sonic and Mega Man and is the one who ends up taking the misfired Ballade Cracker. To the face. (He lives though)

15) Gapes Dude! WTF?!

16) I don't know why, but the Mighty Mouse theme song suddenly started blaring in my head right about this point.

17) A full set of Chaos Emeralds doesn't always play well with another. It's usually not universe-breaking, but hey, Chaos.

18) Duo is what's known as 'Loop Aware'. He doesn't recall other Loops, but his connections to the fabric of reality allow him to know that the Loops are, in fact, happening. Unlike some other Loop Aware entities, he doesn't consider it his job to try and fix things or enforce baseline events.

19) The good news is that Waltz is the only known entity in the multiverse that can take advantage of this unique and improbable convergence of circumstances.

20) Haruno Sakura of course, trope namer for Sakura Syndrome.

21) Not of Wales.

22) Not my original idea. Honestly, considering the 'rock-paper-scissors' nature of the Mega Man games, it's a wonder it took as long as it did for a paper-themed robot master to be created in official media.

23) Ending tally: Lots of posturing, rubbing the heroes faces in their supposed failure, mutual sniping between the no-longer-friends, normal genesis wave merely 'shuffles' reality, super genesis wave can rebuild from the ground up, the doctors plan to write the heroes out of their new reality (which would normally cause the kind of Loop crash that sends everyone to Eiken for a time-out), the doctors ignore the warnings about how what they're trying could cause their universes to collapse, and everything looks pretty dang dire across the board.

24) He used the Copy Chip on the Extreme Gear Blaze and her group rode on earlier, and then uploaded the design to Beat's transformation matrix. Come on, the guy has the Cool Shades and the Scarf of Asskicking already. A Cool Hover Board was the next logical step, really.

25) Insert dark reprise of the Ruby Spears cartoon theme here.

26) Chekov's Gun: Fire.

27) Actually, she doesn't. Being the admin for Eiken is as work-free as a job can possibly get. And Aphrodite's employee profile clearly says she's allergic to work.

28) Swearing and groaning at the same time, of course. Or swearing and moaning. Take your pick.

29) In a nutshell: Hera asked for a set of jewelry inlaid with the family jewels. Zeus's 'family jewels' to be precise.

30) SILLY PROTOCOL 'KITCHEN SINK' LINKED TO RESTORATION PROTOCOL 'CHAOS CONTROL' CURRENTLY LOADING.

31) Well, that's it folks! The battle's over and the heroes are victorious and–Wait, what? Oh, you're kidding! No, my subconscious is not doing this to me! Not after all that! Damn you subconscious! Why you have to pull victory out from under the heroes like that?!

Loop 1 Part 6: Overtime!

Mega Loop 1.0 Part 6: Overtime!

Rock blinked. "We're still here."

Roll, no longer in super form but still in her super adapter, looked at him. "Were we supposed to be somewhere else?"

"Yeah," Sonic piped up. "Everything should have gone back to where and when it was before. Heck, this whole Zone shouldn't still be here. Something's up."

"My memories of the last time have fully restored," Rock allowed, "and they show me waking back up in our home universe after firing off Chaos Control."

"Well," Blues sat up from where he'd fallen nearby when his mysterious super form had cut out. He was feeling... mostly better. "Before we do anything else, we should probably secure the doctors."

"When did–?" Rock and Roll blinked in surprise at seeing their brother up and about.

"When you were charging the Chaos Control," Blues told them. "The doctor tried to shoot you. I stopped them. Not entirely sure how though."

"Yeah," Sonic swallowed nervously at hearing how close a call they'd just had, "thanks man. If they'd succeeded it would have been... bad."

"Is everyone alright?" asked Dr. Light as he and Knuckles coasted over on Rush's jet form and the loaned Item-2 jet respectively.

"Well, Albert?" moaned Paradox Eggman from his personal craft, ejected at the last moment before the last of the Egg-Wily Machine X was destroyed. "What now?"

Wily in his own saucer took a moment, as if listening to something. "Now we make a tactical retreat, Ivo. I've still got cards left to play, but we're vulnerable right here and now."

"Hey!" Sonic blurted suddenly. "The docs are making a break for it!"

With that, he took off running towards where the two doctors were indeed flying their personal craft at the opening Knuckles had made when he, Shadow, and Blues had busted in.

After a moment, he realized there was someone running alongside him and turned to look at his ally in surprise.

"You get one guess what your master weapon was," (1) the still-blue and cyan Rock grinned at him as he raced alongside the hedgehog. For an instant, Sonic could almost swear there was an image of himself hovering over the robot, but the feeling vanished and Sonic grinned back.

"So you got the speed? Then let's see if you can handle the pace!"

Air Man was in mid-jump, flinging miniature tornadoes at any enemy he could see with his Air Shooter, when a bolt of electricity struck him in the back, sending him to the ground. He turned, and saw Elec Man approach, lightning crackling over his fingertips. Elec Man looked at him with a smirk, and said with bravado: "Hey, Airhead, you've got three seconds to live, I suggest you use them wisely."

"Foolish creation of Light," Airman shot back, "I control the air itself, you are a pitiful static charger. Once one of my tornadoes strikes you, you are finished. You will never escape its vortex."

"Ha! How arrogant of you!" Elec Man retorted with no small amount of hypocrisy. "Can you put lightning in a jar? Can you put a thunderstorm under lock and key!?" he yelled.

"YES I CAN!" Air Man declared, firing dozens of tornadoes at his foe.

Elec Man, brimming with confidence, closed the distance, avoiding each shot, then loosed his Thunder Beam at full charge, shocking Air Man down to his core. Elec Man walked by Air Man with a smirk as the robot master collapsed, smoking. "Sorry airhead, but you just can't defeat Elec Man." (2)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: #3%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

Sally was the first to notice it. Their opponents had... stopped returning after they were defeated since the wave passed over everything.

"Full press everyone!" She yelled, taking a moment to use her energy blades on Magic Man. "The doctors can't time clone them anymore!"

Shortly after Mega Man sped off with Sonic to chase the doctors, Knuckles was nearly thrown off his feet when the robot Dr. Light had identified as Duo crashed up through the floor with Chaos 0 riding on his back.

"Dr. Light," the large alien robot declared, "I have restored this Guardian of Chaos to his proper self."

Knuckles quirked an eyebrow. That was an interesting way to refer to Chaos. Not exactly inaccurate either.

"Where are the doctors?" Duo asked. "Their Evil actions demand that Justice be served."

"My brother and Sonic took off after them," Roll told him as she and her remaining brother disengaged their super adapters and had their companions turn into their personal jet forms. Roll idly noted the new 'hoverboard' appearance that Beat had taken on as they did.

"I contacted Shade," Blues continued for her, "and the robot master army is beginning to thin. We should go there first and finish up so that our full forces can be brought against the doctors and whatever they have left in reserve."

"I'd prefer to bring Shadow back with us," Knuckles added, "but he's not answering his radio so we'll have to go without him."

"Are you not concerned for your ally?" Duo questioned the echidna.

"Nah," Knuckles waved the question off as he fired up the loaned Item-2 jet, Dr. Light getting aboard Rush's own jet mode. "He can handle himself just fine."

"So," Shadow asked the ebony robot before him, "how do you want to do this?"

Rock was starting to realize why Sonic was such an action addict. This was amazing!

After exiting the Wily Egg's interior, the doctors had stuck close to the surface, allowing Sonic and Rock to run on it after them. Only their speed kept the two heroes from sliding down the steep angle.

Why the doctors had chosen to stay close became clear as exterior defenses clearly made with just this sort of high speed battle in mind activated and began firing on them. Rock occupied himself with destroying the defenses and harassing the doctors with his Mega Buster, which utility weapons like Sonic's allowed for, while Sonic himself was doing his best to disable their craft with Homing Attacks.

If at all possible, the goal was to prevent the doctors from re-entering the Wily Egg at another location.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 2!%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

"Hey guys," Oil Man said nervously as the flame-wielding robots Turbo Man and Capricorn closed in on him. "No hard feelings, right?" (3)

He'd crashed into Turbo Man's race car mode using his Oil Slider and they'd both gone careening into Capricorn while he was dueling Antoine.

In response to his question Capricorn's saber ignited, as did the large spinning wheels that made up Turbo Man's shoulders.

"In a moment, no," Turbo Man declared. "There won't be any hard feelings at all then."

Fortunately before they could advance any further, a sword erupted from Capricorn's torso from behind and a violet female form kicked Turbo Man in the head, knocking him over.

"Zis eez not how an honorable opponent comports himself," Antoine glared as he finished off Capricorn, "no?"

Oil Man was more concerned with the way his other savior had stumbled after knocking Turbo Man over. "Whoa there hot stuff!" he cautioned as he steadied her. "You alright?"

"I'll be fine," Blaze told him as Antoine engaged Turbo Man and slashed his tires. "Still a little light headed from what happened earlier." 'Not that surprising,' she added mentally. 'It's not often I'm knocked out of super form that hard.'

"Not sure I agree with that, babe," Oil Man returned unbelievingly.

"It's fine," Blaze insisted, summoning a large ball of fire to re-enter the fray, "I can handle–"

Her head swam again and she stumbled, only for Oil Man to catch her once more.

"Yeah, it doesn't look like you're at 100%, hot stuff," he told her flatly.

"It doesn't matter," She clenched her teeth. "My flames are needed."

"Tell ya what," the robot changed tactics. "Can you handle a candle without hurting yourself?"

"I am Blaze," she sneered, "mistress of flame. And this battle needs much more than a candle ."

"I ain't disagreeing, babe," he stared straight back. "I'm Oil Man. If you can make a candle, I can turn it into an inferno."

Blaze turned that over in her aching head. "Very well."

A moment later Plant Man and Search Man were lit up by the flamethrower the two had produced.

"Give it up Cut Man!" Metal Man yelled as the two robots flung their trademark blades at each other. "I'm the superior model! I'm stronger! Faster! And my Metal Blades are sharper!"

"Yeah, you're a real cut-up alright!" Cut Man called back. "But you forgot a few things!"

"Like what?" Metal Man asked.

"One," Cut Man said as he grabbed two Metal Blades with his bare hands, "I'm not the one weak to bladed objects."

Metal Man replied by throwing more of the circular saw weapons at his opponent.

"Two," Cut Man deflected the weapons with the ones he'd caught, "the Rolling Cutter's a boomerang-style weapon."

Metal Man's eyes widened as one of the returning scissor-like weapons sheared through his neck.

"But it's nothing to lose your head over."

Time Man almost casually activated his Time Slow as Quick Man made for him and just as casually dispatched the speedster.

"Oh, that feels good!" Grenade Man cried as he exploded.

"Weirdo," Bomb Man declared. (4)

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: M5%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

Fire Man and Ice Man stood back-to-back as they took out Cold Man and Burner Man respectively.

Guts Man was plowing through the opposition when he spotted Charge Man gunning for him. Planting his feet, he drew back his fist and got ready.

"Last stop!" he yelled as he belted Charge Man in the face, sending the train-themed robot master careening across the ground. "Everybody off!"

Rock was impressed with the efficiency of the weapon he'd gained from Sonic. He and the hedgehog had been chasing the doctors over the Wily Egg's surface for a while, denied them two alternate entry points, and it still had over half its energy left.

Hmm... If he knew Wily, and he did, the doctor would be switching tactics about now.

Wily got a far-away look in his eyes for a moment before calling out to his partner.

"Ivo! The new developments are almost ready, but we're getting nowhere like this! Time to move to a different battlefield!"

Paradox Eggman looked at the plan Albert had messaged him and grinned. "Brilliant! That'll shake things up for sure!"

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 1*%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

"Okay!" Hephaestus declared. "I think I've isolated the scenario corruption enough that I can repair it!"

"While the Loop's running?" Hermes looked at his companion. "Isn't that kind of risky?"

"If you've got an alternative, I'd like to hear it!"

"Just making sure man," the god of travel held up his hands defensively. "Anything I can help with?"

"Yes!" the volcanic god told him. "Wily's got a virus in his code, I'm sure of it now! I need you to find and either delete, quarantine, or firewall it! He's bad enough as a Dreamer, I don't need him viral on top of it!"

"Uh, exactly how–"

"You're a trickster, aren't you?" the god of the forge cut him off. "Get creative!"

Can you feel that?

Nnng... The headaches were getting worse, but they came with such ideas!

Reality is trying to stop you. Keep you down. Prevent you from achieving the fruits of your genius. Ensure that you'll always be second to Thomas for all eternity.

Yes... It was so clear now. Fate and even creation itself were against him. So they'd pay like all the others...

Do it. End it all.

Because he was a genius!

Duo charged ahead of the rest of the group coming from the Wily Egg and hit the ground in an explosion of energy. The impact decimated a half-dozen robot masters and knocked several more off their feet.

The doctors had changed course and of course the two heroes had chased after them. They'd gone up to the top of the battlestation, and then straight down the other side. Down and down the two heroes had chased the doctors, the slope of the Wily Egg they traversed getting ever steeper until they were in more of a controlled free-fall than an actual run.

And then the doctors began to pull away into the open air.

"Oh, that's just playing dirty!" Sonic complained as the doctors laughed at the two heroes.

Rock's mind however was racing. His utility-class weapons were among the few that supported simultaneous use with his Mega Buster, something he'd discussed with Dr. Light and the two had worked together on an upgrade to his systems. An upgrade that would let him use two utility weapons at once. Plus an add-on Dr. Light had come up with to fire the items into place at range if necessary.

"Trust me," he told Sonic. "I've got an idea."

Rock switched to a particular upgrade that had been made for his brother Blues since Beat as an aerial unit didn't properly support ground-bound modes. The Coil Adapter essentially generated a device that performed the same function as the Rush and Tango Coils.

With it, he fired off two of the devices ahead right into his and Sonic's paths.

"Sweet!" the hedgehog grinned as they both hit the devices at a run and sprang out into the open air after the doctors.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: N0%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

Hephaestus twitched at the notice as he continued typing away.

Blues and Knuckles fought side by side through the diminishing throng of robot masters, all opposition falling to their combined might.

"Well, that's that Albert!" Paradox Eggman gloated. "No way they can jump far enough to get us out–eh?"

"All weapons ready Ivo!" Wily furiously mashed buttons in his craft. "Knock them out of the sky!"

"You don't have to tell me twice!" Paradox Eggman yelled back as he began similar frantic button mashing.

"Hey there Ugly! I'm Aqua Man, but you can call me handsome!" the self-identified robot master gloated to Chaos 0. Up until the liquid guardian leapt down the barrel of his cannon and expanded in the robot's water tank until he burst of course.

Rouge lamented the fact that this would be the last time she'd be able to pry Jewel Man's head gem off as the Chaotix brawled past, downing Dyna Man and Torch Man among others.

"There you are," Hermes spoke towards his terminal as he located the virus infecting Dr. Wily's code. "Geez, you've really dug in haven't you?"

First things first, quarantine Wily so the virus couldn't spread. The work Hephaestus had put together for that Waltz character would be plenty for this task, and fortunately the evidence pointed to Wily being the only one infected. With this virus at least.

"Now to see if I can't reverse what you're doing to the bad doctor..."

No! We will not be contained! We will not be denied!

No, no he wouldn't. He had nothing left to lose and plenty of cards left to play.

An end to everything!

Now that they weren't running anymore, Rock had switched out of Sonic Speed. He'd also switched to another weapon that fit the situation and timed it just right before firing as he and Sonic neared the apex of their spring-aided jump.

They'd each performed synchronized linear three-point landings on a Super Arrow and allowed it to carry them through the air towards the doctors battlecrafts.

"This is tight!" Sonic exclaimed. "It's like grinding on air!"

"Not one of my favorites," Rock admitted, "but it works for stuff like this."

And then they were in the zone of engagement. (5) As Rock exchanged fire with Wily's saucer, Paradox Eggman swung a massive wrecking ball chained to his craft at Sonic. The hedgehog leapt over the assault, sacrificing the Super Arrow, and went for a Homing Attack.

"Foolish hedgehog!" Paradox Eggman called out. "There's nothing to land on!"

Rock ceased his fire for a moment to jump from his Super Arrow and fire off an Item-1 platform right where Sonic would land and then a pair of Item-3s which attached themselves to each doctor's craft.

"You were saying, doc?" Sonic taunted as he went for another attack.

Rock jumped off as Wily retreated into his craft and electrified the exterior as Paradox Eggman's wrecking ball swung up nearby. Switching to the Wire Adapter, he latched onto the wrecking ball and swung under Paradox Eggman's craft and created two more Item-1 platforms for Sonic before switching to his Mega Buster.

Sonic took the hint and bounded off of the lower platform, Homing Attacked the hover mechanisms for Wily's saucer, and landed on the other. As he did so, Rock shot out the thrust for Paradox Eggman's craft with his Mega Buster as he rode his wire attached to the craft's wrecking ball.

"You fools!" Wily cried. "Now we'll all crash!"

"Nah," Sonic retorted as his upwards Spin Dash clipped the side of Wily's saucer even as Rock swung back up above Paradox Eggman's and began firing on the craft. "After all, we're awesome."

"We'll see about that!" the doctors both yelled and counter-attacked.

Yes. Make ..em pay. Make them a.. pa..

Was his headache clearing up?

Hermes frowned as he did his best to firewall the virus in Dr. Wily and break its hold on the man. It had done its best to wrap around Wily's core identity. If Hephaestus hadn't noticed it, then the virus would have been able to dig in further, eventually making removal impossible without doing irreparable damage to the man's personality.

Not that Wily was a shining example in the first place, but it was the principle of the thing.

Cloud Man exploded from one of Shade's bombs as Dr. Light used his makeshift arm cannon to disable Magma Man. A short ways away Tails in the Tornado's walker mode and E-123 Omega gunned down a few other robot masters.

Rock had managed to land on the Item-3 still attached to Paradox Eggman's craft, but Sonic had taken a hit and began falling.

Without thinking, Rock dove after him and fired a Carry platform – Item-1 was running low – below Sonic and a Coil Adapter atop it. The hedgehog hit the spring and rebounded upwards as Rock formed an Item-2 under himself and rocketed after him.

Taking a moment to latch a few more Item-3s onto the doctor's crafts – just in time for Sonic to land on one after another Homing Attack – Rock then switched to his Mega Buster and began firing.

The doctors both swore and counter-attacked, a shot managing to take out Rock's Item-2 jet as he circled Wily's saucer. Thinking fast, he latched onto it with the Wire Adapter and began placing Balloon Adapters as he swung around at high speed, Sonic following behind him to pinball between the balloon platforms and Wily's personal craft. Damaged, the saucer began losing altitude fast.

As he came back around, Rock disengaged the Wire and let himself be flung towards Paradox Eggman's craft at high speeds, Sonic right behind him. They impacted the flying vehicle with great force, sending it plummeting as well.

"Hate! You! Both!" Paradox Eggman yelled up at them as he and Wily frantically tried to get propulsion back online before they crashed into the ground.

"You do have a plan for us getting down safely, right?" Sonic asked.

"Oh, I've saved the best for last," Rock grinned back.

"Sacre bleu!"

The rest of the freedom fighters, plus Cream and Cheese, looked up at Antoine's exclamation to see the falling crafts of the doctors. With the forms of Sonic and Mega Man in freefall right behind them.

"Damnit Rock!" Roll yelled from nearby as she blasted Bright Man. "How is this being careful?!"

A triumphant cry from the doctors as well as their slowed descent indicated that they'd gotten their crafts back in working order.

"Any time now," Sonic sniped impatiently as the ground got closer.

Rock grinned as he reactivated the Sonic Speed weapon as well as one of his all-time favorites. Heck, it was one of the few weapons he regularly practiced with in his spare time.

Pointing his arm cannon ahead of them, Rock produced a glowing blue platform at just the right angle for the two to run on. As they got closed to the ground, Rock curved it so their downward momentum would become lateral momentum.

"This is awesome!" Sonic cheered as he raced on the glowing energy road his friend was making even as they raced along it.

"I know, right?" Rock yelled back. "Just keep going, I've got everything under control!"

Sonic responded by smirking and revving into a Spin Dash as the platform leveled out and extended in the direction of Paradox Eggman's craft while Rock skidded to a halt.

"Fools!" Paradox Eggman righted himself and swung his wrecking ball towards the underside of the platform. "I've got you right where I want you!"

The wrecking ball impacted the glowing platform just as Sonic reached that section... and didn't even make it shudder.

"Oh–" Paradox Eggman swore as Sonic blasted straight through his craft and sent the double flying.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 6&%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

"I am the last robot master!" Bubble Man declared as the rest of his compatriots finished falling. "That means I am death incarnate! Come and meet your doo–"

Bubble Man was cut off when Paradox Eggman smashed him into the ground and continued rolling into the midst of the gathered warriors. Looking up and realizing he was surrounded by Sonic's allies and without a weapon of his own, the face of Paradox Eggman flipped around to show an electronic countdown.

"Paradox Eggman is–" ZAP

"Yeah, we'll have none of that," Elec Man stated as he used his electrical abilities to short out the robot double's detonator, along with most of its other systems. The inert metal body of the false Eggman collapsed to the ground as he spoke. (6)

E.. ...n.. D. .. .. i... .t... ...!

It was clearing up. His headache was nearly gone, but the ideas that had come with it had served their purpose.

He knew what he had to do.

Hermes swore under his breath. He almost had the virus fully firewalled off from Wily's main personality code, but the damage had been done.

"The virus is just about contained, man," he told his compatriot, "and I've synched up the Loop reset to regenerate the damage to Wily's personality, but the guy's just not changing his mind."

"They can handle him," Hephaestus muttered distractedly as he typed away furiously at his terminal. He had to get the parameters fixed or the Loop wouldn't be able to either reach proper completion or finish setting the Anchors in place.

As Duo used his Justice Energy to help Blaze (or the 'Lady of Righteous Flames' as he called her) recover, the rest of the group surrounded Wily's saucer. Nearby, Orbot and Cubot curled up into their more durable geometric forms.

"It's over Albert," Dr. Light told him. "You've lost. I saw the Genesis Wave Device rendered inoperable by the feedback when Roll restored reality, your army lies defeated, and your partner was slain by your own actions. There is nothing left for you here."

Wily simply began laughing. And laughing. It began to unnerve everyone a bit actually. The only people who laughed like that were those who had completely cracked, or weren't as beaten as they seemed.

And while there was ample evidence for the former, no one was ready to discount the latter.

"And why should I Thomas?" Wily cackled and pointed upwards. "When I've still got this!"

Getting a sinking feeling, all present looked upwards and beheld a fleet of airships stretching to the horizon constructed in the joint Eggman-Wily theme. All were armed to the teeth and headed by what Sonic and his allies recognized as the Egg Carrier as well as what Rock and his family knew to be the Wily Battleship.

'Yep,' Sonic thought to himself, 'that would have been enough to take Prospit and Derse's armies.'

"If you say so Heph," Hermes turned back to his own terminal.

Tails tuned out Wily's rant about how he and Eggman had 'gone easy' on them all and 'let them' get as far as they did. They'd probably just had the fleet too far and spread out to recall quickly or easily. Which would explain all the delaying tactics they'd thrown at everyone along the way here now that he thought about it.

He was getting out the secret weapon Knuckles had asked him to bring along just in case something like this happened. He'd have gotten it out earlier, but he'd been too caught up in the massive melee to heed the echidna's signals and forgotten he'd had it.

"There we go," Knuckles grinned as Tails lowered the Master Emerald out of the Tornado's storage bay. It was a good thing they'd worked on a backup system for the floating island this Loop so this could be done. "Don't worry everyone, I've got this."

And with that, Knuckles used the massive gem's power to transform into the glowing pink Hyper Knuckles and took to the air towards the massive fleet.

"Cease your Evil actions at once Dr. Wily and surrender yourself to Justice," Duo demanded of the doctor. It was only the request of Dr. Light that he stayed his hand from smiting the madman where he stood. "I can feel the power of my ally and your fleet is no match."

The madman laughed at him. "Is that so?"

A different power flared and Duo turned in time to see his empowered ally struck by a massive beam from the floating battlestation. The feeling of empowerment vanished and Duo immediately flew off to prevent his crimson ally from falling to his death.

Wily's laughter followed him mockingly.

So focused was he on the rescue of a Just hero that he missed the flare as Wily's saucer drew power from somewhere to simultaneously repair itself and create a shockwave that threw his gathered allies off their feet.

So focused was he on ensuring that he halted the red beast-man's fall safely that he missed the build-up of power from Wily's saucer directed at him.

But even he could never be so focused that he didn't notice a beam of concentrated Evil Energy pierce his torso.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: $4%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

"If you say so."

"Duo!" Rock shouted in alarm as the charged beam of dark purple energy lanced from Wily's saucer through the alien robot's body.

"Knux!" Sonic yelled as both Duo and the unconscious red body of the echidna in question began to fall.

And then they halted in midair as a tractor beam snagged them.

"Who dares interfere!" Wily demanded to the source of the tractor beam, a carrier-type hovercraft that loosely resembled a certain moth from a series of popular giant monster movies. "How did you get past my fleet?!"

"I dare," proclaimed a blond-brown haired, bearded, and bispectacled scientist who appeared on a holographic projection in front of the craft as the two figures in the tractor beam were carefully lowered to the ground.

"Dr. Cossack!" several members of the Light family cheered.

The named scientist pushed his glasses back up his nose as he regarded Wily. "And you should really install some better firewalls in your airships, comrade."

Indeed, the entire fleet was not only not firing on the craft, several seemed to be listing off course. Even as those below watched, several crashed into their neighbors and went down in flames.

Wily fumed at the sight. "You think you're so smart Cossack! But let's see you deal with this!"

He pressed a button and a flash of teleportation went off in the middle of the gathered heroes. Right over Chaos 0 in fact.

When the light died down, a brand new Devil Core could be seen trying to assimilate itself into the liquid body of Chaos. And succeeding. The burst of Chaos's expansion back into the Chaos Devil threw back all those around it and the beast roared its challenge.

"Heel," Wily commanded his reacquired asset, and the Chaos Devil did exactly that.

"Is that all you have left doctor?" Cossack stared down from his projection.

"No," Wily grinned and pressed a button in his saucer. "Not at all."

More flashes of teleportation lit up the battlefield on Wily's side.

The Light family listed off each one as it appeared.

"Fake Man," Rock pointed out the police robot. "Make that a squad of Fake Men."

"Metool Daddy," Roll said as a giant met smashed into the ground.

"Mecha Dragon," Rock identified the large mechanical dragon next to the giant Guts Man tank. "Guts Dozer."

"CWU-01P," Roll noted a machine in a bubble as a green alien appeared next to it out of thin air in the middle of a bunch of flying square drones. "That damn alien hologram from his second invasion, Picopico-kun drones."

"The four Dark Men," Blues scowled at the four clear dome-headed robots; one green with tank-treads instead of legs and an arm cannon, one gray one that crackled with electromagnetic energy, a purple one with a machine-cannon in place of an arm, and a crimson one that seemed as strong as all of the other three; fortunately with purely robotic processors this time. "Big PETS, CircringQ9," he added the pillar-like robot and the one encased in a ring of metal.

"Tank CSII," Dr. Light frowned at the tripod-wheeled weapon before turning to the tank-treaded torso piloted by a metool and the robot apatosaurus. "Metonger Z, Mechazaurus."

"Mash," Rock stared at what looked like a ball with arm and leg caricatures, and a tiny head as an afterthought next to a robot crab and a steamroller with a mohawk. "Yadocargo, Grinder."

"King," Blues stated flatly as an axe-wielding orange robot in a cape appeared along with a purple tank and a purple flying machine.

"Seriously?" Sonic raised an eyebrow.

"He beat me in single combat last time we met," Blues informed the hedgehog.

"Gotcha," Sonic returned to being serious as more arrivals were noted.

"Bliking," Roll observed a steel-gray flying machine with flat wings that looked like they extended. Next to it was a giant metal turtle and a flying mask with guns. "Gameriser, HannyaNED², and are those Weapons Archive drones?"

"Weapons Archive?" Sally inquired of the cylindrical drones with spikes on top and bottom.

"Each one contains a weapon from one of Dr. Wily's robot masters," Rock began.

"Even ours," Elec Man added.

"And probably yours from when you were roboticized," Rock finished. "There's certainly enough of them."

"Apollo and Luna, leaders of the Constellation Droids," Dr. Light noted two familiar faces. "Damnit Albert..."

"CRORQ," Roll called attention to something that to Sonic and several of his allies looked like the bastard offspring of a supercomputer and one of those Imperial AT-ST Walkers from the Star Wars Loop.

"Yellow Devil, Green Devil, Block Devil," Rock listed each of the Devil series creations forming alongside the Chaos Devil before his voice hitched with the next one. "R-Ra Devil?"

"And Dark Moon," Blues noted the last. "Which means..."

"Ra Thor," Rock gulped as the black robot appeared.

"Terra," Roll's voice trembled, "and the rest of the Stardroids. Even... scrap, that's Sunstar ."

"And who's your alien buddy's evil twin?" Sonic asked of the next arrival.

"His name... is Slur," Duo gasped from behind them as he struggled to his feet, waving off concern as he tried to cover the gaping hole in his torso. "I am damaged... not slain my friends. And yes... that one is the... avatar of Evil... as I am the same for Justice. We... are eternal foes."

'Oh, that's not good,' Sonic thought to himself. The Duo guy was knocking on super form strength normally and now there was an evil version of him to fight?

And finally, an off-color copy of Wily's saucer appeared next to the real thing piloted by an obvious robot double before the two vanished and reappeared back among the main force.

"What," Dr. Cossack observed calmly, "no Gamma?"

Wily muttered something that sounded like 'damn size limitations' before responding. "I do not need Gamma with this army!"

"Excuse me?" Sunstar was suddenly in between the two saucers looking unfriendly. (7) "Why should we lower ourselves to work with such an inferior lifeform as you ?"

"Because we have a common enemy," Wily was looking as if he was trying not to sweat. "We can settle things between ourselves after Mega Man and his allies lie dead by our hands."

Sunstar was silent for a long moment.

"What about you?" Terra turned to Slur. "You with us or him?"

"I am with whoever shall do the most for the cause of Evil," Slur dismissed the Stardroid. "And for now that seems like the 'inferior' lifeform has exceeded you in that regard."

"Very well," Sunstar's agreement cut off any response Terra might have given. "But you are dead once that is finished."

"We shall see," Wily returned confidently.

"As amusing as all this is," Dr. Cossack interjected, "I'm going to have to cut things short."

And with that, Sunstar was coated with a gooey substance and fell as more globs of the stuff along with large explosive rockets rained down on the gathered forces followed by numerous two-legged machines that began attacking and sowing confusion.

"Cockroaches!" Roll sounded relieved, before noting the looks that had gotten. "Okay, so Dr. Cossack needs a better name for them, but they're on our side!"

And arriving with them was an orange robot on an Item-2 jet that was spraying the globs of goo and Auto on another with his home-made bazooka firing rockets like they were going out of style. (8) They adjusted and made for the two saucers, only to have both teleport away. However, when Wily and his robot double reappeared, another robot riding an Item-2 jet attacked.

"Tempo!" Rock cheered the green-armored female robot sometimes known as Quake Woman as her Quake Drill destroyed Wily's robot double and sent the second saucer crashing to the ground. She, Auto, and the orange robot then made for the gathered heroes as Dr. Cossack landed his craft and exited with Eddie. The walking suitcase began dispensing E-Tanks for the robots while the opposing forces were lost in confusion.

"DLN-009 Bond Man reporting for duty!" the orange robot saluted as he stopped in front of Dr. Light. "Hostiles are shaken, not stirred."

"Good to see you up and about Bond Man," Dr. Light smiled. "We're thankful for the help."

"Yeah," Sonic agreed, "But we still need to do something about those Devil things. I think they're coming for us."

Sure enough, the Chaos Devil was advancing on the gathered heroes along with the Yellow and Green Devils.

"Don't worry," Auto thumped his chest with his free hand, "Me and Eddie got this one. Eddie! Super adapter!"

The flip-top suitcase chirped as the Lights blinked in astonishment and proceeded to combine... with the bazooka.

Auto then aimed the weapon at the Chaos Devil and pulled the trigger. "SHOTGUN FESTIVAL!"

A deluge of fireworks erupted from the weapon and proceeded to pound the Chaos Devil so hard and fast that it couldn't reform its body fast enough to protect the core. The shattered remains of the device landed a short ways away after the barrage died down and the water reformed into Chaos 0, who promptly thrust his arms into the ground and caused a pair of water-spikes to pierce the Devil cores of the Yellow and Green Devils, taking them out as well.

"That was awesome!" several of Sonic's friends cheered the goofy green robot as Chaos 0 returned to their ranks and made its way over to Duo.

He was mad. He was furious. Everything had been going so well and then Mikhail had to show up and ruin it all.

"I am... glad to see you well..." Duo struggled to get out. Chaos merely looked back at him before flowing into the robot's wounds. Duo felt a surge of strength fill him as his damage was... patched and his faulty systems bypassed as his fellow guardian joined with him. Even forming a second giant fist over his smaller hand. "I see. Thank you for your aid, my friend. Let us see that Justice is served."

Sonic narrowed his eyes as Chaos joined his body to Duo's, however temporarily. The Cossack guy and Dr. Light were carrying Knux into the craft and off the battlefield, plus their enemies were getting their act back together pretty quickly. "Yeah, screw this. Everyone, if you've got something big in reserve, bring it out."

As if his words had opened the floodgates, his fellows began pulling out all the stops to win one last brawl for all the marbles.

The three Light siblings re-equipped their super adapters while their robotic allies stood ready and recharged. Blaze might still be burned out on her super mode from her previous transformation Burning Blaze, but Sonic could see she'd recovered enough to surround herself in a burning corona of flame as her friend Marine was summoning massive amounts of water to fight with. Tails was transforming the Tornado into the Mecha form he'd designed into after that trip to the Transformers' place. Amy hefted her best hammer, grinning. Cream and Rouge brought out the intelligent devices they'd gotten during their stint in Nanoha's Loop as Omega cocked his many, many guns while thanking Rouge for access to exploding rounds. The Chaotix were whipping out the magic musical instruments that Vector had browbeaten him into forking over as payment before they'd been roboticized. Silver was apparently still cooling down from a previous super mode transformation, but he nonetheless began glowing with psychokinetic energy while Shade was prepping explosives. Even the Freedom Fighters were gearing up with battle suits Rotor had designed for them earlier this Loop. Big simply stood there and Shadow was... nowhere to be seen.

As for himself? He might still be on cooldown for his usual super form like three of his friends were, but he'd collected plenty of other methods of achieving a similar state over the Loops. He'd probably be regretting this later, especially after going werehog earlier as well, but some things were worth feeling like crap over afterwards.

The emotional energy of the World Rings swept over him as his blue spines darkened to purple. Darkspine Sonic lifted his head to glare with blank glowing eyes at the opposing army and he growled out the order that sent everyone charging forward.

"End this."

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: 7^%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

The musical instruments the Chaotix began to play were from those loops where music did things like bend the power of nature. With Espio on guitar, Ray on keys, Mighty on bass, Charmy on drums, and Vector on mike there was an epic storm brewing. (9)

The ground cracked, the sky split, the wind howled, and lightning crashed as the gathered forces of two Loops charged forward.

Darkspine Sonic took the lead with Tails in the Tornado mech, looking to take out the remaining Devil things. Rock and his pals might have tagged a few other things as bigger threats, but the Devil series was a collection of nasty pieces of work any way you cut it.

Too bad there were three of them left.

"Thunder Beam!"

"Time Slow!"

And then there was one less as the Block Devil suffered a bolt of lightning through it's eye for several seconds straight. Darkspine Sonic aimed for Ra Devil as Tails in the Tornado moved to engage Dark Moon.

"AAAAAAAHHHHH!" the purple hedgehog screamed in fury as he body slammed his opponent's single eye.

Duo unioned with Chaos, or Chaos Duo as some of his allies were already thinking of him, went straight for his ancient foe.

"You've seen better days my naive opponent," Slur taunted him.

"And yet my powers of Justice burn brighter than ever," Chaos Duo shot back. "You must know this battle is madness, Slur. Reality itself teeters on the edge of the abyss. None shall benefit if it tips the wrong way."

"Do you think me addled, little Duo?" Slur growled arrogantly. "Of course I know this. My senses are better than even yours in such matters, as they have always been. But what concern is it of mine if reality lives or dies? My place is to see that Evil is done, no matter the consequences. And there is much Evil to do here yet."

"Then we are at an impasse," Duo observed as he clenched both fists, his left beginning to glow the blue of Justice energy.

"Don't pretend to be surprised," Slur retorted as he clenched his own fists in response, his right taking on the dark purple hue of Evil energy. "Beings like us are incapable of change. We are absolutes."

"No," Duo retorted as both glowing fists flew forward to meet in an explosion of energy as the battlefield around them erupted in kind. "I am Justice!"

Amy took a calming breath, bracing herself and winding up with her hammer while waiting for her opponent to make the first move, just like she had learned from all those samurai movies she had watched as part of her self-control training.

Her opponent held his defense, not taking the bait.

"You may be patient, but you'll have to move eventually." she frowned, watching for an opening. Her response came in the form of clicks, beeps, and whistles, followed by a raspberry noise. Amy fought back a twitch. "I'll have you know I'm the very MODEL of patient! YOU'LL snap first!"

And so, Amy and Met Daddy began their standoff, ignoring the increasingly overpowered war surrounding them. (10)

Rock, Roll, and Blues scanned the battlefield as they weaved in and out of assaults and friendly fire alike. Their goal was simple: find and capture Dr. Wily and force him to end this war.

"Bwahahahahaha!" Auto laughed maniacally as he kept the trigger on his super Eddie bazooka depressed, causing it to unleash a steady stream of fireworks at a rate of fire worthy of a gatling gun. (11)

"Target acquired," Omega monotoned as he singled out the stardroid whose design was focused around armaments like his own.

"You dare to challenge Mars of the Stardroids?!" His opponent yelled back. "Then suffer defeat as I unleash the full power of an avatar of WAR!"

"Locked and loaded," Omega replied. "FIRE!"

A hail of glowing bullets that exploded on impact rained down on his opponent as high-yield missiles were launched right back.

"Taste defeat insignificant earth robot!"

"Worthless consumer model."

"You DARE?! "

Amy and Met Daddy continued their waiting game, sweat and coolant beading on their respective foreheads.

"… MOVE already!"

(Whistle click click beep!)

"Oh, REAL mature!"

"GRAAAAHHHHH!" Darkspine Sonic yelled as he pummeled the eye of Ra Devil without mercy. Rapid-fire punches led into rapid-fire kicks that left the mighty behemoth reeling and open for a final energized palm-strike that shattered the Devil Core.

Nearby, he could see Tails grappling with the other one before unleashing a laser from the tornado mech's chest straight through his opponent's own Devil Core.

"For Knuckles!" the two-tailed fox yelled.

Cut Man followed the Freedom Fighters as they wove amongst the chaos, blades flashing and weapons blazing.

Sunstar immolated two more of those annoying things that had been dropped to sow confusion amongst their ranks. The gunk he'd been doused with had been similarly annoying, but no match for his solar fire. So, the pitiful lifeforms wished to play it that way?

He would oblige and show them how such a game was meant to be played.

Sunstar stretched out his senses and felt the auras of the ones who opposed himself and the fool Wily. He felt for their power, but most of all he felt for that aura of a leader. The one whom all others answered to.

How interesting, there were quite a few, including that blue robot he remembered beginning to fight, but not how it ended. But among them one blazed brighter than any other.

How unfortunate for her.

Rock and his two siblings blasted into the center of the growing melee in their search for Dr. Wily. Every other opponent was to be ignored as much as possible and left to their allies to deal with. The faster they brought Wily down, the sooner this ended.

"There!" Blues shouted over the din, pointing his super adapter's sword at the mad scientist's saucer as it fired homing balls of energy in their direction.

The three dodged the attack, allowing it to impact the ground, and cursed as Wily's saucer teleported. The teleporting capsule trick might not be Wily's strongest creation, but it was easily one of the most annoying to fight.

Terra cursed vividly as he finally tore his way free of the gunk he'd been blindsided by. Whoever had done that would suffer .

"Well, if it ain't Terra the bully," a deep voice punctuated heavy approaching footsteps.

Terra turned to see one of the inferior earth robots standing over him, as tall as Uranus. Hmph. As if size alone determined power. He would be a suitable warm-up.

"I don't like bullies," Guts Man pounded his fists together. "That kinda thing ain't manly ."

The Freedom Fighters along with Cut Man had engaged the weaponized supercomputer CRORQ when they noticed someone missing.

"Where's Sally-girl?" Bunnie asked her companions.

Sally admittedly was having trouble standing. The one the others had called Sunstar had singled her out for some reason, and her knees were weak from his presence alone. (12)

"You. Your eyes are filled with fear. Your trembling screams that you have no confidence in your ability to fight me. Your body is soft and your skills are weak. And yet, you still join in the battle." he droned, glaring down at her and almost casually kicking her feet out from under her, knocking her on her back. Sally started backing away, but a boot planted firmly on her stomach easily winded her and held her still. "You struggle, knowing that fleeing is your only chance to survive. But why would you be here in the first place?" he continued, ignoring her pained gasps for breath as she strained to push his foot off of her. Sunstar's glare grew sharper. "I'll tell you why... because for some unfathomable reason, you are the so called 'heart' of the team, aren't you? Just BEING here makes the others forming the body of the team fight harder. I do not know why a coward and weakling such as you was chosen, but I do know one thing."

He reached down, grabbed Sally by the neck, and lifted her to eye level, mere inches from him, ignoring her hands as she tried to pull his fingers away. "Kill the 'heart', and the 'body' swiftly follows. If I kill you, I kill everyone here. Consider yourself lucky. Your power is so far beneath my notice, that you should be mere ashes long before you register any pain."

With that, he wound up, and hurled Sally skyward, then surrounded himself in a fireball bright enough to be mistaken for a second sun, and launched himself upwards into a lethal tackle.

Cream had been unleashing Divine Busters on every target she could lock on to, when one actually managed to no-sell the blast. She stared as the largest of the Stardroids grunted in contempt and glared back.

"Foolish child," the bull-headed robot sneered. "I am Uranus! The toughest of the Stardroids! You think you can take ME?!"

The robot leapt into the air in her direction, causing the young rabbit to scramble out of the way as he crashed into the ground where she'd been, knocking several of his own nearby allies off their feet.

"Have at you!"

Blaze had noticed the robot of flames separate Sally from her group, and had tried to move to help. Certainly her control over fire could help tip the tide against another fire user, but she'd been intercepted by the robot called King.

"You have a regal bearing about you," the robot noted. "But you also move like a warrior. We shall do battle."

"Sorry," she refused, "but my friend needs me."

She tried to rush past him, only to barely dodge out of the way of an axe strike meant to take her head off.

"Your fight is here, with me," King told her sharply. "Forget that at your peril."

"Alright," Blaze hissed as flames ignited around her. "You want a fight, you've got one."

"Marvelous."

"No YOU move!"

(Beep click.)

"No, you!"

(Beep!)

"You!"

(Beep!)

"You!"

Darkspine Sonic twisted out of the way of the large energy blast his new opponent had thrown. He'd waved Tails on ahead to take some of the bigger contenders out while he dealt with the robot Rock had called Ra Thor.

The dude didn't have anything in the way of personality – he might as well have tried taunting a wall – but he had power to spare. This could take a few seconds...

The cockroach robots Dr. Cossack had dropped earlier had thinned considerably, but what remained skittered about the battlefield and harassed all enemy combatants in range.

"Hahahaha! With this storm, Jupiter reigns supreme!" the electrically powered member of the Stardroids declared as the lightning generated by the Chaotix's battle concert crashed around him. "You fools have sealed your do–"

Something latched on to his chest and began beeping.

"Eh?" he inquired intelligently as he looked down to see a digital countdown timer on his torso.

Shade nodded firmly as the explosion of one of her biggest bombs, special from Rotor, bloomed overhead. Now to take out these drones that were swarming her.

"You think you can take me?" the brown Stardroid brandished his ring at the arrogant earth robot. "I, who controls the mighty force of gravity?"

"You gonna just stand there and posture, Saturn?" Elec Man smirked as he was struck by lightning and focused the energy into the space between his hands. "Or are you going to bring it?"

"Tracking Wily's movements now!" Blues called out as he cut through one of the Dark Man in his charge across the battlefield.

"Roger that!" his siblings confirmed as they followed their older brother.

The squad of Fake Men was obliterated as Quake Woman led three of Light's robot masters; Bomb Man, Time Man, and Bond Man; along with Big the Cat straight through it and selected the group's next target.

"Ain't you blokes ever heard of a fair fight?" Marine complained as her hydrokinetic powers were taxed to their limit countering her opponents' weapons.

"No," the yellow sideways-walking Stardroid returned bluntly as he fired off more of his exploding bubbles. "Have you, Neptune?"

"It is a concept invented by lesser beings to excuse their weakness, Venus," his fish-man themed companion grunted condescendingly as he continued to blast a torrent of corrosively saturated water at the raccoon.

"Your designated feminine predecessor imprint was a sub-standard model, and ran Windows Vista." (13)

"I'LL DANCE ON YOUR BROKEN BODY!"

"Unhand me sub-creature!" the furred Stardroid struggled against the telekinetic field that held him. "Pluto demands it!"

"Yeah," Silver sweated as he continued to restrain the frothing robot. This was a lot harder than he was used to. "Not happening."

Amy's shoulders were starting to get stiff.

"Yeah, I know the feeling. Only really able to do one thing, but someone more experienced already does it better. It sucks, doesn't it?"

(Click whistle click beep beep...) Met Daddy sighed sadly.

"We'll, can't let it get you down. Maybe you could get an upgrade? Mine did wonders for me."

(Whistle beep click click?)

"Nope, still not moving."

(Click beep!)

"No YOU move first!"

(Beep!)

"You!"

(BEEP!)

The Loops had a near infinite number of variables, but there were some constants. Some very strange constants to be sure, but constants nonetheless.

Sooner or later, everyone ended up in Eiken at least once. Similarly, everyone had a fused Loop in Hogwarts. If you were normally female, you ended up being a magical girl at some point. No matter your baseline, it would eventually be done In Space. Everyone flipped genders at times. Everyone.

And anything feline in the Loops eventually crossed paths with Ranma Saotome.

Thus it was to King's surprise that Blaze was no slouch at all in unarmed combat. Her personal neko-ken style fire claws had scored his armor and broken his axe.

"You are a worthy opponent," he declared. "In another life, I could respect you. Perhaps we could even have been allies."

He stood upright, and two flashes of light flared behind him, revealing the purple – actually more indigo up close – armored vehicles that had appeared with him at the beginning. Apparently they had been engaged elsewhere on the battlefield, but King had now recalled them.

"But my father has ordered your death," he declared, his armor turning purple as his wounds healed and the machines behind him docked together to make a single mecha.

Blaze quickly went on the attack to take him out before he healed fully and took control of the giant machine, but he teleported himself straight into the cockpit.

"Nothing personal, you understand," the self-styled royal declared as his machine powered up. "But I'm afraid that Jet King Robo is beyond even your power."

Blaze glared up at her opponent and produce an aura of flames in response.

"Not bad!" Guts Man admitted, numerous scorch marks in his armor from where he'd been pelted with his opponent's laser weapon. "But I'm built for heavy duty work. You wanna get through my armor..."

"Fall damn you!" Terra cursed as the robot advanced heedless of the damage he was taking and sunk his fist into Terra's gut. The field leader of the Stardroids' eyes went wide as he was lifted bodily off the ground.

"Yer gonna need more PUNCH!"

"Above!" Blues signaled an instant before Wily's saucer appeared in that very spot. All three fired as they dodged the craft's energy blasts, causing the craft to shudder before vanishing again.

Sally's life was racing before her eyes, even as tears leaked out of them as she flew through the air. She felt no shame in admitting that she felt more fear under the gaze of Sunstar than she ever had before. Robotnik, Ixis Naugus, the Dark Legion, the Iron Queen, all had toyed with her, and she had survived. But Sunstar was going straight for the kill and seemed bored about it! The only time she had ever felt so helpless before was the time Nicole had gone rouge. Even when being turned into Mecha Sally, she had made her peace with the world as it happened. But now, as Sunstar charged at her, cloaked in flames not even Blaze could hope to ever control, almost in slow motion to her eyes, she was going to die.

And then in their shock, so was everyone else.

Frantically viewing her life for SOME sense of closure in all this, she saw certain cherished memories in her mind's eye.

The first time she had met Sonic. Even despite her despair, she couldn't help but giggle softly. 'My hair. What was I thinking back then?'

The time before Robotnik. 'It all seems so long ago...'

Saving her father from the Zone of Silence. 'He was so weak. The crown was still mine to bear, for better or for worse.'

The return of her brother. 'I had nearly forgotten him...'

Her very first loop reset. 'I was so confused... what was it Tails said again?' she pondered, thinking back.

"Aunt Sally..." he had said. "You know already that we live in a multiverse. The Zones are proof enough of that. But what you don't know, is that it's so much bigger than anyone could have guessed without seeing the entire scope for themselves. The loops grant a sort of immortality. When you die, you just reset. But... Aunt Sally, somewhere out there is a universe that's only going to get one shot. If that universe dies, who knows the damage it could do to the system as a whole? We can help them. But it will put us as risk as well. We're going to need everyone for this. You most of all. Because even after all the rest of us have experienced... You're still our leader for a reason. We need you for this. Everyone and everything that ever existed and ever will may ride on us. And we can't do it without you."

'Tails... he's been through things like this before. He's probably died before. And he's still fighting. My god, it only just hit me, he's seen so much... become so wise, and he still believes in me. I owe it to him, to everyone, to fight, not run. But... what can I do?' she wondered.

As if in response, another memory flashed before her eyes. That of a pool of seemingly molten gold filled with stars. And as she recalled it, her eyes changed to match it.

Thus, Sunstar was understandably shocked when the weakling he had been poised to kill lashed out with one hand, snatching his own and halting him dead in the air, completely ignoring his flames.

Rouge was running through her blaster bits pretty fast as the battle progressed. She'd need to stock back up the next chance she got.

Without warning, a barrage of strange energy blasts connected and seemed to pass straight through her. Stunned and startled, she fell to the ground and saw the blasts curving back around and carrying...

" This is what you deem the most important of what you hold?" the lime green figure sneered as his arm turned into an amorphous mass and proceeded to engulf and crush most of the gemstones she'd stolen from Jewel Man during the earlier battle. The same ones that had just been re-stolen by his strange energy blasts. "Worthless crystalline garbage. You have wasted my time, and Mercury does not forgive those who waste his time."

" You... " Rouge saw red. To steal her precious gems and then declare them worthless?! Who did this robot think he was?! "Jeweled Heart!"

Understood.

Rouge forgot all about conserving her ammunition as she fired off all six cartridges in her intelligent device at once.

"STARLIGHT BREAKER!" she yelled as multiple bolts of pink energy erupted from her device and converged on the robot who'd dared to steal from her and then destroy her precious gems.

"Oh–" was all Mercury managed to get out as the blast hit and carved a trench into the ground and through the battlefield behind him.

Tails blinked as the mechanical dragon he was fighting was blown apart by a rogue starlight breaker.

"Huh. That was lucky."

Cream yelled in pain as she was hit with a stone thrown by her opponent and fell to the ground clutching her leg.

"Chao!" Cheese cried worriedly before being backhanded away by Uranus.

"Pathetic," the Stardroid scoffed. "To think this is the best warrior that could be sent aga–

He was interrupted by a blob of black sludge hitting him in the face.

"Hey, man, hands off the little lady!" Oil Man slid along the shifting ground at high speed and body-checked Uranus into a convenient fissure opened by the combination of his own stomping and the Chaotix's magic music.

Fire and Ice slammed into Pluto from both sides, causing the Stardroid to cry out in pain.

Silver took the opening that was provided him and blasted his opponent with a psychic bolt that sent him flying into Mechazaurus.

Nodding respectfully to Fire Man and Ice Man, he proceeded to join them in unleashing a hail of energy on both targets.

"Look, I said I was sorry. Can we just drop it with the insults?"

(Whistle click click. Thwbtt!)

"I'm TRYING to be the bigger person here!"

(Beep click HONK!)

Amy's eyes became shadowed under her brow. "Did you. Just. Call. Me. Fat?" she growled.

(HONK! HONK!)

Right, screw self control, this creep was going down. "Tendo style: ..." she snarled, hefting her hammer and exploding foreword with unnatural speed. "BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA!" she yelled, smashing her hammer against Met Daddy's hat over and over as he huddled.

Wily's saucer reappeared over the battlefield and fired at the trio of adversaries that hounded it, only for the shots to dissipate as they hit Proto Man's shield.

The combination of Proto Man's sword strike and the rocket fists/claws from Mega Man and Mega Woman rocked the craft before it vanished once more.

'Finally! ' Darkspine Sonic growled mentally as Ra Thor went down. He'd needed to dip into his ring reserve to keep the form going after a lucky hit and he was getting closer than he'd like to extending the duration past what it was meant to undergo in the first place.

'Consequences are for later,' he berated himself. 'Take care of the problem now so that there'll actually be a later.'

Blaze panted from exertion as Jet King Robo finally exploded from her pyrokinetic assault and threw a wave to the where the doctors were providing support fire in the moth-like craft.

Shade cursed the existence of the Weapons Archive drones as she dodged a blast of ice from the latest one. It was impossible to tell what weapon they were armed with before they attacked.

"Apollo, Luna," Dr. Light sighed as he targeted the leaders of the Constellation Droids from inside Dr. Cossack's craft, "you deserved better than to be dragged into another of Wily's mad schemes."

Tails had to hand it to the met piloting Metonger Z as he unleashed a barrage of weapons fire from the Tornado. It was pretty skilled for a generic minion.

"You... you would DARE–!"

A solid kick to the jaw shut Sunstar up, knocking him away.

Skidding to a stop in the air, he glared at the lesser being that dared to strike him.

"You would destroy countless out of petty bloodlust and the mother of all superiority complexes!" Sally growled, floating in mid-air as wind started whipping around her into a cyclone, golden motes of light filling her fist and surrounding her brow, seemingly merging with one-another one by one.

"SILENCE! You know nothing! I was created to kill, and so I shall! All inferior to me shall die, and ALL are inferior to me!" he snapped, waving an arm and clenching his fists. "It is my right!"

"NONE have that right! Least of all one who demands that he does! By MY right, as a s-serv...en... as an EXTENT...tion... as... as..." she groaned, holding her head and struggling with herself. "As... WIELDER... of the All... I declare All to have judged you... and found you lacking!" she finally managed to growl as a bead of golden sweat ran down her face. "And as you have been Judged... I now deliver JUDGEMENT!"

Through sheer force of will, the motes of light around her vanished, revealing the Ring of Acorns atop her head, and the Sword of Acorns clenched tightly in her fist. Winding up with the sword, she swung it before her in an overhand chop. "You who would deny others life, thy punishment shall fit the crime!"

And Sunstar felt something inside himself snap.

A bright flash of light and an immense explosion larger than the Wily Egg bloomed high above the battlefield.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: J9%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

"Almost there..." Hephaestus coded furiously. He just about had the parameters fixed.

"So, one of you pieces of trash took down Sunstar?" Terra glowered as he got to his feet. "That's the last mistake you will ever make."

"Kiss my steel-plated fists," the scorched and dented Guts Man returned.

Sally panted heavily for breath, arms trembling as she floated in the air, even as the wind died down, and the sword and ring turned to dust around her, her eyes flickering back to normal every few seconds.

"If... if someone could catch me now... that would... be great." she whispered, right before her eyes rolled back in her head.

And she fell.

Bunnie and Rotor took aim as Antoine covered them before firing at their targets.

Bunnie's charged and focused laser punched straight through Neptune's armor and Rotor's rocket launcher blasted Venus fifty feet across the stone ground before the Stardroid was struck by lightning.

"Thanks mates!" Marine called out as she psychically heaved the weaponized water they'd been assaulting her with over her head towards the firefight between Omega and his own opponent.

"HA!" Mars gloated as one of his missiles blew Omega's arm off. "NOW YOU PERISH!"

"You first," the strongest of the E-series monotoned as a deluge of corrosive liquid engulfed the enemy war machine.

Darkspine Sonic had felt Sally tap into... whatever way up above the battlefield for a short time before it faded out with the explosion, having only hung on long enough to guard her from the blast.

He saw her falling and without a second thought drew deeper upon the power of his current form to fly up and catch her.

He caught her easily enough about halfway down and watched as she stirred from unconsciousness as they began descending again.

"Hey, Sal," he said as tenderly as possible for his current form. "Welcome to the super club."

The three siblings fired on the Wily Saucer from all sides when it reappeared next, causing something in the craft to blow out and start smoking.

"Heh. That all your 'manliness' is worth?" Terra gloated over his damaged opponent. He'd taken a few solid hits, more than he'd care to admit to, but the superiority of his heritage had won out again.

"Nope," the critically damaged, but still not dead, Guts Man shot back. He'd taken the worst this bully could dish out and he was still standing. He could barely move, mind you, but he was still standing. "Sometimes being manly means knowing when to call for backup."

As if someone had been waiting for a cue, a pair of whirling blades arced forth from behind the larger robot and curved towards the Stardroid.

Terra laughed as he shot the blades out of the air. "Your backup is even weaker than you are! Let's see how long they last when not using your worthless corpse as a shield!"

Terra was prepared when more blades came around his opponent and he confidently fired his Spark Chaser at them again. He wasn't prepared for the blade thrower himself to dash between the larger robot's legs and into melee range that same instant. Before he could properly readjust his aim and compensate for how much faster this new opponent was than the larger foe, the orange and white robot had sprung up, blade in hand, straight for his throat.

" No one ," Cut Man glared as Terra collapsed clutching his sparking neck, "hurts my friends."

Darkspine Sonic grunted from atop the smoking ruin of HannyaNED² that he'd used to cushion his and Sal's landing and looked around the battlefield. The ranks of Wily's last ditch army were almost completely gone and it looked like Rock and his siblings were about to bring Wily down too.

He sighed as he finally released the transformation and returned to his usual self before setting Sally on her feet, only to take a blow to the back immediately afterwards.

"The Dark Man shall reign supre–"

CRUNCH

The Chaotix hit the last note of their mystical battle ballade as the Light siblings' shots impacted the Wily Saucer one last time, causing it to spin out of control and come crashing to the ground. The hatch popped open as the craft impacted and Dr. Wily himself spilled out onto the war-torn ground.

Sonic extracted himself from the trench he'd made when the last remaining Dark Man had gotten a cheap shot off. Too bad for the bot he'd been standing right where Tails in the Tornado had landed.

Though considering how Sal glared at the bot's remains, that may have been the preferable option.

"Looks like that's that," Sonic dusted himself off as Tails tossed him a bottle of water from the Tornado's cooler.

"Yep," Tails agreed, taking a swig from his own bottle as everyone converged around the defeated scientist. Everyone except...

"Hey, has anyone seen Amy?" Rotor asked as Bunnie began worrying over Sally. (14)

"–BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA! BAKA!–" Amy raged as she continued to drive the source of her anger into the ground like a tent peg.

Met Daddy sweatdropped, not daring to lift its hat for an instant. Maybe it had gone a little far... It took a moment to inspect its surroundings. The hole it was in must be at least seven feet deep by now. 'Yes,' it decided, 'just a bit too far.'

"Eh," Sonic shrugged, "I'm sure she's okay. Amy's a tough gal." 'And a scary one,' he thought to himself.

As the group approached where the Light siblings had Dr. Wily surrounded, they could see the doctor... begging forgiveness?

"Wow," Silver deadpanned, "such self-respect."

"I'm sorry! I'm sorry! I'm sorry!" the defeated Dr. Wily apologized on his hands and knees in front of the Light siblings and their now-disengaged support units. "Please find it in your heart to forgive an old man his mistakes!"

"Rock," Blues placed a hand on his brother's shoulder, halting him from going forward.

Rock blinked as data was transmitted, and then his eyes hardened and he turned to glare at Dr. Wily.

"Rock?" Roll asked her brother worriedly, only to receive a the same data transmission herself, causing her eyes to harden as well.

Rock strode purposefully up to the man and dragged him upright by his shirt.

"Please Mega Man!" Wily sobbed. "I can change! I can make the world a bet–"

Dr. Wily was cut off when Mega Man backhanded his head off...

"Dude!"

...where it proceeded to bounce up and down on the connected spring. (15)

"What in...?"

"Hahahahaha!" the robot double of Wily laughed as its face flipped around. "Par–"

A psychokinetic aura silenced the fake and flung it high into the air where a barrage of weapons fire obliterated it.

"Okay..." Tails tried to get his heart rate back under control. That has been way too close. "If that's not Dr. Wily, then where is he?"

"Right here, you ignorant fools!" boomed the voice of Wily, coming straight from the Wily Egg that still hovered overhead.

Hephaestus swore as his repair attempts generated another error message. He was so close !

A massive holographic image of Dr. Wily in a command center was projected overhead in such a way that the madly grinning face of the doctor leered down at them all.

"You lot may have destroyed the Genesis Wave device and stopped the further generation of chaos energy," the man declared, "but the Wily Egg has more than enough stored chaos energy to destroy you all many times over!"

Dr. Wily began cackling madly as an object trailing light blue and dark purple energy impacted nearby. Chaos Duo emerged looking as if he'd seen better days, the union of Chaos 0 clearly the only thing allowing the space robot to retain movement, and limped over to the group.

"And that is if you were still at full strength!" Wily laughed as a door behind him slid open and allowed Metal Sonic to enter. "And of course, there's still my newest ally! How go things, Metal Sonic?"

"Everything goes according to plan, doctor," the robot hedgehog intoned.

"Excellent!" the mad doctor proclaimed as Eggman's creation moved to stand behind him and to the side.

"My plan, that is," Metal Sonic suddenly placed his hand atop Dr. Wily's head in an iron grip.

"Wh–urk..." Wily twitched as the robot's claws suddenly extended into his head.

"Cerebral download commencing," Metal Sonic's eyes glowed sinisterly as those below watched in growing horror.

"Come on... come on..." the god of the forge urged the coding displayed on his terminal. " Work already..."

"Did..." Rock choked in disbelief. "Did he just...?"

"I think he did ..." Sonic looked slightly green.

"Cerebral download complete," Metal Sonic declared, retracting his claws and letting Wily's lifeless body collapse to the floor. "I have surpassed all limitations."

Metal Sonic put his hands on the console and both deformed as cables connected the robot betrayer directly to the battlestation.

" I am now the ultimate lifeform," Metal Sonic declared as the integration proceeded. "I have surpassed Eggman. I have surpassed Sonic. I have surpassed Mega Man. I have surpassed Wil–"

Waltz beat her head against the wall again in what would seem to anyone else to be a pointless gesture.

"How dare you beg her for mercy!" she yelled at herself as she continued the self-torture. "You're nothing more than a barely formed idea! Cast aside and forgotten! You're too weak to deserve existence! I'm Waltz! I'm the instrument of torment and death! You're just a pathetic mewling little weakling who should stay in the back of my mind and watch helplessly as I reduce the world to pain and suffering!"

She didn't notice the machinery of the room come alive until it began to assimilate her into the rest.

"So that's how it's going, eh?" she grinned insanely as the machines reached for her mind. "Take it! Take it all! Just make them suffer! Make them all suff–*"

"–skrrrk-k-k-k" Metal Sonic's eyes glitched suddenly and went dark, only to come back online a moment later. Except blue.

"Heh-he-he-he-he!" Metal Sonic began to chuckle in a voice not his own. "HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

The weary and battered heroes watched as the Wily Egg began to twist and change.

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

The hologram had cut out, but the laughter continued as if the Wily Egg itself was the one laughing.

"Done!" Hephaestus declared as he pressed 'enter' on his terminal.

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS: ZX%

DATA CORRUPTION ERROR.

RECALCULATING...

Hephaestus twitched.

"STABILIZE ALREADY DAMN YOU!" he yelled as he slammed his fists into his terminal in frustrated fury, causing the display to waver.

"SUCCESS!" the voice from the Wily Egg boomed as the battlestation began unfolding like a transformer.

"I AM IMMORTAL!" the twisting machinery began to form arms and legs and the skull plate slid up to the general location of the head.

"I AM SUPREME!" The twisting machinery finished the hands and feet as the behemoth smashed the heads of the doctor's statues and straddled the crater as it loomed over them.

"I AM THE GREATEST GENIUS OF ALL TIME!" the voice declared as metal formed on the side of the head in mimicry of a very distinctive hair style.

Hephaestus's terminal had been idle for a few long moments after the display returned to normal before displaying the line he wanted to see.

SCENARIO PARAMETERS STABLE.

CALCULATION COMPLETE.

"TREMBLE BEFORE THE POWER OF–"

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS:

" –METAL WILY! "

0.0001%

---

1) Sonic Speed in case you readers were wondering. Utility-class weapon, Rock's favorite kind.

2) This fight by Jcogginsa. Elec Man may be a hero, but he's still got something of an ego on him.

3) Oil Man is vulnerable to flames. There are over a dozen fire-based master weapons in the classic series. It really sucks to be him sometimes.

4) Just to illustrate how nuts Grenade Man is, here's a fellow bomb-loving pyromaniac with the official statement. Bomb Man loves to blow stuff up. Grenade Man likes to be blown up.

5) Begin reaction command sequence.

6) Elec Man knows how to deal with electronic explosive devices.

7) Sunstar is one of the only foes to ever oust Wily as the final boss in the classic series. He's... not someone you really control.

8) Which assumes anything Auto designs has ever been in style.

9) Insert your favorite epic battle rock ballade here.

10) Amy vs Met Daddy portions by masterofgames.

11) Let's pray Auto and looping Trixie never meet...

12) Sally vs Sunstar also by masterofgames.

13) You can blame or thank masterofgames for this insult, whichever you prefer.

14) This portion is adjusted from/inspired by an interlude in the Amy Tendo vs Metma Saotome battle by masterofgames. He's been a big help with this melee.

15) Who actually thought I'd end the Loop without pulling this classic?

Oh, snap. How will the group get out of this? Stay tuned for the conclusion!

Loop 1 Part 7: Online

Mega Loop 1.0 Part 7: Online.

Last time, on Mega Loop 1.0:

"TREMBLE BEFORE THE POWER OF–"

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS:

" –METAL WILY! "

0.0001%

And now, the conclusion:

..

'No...' Hephaestus stared at his terminal in despair.

"Maybe we could summon Godzilla?" Charmy suggested.

"Which one?" Vector snarked. "The one that comes up to his shin or the one that comes up to his knee?"

"No..." Hephaestus tried to deny the reality in front of him.

"Just a moment more, Thomas," Dr. Cossack told his comrade. "I've almost managed to wrest control of his fleet, so we should have a figh–"

Two beams from the metal behemoth's eyes lanced out across the sky, and a series of explosions were heard in the distance as whatever crafts left aloft in the Egg-Wily fleet were obliterated.

"Well..." Dr. Light trembled as he typed away at his portion of the controls. "Maybe we can hack the Wily Egg directly and shut it do–"

The good scientists both had to jump back as the console shorted and sparked dangerously the moment a connection was made. The craft lurched sharply and would have crashed if not for Silver's telekinesis.

"Oh, Tartarus..." Hermes breathed in shock. "What if we–?"

"Divine intervention's accounted for in the calculations," Hephaestus shook his head.

"Tails?" Sonic asked his long-time sidekick, partner, and friend as the doctors were attempting their own solution. "You still got a good stockpile of rings tucked away? Enough for those alternate kinda-unstable super forms we sometimes use?"

"Yeah, Sonic," Tails ejected himself from the Tornado in preparation.

"Good, we're going in hot," Sonic told his pal as he drew on his own immense stockpile as well. It wasn't a good idea due to the three empowered transformations he'd done already, but they were officially out of options.

At the same time Metal Wily made his shot on the compromised fleet, they made their move. Hyper Tails with his super flicky familiars and Ultra Sonic surrounded by black stars rocketed into the air towards their massive opponent.

The eye-lasers locked on to them next, but Ultra Sonic and Hyper Tails managed to block them with the powers inherent to their forms.

"Let's see how you lik–ng!" Ultra Sonic suddenly stumbled woozily in mid-air. (1)

"Sonic?" Hyper Tails called to his friend worriedly.

"I'm fine, buddy," Ultra Sonic reassured him. "Just a little ligh–"

The distraction had been enough to allow Metal Wily to bring his massive hands to either side of the pair and unleash an energy field so intense that nothing else could be heard over it. When it was released, the metal arms were smoking from shorts and blown fuses, and the once-again ordinary forms of Sonic and Tails were falling limply.

"Then that's... That's game, isn't it?" Hermes observed despondently.

Hephaestus found himself nodding mechanically. Yggdrasil never declared impossibility nor certainty due to the sheer number of variables in any situation, but that was the lowest non-zero odds it was capable of calculating in its current state.

It was as good as a death sentence.

Silver managed to catch Sonic and Tails as well while Metal Wily gloated.

"FINALLY!" he boomed. "I'VE WON! IT TOOK MORE POWER THAN I ANTICIPATED, BUT EVERY FORCE YOU HAVE CAPABLE OF BESTING ME HAS BEEN NULLIFIED!"

Blaze cursed under her breath. She was still recovering from being forcibly knocked out of her own super form earlier. It would be at least a few minutes before she could do it again. Minutes they simply didn't have.

Silver sympathized. He didn't quite understand how he'd pulled off the trick with the Time Stones earlier, but even if he wasn't cooling down from the transformation he could feel the restrictions on their use back in place.

"AND EVEN IF YOU HAVE ANY MORE SURPRISES LEFT IN RESERVE, I CAN DESTROY YOU ALL BEFORE YOU CAN USE THEM!"

"Rock?" Roll asked her brother. "You got any ideas?"

"Yeah," he replied, "but even putting it in active weapon memory, I have no idea how to get Top Spin up to sufficient velocity with our current resources."

"FAREWELL," Metal Wily laughed, "IT HAS BEEN... ENTERTAINING. 5... 4..."

"We need a miracle," the god of the forge stated, "and I'm fresh out."

He turned to look sadly at his terminal, determined to at least see this through to the end, and noticed something...

"Not so fast, 'pops'," a voice cut the tableau.

CALCULATION ERROR: VARIABLE UNACCOUNTED FOR DUE TO JARRED TERMINAL.

Hephaestus stared at the screen before him incredulously. "Are you telling me that you made a mistake because I hit you?!"

AFFIRMATIVE. (2)

RECALCULATING...

"...BASS?" Metal Wily halted his countdown out of confusion as he spotted the black-armored robot, once again unioned with Treble for some reason, standing next to Shadow. "WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE?"

"Wondering why I ever wanted to be your son!" Bass yelled back as he crushed an empty E-Tank in anger. "You say that I'm your greatest creation! Your foremost pride! And then you treat me like garbage! I remember everything!"

"IT'S NOT WHAT YOU THINK!" Metal Wily insisted.

"You brainwashed me!" Bass bellowed back in fury. "And then you threw me aside so you could play giant robot!"

"You're through doctor," Shadow the Hedgehog declared as he produced seven gems from seemingly nowhere.

The Chaos Emeralds.

"SO..." Metal Wily rumbled. "YOU'RE THE ONE WHO TOOK THE EMERALDS..."

"And the one who saved your son from being consumed by your new body," Shadow retorted as the emeralds whirled around both he and Bass.

"..." Metal Wily paused at that fact long enough for the transformation to finalize, revealing the pale gold forms of Super Shadow and Super Bass hovering in mid-air.

"Your doom is at hand doctor," Super Shadow declared confidently.

"I THINK NOT!" Metal Wily shot his potent eye-lasers again at the two.

"CHAOS REFLECTION!" Super Shadow yelled and formed a barrier against the assault. The powerful energy beams struck the barrier and were each deflected right back through the other eye.

"So that's how it is..." Super Bass growled.

"CHAOS BIND!" Super Shadow declared, energy enveloping the self-proclaimed Metal Wily, freezing the mechanical behemoth in place.

"You think you can get away with changing my history?" Super Bass growled as he formed both arms into cannons and began charging up. "My memories? You think you can reprogram my brain?! And then you think you can try to kill me and I'd actually be okay with it?!"

The energy Bass was accumulating began to grow blinding.

"YOU WANT A BLINDLY LOYAL WEAPON?! YOU WANT A SOLDIER WHO NEVER QUESTIONS?! YOU WANT A MINDLESSLY OBEDIENT SON WHO WILL LAY DOWN AND DIE FOR YOU?!"

"Will you shoot him already?" Super Shadow grunted as he strained to hold their foe in place.

VARIABLE ACCOUNTED FOR.

"YOU–"

CALCULATION COMPLETE.

"–CAN KISS–"

CHANCE OF LOOP ACTIVATION SUCCESS:

"–MY–"

99.9999%

" –DOUBLE BASS CANNON! "

The energy Bass had been building up erupted from his busters and blew a hole in the metal behemoth's lower torso so wide as to nearly bisect it.

"BASS... YOU..." Metal Wily gasped in disbelief.

The remaining structure proved unable to support the upper half of Metal Wily and easily buckled under the weight. The upper half of Metal Wily toppled forward right at the gathered heroes as Super Bass's form faded from the energy output it had just produced.

"CHAOS CONTROL!" Super Shadow yelled right before it hit.

The relieved cheers of two grown deities could be easily heard in the outer office.

The entire combined forces of two Loops reappeared many miles away from the mountain and watched as the remains of Metal Wily finished falling into the crater before erupting in a skull-shaped mushroom cloud.

"–BAKA!–?" a confused Amy looked around the spot her hammer had cratered the ground instead of her unusually resiliant opponent.

Shadow smirked as he dispelled his super mode and turned to his fellow anti-social savior. "Shouldn't that have been your 'super' double bass cannon?"

"Bite me, hedgehog," Bass growled.

"Not my type," Shadow grinned as he casually walked back to his allies.

"Dr. Lalinde?" the voice of Dr. Cossack came over the dimensional communicator. "We're ready for a return portal. I'm activating the beacon now."

"Well, I think that's a wrap," Hermes grinned cheerfully as the battle finished. "I'm gonna double-check my firewall on Wily and then I'm headed back to my office. I'd say let's do this again sometime, but I don't think this many heart attacks is good for my health."

"Thank you for your help, brother," Hephaestus told the god of travel.

Hermes blinked for a second, surprised. Sure they were brothers, or at least half-brothers, but Hephaestus didn't particularly like acknowledging anything that connected him to his parents. Thus the gesture... actually meant quite a bit coming from him.

"Anytime," Hermes replied, before deciding to tease the god of the forge a bit. "So long as your credit's good at least."

"Oh, Shadow!" Rouge gushed to the black hedgehog's discomfort as the group exited the portal and entered the lab. "You were so dashing ! Why, it's enough to make a girl... excited ..."

"Would you stop that?" Shadow attempted to put some more distance between them.

"Oh, but Shadow..." Rouge giggled impishly as she followed him. He was so fun to tease...

"Hmm..." Amy mused as she watched the two. "Not bad. I'll give her technique an 8.1."

"Mission successful, mother," Quake Woman declared as she dismissed her armor and returned to her civilian identity as Tempo.

"Excellent work, daughter, I'm proud of you," Dr. Lalinde told the robot girl before turning to the russian scientist in the group. "I got a call from your lab Mikhail. Apparently when the world went back to normal your robot masters reappeared there as if nothing was wrong and your daughter was curious as to where you disappeared to. I'm not entirely sure why I'm unaffected, but I suspect it has to do with my proximity to the open portals we used."

"Thank you, Noel," Dr. Cossack made his way over to the communications terminal. "It would be interesting to study, but I sincerely hope that we never get the chance for repeat observations of this phenomena."

The monitor sprang to life, showing a young blond girl. "Poppa!"

"Hello Kalinka," Dr. Cossack smiled warmly. "Sorry to worry you darling."

"Hey, Sal," Sonic grinned as Rouge managed to gigglingly latch onto Shadow in a deliberate parody of adoration. Bunnie and Antoine had staked out a nearby corner and were passionately kissing in relief that the ordeal was over. "Those four give you any ideas?"

"They tell me you could use a cold shower," the princess smirked.

"Ouch, Sal," Sonic winced as several of his friends laughed. "That's harsh."

Off to the side, Dr. Light was hooking Duo up to a regeneration pod so he could recover after Chaos 0 separated from him.

In the general confusion, Roll noticed Bass and Treble slipping away and followed them.

"And where do you think you're going?" Bass heard the voice of Mega Woman... Roll... behind him as he exited the lab.

"Home," Bass told her. "Or anywhere that isn't here really."

"You could stay," she offered.

"Yeah... Not happening," the black-armored robot dismissed.

"Bass... you saved our lives," Roll told him. "Our worlds. Possibly all of reality."

"So what?" the son of Wily growled and turned on her. "Not like it changes any–mph?!"

Bass had been cut off as Roll closed the distance between them and grabbed him in a kiss.

"..." the anti-hero stared as the girl he'd been crushing on in one set of memories and trying to just plain crush in the other broke the kiss and stepped back. He thought he could hear Treble laughing at him. "Habba?"

"Oh, give me some credit, Bass," Roll put a hand on her hip and glared at him. "You're not exactly a subtle suitor. You've been after me since before the Evil Energy thing but I wasn't really sure if I wanted to give you a shot. But you just saved the universe in general and my family in particular. If that isn't enough to earn you a chance, nothing is."

"What?" Bass tried to reboot his processor.

"I gotta spell it out for you?" Roll smirked in amusement. "You are taking me out on a date. Tomorrow, noon sharp. You will be wearing appropriate civilian attire instead of your battle armor. Preferably something that won't make blind men tear their eyes out either."

Bass continued staring as the daughter of Light sauntered back inside. It took him a few minutes to realize that Rock, out of his Mega Man armor no less, was standing next to the door giving him a level gaze.

"What do you want?"

"Just to remind you of something," the tool-user turned living weapon replied levelly. "I may be a fighting robot, but I was originally made for the express purpose of aiding my father in the lab. Use of tools comes naturally to me. As does the maintenance, repair, assembly, and disassembly of machines."

"So?" Bass challenged.

"So if you break my sister's heart, I will take you apart and spread you out across the spare parts bins all over the city ," Rock replied coldly.

Bass gulped despite himself as his eternal rival stepped back through the door. He'd never seen Rock in scary mode before. He wasn't really sure he ever wanted to again.

"Oh, good, Rock did the traditional brother death threat already," another voice spoke behind him. Bass whirled around, arm cannon ready, only to have it blocked by a familiar white ovular shield with a red border while the shield's owner's finger tapped his forehead mockingly.

He could definitely hear Treble laughing now.

"You should be flattered," Proto Man smirked. "He's been practicing that routine for months in case Roll ever decided to give you a shot."

"And what about you?" Bass glared.

"You mean, what's my threat? How I'd get revenge if you hurt my little sister?" Blues returned smugly. "You assume Roll would leave anything to get revenge on . But let's say she did ..."

Bass watched as Blues's smirk turned downright evil.

"You'd never see me coming." (3)

Bass stood there gaping as Blues strolled back in with the others before turning to a chortling Treble.

"You know you're the only one I let get away with that," Bass rubbed Treble's head affectionately as the two walked away from the lab.

He'd gotten the chance to kick serious ass, he had a date tomorrow with the girl he liked, proof that his fiercest rival wasn't a complete bleeding heart like he'd thought, and absolute total freedom.

All things considered, that was a damn good day.

"Well, guys," Sonic told his hosts as the ring portal to his home Loop opened up, "it's been fun. We should do this again sometime when the universe isn't on the line."

"See you around, Sonic," Rock smiled and held out his fist.

"Until next time, Rock," the hedgehog bumped the robot's fist with his own as his friends and allies began filing through the portal.

"While you're busy, I'm going to pop down and talk to my new loopers," Hephaestus declared. "Don't give me that look. The Loop's stabilizing as we speak and the danger of early termination or crash while I'm down there is negligible at this point. Plus I've got plenty of time before the scheduled Loop end to give them a talk and get back up here."

Sonic and his friends had bid farewell once the doctors and Tails managed to get the Ring portal open to their universe. Cossack, Lalinde, and the other robots had taken their leave shortly afterwards as well and Dr. Light had decided to retire early.

As a result, the three Light siblings were spending a rare moment together outside the lab, recovering from their ordeal when a stranger appeared in front of them. The man was fairly average in appearance with a thick shaggy beard, and his labcoat and face were streaked with soot. His hands bore the signs of dirty machinery work and he favored one leg.

Despite that, he gave off an aura of strength more potent than even Duo's.

"Who are you?" Blues stepped in front of his brother and sister in case the stranger was hostile.

"I am Hephaestus," the man stated. "Volcanic god of the forge, patron of inventors and technology, and the assigned administrator for your Loops."

Sonic stood on a hill overlooking Mobotropolis and thought about his new friends from the other Loop, especially a certain blue robot.

They were so different, and yet so similar.

Two heroes who stood against impossible odds against brilliant madmen who sought to impose their will on whole worlds.

Two beings who simply could not stand idly by while others suffered.

One who was impulsive and one who was calculating.

One of passion, the other of thought.

One of wind and flame, the other of metal and lightning.

One who would always crave a new adventure, one who would always crave an end to adventure.

One who sought attention and one who shied away from it.

One who thrived on conflict and one who simply bore its weight with good grace.

One who could never be at peace and one who would forever seek it.

One of Chaos, one of Order. Each tied to an eternal cycle of war.

Two souls. Two philosophies. Two warriors. Two sides.

One coin.

"Heh," Sonic chuckled to himself as he shook off his musings. "Welcome to the Loops kiddo. Gonna be a wild ride now that you're here."

"So, these 'activation attempts' require 'Anchor candidates' to not die?"

"Yes and no," Hephaestus hedged. "What they require is that they run long enough for the universe to stabilize and the Anchor to be set. Sometimes that is a full baseline run from start to finish, and others it can actually be considerably less. Death of the Anchor candidate prior to being fully set in place as the Anchor is one of the most common reasons attempts fail, but not the only one. And what counts as 'dying' to Yggdrasil depends on the events of the baseline and the inherent rules of the universe in question."

"Glad to know you have this down to a science," Blues retorted, his arms folded.

Hephaestus raised his eyebrows. "Count your blessings that you are robots. There were no less than three times where that fact prevented one of you from reaching a state Yggdrasil would have interpreted as 'dead'. Or did you think a human could have survived those wounds you suffered from King?"

Blues remained silent, but acknowledged the point.

"I would also like to apologize for the troubles you had getting online," Hephaestus told them. "We were expecting difficulties of course, but what happened went above and beyond our predictions. There were a number of times I thought you might not make it despite the precautions I took."

Rock shrugged at the forge god's statement. "Misfortune, treachery, and Dr. Wily can circumvent any safeguards."

Blues and Roll looked at their brother for a moment before nodding in agreement as Hephaestus chuckled.

"How very true," the admin admitted with good humor. "I do believe you will all do well in the Loops, no matter what you face from here on in. It has been a privilege serving as your administrator, and one I hope to keep up for a good long while. Feel free to enjoy your last few hours before your first true Loop ends and stabilizes, and I will most likely see you around. Probably during my next break."

And with that, the Olympian patron of technology vanished from the universe.

Rock looked to his siblings, wondering what to do for the few hours they were together before time reset. "Movie?" he asked. "We could see what's playing at the megaplex."

Roll smiled and looked at Blues hopefully.

Blues stared back at his siblings through his ever-present shades. All too soon, they were going to be thrust full force into these 'Loops' and at times have to fight every inch of the way in order to keep their 'section' stable enough so repairs to the other 'sections' of their 'Loop' could be made. Times like this, where they could just be themselves with no fighting or expectations on them, much less together as a family, were bound to be rare.

"Oh, why not?"

And with that, the three robots strolled into the city, one whistling a favorite tune all the way.

"Well, the virus in Wily's as firewalled as it's getting," Hermes stated as he began shutting down his remote terminal. "I couldn't manage to delete it, but it's not going anywhere either. I also linked the damage restoration of Wily's code to the Loop reset. Even if the virus slips the firewall, it can't do anything permanent to the guy."

"Not as good as I'd like, but better than I'd hoped," Hephaestus admitted.

"Oh, and I'm calling in my marker," Hermes said to Hephaestus as he finished packing up his remote terminal.

The god of the forge blinked. "Already?"

"Yep," the god of travel replied and handed Hephaestus a file. "I'd like you to code up a fused Loop scenario according to these parameters and arrange for it to be Rock's first fused Loop."

Hephaestus took the file and looked over it before asking one question: "Why?"

Hermes sighed. "Because while Sonic has many people he loves like family, many more he considers friends, and still others he treats as friendly rivals, there are precious few beings in the multiverse that he truly respects as equals and your boy Rock is near the top of a very short list. It's something he really needs more of in his life, especially now with his baseline back up."

"He feels the same way towards Sonic," the smith god admitted. "And he really needs more of that himself too, so–"

Hermes held up his hand. "Look, I know how you feel about this stuff. You don't like doing favors when you feel they benefit you as much as who you're helping. Heck, I don't want to be known as the kind of douche who does things in my own interest and acts like the heavens owe me for it either. So, answer me: Would you have done something like this of your own initiative?"

Hephaestus glared back at his co-worker. "...No."

Hermes grinned. "Then it still counts as me calling in my marker."

Hephaestus continued to scowl as his co-worker took his leave, along with his Nymph companions. A few minutes after Hermes left, Hephaestus began to chuckle to himself.

"Sneaky as always. Well played, Hermes. Well played."

He was so caught up in the humor of the situation that he was a bit surprised when Brynhildr plucked the file out of his hand and put on his desk.

"Yes? Was there something you needed?" he asked.

"So forgetful," Brynhildr purred. "But I suppose we can forgive you after all that excitement."

"You see," Herfjötur sauntered up tantalizingly to his other side, "the Loop you needed to get online is active and stable for the time being so you don't have to watch it every moment. Hermes' request will keep for now, which I understand means you owe us a custom armor fitting."

"Indeed," Eir cut in. "We like comfortable, flexible, and sturdy armor of course, but only the most skilled smiths can tailor such things so perfectly they fit like a second skin. And of course, that means many detailed measurements must be taken. So we better get started right away."

If there was anything Hephaestus would ever thank his wife for, it was the ability to not blush or stammer like a mortal teen right then and there.

"Well, then," He replied with a tone of light teasing, "we simply must begin immediately. Ladies, let us away to my workspace." (4)

ACTIVATION SUCCESSFUL.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' STABILIZING.

SECTION 1 LOOP STATUS: ACTIVE

DUAL ANCHOR CONFIGURATION HOLDING STEADY.

ANCHOR 1: ROCK LIGHT

ANCHOR 2: ROLL LIGHT

ANALYZING DATA FOR LOOPER CANDIDATES:

LOOPER CANDIDATE DESIGNATED 'BASS' APPLICABLE FOR LOOPING STATUS.

ASSESSING...

NO SIGNIFICANT STABILITY ISSUES DETECTED.

ACTIVATING LOOPER...

ERROR: LOOPER ACTIVATION FAILED.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' CURRENTLY UNABLE TO SUPPORT CANDIDATE 'BASS' AS LOOPER.

COMPILING LOOP MEMORY DATA FOR LATER ATTEMPT...

BEGINNING NEW LOOP...

ERROR: LOOPER DESIGNATED 'BLUES LIGHT' HAS FAILED TO LOAD CORRECTLY.

Loop 1.1

Rock shook his head. "No response to the signal. Either he's refusing to acknowledge me, or he's not Awake."

Roll frowned. "Didn't that Hephaestus guy say that Blues may have been knocked 'loose' from our Loop? Maybe he is Awake, but just not here."

Rock was thoughtful for a moment. "Could be. I wonder where he ended up if that's the case though..."

Meanwhile, in another part of the multiverse:

"The hell?" Kennex muttered to himself as Rudy revealed the old DRN model he'd been assigned. It... wasn't what he had been expecting.

While the series was clearly stated to be DRN, whatever this was wasn't Dorian. For one, he had a much lighter skin tone. For another, Dorian had never had a pompadour, nor was he particularly in the habit of wearing shades.

He'd been repeating this part of his life several dozen times by now, and it was always Dorian that he ended up partnered with, no matter what was different about how the assignment came about. Dorian was his friend, no mistake, but he'd gotten tired of rekindling it time after time, and had decided to try and see if he couldn't get a different partner. If he didn't throw the MX out of his car, it was still somehow destroyed and Dorian was assigned to him anyway. The time he'd started early enough to avoid having his leg blown off? He just got partnered to Dorian all the sooner. Categorically refuse to return to the department? Sandra got the bright idea to send Dorian to make him come back. Transfer to another city? Dorian got shipped there by a clerical error. Who did they assign to him any time they didn't try an MX first? Dorian. He'd once tried to hide out in an abandoned warehouse off the grid. He'd tripped over Dorian the second day there.

So what was so different about this time?

He tuned out Rudy's explanations regarding the DRN series. He'd heard it more times than he'd ever wanted to by now and could recite it in his sleep. He accepted the rod and touched it to the strange DRN's ear.

The DRN didn't gasp like Dorian. He simply blinked behind his shades and spoke as he sat up.

"Where am I?"

"You're in The City," Rudy told the DRN, "2048. You've been out four years."

The DRN sighed and looked around, his eyes locking directly on Kennex.

"You were expecting someone else," the DRN stated.

Kennex was starting to get a little weirded out, but decided that being honest was probably the best decision. "Yeah, I was."

The DRN nodded. "You the local Anchor for the Time Loops?"

The mention of 'time loops' got his undivided attention. It could only be describing one thing. The other term though... "Anchor? What are you talking about?"

The DRN sighed and facepalmed. "Great. One Loop in, and I have to give someone the 'welcome to the multiverse' speech."

"Okay," Rudy backed away. "I'm just going to go into the next room and one of you let me know when things start making sense again, alright?" With that, he beat a hasty retreat, leaving Kennex alone with the strange android.

"Multiverse?" Kennex tried the word. "As in, other people in other universes are experiencing parts of their lives over and over again? It's not just me?"

"In a nutshell," the DRN agreed. "I'll give you the full version later, but basically all of them have someone serving as an Anchor who holds their reality together. Some start later than others and some have more problems getting started. One of the problems with mine resulted in me being 'untethered' from my Loop of origin, which apparently means I'm going to end up drifting to all sorts of other universes almost as often as I'll be in my home universe. You just got the dubious luck of being the first."

"Well," Kennex offered as he tried to digest all of this, "the guy you're... replacing I guess... is my partner on the police force, Dorian. Which means you're now my partner instead. You got a name?"

The DRN nodded in understanding. "My name's Blues."

---

1) This is his fourth major distinct transformation using a major non-inherent power source in under an hour. You'd get light-headed too.

2) THE VIOLENT IMPATIENT ACTION INDUCED A FAILURE TO CARRY THE ANTI-HERO.

3) Remember, Blues is military hardware.

4) Not telling you what they did while there. It's probably NSFW though.

1.1) Blues is... Puts on Shades Almost Human.

Bonus: Mega Loop 1.0 Omakes!

(If Skaia was working normally Omake by Masterweaver)

"...Huh."

Rock looked over the the blue hedgehog. "What?"

"...Okay, so, this facility here? Usually, when Skaia crops up, it's used to create paradox clones of the selected player to send back in time to become the players." Sonic shrugged. "Confusing enough, but yeah. This time, though... you and Roll are among the selected players and... you don't have a genetic code, so..."

The blue bomber glanced at the consoles and blanched. "...please tell me that doesn't mean what I think it means."

"No, it's pretty clear. Genetically, Light and Wily are brothers." Sonic leaned in. "And apparently the children of Eggman and... Eggman's grandfather? Huh."

"This is disturbing on so many levels."

"Yeah, this only counts for this loop, they'll go back to their normal origins next time."

(Deus ex Jenny Omake by masterofgames)

The newcomer leaned against her impossibly huge gun, smiling at a shocked Rock as she pulled a hairdryer out of her dufflebag to blow away the glowing smoke from the muzzle. "Did somebody call for a deus ex machina?"

Sonic rolled his eyes. "Yes, hello Jenny, thanks a bunch."

-) The character of Jenny Everywhere is available for use by anyone, with only one condition. This paragraph must be included in any publication involving Jenny Everywhere, in order that others may use this property as they wish. All rights reversed.

(Bass vs Mega Man and Sonic aftermath Omake by masterofgames)

Bass managed to slowly drag himself out of the room. With effort, he eventually managed to slowly pass the door frame, and prop himself up against the wall in the hallway. "D-damn those t-two!" he glitched. "I-I-I wasn't out {crackle} y-yet!"

Glaring at the door he had just left through, he cursed both the doctors. "O-one fight, t-to the finish! Is that t-too much to ask for!? No! But again, my {bzzt-crackle} fi-fi-fight is interrupted! He calls me h-his ultimate c-{zap}-creation, so w-why does he n-never show any confidence in m-my skill to get the j-job done?!" he growled. "Well th-that's it! As soon as I get r-repairs, I'm going to {bzzt} sh-show him just how much I need him! I'll rip him a new one so hard that..." he paused. Something was on his shoulder.

Slowly he managed to turn his head. Treble was resting his paw on him, looking sad and worried. He was scorched, covered in dents, walking with a limp, had his muzzle cracked, an ear was missing, and his left optic lens was clearly offline, but he seemed far more concerned about his partner.

Bass couldn't help it. He smiled. "H-hey boy... got out of-{bzzt}-of there m-more or less intact, huh?" he sparked, managing to lift an arm to rub him behind the ears.

Treble licked his face a few times, then turned around and picked up something off the floor, turning back to give it to his master.

"O-one of those rings rolled all-all {pop} the way out h-here, huh?" Bass smirked, perking an eyebrow. A few moments passed. Then, he chuckled. "Ah, f-forget W-Wily... he's not worth the ef-{bzzt}-effort. Tell you w-what boy... You h-help me-me-me {spark} get outside... and once w-we recharge a bit, we'll pl-play a few games of fetch with that thing... okay? Least I can d-do for what you-{br-zap}-you've been through for m-me today."

Treble just grinned and barked, letting Bass slump over his back.

Bass couldn't help but laugh quietly as Treble helped him along... so there WAS one thing he cared about more than being the best.

So sue him.

(Inside the Wily Egg Climax Omake by masterofgames)

"SUPER SONIC MAN!"

The roboticized hero slowly emerged from the cloud of smoke, then stopped to casually brush himself off, as if taunting his foes that they weren't worth his time.

"It's genius really!" Wily cackled. "Convert the roboticizer from a chamber, to a wave, shielding ourselves in it! Anything organic that passes through it now works for us, and anything mechanical explodes! Ivo has outdone himself!"

"Oh come now Albert, you had the idea to have it chaos powered, to be able to work on those pesky super forms! It's brilliant!"

"Oh, but I couldn't have even conceived of such a thing without all your painstaking notes on how those jewels actually work! Your study into the science of chaos is downright inspired!"

"But you were the one who found a way around that 'billionth ring' nonsense that shielded him from my last attempt at something like this! Mecha Sonic would have been a total success if not for that, and your Robot Master blueprints had just the workaround we needed! It's marvelous!"

"Wondrous!"

"Remarkable!"

"Incredible!"

"Breathtaking!"

"Uh, guys?" someone interrupted. All turned at once to face the newcomer.

Or all three of them in this case.

"You do know he has, like, fourteen billion rings by now. Base minimum." Amy grinned, leaning against her hammer casually.

"Plus, we all worked out ways we could take each other out in emergencies LONG ago." Tails smirked, arms folded.

"I have no idea what's going on..." Sally gasped, hands on her knees, not having had any prior loops to get back into shape after the politics of baseline.

Both doctors paused, then as one pulled out calculators. "... factor of fourteen..." "... resonating fields..." "... power multiplied, not just doubled..." "... does the first one count, or was it one use only?" "I don't know! Err on the side of caution!"

A few moments later they both grinned and started laughing again. "Ha HA! STILL not enough!"

"Barely..."

"Hush! They don't need to know that!"

"Sorry."

"(Ahem) With our upgrades, even THAT couldn't keep him his free will!"

"And all that really means, is that HE also knows just how to take YOU out!"

"And even if you DID manage to either beat or revert him, you can't fight us up close thanks to the field, and we can negate any chaos powered abilities you throw at us!"

"Ah, SHADUP!" Amy shouted, using her hammer as a golf club to launch a chunk of debris at them, which the shields deflected, but still snapped the doctors out of it.

"R-right. Albert, gloating later, fighting now!" Paradox Eggman stammered, quickly returning to his controls.

While Mega Man took Super Sonic Man on, Knuckles and Shadow guarded Proto Man, and Roll kept the doctors busy, Sally was understandably a bit startled when Tails and Amy grabbed her, pulling her behind some rubble. "Wha-?"

"Shh! We can't let them overhear us!" Tails hissed. "Even in this racket, Eggman has always been observant."

Amy nodded. "Right. It's going to be our job to come up with a plan. Close combat is out entirely. Anyone who tries is either suddenly working against us, or scrap metal. So we need ranged options."

Sally blinked, taking a moment to process, but this WAS her usual role in baseline, making the plans. "W-well... they said they were chaos shielded..."

Tails shook his head. "No, they said they could negate chaos power. Negate. Not drain. We'll need chaos power just to get through that layer of the shield, to cancel it out."

Amy giggled. "Looks like the Doc's big mouth has betrayed him yet again!"

Sally couldn't help but grin. "Okay, okay, but we still need something strong enough to both get through the conventional shielding, and still take them out once it gets through."

Tails nodded. "We have an option there. Plain old magic."

"Magic?"

Tails clenched a fist. "The blood of Merlin Prower flows through me! I am a firstborn son of the second most powerful line of mages Mobius has ever created! And I will give every drop, of both magic AND blood, to protect those dear to me! I am the chosen one, of the Zone Prime! And I will NOT let my friends down! But... I am NOT the one with the power to take the doctors down. YOU are, Aunt Sally. You're the single most powerful magical force in our universe, maybe any of them. You KNOW what I'm talking about..."

"Th-the Source Of All! T-Tails, how did you discover that!? It's been the single greatest Acorn reign secret since my family first took the throne! A-and besides, I rejected it! I refused to let it rule me!"

"Maybe." Tails shrugged. "But that doesn't mean it rejected you."

"Sally..." Any interrupted. "You're new to all this. Think carefully over everything we've told you about the loops. Some loops, you take the place of someone else. And that means you learn things. Now picture those loops going on, and on, until you lose count, and then lose count of the number of times you lost count, and then lose count of how many times you did that. Over. And over. For what may as well be forever. To know the universe, intimately, from all points in space and time at once! Take a good look at Tails. Right in the eyes. And tell me what you see..."

And so she did.

And then Sally saw him. REALLY saw him. As the way he was, not the way he had been. With a tiny smile and a sigh of resignation, she placed her hand against his cheek. "... When did you grow up when I wasn't looking? My god, it only just hit me how much you must have seen with all this looping business. Your eyes... so old..." she laughed as a she wiped away a tear escaping from her eye. "... and yet, you still call me 'Aunt Sally'..."

Tails just smiled and pulled her into a hug. "You just mean that much to me."

And really, that was all that needed to be said.

A minute later, Sally had finished her first good cry from the loops. "O-okay, I'm... I'm sure this will all hit me a lot harder when this is all over, but... I'll do it."

Tails nodded. "Okay then, we'll need this though." he grinned, taking the Sword Of Acorns from his pocket and handing it to her, taking her hand in his own and curling her fingers around the hilt. "Amy, she's going to need the crown as well."

Amy blushed. "Yeah... the crown..."

"... Amy..."

"Funny story there..."

"AMY!"

Amy paused, then started waving her arms frantically. "W-wait! I have an idea for something even better! Where did I leave it... Aha!" she grinned, pulling her prize free from her pocket.

"... Amy, is that...?"

Amy nodded. "The Ring Of Acorns! I've had it just sitting around, recharging... for a few centuries... almost forgot about it completely." she laughed nervously. "It should work as a circlet, and it HAS to have at least one wish by now."

Tails just facepalmed and groaned. "It'll have to do."

Sally couldn't help it, and broke into giggles. "S-so old... and you still act like kids! No wonder it took me so long to catch on!" she laughed.

"Ooh, just take it! We still have a job to do." Amy pouted, plopping the ring down around Sally's head.

Where it promptly burst into dust and light particles, reforming into a golden circlet, a bright blue jewel inlaid in the center.

"... Well, the wish worked. And... oh wow, Aunt Sally, that's a Super Emerald! That should handle the chaos shield no problem! Now, you aren't used to magic, so I'll guide you, and you just... Aunt Sally?"

But Sally wasn't there. In her place was the start of something more. Her eyes were gone, replaced with twin pools of golden light, infinitely deep, a sparkling golden miasma was slowly emerging from her body, and her hair was starting to blow in a wind that was not there.

Sally herself was seeing what she saw the first time she had immersed herself in the Pool Of All. The crowning of her ancestor, the war to unite the feuding tribes into a single kingdom, the meddling of the echidnas, the formation of the planet, the Ancient Walkers themselves!

And then it all stopped. Her vision slowed to a crawl as it reached the point she had rejected it last time. She could FEEL the All, looking at her, inspecting her, asking her 'are you ready to submit?'. And with a (purely metaphorical) deep breath, she answered.

'NO. No I will NOT submit! I will NOT let you rule me! I am Princess Sally Alicia Acorn, and I demand that YOU submit to ME!'

'Well...' the All responded. '... it's ABOUT TIME!'

And the visions resumed. More than resumed, they came faster. She could see her solar system forming, the galaxy, the universe! She could see the first beat of eternity as Time itself began! She could see the raw, primordial power of creation! She could see it weaving and threading together, forming everything that was, and would be. And she could see the very source of it! At the base of each ribbon of creation, linking them all, was the branch of an enormous tre-...

Sally's Self paused, and turned to look at the being with their hand on her shoulder. It was a being she could not quite comprehend, but she could tell it meant her no harm. She got the feeling it was smiling at her.

'THIS FAR. AND NO FARTHER. YOU ARE NOT READY. WHEN ALL IS WELL, I WOULD BE HONORED TO HAVE YOU JOIN US. BUT NOW, YOU ARE NEEDED ELSEWHERE.' the... being, said. And then, it carefully turned her around, and with a gentle push, returned her to her body.

Hermes leaned back in his chair with a grin, arms folded behind his head.

"Saw you zoning out there for a second. Something up?" Hephaestus asked as he considered a choice between three lines of code.

Hermes shook his head. "It's nothing. I had a free moment while the code was compiling, so I was just checking on an old project I started eons ago."

Hephaestus just shrugged and got back to coding.

"Ah..." Hermes sighed to himself, leaning forward and wiping a tear. "They grow up so fast..."

Sally's body erupted in a pillar of spiraling gold light, the Sword Of Acorns in her grasp transforming, the hilt etching itself with oak leaves, the pommel shifting to the shape of an acorn shell, and the blade growing thinner and longer. No longer was it her family sword. Now, it was Her sword.

The entire battle halted as Super Sally flicked the three-and-a-half tons of rubble the three of them had been hiding behind aside with a casual backhand.

"You Forget Your Place!" her echoing voice thundered as she pointed at the doctors, her other hand shifting Her sword into an underhand grip. "You Meddle Where You Were Never Meant To Tread, And Show Neither Caution, Nor Compassion. Thus The All Does Make This Decree... SUCK IT!" she roared, flinging the blazing sword like a javelin.

(Metal Wily Omake by masterofgames)

"And FURTHERMORE! I, the glorious Doctor Metal Wily, have created THIS!" he boomed, holding up an odd spherical machine in one hand, and a chalkboard in the other.

"..."

"..."

"..."

"... BE IMPRESSED, DAMN IT!"

"It would be easier if you told us what it WAS!" Roll frowned, arms folded in defiance.

"O-oh... right... (ahem). THIS, my woefully ignorant friends, is the result of decades of research! My life's work! Have you ever noticed, pray tell, that no matter what the math says about your odds in pulling something off, they never seem to match with the actual success rate? Well THIS-!" he declared, holding the chalkboard up higher. "is raw, mathematical proof that a higher power, that none here can even begin to comprehend, is able to predetermine the outcome of any event, based on what would be the most dramatic! I call this being 'Fate'."

Sonic shrugged. "So?"

Metal Wily resumed the mechanical laughter, holding up the machine. "Because of THIS you fool! With this machine, I can cut off 'Fate' from the flow of events, and enforce the power of raw, untainted math as the most powerful force in this zone!"

Tails started to pale. "Wait, you mean..."

"That's right! No last minute rescue, no pulling it off despite the odds, no power of suspense, and no drama! Here, a one in a million chance, is genuinely one in a million!" he cackled.

(Crack Omake by LordCirce)

As Hephaestus' workshop was made home to a relieved god and three excited Valkyries, a lone terminal flickered on in his abandoned

Mega Loops 2

"Hey, bro, haven't seen you in a while," Rock greeted his older brother at the meeting spot they'd arranged. If everything went as typical, Dr. Wily would be launching his first invasion about this time next week.

"It's only the third Loop since we beat Metal Wily," Blues observed.

"For you, maybe," Rock informed him. "Roll and I have had a couple dozen by now. Usually it's both of us, but sometimes, like this Loop in fact, it's just one of us Awake. But enough of that, what have you been up to?"

"Well, my first Loop had me as a police robot," Blues told his brother. "I even had to give the 'welcome to the multiverse' speech. Heck, the guy's admin hadn't even bothered to come tell him about the Crash when it happened."

"Ouch," Rock winced. "What about the other one? You said this was your third."

"Superheroes," Blues told his younger brother with a smirk. "Didn't look like any native loopers, and I never identified who was serving as Anchor, but I met an interesting lady. I was a superhero robot called 'Prototype' and she was a half-asian, half-cherokee superhero known as 'The Shifter'. We fought alongside the heroes 'Mr. Fixer', 'Setback', and 'Chrono Ranger' against a storm of supervillains. It was pretty cool."

Roll wasn't entirely sure where the urge to say 'meep, meep' to Dr. Wily's face came from.

She was even less sure of how some business known as ACME Industries became a literal overnight success immediately afterwards.

2.3

Roll hadn't been expecting this when she told her brother she wanted a Loop off from doing the hero thing. Though, in retrospect, perhaps she should have.

"Don't you worry!" the robot wearing her face said cheerfully from outside the high tech cell Dr. Wily was holding her captive in. "I'll take real good care of your brother! Teehee!"

Rock formed his arm into the Mega Buster and pointed it at the head of the robot impersonating his sister. "Who are you, and what have you done with Roll?" he demanded.

Fake-Roll stared for a second before she started giggling . "Cheater," she accused dementedly. "You're all cheaters. Heeheehee!"

"Answer the question," Rock ordered.

Fake-Roll's form wavered as she brought her arm up to point at Rock. "Cheaters should know their plac–"

BLAM

Rock had recognized the robot as her disguise fell. Waltz. The murderously insane future-clone of his sister, and who had been lining up her own shot at him before he pulled the trigger first.

"WHAT IS IT WITH YOU ALL AND SHOOTING ME IN THE FACE?!" came the enraged screech from where Waltz was getting back on her feet.

'Damn,' Rock thought to himself as he opened fire again, trying to put Waltz down as quickly as possible. 'Roll was right. She is looping.'

2.4

If Megatron ever wanted to try and prove that the Loops had a warped sense of humor, this iteration would be Exhibit... J or K. There had been a lot of strange Loops after all.

As it was, he was the head of the Inspecticon Detective Agency in a Loop setting a human might have called the illegitimate offspring of film noir and steampunk. Where he and all other machine lifeforms were of comparable size to humans.

"Well, Mr. Light," he told the figure on the other side of his desk, "it seems you are indeed quite qualified for the position."

Oh, and had he mentioned that he was in the middle of a job interview?

"Thank you," the very human-like robot replied.

"I am concerned with this list of additional skills however," he continued. "They are, shall we say, rather improbably long for someone of your age."

"Let's just say I spend a fair amount of time Awake," the potential hire told him.

Megatron blinked at the inflection. So, the prospective hire was a looper, eh?

"Megatron, sir!" Starscream burst into the office, frantic but respectful.

There was another big, but not unpleasant, difference. The local, and Unawake, version of Starscream still coveted Megatron's position. But the agency's rules and position on the side of the law meant that he did this by making himself the most indispensible member of the agency. Loyal, competent, able, and most of all no backstabbing. Just the occasional hint that Megatron should think about retirement. Even the local Soundwave, elite information hound that he was, had proven less useful in their investigations.

And for Starscream to be this frantic, it could only mean one thing. The one mobster who Megatron's Loop memories told him he'd dedicated his life to putting behind bars, and sworn not to retire until successful. The local mob boss version of his oldest enemy.

"We just got a new case! High profile murder, and it looks like the work of Optimus Crime's gang!"

"Get Shrapnel, Bombshell, and Kickback from forensics together Starscream," he ordered calmly. "Have them ready to leave in five minutes."

Starscream saluted and left the office, allowing him to turn back to the prospective hire. "It looks like you're in luck Mr. Light. I'm prepared to hire you provisionally for the duration of this new case. If your work on it is acceptable then I will hire you to a permanent position. Is this acceptable?"

"Quite," the new hire agreed.

"Then," Megatron stood up and held out his hand, "allow me to welcome you to the Inspecticons Mr. Light."

"Please," the shades-and-scarf-wearing individual replied as he shook Megatron's hand, "call me Blues."

2.5

'...hguoht pu s'gnihtemos taht gnileef taht ekahs t'nac llitS' .flesmih ot thguoht kcoR ',lausu sa emaS'

.yawa detropelet yeht ,taht htiw dnA

"...pleh ruo deen t'nod uoy won ees nac I ...devirra uoy elihw yliW .rD pots ot gniyrt neeb evah eW" .edis sih yb flow tobor eht detacidni lavir erutuf-dna-ecno sih ",elberT s'eh dna ssaB m'I"

.pooL eht htiw pu saw tahw tuo derugif eh litnu dluoc eh sa stneve dna egdelwonk enilesab ot esolc sa kcits ot denimreted ,deksa eh "? uoy era ohW"

.layarteb won-yb-elbativeni-yllaer-tub-neddus sih litnu pu naretev eht tset ot gnikool oreh eikoor eht deyalp ssaB llew woh tsuj gnitseretni tahwemos saw tI .rednirG daM eht fo mrof degamad eht detaefed d'eh ecno 'hctam gnirraps' rieht retfa redluohs sih dehctulc eh sa deralced ssaB fo mrof railimaf eht ",naM ageM ,yas yeht sa doog sa era uoY"

.stniop yek wef a rof evas elbaellam ytterp demees taht tsap stneve ,revewoH .elpmaxe rof nooM aR fo taefed eht ot pu stneve eht sa hcus ,dilos ytterp erew enilemit eht fo strap emoS .tog reve yeht sa esolc sa ro ,enilesab ot gnidrocca enog dah stneve lla ,revewoH

.tnereffid yrev saw gnihtemos niatrec saw eh tub ,ti no regnif sih tup t'ndluoc eH .pooL siht tuoba ffo yllaer saw gnihtemos taht thguoht kcoR

2.6

"But I'm really not Mega Man!" the robot pleaded.

"You can't fool me Mega Man!" Dr. Wily jeered at his captured foe. "Such a pathetic disguise and name change can't fool me! I mean, anagramming it to Game Man?! Really?"

"But that really is my name!" the robot wailed.

"Hey Dr. Wily," a familiar voice called out from behind the scientist. "Who are you kidnapping this time?"

"Why, I'm kidnapping you , Mega Ma–" Dr. Wily stopped, blinked, and turned around.

"Hooray!" the captive robot cheered. "Mega Man is here to save me!"

"Wha–?" Dr. Wily sputtered in shock. "Bu–? Him–? You–?"

Rock grinned as he prepared to rescue the robot that had been mistaken for him. Dr. Wily's expression was so priceless, he almost wished he'd actually planned this himself.

2.7

Rock sweatdropped as he looked upon the... thing being shown to him.

'I am never letting Auto design my armor ever again,' he told himself.

Roll grinned to herself. Her brother was taking the Loop off from heroing like she'd done, and as a result Dr. Wily had begun fielding female versions of many of his robot masters.

And since this was the beginning of his 'seventh' invasion, she'd get the chance to see a female version of Bass.

She was so caught up in anticipation that she almost didn't dodge the shot aimed at her head.

"Aw..." a disturbingly familiar voice rang out. "Why'd you have to go and do that?"

"Who are you?" Roll called out, hoping that it wasn't who she thought it was.

"I'm Waltz!" her female opponent chirped pleasantly as she came into view. "And you're Mega Woman! I was told to test you and help out so I could betray you later, but I thought it'd just be more fun to kill you!"

'Damn it...' Roll swore silently as she engaged her insane counterpart.

2.9

Roll glared at her opponent and initiated her super adaptor with Tango.

"You're going down, nya!" she hissed as she brandished her current form's claws.

'Damnit dad,' she chided mentally at the familiar feline personality drift, 'you said you fixed that...'

"Think we can pull it off?" Roll asked her brother.

"Most likely," Rock replied. "We're both Awake, Blues is here instead of bouncing around the multiverse, and we've spent a lot of time gauging reactions to the kind of concepts we're going to be introducing to others. It should work long enough for what we want to do."

Wood Man stared at what his enemy had given him. It was an engraved invitation to a candlelight vigil to be held in a few years.

"Have you gone mad?" he asked the questionably sane robot.

"Possibly," Rock, aka, Mega Man answered. "But I'm also serious. I have... information regarding how our continued existence; yours, mine, Dr. Wily's, and everyone else's; is owed to the sacrifice of another. I think we should be able to put aside our differences long enough to honor that."

"Let's say I believe you..." Wood Man examined possible escape routes from the clearly insane robot. "Where's the proof? And why so far in the future?"

"Well..." Mega Man started, before displaying a hologram with a list of names. Mostly robots. Many of whom were built by his creator Dr. Wily. And didn't exist yet. "I have a guest list. And if you don't agree to stand down until the specified date, Wily may never build your later brothers."

Wood Man stared at the evidence before him. Wily had talked about a few of the designs mentioned on the list, but there was no way this blue robot could know, so how...?

"I-If you can convince the others..." Wood Man got his vocal processor working again, "I'll be there."

"Of course, Roll," Tempo smiled as she accepted the invitations for herself and her mother. She didn't know why, but she could tell this was very important to the other robot.

"I suppose I'd better get to work," Dr. Light said as he looked over a few names on the guest list he'd yet to finish building. Why his children were so adamant about this was a mystery, but he still couldn't bring himself to deny them.

"Get bent, robot," Xander Payne tore up the invitation and spat on it. "I'm not buying what you're selling."

"No," Ra Moon stated before attacking.

"Why the heck should we–" Needle Man started before being silenced by Shadow Man.

"It is only right to honor the fallen," the alien robot stated solemnly. "No matter if we knew them or not."

Rock let out a relieved breath. After Ra Moon's stubborn, and fatal (to itself) refusal, he was glad that Shadow Man was proving more amicable.

"Can you bring Ra Thor too?"

"We'll do our best," the ninja promised.

"Gya-ha-ha-ha-ha! Why the hell not?!" Doc Robot laughed in agreement as they dueled.

"NEVER!" Waltz yelled with the only moving part of her still operational, her intact limbs hanging limply from her frame. "I DON'T GIVE RESPECT TO NOTHI–MPHRNG!"

Quint looked grateful as Roll covered her insane clone's mouth with duct tape. "For that alone, I'll agree to this."

"Thanks," Rock smiled. "Though if you could bring the others on this list from the future with you, we'd appreciate it."

Quint raised an eyebrow behind his blue shades as he read over the short list of very specific robot master models.

"Please, Poppa?" Kalinka asked her father as she read her copy of the invitation Blues had given not only them, but her father's robot masters as well.

Reverend Dark hadn't extracted his brain to be put into Dark Man this time around. No, he'd only been another of the robot's hologram disguises all along.

"The Church of Robotic Superiority shall honor your request despite your misguided nature."

The restored contenders for the World Robot Tournament and their respective creators looked at each other in puzzlement, hoping that one of them could make sense of this strange invitation.

"I don't see any reason why not..." Centaur Man allowed.

"You are serious?" Sunstar gazed upon the earth robot who had come to him with the bizarre proposal. The earth robot who had disabled all of the Stardroids without killing them.

"Always," Mega Man told the living instrument of destruction.

"Very well," the absolute leader of the Stardroids agreed. "But our conflict shall resume in this place one week afterwards until a proper resolution is reached.

"If that's what it takes."

"And you agreed to this, why?! " Dr. Wily railed at the robot he'd built as his own son. The supreme fighting machine known as Bass.

"I lost a bet," Bass folded his arms defiantly.

"Well, I'm not agreeing to this!" Wily huffed.

"Roll told me you probably wouldn't," Bass smirked, causing his father to scowl at the reminder that he'd lost not to Mega Man, but his unweaponized sister . That girl was mean with a broom. "So, I'm going to make you a bet."

"Like what?" Wily asked irritably, interested despite himself. A set of pictures landed in front of him that caused his eyes to widen. How did anyone know about that unused plan?

"You build these guys and let me fight them instead of Mega Man," Bass grinned eagerly. "If I can beat them without destroying them, then you and them all agree to the deal. If I can't , then I tell the Lights no deal and it's back to business as usual."

"You're going to thr–" Wily started in disbelief.

"I. Don't. Throw. Fights," Bass growled fiercely. "No, this is my chance to prove that I'm the best robot you could ever build. I'm bringing my best game, and I expect you to bring yours."

"Prepare to eat those words!" Wily declared energetically. He'd show his uppity son. CRORQ and the nine robot masters he was to command would be victorious!

"I am uncertain of this," Duo told his friend. "I am glad to help you honor the fallen, but I doubt Slur will be so accommodating."

"Which is why I'm only restoring his voice," Rock replied. "I'm hopeful, not stupid."

"That remains to be seen," Slur shot as the avatar of Evil's vocals came online. "I heard your proposal to my immortal foe, and I wish no part of it. While I relish the continued opportunity to spread Evil, I care nothing for any whose loss has allowed me that chance. Such simpering weakness is not in my nature."

"Had to try," Rock shrugged as he disabled the naturally villainous robot's vocals again. "At least Sword Man and the others were receptive. Even if it Frost Man still doesn't get what's going on."

"I win, pops," Bass grinned.

"So you did," Dr. Wily slumped despondently.

"Dr. Light," the alien robots Apollo and Luna declared regally, "in return for the aid you and your family have rendered, the Constellation Droids would be honored to attend the event your son is hosting."

King stared at the one who'd made this... odd and intriguing offer. "Agreed. Hostilities will cease until one month after the event. The fallen should always be shown proper respect."

"Thank you," Blues bowed formally.

"You know what I'm thinking?" Mayor Leonardo Dorado grinned widely.

"Does it start with 'wow'?" Rock sweatdropped.

"Breaking news everyone!" Plum charged into the offices of the B&C Gazette.

The Emerald Spears, including their leader Xander Payne, had turned on the news to watch the proceedings. Officially it was just to keep tabs on what the robot and his supporters were up to.

At least that's what they'd told themselves.

What had been planned as a simple gathering of humans and robots both friendly and not to the Light family had somehow grown out of control. The gathered individuals in this area alone were impossible to count and the news cameras of every station on the planet were broadcasting the event worldwide.

It was with a supreme sense of nervousness that Rock stepped up to the microphone and began his speech.

"We are gathered here to honor an unknown existence," Rock spoke solemnly to the crowd before him. "We know not who they were. We do not even know what they were. For that is what our continued existence cost them, their identity."

"The ancient Norse believed that creation was a mighty tree that spanned all the dimensions, from below to above, from past to future, and from here to the hereafter. If that is true, if all of creation is a tree beyond any mortal comprehension, then our universe is no more than a mere branch upon its bough. A branch that at some point was in danger of being lost forever, erased from existence itself."

"But there are other branches upon this tree, and among them were those who saw our peril and stepped forth at great risk to make certain that ours did not fall from this great tree into the endless abyss of nothingness beyond. And one of them paid a price so ultimate that it is beyond comprehension."

"However their loss was not in vain, for it is thanks to them that we do still exist. From their tragedy, we have gained another chance to forge a better future for ourselves. A chance to fight for the shining promise of tomorrow, even if we can never agree on what that means. That is what has been given to us, and that is why we honor those whose sacrifice we can never remember."

"If you feel that your life has any worth at all, then please light a candle for our vigil and observe a moment of silence so that our gratitude can be known to all the heavens and beyond."

Everyone in the crowd and all across the world began to light their candles in memory of something whose loss they did not understand, but still somehow knew was of great importance. In one spot, the immobile figure of Waltz, propped up next to her brother and keeper Quint, shed a single tear of genuine sadness even as her mad viral mind railed silently and impotently behind her disabled vocals. The silence stretched for several minutes among the pinpricks of burning flame before Rock realized that the whole world was waiting for him to break the silence.

"If..." he choked on the palpable emotion in the air. "If there remains anything out there of those who were lost, any kind of existence at all, then I hope they can understand our sorrow for what was lost and our gratitude for what we still have."

"I... I hope they can hear me when I say: Thank you."

Scattered across the wide multiverse run by Yggdrasil, various beings of all shapes, sizes, and temperaments paused for no apparent reason.

Some were of significant importance to the chain of events that fueled the Loops in their universes, others were of little consequence at all in the grand scheme of things. Some lived so long before the events of the Loops that they were dead and dust by the time they happened, their names little more than legend if remembered at all. Others were set to exist so far into the future that their many times great-grandparents were yet to be born.

Some were in active Loops, some in yet-to-activate areas, others in stable branches, still others in unstable Read-Only portions, and a few in the dangerous quarantined areas of Yggdrasil.

But all stopped what they were doing at the same metaphysical moment within creation and, for reasons they would never truly grasp, said "You're welcome."

2.1) Sentinels of the Multiverse. And if anyone guessed that 'The Shifter' was the looper with no home Loop Jenny Everywhere, give yourself a cookie.

"The character of Jenny Everywhere is available for use by anyone, with only one condition. This paragraph must be included in any publication involving Jenny Everywhere, in order that others may use this property as they wish. All rights reversed."

2.2) I wonder if Dr. Wily has any coyote heritage...

2.3) Waltz is gonna a recurring problem I think...

2.4) "Larceny is the right of all sentient beings!" (Tagline by EdBecerra)

2.5) 'Online' does not equal 'fixed'.

2.6) Mistaken identity.

2.7) Sound advice.

2.8) Yep, definitely a recurring problem.

2.9) I still make no apologies for catgirl Roll.

2.10) Ideas are very difficult things to kill. They may fade with time or slip out of your mind as quickly as they slipped in, but they always seem to pop up again. Perhaps a bit different due to the passage of time or distance in space, and typically with no clue that they existed previously in any form, but still alive and well.

The Lost Loop, to us, is the Story Never Written. It does not exist and never will, for the writer who would have written it set it aside and moved on to other projects never to return. But the characters and ideas that made it up still exist. The characters from the Story

Never Written were recycled and adapted for other stories, and the ideas reused in a new setting. The Story Never Written still exists in pieces, and those pieces can be found in other stories you are familiar with. You may never know which pieces those are, but they are there nonetheless.

Mega Loops 3

3.1

Rock smiled sadly to himself as he Awoke. The candlelight vigil last Loop had gone better than he could possibly have expected. Somehow; in between arranging to have his friends, allies, and even most of his worst enemies attend; the entire world had gotten involved. And it had been a glorious, if somber, event where many tears were shed over the loss of those that no one could remember.

The whole thing had been almost all anyone could talk about for the following week until the Loop ended. Hostilities between him and his foes hadn't even gotten the chance to resume.

"Rock?" the voice of his father cut into his musings.

"Yes dad?" he answered. He normally tried to keep the paternal references down until the Loop progressed to the point where he would supposedly be more casual about that relationship, but his emotions were still a little raw from the memorial and he wanted that little bit of personal reassurance that certain precious things remained the same even when the lives of those close to him were reset.

"I know you wanted some time to collect your thoughts after that memorial service you conducted," Dr. Light entered the room sporting a somewhat baffled expression, "but I do believe someone has rewound time. I need your help to investigate this phenomena. Dr. Wily probably isn't responsible since he seems to have no memory of anything odd, but I'm not prepared to discount any possibility at this point."

Crash

Both males of the Light family turned to where Roll had dropped a breakfast tray and was staring at her father with tears of happy disbelief in her eyes.

"You..." Dr. Light's daughter and Rock's twin sister trembled with emotion. "You remember?"

"Why yes, I do..." Dr. Light stroked his chin thoughtfully. "And I seem to have this strange recollection of recurring deja vu about some things. This isn't the first time this has happened, is it?"

Both of the Light siblings shook their heads slowly before proceeding to fill their father in on the Loops.

3.2

"All I want to know, David, is why?" Dr. Light asked the man who had cost him his children. The man who had presented a time machine as the only method of defeating the challengers from the future. A time machine set to take all within a certain area forty years into the future with no way back. There was a very good chance he wouldn't live long enough to see his children again this Loop, and even though he would likely see them again the next Loop he Awoke in, it still hurt.

"Because you, Wily, and all the rest of your scientist group were my opponents, doctor," David Xanatos of Xanatos Enterprises replied. "Threats, if you will, to my success. All part of the game. Nothing more, nothing less."

It was true. He'd bought out the businesses run by Cossack and Lalinde handily early in his career and removed them as players in the game. Light and Wily were more difficult. Light had enough business savvy to retain control of his company, Light Labs, and enough inventing genius to keep it on the leading edge of technology. Wily was a madman who desired world domination and was ultimately impossible to reason with.

So he'd inserted himself into the little war between the two, playing both sides against each other while building his power base. He'd caught on to the 'Mr. X' gambit and worked to undermine Wily's assets under the identity and gain control of them. By the time of the World Robot Tournament, he had enough of a controlling interest to arrange an 'accident' for the man in disguise.

With Wily out of the picture, his remaining contingencies were easily dealt with, leaving only Light as the last remaining competitor. The man refused to play in the cutthroat realm of business, instead believing he could save the world from itself. And so Xanatos had set out to show him that such naive beliefs had their price.

He'd bought out the Chronos Institute a while back in preparation for the return of Quint and the wild card Waltz, secure in the knowledge that such beings would never stay away for too long. And in any case, it gave him control over temporal manipulation technology which was a boon any way you sliced it. He'd then presented the plan to Light's heroic 'children' as a way to send the two back to the future in a pre-planned location that he and various allies would have forty years to prepare for, knowing their exact time and place of arrival. He told them up front that there would be no way of returning to this time, knowing full well that they would accept that condition if it meant saving human lives. Heroes were so easy to predict after all.

And now with his children gone, Light's fire and drive had dimmed, and with them his genius. It was only a matter of time before he could buy out Light Labs and cement his position as the supreme technology provider on the planet.

"I sometimes wonder, David, if you even know what game you're playing," Dr. Light returned much more calmly than Xanatos would have predicted.

"I always know what game I'm playing," he clarified, a little annoyed with how familiar Light always was, "and I always play to win."

"And what happens when you play a game that cannot be won?" Dr. Light inquired. "Perhaps a game where one loses merely by playing?"

"Such a game does not exist," David Xanatos stated with utmost confidence and turned to leave. He'd indulged the man long enough and he had business to attend to. "Good day to you, doctor."

"Of course there does," Dr. Light spoke to his back. "It's called War."

Xanatos ignored the man as he took the elevator to his penthouse office. The game had been an invigorating challenge, but he'd come out on top in the end. Really, with his capacity for planning and manipulation, there was no other outcome to be had. And to top it all off, he now had no less than forty years in which to cement his power base before the robotic heroes returned. And when they did, he'd be waiting just as promised with enough resources to cement a position as world hero in addition to everything else he'd accomplished in his life. Though he wasn't quite sure if it would serve his plans best for those heroes to be 'tragically slain' in the crossfire or allowed to 'quietly retire'.

His ultimate goal, known only to himself, was to develop technology to make him immortal, but being known forevermore as the man who saved the world would be a nice consolation prize if that didn't pan out.

He idly accepted a letter from his trusted secretary, secure in the knowledge that she would have made certain it contained nothing dangerous before letting him have it. He paid her very well for the extra duties that kind of security entailed in fact and he'd vetted her loyalty every way he knew how. He smiled to himself as he sat down in his comfortable office chair and opened the letter.

The explosion that destroyed his office was later determined to come from a cleaning drone that had supposedly been checked over five times for such things. Xanatos himself survived, but he was rendered blind and deaf as well as severely burned with numerous broken bones.

When the children of Light and their opponents finally reappeared, the promised reinforcements were not there and they had to save the world on their own as they always did. The Loop would last long enough for them to spend one final day with their elderly father.

As for the Unawake David Xanatos, he was confined to a hospital bed while his company collapsed under the squabbling of his subordinates and their power grabs. For the rest of his life, he lived with a message of two words and a one letter signature burned into his mind. The last thing he'd ever seen.

You lose.

- W.

3.3

Where was he?

/:SYSTEMS DIAGNOSTICS RUNNING...

He felt groggy... this definitely wasn't Light Labs. The sound was wrong... and he felt different.

/:ALL SYSTEMS FUNCTIONING

He blinked, and shook his head to clear his vision. He was being unstrapped from a container, and there's a human in front of him. Neither of them matched Dr Wily or Dr Light's profiles though, even in the many loops he had gone through.

"4th Generation Anti-Shadow Weapon Blues, are you functional?"

Great. Yet again he's a robotic weapon. Or at least designed to be one... Before he can respond though, the memories hit him. He's a robot that has been destroying other Robots to prove his strength. More robotic than others, but still with a human resemblance... so that's why he had his Buster still. No shield though, but that could be figured out later. What was more concerning is that the creators seemed to think of the Anti-Shadow Weapons as... simply weapons, not even caring if they developed personalities.

"He isn't responding." Another voice? Ah, another scientist has entered the room.

"Give him some time, sometimes the systems take longer to come online with Blues's special programming." The other said. "Blues, are you functional?"

No point in delaying anymore he supposed. "Yes. All systems are functional." He kept his voice devoid of emotion. No point in revealing just what was in their precious weapon.

"Good. We have a special task for you today."

He hated the tone that entered that man's voice when he said special.

He stepped into the red arena, images flashing through his head of battles fought here. He as glad to see on the way here that while his body looked like a human teenager, he was dressed in red and grey and still had his usual shades, although the lack of a helmet was unusual. Still, he looked across the arena and saw that a girl with blue hair had entered.

"So, they're running the fifth generation already?"

A memory. Apparently in the past he and the other robot had talked, although at the time she had the barest inklings of a personality. And yet before him Blues could see dread, he could see worry... he could see a true soul in her. Was she a looper? From what he had observed from his memories, Shadow Weapons don't develop personalities quickly, and the time stamp of his awakening, while a rather long time, wouldn't have allowed the barely living machine to look so... Human.

The thought ran from his mind though as he saw another robot enter... and another flood of memories. Of a more human unit, numbered 24. And yet she looked the exact opposite, grey, emotionless eyes and an all too robotic step. "Labrys, you are to fight Blues and 24 here." Another of the scientists. "You are to destroy them."

That got him listening. "Why am I fighting them?" Labrys asked.

"#24 is simply the next in line. After you fight her, you are to take on your predecessor and prove your power."

Ah, so that was why. He matched Labrys's name to his update database and indeed he saw that her name was 5th Generation Anti-Shadow Weapon Labrys. It was almost as bad as that one failed loop with Dr... no. Dr Light might not be the best of creators but he didn't deserve to be associated with THAT. And by the look on Labrys' face, she didn't want to fight #24, let alone him. But #24 wasn't going to give her a chance, raising a gigantic sword... and then collapsing to the ground as one of her legs is shot out. Blue blinked... and then looked down at his own smoking buster. That had been pure instinct there.

"Blues, what are you doing? You were not ordered to attack #24!" The scientists again. Time to give them a shock then.

"You never ordered me not to." He slowly allowed himself to smirk. "Besides, I'm not exactly fond how you're treating my sisters here." That's right, Labrys was a lot like a sister to him. Even as he processed that, he felt something invade his programming... they were trying to take control, he could already see his buster arm being forcibly raised.

"Your personal opinions on this don't matter Blues." The scientist responded. Out of the corner of Blues eye he could see the one legged #24 pulling herself up with the sword... she's not fit for battle, so why are they forcing her to battle? "Labrys, destroy them."

They want them both utterly destroyed. Not damaged, not rendered unable to battle, destroyed. A waste of robotic life for their own tests. Was he going to let them do this to him, to Labrys? Force him to become a pile of scrap and her into a weapon without a soul?

NO

/: ORGIA MODE ONLINE.

/: OVERRIDING CONTROL. USING PROGRAM "LIGHT".

3.4 (Hubris Plus)

Had he been flesh, Rock would have been panting. Instead, he grit his teeth and drew himself up for another round.

"You don't have to do this," he said as he reluctantly raised his Mega-Buster.

This fight was always difficult. Not because of the fight itself so much as because of who he was facing.

"No," his opponent answered. "But I want to."

Facing off against someone he knew should be a friend.

"Wily's just using you!" He implored.

The visor gleaming despite the cavern's darkness.

"You have no idea what it is to be used," came the scathing reply. Motors whirred as drills sprang to life.

This time was harder than the others. This was the first time the armor had shown emerald instead of crimson. The first time his opponent was trailed by long brown hair instead of a yellow scarf.

"Dr. Lalinde–" he tried to begin, but knew it was a mistake almost the second the words were out of his mouth.

" Dr. Lalinde ," Fault Woman roared, "took away everything that made me me and used my body like a puppet !" Her drill smashed into the wall where his head had been an instant before, the upgraded alloys driving through the stone as though it were tissue paper. The room shuddered, dust drifting down from the ceiling.

"You'll bring the whole place down!" He shouted, internally reprimanding himself a moment later for preying on what he knew to be a phobia of Tempo's.

" Good! " She snarled, "I'd rather be dead and buried than alive like that ." She tore her arm free of the wall and turned to stalk towards him. "I remember it, you know," she went on, tone almost becoming conversational. "What it's like to move and think and talk, but not feel . Anger, hate, fear... They aren't good, but they're so much better than nothing."

"I owe Dr. Wily everything for saving me from that. He plugged me back in, made me me ." She lifted an arm to the side as she strode towards him, drill biting into wall almost casually.

"You'll not switch me off again."

3.5 (Masterweaver)

"...Is..." Roll stared. "Is Wily singing ?"

Rock shrugged helplessly. "All the robot masters did. Why not him too?"

"He's actually pretty good," Blues observed.

3.6

Roll sighed as she watched Bass walk off happily. She'd agreed to another date that would never happen after his help against Dr. Wily's latest hair-brained scheme.

She'd been keeping track of how long their Loops lasted, and once again, the date was set for after she was certain the Loop would end. She'd have agreed to an earlier outing except... Except she was waiting for him to start looping first. Otherwise, what was really the point? It wasn't like she had the biological urges humans did or anything...

3.7

Joshua Blevins, more commonly known as Chance Fortune to his friends both in-Loop and out (heck, he tended to refer to himself as the latter in his own head more often than not), was once again at the Burlington Academy for the Superhuman. Regardless, he'd stepped through the teleporter as he always did, had the encounter with the creepy alien-possessed guy he'd have to deal with later in the school year, and was now waiting for his friend and future teammate to come through.

He was idly betting on whether or not the Mars-native super-brain Percy, known to most as Space Cadet, would be Awake when the teleporter activated and someone wholly unfamiliar stepped through.

"You're not Percy," Chance found himself saying before he could stop his mouth.

"No," the boy with the sunglasses, yellow scarf, and pompadour replied evenly. "You holding Anchor here for him?"

"Something like that," Chance replied sheepishly, recognizing the standard looper check for what it was. "Anyway, we should get going. My other friend's going to be arriving soon and he likes to put on a show, even when not Awake. I'm Chance by the way. Chance Fortune."

"Blues Light," the stranger replied.

"Wait," Blues, or Proto Man now that orientation and costume generation had finished, cut into the explanation of the Loop setting and his hosts, "you mean to tell me that you got into a school for training teams of superheroes and you have no powers ?"

"Yep!" Shocker, Chance's second friend who'd arrived being escorted by a police drone from super-juvie, slapped Chance on the back proudly. "Never gets any from other Loops either and he's still the best leader the Outlaws could hope for!"

"Yeah," Chance rubbed his masked head in embarrassment. "I got in originally because my mentor sent in a new application claiming I have unnaturally good luck, and since luck's a pretty fickle power no one can prove I don't have it. Anyway, most Anchors seem to have traits that follow them no matter where they Loop, and mine is apparently my total lack of genuine superpowers."

"Impressive," Blues raised an eyebrow behind his shaded visor. "Though I imagine that comes with plenty of downsides."

"Yeah," Chance admitted. "I can't even generate my own subspace pocket. Space Cadet, the guy you're replacing, had to make me a device that generates it for me. I'm not entirely certain how it works either, just that it does."

"How long have you been looping?" Blues decided to ask. Aside from the member he was replacing, the entire future team of super students was Awake. Psy-Chick, Chance's psychic-powered girlfriend; Shocker, the juvenile delinquent who could shoot electricity from his eyes on his second chance with the law; Gothika, the magically powered witch; Iron Maiden, the battle-hungry amazonesque daughter of Odin and the god-like heroine Steel Valkyrie (who also happened to be the Outlaws' future trainer most Loops, and one of the school's board members, which was also the most prominent superhero team in the world); and the morally rigid yet physically stretchable Private Justice. Next to that, being a human-like super robot prototype was practically normal.

"Not long compared to most," Chance admitted. "It was just me at first, then Space Cadet and Shocker started looping, and then the Crash happened and the rest of the team got shaken out. I know hearing about it was pretty scary. How'd you handle it?"

"I had to watch it happen," Blues replied bluntly. "I'm from the Loop they were trying to get online. Some reality virus contaminated and merged a bunch of local villains and then tried to sacrifice the visiting Anchor and both our universes to attain admin-level power. And I was captured, restrained, and utterly helpless to stop it. It was only divine intervention that eliminated it and preserved my own universe."

The table was completely silent as they all digested that.

"It is a sobering reminder of all that this school tries to prepare us to fight," Psy-Chick replied as she grasped Chance's hand comfortingly. "Most of the threats we face may have less permanent repercussions while the Loops are in place, but the general concept is the same."

Gothika nodded. "Vile forces with no care for the lives of others will forever seek their own selfish ends to the detriment of all around them. We must forever do all in our power to see that they fail."

"Damn straight!" Iron Maiden pounded the reinforced steel table emphatically, denting it.

"Justice must always be served!" Private Justice declared, trying his best to strike a heroic pose. "It shall be our honor and our privilege to have you as a member of our team!"

"Thanks," Blues smiled gratefully. "So what's this place like?"

"As you might have guessed," Chance smiled wryly, "we're a superhero school. Lots of team training and mock missions interspersed with actual threats to the school and/or the world at large. Fall freshman semester we normally face off against The Invincibles, the obligatory team of super-jerks, in the winter competition and usually beat them, often barely due to Superion's broken power set. Then we end up in the Shadow Zone, the extra-dimensional super-villain prison, over winter break. After that, it's anyone's guess what we have to face. Loop usually runs until graduation day unless I die."

Blues chuckled for a bit. "Would any of you believe this is my first time in school?"

The other six at the table blinked, before they began laughing good-naturedly.

"Man," Shocker put his arm around the red and gray armored robot's shoulders companionably, "after this place everywhere else will just seem plain boring!"

3.8

Dr. Light tried frantically to stop his latest creation from devouring all of his equipment. Honestly, he'd just been trying to invent a robot to help take the burden of fighting off of his children during those Loops he was Awake along with them. Using compactor technology seemed like the most logical choice for a robot master meant to counter other robots. But for some reason the programming had a major glitch when it came to recognizing what constituted a valid target.

All in all, it seemed like Garbage Man just wasn't going to work out.

3.9

Dr. Wily cackled to himself as he worked in his makeshift lab down in the ruins. He didn't know where his familiarity with Ra Moon's technology came from, and at the moment he didn't care. All that mattered was that he'd managed to cobble together a way of boosting the alien machine's power exponentially, far beyond what he could have managed if he'd had to learn the way Ra Moon's technology worked from scratch.

With but the push of a button, he would prove himself the greatest power in all the world beyond any shadow of any doubt!

The mad doctor laughed, completely unheeding of the malevolent glow Ra Moon was producing as he activated the device.

And everything in the world, living or otherwise, shut down.

Including him.

3.10

Rock blinked as he Awoke. The last thing he remembered, he'd been at the city rededication where Mayor Leonardo Dorado was to rename it in his and his sister's honor.

And now he seemed to be in a metal structure, a space station if he wasn't misreading the sensations. He was then distracted as his internal diagnostic came back.

"Why am I a gumball machine?" he asked in confusion.

"Because it was what I had handy when I made you," and unfamiliar human, Joel according to his Loop memories, responded.

"Could be worse," the voice of his sister deadpanned and Rock turned to see a vaguely feminine patchwork something-or-other talking to him. His Loop memories told him this was Roll, even though she looked nothing like herself. "You could be a horrid mish-mash."

"Now, now you two," Joel tried to placate the two small robots when the monitor in the room sprang to life.

"Speaking of horrid mish-mashes..." Rock found himself saying as the face of a frizzy-haired scientist that wasn't Dr. Wily filled the view. A quick check of his Loop memories told him this was Dr. Forrester, the one responsible for stranding Joel in space so he had to make himself and his sister for company not to go crazy. Rock's Loop instincts didn't like the guy, and he really couldn't bring himself to disagree with them.

"Hey Dr. Forrester!" Joel greeted cheerfully, happy to talk with anyone, even his tormentor.

"I hope you called to tell us when you're gonna let us down," Roll sniped at the man.

"Oh, I'll be happy to bring you down," the madman grinned. "Just as soon as your minds are bent to my will so you can help me do the same to the rest of the world. Anyway, I hope you're ready for today's movie. It's a real piece of garbage called..."

Rock tuned the man out as he lined up the rant with his Loop memories. The guy apparently thought he could break the will of humanity by forcing them to watch terrible movies, and the only thing standing in his way was the fact that Joel, along with the two of them, managed to enjoy themselves with snarky wit and general tomfoolery.

As far as he was concerned, it was a step up from how he normally had to save the world. This might actually be kind of fun.

3.1) Guess who's Awake. And Dreaming.

3.2) It's worth restating that this isn't looping Xanatos.

3.3) Blues doesn't stand for this kind of thing. Nope.

3.4) Someone other than Blues was fixed by Dr. Wily this time.

3.5) I imagine Dr. Wily has a pretty darn good (or maybe evil?) singing voice actually.

3.6) ...This is rather depressing if you think about it.

3.7) I did this as part of my library challenge (writing a Loop snippet based on a book you read from your local library). The book in question is Chance Fortune and the Outlaws by Shane Berryhill.

3.8) Where's Captain N when you need him?

3.9) wince

3.10) The Megaverse's first Safe Mode Loop.

Mega Loops 4

4.1 (I am writing to tell you all that I am abandoning the Mega Man Loops and shall henceforth be writing about the drama that the Yggdrasil admins get up to instead.)

"You have to hide me!" Coyote heard before a thoroughly distressed and weeping female form tackled him back into his office, somehow managing to land them both in a compromising position. "My husband's after me with those horrid valkyrie hussies of his! It's so terrible! Booohoohooooo!"

'Aphrodite,' the trickster god mused, content to let a beautiful female form, no matter how distasteful the actual personality was underneath the pretenses, cuddle up to him while he mused over the situation. Hermes has put out a 'prank at will' hit on the love goddess recently and while the notion of 'trickster solidarity' was laughable at best, the loose-knit inter-pantheon group knew when another was being serious. And Hermes was very serious about this.

Apparently the goddess had tried a spiteful prank on her husband in the middle of a critical operation where such a distraction could have resulted in an entire branch of Yggdrasil collapsing. Coyote loved a good prank as much as the next trickster god, but even he knew there were lines you just didn't cross. Certainly not without expecting a world of pain in retaliation. A lesson he himself had learned from painful experience.

Plus, her husband Hephaestus was one of the smart gods. The idea of tricksters having rules might have been patently ridiculous, but staying on the good side of someone highly intelligent was always a sound idea. As was staying on the good side of the guy who made the best toys.

"Well, my dear," the old trickster chuckled to himself in a way that would have sent a more sensible being to running as far and fast as they could, "it's quite simple! Your husband and his cohorts are looking for the most beautiful goddess in the heavens, correct?"

"Yes!" Aphrodite beamed at him, utterly clueless as to what he might be planning. "You must save me from the barbaric ravagings they'll inflict on me! I'm too beautiful to suffer such indignities!"

"No worries, madam!" Coyote's grin grew wider. It was almost too easy. "If they are looking for the most beautiful goddess, then all we need do is make you the ugliest goddess! They'll never suspect a thing!"

Coyote cast a plethora of memory-to-photograph spells in rapid succession. The look on Aphrodite's face was going to be this season's best seller by a wide margin.

4.2 (Yeah, right! Now let's get on with some Megaverse April Foolishness!)

Roll grumbled to himself as he faced off against the president of the Percussions. This had been an aggravating Loop for several reasons. For one, he was a male model this Loop instead of a female one, originally built as a harpsichordist. An Unawake Rock, built for proctology, was similarly his sister instead of brother.

For another, all of the robot masters and their weapons and weaknesses had been flipped around without rhyme or reason. For example, Sheep Man had ended up weak to Spring Coil which had been gained from Hard Man during Dr. Wily's π(Pi)th invasion.

The latest crop had consisted of Picket Man, Turbo Man, Hyper Storm H, Centaur Man, Shark Man, and Ra Thor with their weapons being ugly unrelated to the houses looted by their names and appearances.

And then there was their president. The aquamarine and purple armor and the red shaded visor with the green helmet crest jumped an ensemble that slapped Quint. Except the president of the Percussions was female.

'Please don't secretly be Waltz...' Roll prayed as his opponent brought out the bulldozer/slinky hybrid known as Sakugarne to begin the battle.

"Just what do you think you're doing?" the voice of Hephaestus interrupted the admin using his terminal.

"Waiting for you to get back?" Coyote tried hopefully. Maybe if he played innocent, the God of the Forge wouldn't notice the contents of the dis–

"And fiddling with the Loop scenario parameters," the divine smithy crossed his arms challengingly.

'Worth a shot,' Coyote winced at being caught. He'd honestly thought he had more time. "Eh, heh... April Fool's?"

Hephaestus's scowl deepened. "You have thirty seconds to explain why I should not make an example of you."

"You wife came to me pleading for me to hide her from you," Coyote began.

"I care not for her imagined worries or current location," the volcano god snorted in contempt. "I am in too good a mood to let her, or you, ruin it with inane antics."

"Yeah, I figured you weren't actually after her for real. You volcano gods aren't exactly subtle when you're mad," Coyote allowed nervously before remembering that his grace period was dwindling fast. "But I told her I could help, since if you were looking for the 'most beautiful' goddess, then I would hide her as the ugliest goddess!"

Hephaestus continued to stand there impassively, but his lack of aggression despite Coyote's time expiring was promising.

"I have pictures," Coyote grinned, producing a respectable album. One quite professionally bound and designed. "On the house for you and your lovely companions if you can find it in yourself to forget this little incident."

Hephaestus looked interested in the trickster's offer, but he had a duty first. "If you have done no lasting harm, then deal."

"Cross my heart, hope to fry, stick a teatray in my eye," Coyote promised as he handed the album over. "I'll drop some more with your companions on my way out."

4.3 (Masterweaver)

"So what you're saying is, in order to have your weapon, I need to defeat you."

Ice Man rolled his optics. "Yes, you pathetic bundle of circuits! Honestly, why did Lightbright upgrade you ?"

"I'm just trying to clarify here." Rock crossed his arms. "If I do not have your weapon, you have not been defeated."

"That would be a logical conclusion."

"So if I defeated you, I would have your weapon."

"You're very circular in your reasoning, but yes."

"Thus, if I have your weapon, I have defeated you."

Ice Man sighed. "Yes. That's exactly it Rock. That's it."

The blue bomber nodded, shifted his Mega Buster, and froze a portion of the wall solid.

Ice Man gaped in surprise, staring at the wall for so long he almost missed Mega Man walking away. "That... Hey! Wait, where are you going?!"

"I have your weapon, therefore you are defeated," Rock replied, fighting to keep a straight face. "Quod erat demonstrandum, as the Romans say."

"What-No! You're supposed to take my weapon, not just copy it!"

"You really want me to rip you apart to get at your icing mechanism?"

"Yes! Wait, no." Ice Man shook his head. "I'm not defeated! Walk away and I've won!"

"And yet you have demonstrably lost by your own logic." Rock shook his head sadly. "Don't throw a tantrum about it."

4.4 (Terrace)

Rock had found dealing with the various Robot Masters significantly easier over the course of successive Loops. His ability to recall the weapons he'd copied off of them in the baseline, without needing to fight them first, meant that even those who'd been an utter bitch to fight in the baseline, like the upcoming Airman, only required minor amounts of effort now.

What was really annoying were the variant Loops where the Robot Masters changed in some way. Dr. Light noted that many of those incidents might be the result of Wily Dreaming of info and technical schematics that he wouldn't ordinarily come up with for years .

Shaking things up from routine might be mentally healthy to some, but Rock liked predictable opponents. They tended to be less lethal.

His first hint that something had changed came when he started hearing music on his approach to Airman. It was only when the Japanese lyrics started that Rock brought a hand to his face.

"Wily, you asshole ." He was all but screaming to Rock that this batch of Robot Masters was upgraded...

4.5

"So Auto's been making his own robot masters this Loop?" Rock asked his father.

"Indeed he has," Dr. Light replied. "There have been some bugs of course, but the designs are rather interesting."

"Who's he made so far?"

"Let's see," Dr. Light pondered. "Surprise Man, a robot that can change appearance in an instant; Shake Man, a blender themed robot; Giga Auto, a 57-meter tall replica of Auto himself; Massage Man, a robot created to give massages; TV Man, who has a television as his head with a face shown in the screen; Watermelon Man, a watermelon-themed robot; the submarine-themed Submarine Man; and his latest creation who he's only told me is called Sexy Man. He's been showing them to Bass."

All of a sudden Bass stormed in, lipstick marks all over his face (Roll could be heard laughing hysterically in the other room), and stomped up to the father and son duo.

"You. Will. Never. Let. Auto. Build. Another. Robot. Master. EVER. "

REATTEMPTING ACTIVATION OF LOOPER CANDIDATE 'BASS'...

ERROR: ACTIVATION FAILED.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' CURRENTLY UNABLE TO SUPPORT CANDIDATE 'BASS' AS LOOPER.

COMPILING LOOP MEMORY DATA FOR LATER ATTEMPT...

LOOP TITLE:

4.6

AWAKENING:

Hotaru blinked as she Awoke in a strange place. It... looked like one of her father's labs, but fairly different from what she was used to. Shaking her head, she realized she was in some kind of alcove with wires feeding from the wall into various points of her... oh.

Apparently she was a robot.

JOINING THE TEAM:

Hotaru: So we're all robots?

Usagi: Seems like it so far. It's weird. Luna's a robo-cat and has actually been tolerable. It's my 'dad' that's been on my case about my study habits.

Hotaru: Who's your dad?

Usagi: Some Dr. Light fellow. Like that video game from the Hub. Which would be a cool change of pace really. I could have super-awesome lasers to shoot youma with! Pew! Pew!

Hotaru: giggles Well, any problem with me joining the senshi early again? Assuming that's what we are this time?

Usagi: Not at all! Watching Beryl soil herself when she sees the 'senshi of death and rebirth' never gets old!

CUT TO: SCHOOL.

Usagi: Why do I still have to go to school?! I'm a robot!

Hotaru: I'm more worried about why I can't clearly remember anything between you saying I could join the team and ending up here.

Usagi: But Hotaru! It's schooooooolll... Boring, boring, I've-had-these-dang-lessons-for-foorreevveerr school!

Hotaru: And now you're reminding me why I didn't hang out with you more in the baseline.

Usagi: chagrined Sorry.

CUT TO: AFTER SCHOOL.

Usagi: confused I see what you mean about not clearly remembering things between certain points. I just skipped school while still going.

Hotaru: I know, right?

Rei: sighs Another messed-up Loop with the meatball head. How did we even meet this time?

Ami: No clue. I'm more concerned with the fact that we're all robots.

Makoto: I'm not! I wanna see just how strong I am! I bet I can punt a youma through three walls, no senshi powers needed!

Minako: I hope I've got some cool lasers! Pew! Pew!

Usagi: That's what I said!

CUT TO: DOWNTOWN

Usagi: eyes bugged out while looking at a display on her arm Holy cow! Is that my allowance?!

Minako: looking over Usagi's shoulder Holy boiled ravioli! What does your dad make ?!

Ami: confused Weren't we just leaving school...?

Hotaru: Yeah, that seems to be a thing this Loop.

Usagi & Minako: Shopping Spree!

Rei: Someone stop them!

{Sudden explosion heralds the arrival of a new character}

Rei: Not exactly what I meant, but I'll take it.

Jadeite: BWA-HAHAHAHAHA! Tremble in fear, ye mortals! For I am Jadeite of clan Wily!

Makoto: That explains that 'W' crest on his uniform...

Jadeite (ignoring interruptions): General supreme of the Dark Technocracy! Surrender your spiritual energy to power our mighty machines of war now or be crushed under the mechanical might of my youma masters!

{Civilians run screaming}

Makoto: Wait, I just realized. None of us have our transformation pens yet, do we?

Usagi: Doesn't really matter. We can just get them out of our subspace pockets.

Hotaru: Wait a second on that. I think I found something in my data banks.

Jadeite: Go and show these humans why it is foolish to resist! Jeweled Woman Morga!

{A robotic youma appears, what looks like jewels sticking out of her body in various places}

Hotaru /accesses her databanks

Hotaru's databanks /Experimental Public Defense Transformation Protocols 'Silver Millenium' online.

Hotaru /begins transformation subroutine

Hotaru's databanks /Acknowledged. Transformation to Saturn Woman commencing.

COMMERCIAL BREAK

BIRTH OF A HEROINE:

{Hotaru's form is consumed by a flash of light and when it subsides, reveals that she is clad in armor designed in the style of her baseline senshi mode complete with Silence Glaive style polearm}

Hotaru (jumping defiantly in front of the robotic youma): Halt!

Jadeite: Ah, it appears some sport has arrived.

Hotaru: You have no right to terrorize the people of this fair city, nor any claim upon their spiritual energy! Cease your actions and leave, or be punished accordingly! So say I, Saturn Woman!

Jadeite: Jeweled Woman Morga! Destroy the interloper!

Usagi: Quick! Figure out how Hotaru did that or we're going to miss out!

FIGHT SEQUENCE:

While Usagi and the others are figuring out how to trigger their native transformations, Hotaru as Saturn Woman duels the youma master Jeweled Woman Morga. Jeweled Woman Morga unleashes fell energy from the jewels in her body which Hotaru deflects with her polearm. Eventually seeing an opening, Hotaru rushes her opponent and cleaves her in twain. Outraged, Jadeite vanishes from the scene vowing revenge.

CUT TO: SHRINE LABS.

Rei: Shrine Labs? Really? My 'grandfather' is some sort of scientist who studies shinto mystic energies? I'm supposed to be an experimental robot that uses them? How in the world is that supposed to work?

Ami: You really need to check your Loop memories earlier on.

Rei: How? We keep skipping around everywhere and we didn't have enough time at any of them for me to take a few moments!

Usagi: Geez Rei, take a chill pill. The important thing is that we learn how to do what Hotaru did today or we're going to miss out on all the adventure!

Minako: Yeah! And we should also find out where Mamoru, Haruku, Michiru, and Setsuna are hiding. I bet they're just like us this time, even if they aren't Awake.

Makoto: No idea about the first three, but my Loop memories recall a newspaper article on something called the Chronos Institute where they study the possibility of time travel. How much you want to bet Setsuna's holed up there?

4.7 (Hubris Plus)

Rock was never quite certain how to deal with the rare variant Loops where Wily was handled without him having to do anything. On the one hand, it wasn't often that he got a genuine vacation. On the other, those Loops were almost always among the strangest, not to mention the odds of Wily picking up a new trick or a new threat replacing him.

This one, he thought he was going to like. The point of divergence seemed to have been that Blues had never had a faulty power core, which had led to the military putting in an order for robots with full AIs instead of the stripped down versions they usually ended up with. All that had led to a very different news report on the morning following Wily's first attack.

"For those just joining us, last night the newly unveiled Light Laboratory Robot Masters were hijacked by former business associate Dr Albert Wily and used to seize control of vital facilities across the city." The screen showed footage of the six Robot Masters in action as they terrorized the citizenry. "Possessing top of the line capabilities, advanced AI, and impervious to conventional arms, this attack would have been devastating were it not for the speedy and heroic actions of the Sniper Joes.

"Also created by Light Laboratories, Sniper Joe is the code name for America's elite, highly advanced special robotics force. It's purpose: To defend human dignity and freedom against all who would oppose it." A window popped up next to the reporter, displaying various shot of Sniper Joes in action. "While primarily designed as an anti-terrorism unit, Sniper Joes have frequently been deployed in relief efforts across the globe thanks to various environment adaptation equipment." The window switched to Joes operating at the sites of landslides, shipwrecks, and even high altitude storms via jet packs.

"Yes, fighting for freedom wherever there's trouble, over land, and sea, and air, you can rest assured that Sniper Joe will be there." The window switched to much more recent footage of a group of Joes leading Wily out of his base in handcuffs.

"Sniper Joe: A real automaton hero." The various Joes noted the cameras observing them, nodded to each other, and pumped their fists in the air.

"YO JOE!"

4.8

Blues looked around himself as he strolled along what appeared to be the bottom of the sea. Surviving underwater wasn't that big a deal for him, but the surroundings were strange. It looked as if there were dwellings down here, houses, stores, and... was that a pineapple with a front door in the distance?

Shaking his head, he walked up to the sign at the edge of the submerged town and began to read.

Welcome to Bikini Bottom

Underneath it, there was what appeared to be a recent addition.

Also known to Loopers as the Tenth circle of Hell. Leave now while you have the chance. If, for some incredulous reason you decide to stay, avoid the Pink One and the Yellow One. If you have further questions or concerns it is not my problem, go bother someone else.

- Squidward, local Anchor.

Blues blinked as he processed that, and then turned away from the town and began walking. Saving the world was one thing, but he had a very strong feeling that such services weren't needed here.

4.9

As Rock blasted his way into the robot master's lair, he reflected that he wasn't sure what to think about this new set of Wily bots. They weren't variations on familiar opponents like some of the 'new' foes he'd faced before in the Loops. Instead they were completely new designs he'd never seen before. Dr. Wily appearing on a hijacked broadcast to issue his challenge in a sombrero hadn't happened before either.

"¡Damas y caballeros, the challenger!" a voice called out as Rock was blinded by a spotlight in his face. "¡El Bombardero Azul! ¡Defender of humanity and slayer of innocent robots! ¡MEGA MAN!"

Rock halted to let his optics adjust to the glare of the spotlight on him and noted from the gathered audience of cheering robots around a wrestling ring that Dr. Wily's creations were apparently also completely crazy.

"¡And the defending champion!" Rock's masked Guts Man-sized opponent continued the introductions. "¡Dr. Wily's supreme unarmed combat model! ¡The finest luchador ever assembled! ¡NACHO MAN!"

Good circuits, he could smell the cheese from here...

Rock had to admit that the newest female robot master was rather elegant. In addition to the obligatory mexican skin tones and facial structure characteristic of this set of robot masters, she had a lovely and colorful dress that flowed along with the salsa-style dance moves she was named af–

The super fighting robot's eyes widened as the fabric of Salsa Woman's dress sliced through a solid steel pole and he barely managed to duck and slide out of the way of the unexpected weapon. He really needed to stop admiring his opponent and start disabling her.

Rock stared at the robot master across from him. He wore a sombrero over his mustached face and a mexican-style poncho designed to look like a taco shell, the layered tassels appearing to be taco fixings from a distance.

"You must be Taco Man," he stated.

"¿Taco Man...?" the robot master replied dangerously. " ¡¿Taco Man?! "

Rock backed up a little in response to the sudden mad ferocity the previously calm robot master was displaying.

"¡I am Taco Man SUPREME! " he yelled, pulling an arm-mounted shotgun from under his poncho. Rock wasn't sure, but the way the poncho hung, it looked like that might be the robot's only arm. "¡And this is my Boomstick Supreme! "

Rock's eyes widened as he dodged a blast that took a chunk out of the wall the size of his torso. He really should have been expecting something like this after Salsa Woman. Why did so many of Dr. Wily's silliest creations also have to be the most dangerous?

Rock tore down the corridor while doing his best to avoid the flames from the robot master with a pepper for a head.

"¡HAHAHAHA! ¡Run, run as fast as you can! ¡You can't escape from the red hot Chili Man!"

Rock stared as he jumped back from the cloud of corrosive gas. Did the cylindrical Burrito Man just fire that from his...?

Snorting in disgust, he switched to the Red Hot Chili Flame weapon and took aim. Coming from there , the gas had to be flammable.

"Very funny Wily..." Rock muttered as he worked his way through the priest-like, gourd-shaped Pozole Man's area.

A robot master themed on a ritual dish made with a base of maize at the center of a maze. He probably should have seen that one coming.

Rock dodged frantically as the rotund Pan Man's Sugar Death Bombs exploded around him. He'd puzzled over the meaning of the X-shaped design on the robot master's torso for a bit before his dad had told him that sugared bread with a cross pattern was a traditional dessert served on Dia de los Muertos, or the Day of the Dead.

The robot master was certainly doing its best to add him to that list.

"So, you're Guacamole Man?" Rock asked the... giant robotic avocado.

"¡Indeed, I am!" the fruit-based robot master declared proudly. "¡You may have beaten the others, but I shall not fall so easily! ¡GUAC CANNON!"

Rock narrowly avoided the surprise attack and returned fire, only for his shots to splash harmlessly off the robot's thick pliable skin.

"¿How do you like my all-natural defense?" the robot master taunted as he continued to blast green goo at the blue bomber. "I'm practically impervious to your Mega Buster, ¡but my Guac Cannon will have you rendered helpless in short order!"

"Not if I change things up!" Rock declared as he switched weapons and dove for the suddenly panicking Guacamole Man trailing lengths of razor-sharp 'cloth'. "Salsa Slicer!"

Rock checked his weapon energy levels as he waited for Dr. Wily to bring out his latest Wily Machine. Bean Gas was running low, but at least he was able to shoot it from his arm cannon rather than some other part of his body; Salsa Slicer was as well, but that was mostly due to it being so dang useful against many of the robot mooks; Nacho Libre was nearly full, but the wrestling-style maneuver was situational at best; Blessing of Maize was similarly almost untouched; Guac Cannon and Red Hot Chili Flame were both about half full; and he'd only had to use a few shots each of the Sugar Death Bombs and Boomstick Supreme.

"BWAHAHAHAHAHAHA!" Wily laughed as his mechanical war machine descended from the ceiling. "You may have beaten my Mexican Masters and my fortress guardians Mega Man, but even you can't hope to defeat... this! "

Rock fought the urge to facepalm. Dr. Wily's ultimate war machine this time was...

...a giant piñata.

4.10

Rock sighed. "I think it says something that with everything we've tried to reform Dr. Wily, this is the only one that's worked."

"I know what you mean," Roll sympathized. "Sure, he's been a pretty decent guy some Loops, and he usually cares about his creations at least a bit, but he still always ends up the villain and tries to take over the world. It's actually kind of depressing if you think about it."

"Which is precisely why we shouldn't ," Dr. Light declared. "At least not too hard. Let us instead enjoy the affirmation that Albert does possess the capacity to be a hero and have some fun with our chosen roles. Now, what points of the city should we send our forces out to seize this time? Careful planning of our next reign of terror is a must. We don't want anyone actually getting hurt after all."

4.11 (Leonite)

Rock awoke and looked down at himself. All he saw was that instead of his blue, his body seemed to be decorated in greens... he seemed rather short too... and was that? Oh... "You've got to be Mega kidding me."

4.12 (OathToOblivion)

"Rock?"

"Yes, Roll?"

"Why are we playing soccer?"

"...I have no idea. But, hey! It's fun at least, right?"

4.1) April Fool's! Okay, tally time. How many of you actually fell for this?

4.2) Fun with Mad Libs. The uncompleted version is included on as a bonus below.

4.3) Get Equipped with Logic Bomb!

4.4) The music playing is "Airman ga Taosenai" (aka "I Cannot Defeat Airman").

4.5) Dr. Auto's robot masters are from one of the manga. They're... Patently ridiculous is a nice way to put it. Also, Auto's not Awake. He's naturally this crazy. Bass isn't Awake either yet, not that he'd want to remember this...

4.6) The Megaverse gets some visitors. Done in Shadowjack's style.

4.7) Well, they are Government Issue...

4.8) The sign was written for the Misc Loops by AbZHz101

4.9) Mexican night in the Megaverse. Thanks to EdBecerra, BadHabits, and OathToOblivion for the initial ideas.

4.10) It's the most peaceful hostile takeover ever!

4.11) Ah, there he is. Now where did Garbage Man get to?

4.12) "Yes."

BONUS: The uncompleted Mad Lib from 4.2

Roll grumbled to himself as he faced off against the [position of authority] of the [Word ending in a 'shun' sound]s. This had been an aggravating Loop for several reasons. For one, he was a male model this Loop instead of a female one, originally built as a [job]. An Unawake Rock, built for [different job], was similarly his sister instead of brother.

For another, all of the robot masters and their weapons and weaknesses had been flipped around without rhyme or reason. For example, [Robot Master] had ended up weak to [Master Weapon] which had been gained from [second robot master] during Dr. Wily's [number from 1-10]th invasion.

The latest crop had consisted of [third robot master], [fourth robot master], [fifth robot master], [sixth robot master], [seventh robot master], and [eighth robot master] with their weapons being [word ending in 'ly'] unrelated to the [noun]s [verb]ed by their names and appearances.

And then there was their [same position of authority]. The [color] and [second color] armor and the [third color] shaded visor with the [fourth color] helmet crest [verb]ed an ensemble that [verb]ed Quint. Except the [same position of authority] of the [same word ending in a 'shun' sound]s was female.

'Please don't secretly be Waltz...' Roll prayed as his opponent brought out the [construction tool]/[child's toy] hybrid known as Sakugarne to begin the battle.

Mega Loops 5

5.1

Dr. Light was enjoying a quiet lunch with his friend Dr. Mikhail Cossack when it happened. A shockwave shook the city and in moments the events were all over the news.

Dr. Wily's robot masters attacking the city again seemed... less surprising than it should have for some reason. Honestly, he was feeling more exasperated about the whole business than anything else. Maybe he should see a psychiatrist and talk about why he was feeling this instead of, say, terror, panic, sadness, anger, or any of the other emotions he'd have expected in this situation.

Mikhail on the other hand got a look at the eight robots on the news feed and started twitching in a way that suggested immediate violent action if only the offender would deign to step within reach.

Though Dr. Light supposed that he'd be insulted too if his heritage was mocked like that.

Mega Woman had to shake her head at Wily's latest bout of lunacy in the Loops. The Mexican Masters Rock had told her about had sounded bad enough, but these Russian Masters indicated that this was going to become a recurring theme. Of all the times to have a Loop without her brother Awake... Though the Unawake version seemed fine filling in the support role she'd held in the baseline.

Regardless, first up was... Banya Man? Why the heck was he designed to look like a man clad in nothing but a towel around his waist?

Roll blinked as she finally got around to checking her net search results. Huh. Apparently the banya was a traditional Russian steam bath. That was almost clever of Wily. Almost as clever as the next robot master she was about to face, Matryoshka Woman, themed after the Russian nesting dolls Kalinka was so fond of in many Loops.

Opening the door revealed what looked like a giant Russian nesting doll, rather well painted and easily larger than Roll. Having the top half lift up to reveal a more human-shaped female robot inside wielding a missile launcher on her shoulder was a little less expected, but she was able to intercept the shot with her Mega Buster and blow it apart.

The second missile inside the first caught her rather flat-footed though.

Roll sparked as she got back to her feet, having just managed to weather the direct hit of the trick weapon. That packed a lot more punch than Banya Man's weapon had. His steam-based weapon had dissipated rapidly enough to not deal serious harm directly, making the loss of visibility versus his close combat skills the bigger issue.

Matryoshka Woman had retreated inside her thick outer shell, probably to reload, which gave Roll an idea. The armor of the inner-robot was significantly thinner than the outer shell, and if she reflexively closed the shell when damaged like Roll suspected...

Roll grinned and switched to the Scalding Steam weapon.

Roll dodged as her own buster fire was deflected back at her. Trepak Man might look like he was plucked straight from Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker and his primary weapon might be that Russian dance where you sat and kicked, but he was rather effectively kicking her steel-plated behind. For one, those kicks were perfectly timed to her rate of buster fire, and for another his boots were energy reflective, with the end result being that he was kicking her shots right back at her.

She needed something that could either fire faster than he could kick, or keep going even after being hit...

Roll slapped herself mentally and readied the Nesting Missile. 'Duh Roll! Obvious choice is obvious!'

Roll stared as she fell through the gaping hole Tsar Man's Tsar Bomba had blown in the floor. He hadn't come close to hitting her with that thing and he'd still done significant damage to her.

The golden robe design with inlaid jewels and a Russian-style crown suggested a riches themed weapon, and so the very high yield explosive had caught her off guard. And it looked like he was readying another one.

"TSAR BOMBA!" the robot yelled as he lobbed the explosive at her.

'Oh, heck no,' Roll thought as she called up the Russian Dance and proceeded to mark the weapon 'return to sender'.

Roll was twitching as she approached the door leading to Bear Man. This whole area was like one giant bad joke. To start with, every robot had red as a dominant color. Then there were the TVs that were always facing in her direction. And don't get her started on the Riding Joes and their bears. It wasn't the Joes riding the bears, it was the bears riding the Joes.

The door opened and she saw her opponent. A large bear robot standing on his hind legs and wearing Russian-style formal wear. Red, of course.

"I'm Bear Man!" he bellowed at her, like she hadn't already known that, and leveled an arm cannon in her direction. "And you're pretty much borscht! "

Roll dodged the high-speed mass of liquid on reflex alone because her mind had reached pun saturation and demanded an immediate holiday. She absently looked at the dented wall and noted beets and other vegetables among the splash.

'Did... did he really just try to shoot me with actual borscht?' she thought in a daze as she ducked another blast and caught some of the splash to sample. Her nutritional analysis systems were still in good working order, and Roll made a face as the verdict came back. 'Ugh! It's not even good borscht!'

"Under Soviet Wily, borscht eats you!" Bear Man guffawed and Roll felt something snap in her mind.

"That's it ." she declared as she switched to the weapon most appropriate for her current destructive urges. "TSAR BOMBA!"

The look on Bear Man's face right before he was hit almost made up for the bad jokes.

Roll was torn as she fought Maslenitsa Man. As a robot master themed for a celebration period where people feasted on fattening foods, he was an offense to her drive to keep her father eating healthy meals. On the other hand, his appearance was that of a stack of pancakes with arms and legs and topped with butter (that also served as his primary weapon) mirrored one of Dr. Light's favorite breakfast foods most Loops and one of the few indulgences she was actually happy to help her father partake in.

And not just any pancakes. To anyone else he might appear that way, but she knew that particular shade of golden brown. Wily had even gotten the precise light fluffy texture just right.

These were her pancakes. Her own special recipe that she'd made herself.

She honestly didn't know whether to be flattered or outraged.

She'd figured out his weakness almost immediately, but she was having to talk herself into using it. The soft material could lessen most damage, but the porousness made it very absorbent as well, which would weaken it. The Borscht weapon would be ideal.

She just... ruining good food with bad went against all her instincts as a housekeeper!

Roll knew perfectly well what an Ushanka was. Kalinka liked to wear the fuzzy hats with the flaps in the baseline and she'd introduced Roll to them. They were soft, warm, comfy, and pretty good at taking a blunt impact. Plus they looked good on her.

Ushanka Man was... He was a spherical head with arms and legs covered with the biggest Ushanka she'd ever seen in person. And the giant hat was doing a good job of protecting him from her attacks. Partly because he seemed to like spinning around like Top Man.

Hmm... That hat protected everything but his legs and despite the icy conditions in this area, Ushanka Man wasn't facing her on a slippery arena.

She decided to try the Butter Buster and fired in the robot master's path, and grinned as he slipped rather spectacularly to fall flat on his face.

Roll wasn't a fan of Comrade Man even before she stepped into his lair. He was obviously running a soldier theme and his underlings, particularly the Comrade Joes, had been very difficult to deal with.

As she took in the WWII-style Russian army uniform appearance and the very obvious flamethrower, she realized that it wasn't going to get any easier.

It was process of elimination that caused her to use the Fuzzy Barrier when he tried to torch her. She'd apparently lucked into a path that allowed her to take advantage of each robot's weakness, and it was the only weapon she'd not used against a Russian master yet.

Surprisingly, the fur-lined barrier held under the assault. It might have caught fire (she couldn't see through it), but it was thick and insulated enough that she was protected. Grinning in triumph, she decided to rush Comrade Man and run him over with the shield. Maybe if she was lucky it had caught fire and the flames would ignite the soldier-themed robot master's weapon fuel.

Wily's latest ultimate machine had given Roll a run for her money. He'd called it 'The Rasputin' and the thing lived up to the name. Six phases so far and each one vulnerable to a different weapon. And the thing was still going.

"Ha-ha-ha-ha-ha!" Wily cackled as the seventh phase, a gangly wood-based puppet-like contraption, emerged from the ruins of the sixth. "Getting tired are we?"

"You wish," Roll retorted as she switched to the Flamethrower and torched the machine's current wood body. The personal forcefield that had been protecting Wily and his controls the whole time flared to life as the rest of the contraption burned to ash. "Give up yet?"

"Never!" Wily cried as the central portion of The Rasputin; Wily's chair, controls, and forcefield; continued to float unharmed. "You may have beaten the rest of my machine's layers, but my forcefield is completely impenetrable to any weapon!"

"Yeah, right," Roll rolled her eyes and dodged an energy blast from a pretty haphazard looking blaster mounted to the chair's underside. "You can still breathe , so I bet gasses can get through. So unless you want to find out just how scalding that steam weapon you made is, you'll surrender."

"Er..." Dr. Wily actually paused in his assault to check something. "Ha! Even if it can get through, my shield will absorb the excess heat! You won't do anything but make me slightly damp!"

"Maybe," Roll allowed. "But that machine of yours looks pretty bare-bones. You keep saying you're the greatest genius on the planet, so tell me: How long do you think it'll be before the condensation causes a severe and dangerous short?"

"Um..." Wily paused again and appeared to be giving Roll's observation serious consideration. "Oh, fine! You win this time, but my next brilliant masterpiece won't have such a flaw!"

'Yeah, that's what you always say,' Roll retorted silently.

(Omake prompted by OathToOblivion, who said: "I read Trepak Man as Trebek Man for a second there. Guess I'm still in a Jeopardy mood from yesterday.")

"I'm sorry, but your buster must be in the form of a question."

"What?"

Trebek Man explodes

5.2 (Dalxien)

"Well, this is odd." Blues noted as he looked over the side of the cliff toward the sparkling city below, nearly mirroring the stars above it.

"You're not Frederic." A familiar voice noted.

He glanced down and saw a girl- now he knew why the voice was familiar. It appeared to be a non-Robotic roll in a ruffled dress.

"Of course not." He stated offhandedly. Roll should know that-

And then he noticed the subtle differences. She didn't recognize him, but looked like Roll. She had a looper's reaction to his replacement of this 'Frederic' but again, appeared to be his sister. The scenario was adding up in his head in a way he didn't like. His tactical mindset prepared for a hostile reaction without any outward shift.

"You're not Roll."

"Oh." What an odd way for the girl to answer that. She stood, dusted off her skirt and stood next to him with a smile. "You must have a sister named Roll, right?"

To hell with appearances, he took a loose combat stance. "And if I do?"

She backed away, waving a placating gesture to ward off his hostility. She never stopped smiling. "The person you're replacing has a sister. Sometimes this world is all in his head, and when it is, I wind up looking and sounding like his sister."

That stunned the son of Light enough that he dropped his stance. "In my... head?"

"Yup!" She said, and then cringed. "Unfortunately that means you're dying, and created this world in a fever-dream, and all of it's going to end when you either give up the will to live or die. Sorry."

His mouth opened to speak, and then closed. "Alright."

She tilted her head. "You're taking this oddly well. The last guest we hosted threw themselves off the cliff when I explained that."

He chuckled. "Let's just say I'm used to my sticks having shorter ends than most. This one's just a more interesting expression of that than I'm used to. My name is Blues Light, by the way."

She snickered. "No wonder you looped here, with a name like that. I'm Polka, by the way." His raised eyebrow goaded her into explanation. "Almost everything here is named after something musical. Probably because Frederic dedicated most of his life to music."

He sifted through his memories and did indeed find quite a bit of musical programming that hadn't been there before. "I'm a pianist?" He asked, glancing down at his hands.

"He is, yes. What are you normally?"

The hands clenched. "A soldier."

She chortled. "Not for a lack of trying..." She realized Blues was staring. "Oh, sorry. Sometimes he acts a little more like a military commander than a musician. Makes me wonder what kind of fused loops he has, since he hasn't mentioned anything like that in his baseline..." She shook her head. "Doesn't matter. Let's go back to my house. Mother will set up a bed for you and we can go into town tomorrow. I want to see if anything else has changed this loop."

Blues nodded, and followed the girl with the uncanny resemblance to his sister.

5.3

"And what have you two been up to?" Anakin Skywalker asked the latest visitor to his home Loop and his also-looping apprentice.

"Your padawan was just telling me about her bout with Sakura Syndrome," Blues Light, robotic Jedi knight, replied.

"Ah, yes," Anakin nodded. "That was the main reason I turned to the Dark Side for the longest time."

"And getting the 'Darth Vader in full vengeance mode' treatment is what finally snapped me out of it," Ahsoka added. "It may have been messy, and painful, but that really drove home how my actions affected others."

"You loopers and your neuroses," Blues shook his head.

"Don't worry, you'll get yours soon enough," Anakin smiled knowingly.

"Yeah," Ahsoka nodded. "Anyway, I say we let the new guy take Grievous on. See how he stacks up."

"I take it he's one of the more dangerous opponents?" the arch in Blues's eyebrow was more heard than seen, but apparent nonetheless.

"More speed than most Jedi, highly skilled, full 360 degree rotation in his joints," Ahsoka listed off, "and four arms. With enough weapons for each."

"Huh..." Blues thought about that for a moment. "Sounds interesting. Anything else I should know?"

"He's a cyborg whose body is basically a weaponized life support system," Anakin added, "but trust me when I say that anything worth saving died a long time ago. I've been down the path of darkness and redemption enough to tell these kinds of things."

5.4

Roll was having a very strange time this Loop. Dr. Wily was acting normally for him, the robot masters were pretty baseline for the most part, and everything was as close to 'script' as it ever got. Except for one minor detail...

The entire planet and everything on it, including her, was invisible.

On the plus side, this meant foes like Bright Man (and no, she hadn't managed to make sense of his existence this Loop) were pretty much powerless.

5.5 (EdBeccerra)

"I... Am... NAMAGEM!"

"Funny, you look just like that Megaman 'bot."

"What? NO! I am Namagem, and I am in no way whatsoever related to, affiliated with, or even know anyone named Megaman!"

"Dude, all you did was reverse the color scheme of your uniform. You really think that's gonna fool anyone?"

"ARRRRGH!"

5.6 (Valentine Meikin)

"So, why didn't we deploy Python Man?" Bass asked Dr. Wily as he looked at the blueprints.

"Somehow, we got the wrong Python..." Wily grumbled. "It was obsessed with silly walks, bad slapstick humor, and had a problem with the word 'Ni'... I have, fourteen times to date, put the personality chip through debugging, and it still can't seem to have a serious fight with even Roll. And I mean Roll BEFORE she got competent and fought like a wildcat!"

5.7

REATTEMPTING ACTIVATION OF LOOPER CANDIDATE 'BASS'...

ERROR: ACTIVATION FAILED.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' CURRENTLY UNABLE TO SUPPORT CANDIDATE 'BASS' AS LOOPER.

COMPILING LOOP MEMORY DATA FOR LATER ATTEMPT...

ERROR: UNKNOWN SOUL ACTIVATED AS LOOPER INSTEAD.

ASSESSING UNKNOWN SOUL...

NO SIGNIFICANT STABILITY ISSUES DETECTED.

LOOPING STATUS APPROVED.

Rock stared as the Sniper Joe he'd been facing down suddenly turned and fired on the other one that had been moving to flank him.

He blinked in surprise, but the scene failed to change.

"Why did you do that?" he asked in confusion. Not that he didn't appreciate it, but Wily's forces going rogue tended to be more exception than rule.

"We fight for freedom wherever there's trouble," the robot replied before leaping away.

"Well, yo Joe," Rock stared after the robot.

5.8 (OathToOblivion)

"Pikachu?"

"Yeah, Ash?"

"Why are we robots?"

"I don't know. And that 'Super Adaptor' thing is just plain weird..."

"Yeah. I mean, you're my best friend and all, but I don't want to become one with you or something..."

5.9

"We'll do it dad," Rock and Roll stated together as their father lamented the betrayal by his friend and colleague Dr. Wily. Volunteering had become practically habit for them both by this point.

"No, I must do this myself," Dr. Light declared as he stood dramatically, causing the two robots to blink. That was new.

"But..." Roll looked at her brother in confusion. She didn't think their dad was Awake.

"...you said that nothing could stand up to the robot masters," Rock finished, equally bewildered.

"Fear not, my children," Dr. Light smiled at them as his labcoat fluttered dramatically in a wind they were sure shouldn't be possible indoors. "I shall succeed! For I..."

Dr. Light clenched his fist and raised it above his head, a flash of unknown energy pulsing from him.

"...have fists of SCIENCE!"

The twin children of the apparently fighting scientist traded looks and shrugged. This could prove interesting if nothing else.

5.10

Blues grimaced as he walked through the grave markers in the Shadow Zone, each one indicating someone who had tried and failed to defeat the Shadow Prince. This portion of Chance's home Loop was incredibly creepy, even more-so now that he'd met several of the people each grave seemed to represent.

It was his fifth time here and the place just seemed more unnerving than ever. He decided to focus on other thoughts. Like how he was replacing Shocker this time and the current arrangement of the power-swap effect that had hit every member but himself (due to being a robot) and Chance (due to having no powers to begin with). Psy-Chick's powers, currently in the possession of Private Justice, were apparently needed for the Shadow Prince's device to create a portal out of the zone. At the cost of whoever had them being 'sacrificed' and their essence spread across the universe as pure energy. It wasn't death, technically, and whoever went through it was aware of events from nearly every corner of the iteration. Shocker, who went through it the most, called it the most trippy thing he'd ever done.

Anyway, it tended not to be the end for whoever was made 'one with the universe'. Even though the solid baseline only covered up to the end of this adventure, the Loop typically ran for several more years with widely varying versions of events. But whether the team had to face the Shadow Prince's father, a conspiracy to toss every outspoken 'anti-hero' into the Shadow Zone, or an uprising of the more violently inclined 'heroes', whoever was spread out across the universe tended to be restored to normal along the way. And some very interesting ways those we–

Blues's thoughts were cut off as he spotted a mass of blue next to one of the grave markers. It was a helmet. A very, very familiar helmet... Cracked and broken beyond repair. Against his better judgement, he read the epitaph:

HE RESTS IN EVERLASTING PEACE.

He staggered back as if struck, staring at the grave marker in horror. 'No... It's not... It's just not possible...'

"Whoa, easy there Proto Man," Chance Fortune steadied the robot as he lost his footing from shock. He looked at the grave marker that had set his friend and teammate off. "Someone you know I take it? Yeah, this place does that."

Blues wasn't really paying attention as he jerked his gaze away, only to see a flash of yellow at the foot of another marker. Another broken helmet at the base, and a bent broom propped up haphazardly...

Blues shut his eyes and let Chance lead him past this place. He didn't want to see any more. He wasn't sure if he could take it.

5.11

Dr. Noelle Lalinde smiled as her creation led her down the lamp-lit street after a wonderful day. Tempo had talked her into taking a day off and had taken her around town, insisting on paying for everything with the allowance provided for her. It had started off with Tempo serving her breakfast in bed (the toast was a little crispy, but otherwise it had been good), then they'd gone to an art exhibit that Noelle had expressed interest in, followed by lunch at an outdoor cafe and then some light shopping, an early dinner at a nice restaurant, and finally a play that Noelle had always meant to go see, but had just never found the time.

"Did you have fun?" Tempo asked her, smiling in a way that made her heart ache. Why did she ever take her creation's emotions away in the first place?

"I did, indeed!" Noelle smiled back. "But I'm still at a loss to the occasion."

Tempo stopped and turned to look at her creator in confusion. "You don't remember what day it is?"

"A Sunday," Noelle started, "but I don't see what that has to do...?

In reply, Tempo walked up to her creator and embraced her warmly. "Happy Mother's Day mom."

'Oh...' she thought in shock. 'Was that today? Have I really been that wrapped up in my work lately?'

She looked down at her cre–her daughter and smiled before returning the embrace. "Thank you, my daughter."

Rock and Roll looked down from the top of a nearby building. Normally they wouldn't be spying on friends like this, but as the ones who'd given Tempo the suggestion, they felt obligated to make sure it turned out well.

"We're going to have to make sure this is a regular occurrence," Rock smiled at the scene below.

"Yeah," Roll agreed. "That was beautiful. Speaking of which, what should we do for dad on Father's Day?"

"I'd say get Blues to come home," Rock smiled sadly, "but that's kind of a tall order."

"Yeah," Roll sighed. "Maybe a tie?"

"No," Rock tapped his chin and grinned as he got an idea. "For someone like dad, it'd have to be a..."

Roll choked back a laugh as she realized what her brother was thinking.

"Tie Man!" they both chorused before collapsing in laughter.

5.1) In Soviet Megaverse, world conquers Wily!

5.2) Blues's Eternal Sonata

5.3) I've got the Star Wars Blues (ducks thrown objects)

5.4) For maximum effect, imagine this snippet is white text on a white background.

5.5) Feel free to interpret this as you will.

5.6) The wrong Monty.

5.7) Well, now, who expected this?

5.8) More visitors to the Megaverse.

5.9) He'll be okay, he has SCIENCE!

5.10) Chance Fortune in the Shadow Zone, the first and only sequel in the Chance Fortune series. Pity really as it left some juicy plot threads just hanging at the end. But that graveyard of people who took on the Shadow Prince and failed...

Brrrr...

Each marker has items by it that are indicative of who the person was plus an ironic and chilling epitaph. The book focuses on four graves and epitaphs that just make your blood run cold as you realize who's being referenced at each one. Gandalf. Ender Wiggin. Alice Liddell. Harry Potter. I imagine that walking through it tends to be a very surreal and creepy experience for most loopers as they spot graves and think 'I know that guy...'

5.11) I hope everyone wished their mother a happy Mother's Day yesterday!

Mega Loops 6

6.1

"Okay, why have you two been acting like idiots?" Blues asked his brother and sister in their weird piecemeal bodies the three had Awoken in after they'd crashed the previous Loop as the result of an incident involving Ra Moon and a pie fight.

"It's in our contract," Roll nodded sagely as Rock produced a document from a suspiciously convenient drawer and handed it to him, pointing at a few lines of fine print.

"All visitors to the Satellite of Love, regardless of origin, are compelled to take part in the events that occur therein, make inane witty commentary about said events, and generally partake in ludicrous tomfoolery," he read blankly. "What."

"Hey," Rock shrugged. "It makes the most sense out of anything in this Loop."

Blues found he had no argument for that.

6.2

"Hey, Roll?"

"Yeah, Rock?"

"Any idea why we're human this Loop?"

"None whatsoever."

"Had to ask. How about why we're taking martial arts class?"

"According to Loop memories, dad signed us up for them."

6.3

Rock blinked as he Awoke holding a broom.

Correction: She Awoke holding a broom.

The sound of metal on metal racing down the hallway heralded the arrival of another and Rock, yep that was apparently still her name, looked up to see what looked like his usual body. Only blonde.

"Rock?" the voice that sounded exactly like his, her, dangit this was going to get confusing, normal one asked in surprise.

"Yes Roll?" she asked, in Roll's normal voice, what was obviously her brother this Loop.

"You Awake?"

"Yes again," Rock sighed and finished reviewing her Loop memories. "Looks like one of those Loops."

"Yeah," Roll calmed down. "Being each other is going to be so weird , but at least we're not going through it alone. I guess it won't be so bad, really."

"Check your memories," Rock told her brother. "Wily's female this time."

Roll blinked.

"And I think she has an unrequited crush on dad."

Roll turned to the nearest wall and started banging his head against it.

6.4

Blues carefully examined 'her' memories for the Loop. Apparently instead of being male 'she' was instead known as Carla 'Blues' Franklin, the only daughter of the convicted mad scientist Dr. Franklin who'd been arrested for his illegal actions pursuing a vendetta against a man named Dr. Rudy Wells, his rival in the field of robotic and cybernetic technology. Dr. Wells had received the grant for his CYBORG project and Dr. Franklin had later been terminated from the firm employing both of them for taking his rivalry too far. Several years later, he was captured, tried, and convicted of multiple crimes, including crimes against nature.

The Loop memories told Blues that 'she' was seeking to achieve vengeance against those who had captured her father. They also told Blues that 'she' was human.

The fact that 'she' could perform a systems check only available to a mechanical being revealed otherwise. It seemed that Blues was, in fact a...

'Fembot?' Blues arched an eyebrow at the designation 'her' in-Loop father had chosen for his project. 'Really?'

At least Dr. Light had gone for something with less implied degradation. Yeah, no way was 'she' playing along with this...

6.5

Roll breathed heavily to cool her internal systems as she copied her opponent's weapon. Despite her ridiculous design (seriously, who put projectile energy weapons on a female model's chest?), Toaster Woman had been fairly intense. But the Toast Buster (oh, someone made a punny... Memo to self: Punch said person in the face) was now hers.

With the Freezer Burn from Refrigerator Man (how the heck did an ice weapon manage to look like a flame weapon when fired?), the Hot Air from Dryer Man (surprisingly effective), the Flame Burst from Oven Woman (the semi-obligatory fire weapon), the Ironing Board from Iron Woman (don't laugh, that thing hurt), the Microwave Ray from Microwave Man (that did nasty things to electronics), and the Throwing Plates from Dish Woman (the shrapnel from when they broke on impact was arguably worse than the initial weapon) she was almost done.

Honestly, she'd just wanted to do the freaking laundry.

"Bwahahahaha!" her next opponent revealed herself. "You may have beaten the others, but I, Washer Woman, will defeat you Mega Woman! Kiss your pristine household goodbye! Soap Flood!"

The deluge of sudsy water roared from the last of the Appliance Masters and engulfed Roll where she stood. The torrent knocked her off her feet and sent her tumbling back out of control. And before she managed to regain her bearings, there was a sharp impact and...

...Roll shot up straight in her bed. What had just happened? Was she Awake in a new Loop, or had that been some weird dream from downloading unverified media from the internet before bed again? After the stuff Wily pulled, the average computer virus wasn't really a threat, but having her antivirus programs run during a rest cycle in response always gave her weird dreams.

A quick check of her memory didn't prove all that helpful. If that had been a dream, she shouldn't still have the weapons. But if it had been a previous Loop, then it had terminated before she'd copied Washer Woman's weapon. And yet there the Soap Flood was in her archived memory banks along with the other seven.

Seriously, what the heck had just happened?

In Hephaestus's office, Morpheus sighed as his fellow Olympian gestured at something on his terminal. "It looks fine to me, Hephaestus. What exactly is the problem?"

"I was hoping you could tell me since you're the expert on dreams," the forge god replied. "Is this a Loop iteration or a mortal dream?"

Morpheus rolled his eyes and looked back at the screen. "Obviously it's..."

He blinked and took a closer look at the display.

"I..." the god of dreams uttered in surprise. "I can't tell..."

"I was afraid of that," Hephaestus moaned. "Yet one more glitchy piece of weirdness I need to sort out."

6.6

Rock considered the invitation he held in his hands. The Battle & Chase circuit didn't show up every Loop, and he usually considered it a relatively pleasant break from the usual stuff he had to deal with. Not quite as fun as the Loops where the robot masters wanted to play soccer (or football depending on what country he was in at the time), but still pretty enjoyable overall.

It was just... Dr. Wily always found a way to disrupt it. He'd steal the prize money, enter a bunch of his robots to take out competitors, booby trap the tracks, secretly be the organizer, or all of the above and then some. And don't get him started on the times that Wily's schemes and someone else's ran into each other.

Of course he'd heard that Wily was actually invited to compete as a result of how viewer interest had spiked after his actions during the last race in this Loop, which could potentially mean he was less or more dangerous depending on things. And then there was the race track.

Historic Route 66. Start in Chicago, finish in Los Angelos.

Which meant plenty of room for things to go south.

Sighing, Rock got up to go see Auto about getting Rush's racecar mode upgraded. Auto might be nuts, but so was the Battle & Chase circuit.

"Ladies and gentlemen!" Plum announced to the cheering crowd gathered in the streets. "Welcome to the first ever cross-country Battle & Chase spectacular, following historic Route 66!"

The gathered crowd cheered ferociously as the racers approached their starting lines and either entered their vehicles or (in a select few cases) transformed into them.

"Just a reminder to our fans and viewers across the country, all proceeds from this race go to the full restoration and preservation of this 2,451 mile historic landmark! So do make sure to pick up some souvenirs at some point! And don't worry about property damage from the racers folks! We've got the best cutting edge containment barriers in place preventing the usual Battle & Chase chaos from spilling off the track, so our racers are free to go nuts!"

Blues took a moment to glance at the other racers from his machine, the Beat Striker. There was Rock in the Rush Roadstar, Roll in the Tango Turbo, Bass in the Treble Darkstar, Dr. Wily (or at least one of his robot doubles, it was hard to tell sometimes) in his modified Wily Machine XX, Quick Man in the Sonic Formula shooting a thumbs up to both Turbo Man and Nitro Man in their vehicle forms, the entire Black Troupe (Black Joe, Black Yellow Devil, and Black 4 Roader), plus a number of other robot masters both from familiar creators (such as Dr. Wily, Dr. Light, and Dr. Cossack) and unknown makers.

"Gentlemen! Start your engines!"

The roar of engine ignition battled with the cheers of the crowd as the racers prepared themselves.

Red light.

Red light.

Red light.

Yellow light.

Green light.

And with a wave of the starting flag, they were all tearing down the highway towards the coast, doing their level best to beat the scrap out of their competitors while they had a free shot. By the time the Chicago city limits were reached, half of the racers had been knocked out of the running.

Roll was a bit tense as she entered Los Angelos. The race had gone as well as could be expected when all the drivers had weaponized vehicles, which meant that something big was probably about to happen.

Almost as if it had been waiting for that cue, the street under her and Tango began to rumble and then lift out of the ground.

"Bwa-ha-ha-ha-ha!" the voice of Dr. Wily cackled over the publicized broadcast as Route 66 ripped itself out of the ground and into the air. "Behold my ultimate plan! I have co-opted the systems keeping Route 66 contained for this race and turned it into my greatest weapon ever!"

Off in the distance, about where the finish line should have been, Roll saw a massive steel and concrete skull rise into the sky. A steel and concrete skull connected to the road that was even now trying to throw her and the other racers off of it.

"Behold!" Dr. Wily crowed even as Roll saw his racer transform into an aerial mode and leave the bucking pavement. "My creation! 2,451 miles of mechanical fury! Wily Road 66!"

Roll flipped a switch Auto had installed in the Tango Turbo adaptor and deployed the road gripping device he'd installed. There, now she wasn't in danger of being thrown off.

"But I'm a fair man!" Wily continued. "The race is still on! Whoever gets to the control room at the finish line will gain control of Wily Road 66! Catch me if you can!"

"I got him," the voice of Blues came in over the intercom as Roll saw him fly past in the Beat Striker. Right, Beat's vehicle mode was flight capable. "See if you can keep the rest of the racers off of me."

"Roger that," Rock's voice replied before she could, and Roll sent her own reply as she nodded to her brother in his Rush Roadstar, currently using the same road gripping device Auto developed.

And then she noticed something odd... One of the racers had suddenly changed teams. One of Wily's racers had just re-registered as driving for the U.S. military.

Roll looked over to the side and saw the racer in question, Black Joe of the Black Troupe, flash her a thumbs up before speeding off down the bucking and twisting weaponized road without any trouble.

"How many does this make, Roll?" Rock asked his sister.

"Not many, but enough to be a pattern," Roll responded. Black Joe had managed to win the race and instead of securing the weaponized roadway for Dr. Wily, he'd made it return itself to its original position and shut down before destroying the control panel.

Either there was a Joe unit looping, or variants where a random Joe unit turned on Dr. Wily were becoming a thing. Maybe if they could talk to one of these rogue Joe units for longer than a sentence they could figure out which it was.

6.7

"Lily Aensland!"

As Rock sat in his chair next to Roll observing the first of several individuals to walk across the stage, he reflected on the events of the current Loop. Here, he and his siblings weren't robots. Nor were they exactly human either. Instead they were a revolutionary development in advanced cybernetics. A perfect melding of biology and technology at the genetic level. Somehow both fully biological and fully mechanical at the same time.

"Mithra Asura!"

It wasn't something you could just become either. The process needed time to reach final equilibrium of the body. Like a human, most of it was functionally online by the time thirteen years had passed but full calibration was projected to take up to twenty years. It wasn't a quick or easy process and introducing it into established biological or mechanical systems was a recipe for disaster. The only thing that seemed to work was integration at the time of fetus formation, regardless if that fetus grew in a womb or a test tube. You literally had to be conceived that way. On the other hand, it had led to quite the test run, culminating in something neither he nor his sister had ever done before.

"Graduating Cum Laude, Chelsea Bonne!"

That being graduation from high school, Rock noted as he cheered his sort-of girlfriend as she accepted her diploma. Past attempts at putting him and Roll in school, including a Loop where he and Roll had been human, had either terminated early or switched to home schooling as Wily's takeover attempts disrupted all attempts to maintain a schedule. But not this time.

"Alan Caskett!"

Waving to his friend, Rock slipped back into his musings. Even with Dr. Wily going rogue and trying to take over the world, he and Dr. Light had still invented what might very well be the next stage of human and robot evolution. It was supposedly inheritable, but obviously that particular test would have been a ways off even if loopers could have children. Regardless, it was an invention that the government required proof was stable enough to allow among the population.

"Ceil Charité!"

And so he and Roll were required to demonstrate that they could be integrated among the population by surviving the biggest social acid test ever conceived. Also known as high school. A trial made much harder by their double life as Mega Man and Mega Woman. Of course, they'd made some good friends on both sides of that equation.

"Graduating Summa Cum Laude, Kalinka Cossack!"

The gathering of Dr. Cossack and his robot masters went absolutely nuts when that was announced, drowning out everything including the cheers of himself and his sister and even thought. It was well deserved, too. Summa Cum Laude was essentially a perfect grade point average. Even the next few names were barely audible as the group carried on.

"Vanessa Dark!"

That name reminded him that it hadn't all been roses. Reverend Dark had been the world's leading cybernetic cultist for a long time, culminating with his transformation into Dark Man, and his attempt to forcibly recruit his daughter still gave the girl nightmares. Which reminded him that the first attempt at making a cybernetic lifeform, Blues, had run away from home and never really returned.

"Phoebe Deneb!"

Instead, Blues Light hung around with another guy with a love for scarves named Strider and the two formed some sort of 'good samaritan gang' that went around and helped people who needed it. Remembering that led Rock's thoughts to the heritage of the Light siblings.

"Girouette Express!"

As it turned out, the three of them weren't cybernetic clones of Dr. Light. They actually had a mother, whose death from a car crash shortly after the two had married had prompted their father to delve into research with the intention of creating the children the two had been cheated out of by circumstance. Research Dr. Wily had secretly used for his own purposes long before he stole the industrial robot masters.

"Atlas Foster!"

This meant that it wasn't only the Light children who had this wondrous technology. Tech that allowed them to fight against Wily on the same level they were used to, even while it was disrupting school. Bass truly was Wily's son in every way this Loop.

"Graduating Magna Cum Laude, Amy Guile!"

Of course, Dr. Wily hadn't been the only disruption to school life this Loop. There was the long-established criminal organization of Shadaloo that several parents of students had dealt with before and wasn't above holding an entire school for ransom. Rock thanked whatever mental block prevented people from connecting him and his sister with their 'superhero' identities.

"Ran Hibiki!"

Or whatever it was that prompted those who had connected the dots to not make a big deal out of it (after all, it wasn't like they put a lot of effort into keeping their identities secret). He and Roll probably wouldn't be able to go anywhere otherwise.

"Batsu Ichimonji!"

And don't get him started about the whole "Project Justice" incident. That had been a real mess. Of course, he'd had no clue just how many of his classmates were capable of unarmed combat before then, so...

"Sakura Kasugano!"

Speaking of students capable of unarmed combat... As the martial arts fanatic waved back to those cheering for her, Rock allowed himself to be suitably impressed that she'd managed to actually get the grades necessary to graduate in between looking for fights.

"Graduating Cum Laude, Ibuki Kunai!"

The professor at the end of the row he was seated in stood as the line approaching the stage got short enough to accommodate their row. Rock and Roll stood along with the other students and followed him towards the line approaching the stage. The others in their class had joked about how their row was starting with three sets of twins. The female Lei-Lin twins Mei-Ling and Hsien-Ko, followed by the male Li twins Yun and Yang, and then the two of them followed by the remaining twenty-eight students on their row out of the graduating class of 403.

"Graduating Magna Cum Laude, Tempo LaLinde!"

Rock joined the cheers and applause as one of the sole robots in the school; the others being Ripot Battle, Plum Chase, and Chest Strategy; walked across the stage. Even with Dr. Light's revolutionary cybernetics robotic AIs were advancing by leaps and bounds. A few more students walked across the stage while Rock followed behind Yun Li as he ascended the stairs to the stage and waited for his name to be called.

"Graduating Magna Cum Laude, Rock Light!"

The area where his father was seated exploded with cheers and fireworks (dang it, he'd told Auto not to set those off inside) as the Light numbers celebrated loudly.

"Graduating Magna Cum Laude, Roll Light!"

If anything, the raucous Light party got even louder while a space cleared around them as the families of other graduates sought to put distance between themselves and Auto's pyrotechnics. As he accepted his diploma and shook hands with Principal Commando (formerly a captain in the army), Rock supposed that he and Roll should be really proud of graduating Magna Cum Laude, even after the hits their grades took between trying to save the world and get their homework in on time.

"Glyde Loath!"

Rock got his photo taken and walked back to his seat to wait out the rest of the ceremony. He cheered for his friends; like Mel Masters, Dex Oyama, and that Peter guy who took off at the oddest moments; and politely refrained from not deriding those he was... less than friendly with. Like Theo Payne or his girlfriend Simone Miller. He'd done the same when the chronic bullies, the Boltz brothers, had walked across the stage. He still wasn't completely sure the three had graduated from finally making the grade (none of the students really knew how often the three had been held back) rather than the faculty having had enough of their disruptive, and at times destructive, antics.

He managed no negative expression all the way up through the Weil twins, but had to wince as Frank West walked across the stage. It would be a long time before anyone at their school could forget the 'zombie invasion' that guy had the misfortune to be at the center of. Thankfully there had been no deaths. Plenty of injuries and medical treatment needed, but no deaths. Thankfully 'zombie-itis' wasn't contagious (this Loop), no matter what the movies said.

And now came the one person he'd been dreading to walk across the stage. His sister's sort-of-maybe are-they-flirting-or-trying-to-beat-each-other-up? boyfriend. That he managed a perfect grade point without disruption while he and Roll had to divide their time between school and saving the world grated on his nerves just a bit.

"Graduating Summa Cum Laude, Bass Wily!"

The entire back of the rented stadium erupted with noise as the entirety of Wily's original robot masters and Dr. Wily himself (all very poorly disguised) proceeded to top all of the previous obscenely loud cheering. Combined.

Rock rubbed the bridge of his nose as the one calling the names of graduates tried to make himself heard over the din. They'd hashed out an agreement with Dr. Wily that he could attend unmolested and take a few pictures before the police (already armed and waiting outside) tried to arrest him. It was really for the best as the mad scientist would have tried to crash regardless and this way they could possibly mitigate property damage since surely an escape while already outside would be less damaging than trying to force their way inside.

6.8 (Valentine Meikin)

"What are you building?" Rock asked Dr. Light, as he noticed his father constructing something under a cloth sheet.

"A robot I WANT Doctor Wily to steal." Dr. Light admitted with a smirk.

"So, Let's turn it on..." Bass declared, "Let's see what Dr. Light's latest project is..."

As the robot turned on, it took out a clipboard from a compartment inside it, and adjusted a pair of small glasses on it's nose.

"So, you are ze doctor known as Albert Wily, yes?" The robot asked.

"Yes..." Dr. Wily declared to the human-looking robot.

"My name is Psychiatric Man. Let us talk about your reasons for attempting to destroy everything..." The robot began.

The following morning, Bass delivered the remains of Psychiatric Man to Dr. Light's house.

"...Between you and me, I'd rebuild him," Bass deadpanned, "He was only destroyed when the bad doctor took offense..."

He also handed them a clipboard. They treated it with all the respect it deserved.

Roll eventually sealed in it in her subspace pocket after her brothers finished commenting on Wily's various mental issues.

6.9 (OathToOblivion)

Rock stared. He had opened the door only to see the broken form of Rush was lying not two feet away from him, battered and bent. His IC chip was shattered into pieces, then set on fire. He clenched his eyes shut as coolant started leaking from his eyes.

"WAAAAAAAAALLLLLLLLTTTTTTZZZZ!"

6.10

Blues looked around at sights that were becoming much less familiar to him than they should have been. It was so rare he was home these days and it didn't seem likely to change anytime soon.

'Ah, well,' he thought as he pulled a spare set of shades out of his subspace pocket to wear since the current variant hadn't seen fit to start him with one, 'at least I don't have to suffer through Rock and Roll asking when I'm finally coming home every Lo–where are my shades?'

Indeed, the shades he was certain he'd pulled out of his subspace pocket weren't in his hand. 'I know I pulled them out...' he pondered and looked around to see if he'd dropped them by accident. 'It's not like I haven't done it countless times without a problem be–'

krch

The cracking sound was very faint, but distinct. Blues lifted the foot that corresponded to the audio source and saw a pair of broken shades. Sized for an action figure.

'What?' he thought in confusion and decided to try pulling one of his spare shields out. And there it was. Right in his hand and the proper size for an action figure. 'Wonderful...' he griped mentally. 'This better be a problem with the Loop rather than my pocket...'

6.11 (Kevin Convoy)

"I must say Roll, how I do wish things would be different sometimes, if only we could change things." Doctor Light comments. "Never did I enjoy using the term Robot Masters, which was Albert's call. I wanted something smooth and colorful, but he wouldn't settle for anything that didn't have master somewhere in the title. If only he would put that mind of his to some good…"

"Are you okay father?" Roll replies, shaking her head. This non-looping version of her father was just so…odd and sad at times.

"Its fine Roll, an old man's mind just wanders at times…."

"Oh, okay then," Roll relented. "Have you taken your heart medication yet father? You know how I worry."

"Hmm, is it time already? the man called Thomas Light checked on his always reliable silver pocket watch. "Yup, time for this silly old man to take care of his ticker," the Doctor mused as he wandered off, adjusting his very very cool bow-tie.

6.12

"No," Roll glared at her grinning brother.

Rock continued to grin right back at her.

"I am not doing it!" Roll insisted.

The grin didn't dissipate.

"I don't care how funny it would be!" she stomped her foot with finality.

Rock didn't lose any of his good humor as he finally replied. "But if we do this, then there's a good chance she won't show up for real. And besides, you should really put that weapon data to use at some point anyway."

Roll glared, fumed for several seconds, and then sighed in defeat. "All right, but you owe me for this."

"We built the robot masters to set the new standard," Dr. Light lamented to his robotic children as he wept into his hands. "There is literally nothing that can stand up to them! Nobody can stop them now!"

"We can," a new voice that sounded much like his son came from the doorway.

Dr. Light, along with Rock and Roll, looked up at the newcomer. In the doorway was a green and lime armored robot with a yellow 'V' crest on his helmet, a blue shaded visor, and what looked like a large red jackhammer slung over his back. Next to him was a female model clad in black and tan armor that was formed like a dress, with fingers clearly modified to each be an individual energy blaster and a neon pink 'L' in the center of her helmet.

And her face was identical to that of his robot daughter that had been comforting him as he broke down over events.

"Who...?" Rock asked in confusion.

"We're you, technically," the female robot that had Roll's face replied.

"From a future where Dr. Wily has spent years wreaking havoc with stolen inventions and his own mad creations," the one with Rock's voice continued. "We've come back in time to try and prevent the worst of the devastation before it even begins. You can call me Quint."

"And I'm Waltz," the apparently future-Roll introduced herself. "We're here to save the world."

---

6. Frogs

"Gods of the theater, smile on us," the first actor sang.

"You who sit up there stern in judgment,

Smile on us," the second actor addressed the audience directly.

"You who look down on actors..."

"And who doesn't?" the two actors both interrupted their singing to speak the self-deprecatory line together before resuming the melody.

"Bless this yearly festival and smile on us."

"We offer you song and dance."

"We offer you rites and revels."

"We offer you grace and beauty.

Smile on us for this while."

It would surprise many that the two robots known to most of the world as Mega Man and Mega Woman were out in the audience in their civilian identities of Rock and Roll, enjoying a night at the theater with their father. But then, who could begrudge the Light family a night of culture, taking in a musical based on an ancient Greek comedy?

Especially when they left afterwards with grins that some would claim needed mechanical adjustment to remove.

6.14

"Well we're all in the mood for a melody.

And you've got us feeling alright!"

Blues ran his fingers across the keys as the entire room sang along to the final lines of the song and smiled. This hadn't been a bad Loop so far. He might not be able to partake of the spirits that Eden Hall served, but playing the bar's piano wasn't that bad a way to spend his time. Besides, the patrons all seemed to like his music and Ryo Sasakura, the local Anchor and owner, was a pretty decent guy to work for.

6.15

Dr. Light blinked at the robot dressed in a formal suit that had been waiting outside his door. He didn't recognize the model at all...

"Greetings, sir," the robot bowed politely. "I am Tie Man, designed and programmed by Rock and Roll Light to aid the discerning gentleman in dressing both impeccably and comfortably for all occasions. I am to understand that you have quite the full day ahead of you with your children, so we have not a moment to waste!"

Dr. Light choked back a chuckle as he let the robot work. His two children had really outdone themselves with this, so it would be quite rude to turn their project away.

Blues looked down from his perch on the roof as his siblings and father left for their Father's Day plans, trying to convince himself that the sight didn't make his heart ache.

He'd not returned the Awake signal this Loop, again, telling himself that he wanted to see what his siblings got up to when they thought he wouldn't remember past the Loop. Learning of their little Father's Day project...

He wanted to go down there and join them. But he just–

"The real problem lies in your programming."

–he just couldn't bring himself to actually do it.

6.1 - Shenanigans as required by contract.

6.2 - Okay, who left the gag running?

6.3 - Rule 63 is out in force this time it seems.

6.4 - Really out in force.

6.5 - I'd ask when the electric sheep show up, but that's already baseline for this place. (Sheep Man: DWN-077)

6.6 - Route 66: A road that winds from Chicago to L.A. Rule 66: If it exists, Spacebattles(*) will weaponize it.

6.7 - Congratulations to everyone who graduated recently!

6.8 - Psychiatric Man, Psychiatric Man, does whatever a psychiatric can... In all seriousness though, they aren't poking fun at Dr. Wily (much). They're mostly trying to see if there's anything which could help their reformation efforts on the man.

6.9 - "KHHHHHAAAAAAAAANNNNNN!" (Tagline by OathToOblivion as well. You know this had to be done at least once.)

6.10 - Oh, look, giant robots.

6.11 - And apparently Dr. Light is the eleventh Doctor this time. Now we just have to hope that Dr. Wily doesn't remember being the Master or he might do something like travel to the future and come back with a robot built from advanced technology to send against... Oh, wait, he already does that in the baseline. Nevermind then.

6.12 - Ah, the first mini-me Loop for the Megaverse.

6. Frogs - Youtube search for: The Frogs by Aristophones. It's a pretty funny musical.

6.14 - Blues is the Piano Man. :P

6.15 - I hope you all remember to wish your dad a happy Father's Day!

* - Spacebattles is where I post my snippets before compiling them as well as where I take submissions.

Bonus: The full graduating class of Rock and Roll Light. Only about a hundred names on here were randomly generated in full. The single break indicates separation by aisle in the seating.

[Row 1]

Lily Aensland

Sam Alexander

Elizabeth "Liz" Allan

Sheva Alomar

Lance Alvers

Reika Amamiya

Amara Juliana Olivia Aquilla

Anetta Astil

Mithra Asura

Sally Avril

Ava Ayala

Yai Ayano

Natsu Ayuhara

Anita Baine

Rebecca Baker

Joan Ball

Frances Barnwa

Ripot Battle

Signas Belgrade

Christine Bell

Fiona Belli

Tami Bennett

Jim Osh Bensley

Bud Bison

Joe Black

Juanita Blair

Silvia Blue

Dix Boltz

Dag Boltz

Dez Boltz

Chelsea Bonne

Ed Boone

Courtney Bowen

Max Bright

[Row 2]

Edward "Eddie" Brock

Phillip Brooks

Hobie Brown

Barrett Bullet

Erika Butler

Menart Byrd

Milan Byrd

Luke Cage

Nathaniel Cain

Shu Calbania

Neige Caravan

Harvey Carr

Shawn Carter

Alan Caskett

Darrell Castro

Rebecca Chambers

Ceil Charité

Plum Chase

Kei Chitose

Jasmine Choina

Yuika Circus

Kyle Class

Gerardo Cohen

Julia Collins

Cassie St. Commons

Maria Cook

Carlie Cooper

Jack Corvus

Kalinka Cossack

Ray Crisp

Alouette Croire

Ginger Cruz

Wade Cruz

Jeanne d'Arc

[Row 3]

Roberto Da Costa

David "Speedy" Daisuke

Brandy Daniel

Evan Daniels

Vanessa Dark

Doris Davidson

Christopher Davis

Mary Deacon

Delbert Delgado

Phoebe Deneb

Datta Dhalsim

Mawell Dillon

Roxanne Dixon

Kanesha Dolan

Joe Doppler

Barry Doyle

Robert "Bobby" Drake

Ramiro Drake

Earl Duke

Fred Dukes

Teal Eagle

Elpizo Epsilon

Trish Eva

Girouette Express

Heel Face

Pat Fahran

Edward Falcon

Eguchi Famous

Kay Faraday

Robert Farrell

Double Felton

Ramon Ferrer

Maya Fey

Heather Fitzpatrick

[Row 4]

Sophia Flowers

Fan Fortune

Atlas Foster

Allan Freeman

Jaune French

Tory Froid

Taryn Fujioka

John Gallo

Jorge Garcia

Alia Gate

Cinnamon Gaudile

Amy Gelande

Joseph Gibson

Cynthia Gilbert

Richard Gilmore

Ashe Gleason

Elvis Gold

Vin Gonzales

Arthur Goodall

Ashley Graham

Glory Grant

Ashley Gray

Doreen Green

Henry Green

Jean Grey

Annie Griffin

Shawna Griffith

Kidd Gruff

Prairie Guardian

Amy Guile

Sam Guthrie

Jessica Haggar

Fulin Hakan

Dominick Hale

[Row 5]

Juri Han

Gene Hand

Felicia Hardy

Sharon Harris

Charles Harvey

Shuuichi Hat

Michelle Heart

Ruby Heart

Harry Henderson

Nelly Hendrick

Fred Hernandez

Alan Hero

Ran Hibiki

Janet Hill

Aoi Himezaki

Lucille Hines

Pic Holie

Lilly Hollister

Lumine Holt

Atsuki Homura

Bonnie Hood

Craig Howard

Jerome Hubbard

Aeolus Hudson

Helen Hughes

Zain Hunter

Batsu Ichimonji

Lilly Igarashi

Jason Ionello

Satoru "Prosecutor" Ito

Randy James

Dingo Jawaii

Annie Jet

Gregory Johnson

[Row 6]

Terry Jomon

Jessica Jones

Angela Jones

Angelica Jones

Effie June

Kyosuke Kagami

Missy Kallenback

Hayato Kanzaki

Karin Kanzuki

Sakura Kasugano

Akira Kazama

Jennifer Kelly

Charlie Kelman

Leon Scott Kennedy

Elena Kenya

Ribbita Kero

Isabela Keyes

Shuko Kido

Tora King

Laura Kinney

Calvin Klein

Rosalyn Krantz

Ibuki Kunai

Miyuki Kuroi

Linn Kurosawa

Hoshida Kyuuta

Saffron Lagrano

Cumin Lagrano

Jasmine Lagrano

Tempo LaLinde

Zachary Larson

Norma Lawrence

Sarah Lee

Jubilation Lee

[Row 7]

Mei-Ling Lei-Lin

Hsien-Ko Lei-Lin

Yang Li

Yun Li

Rock Light

Roll Light

Janice Lincoln

Ernest Lindsey

Fong Ling

Glyde Loath

Thetis Lopez

Tiffany Lords

Spider Love

Tami Lucas

Jason Philip Macendale, Jr.

Jamie Madrox

Keiji Maeda

Coil Magnes

Anna Maria Marconi

Anna "Rogue" Marie

Denise Marmalade

Marth Mars

Lady Mary

Robyn Mason

Mel Masters

Sean Matsuda

Duncan Matthews

Grogz Maverick

Dynamo Max

Arthur Maximo

Pietro Maximoff

Jeanette May

Asakura Mayu

Jenny McCarthy

[Row 8]

Janet McCloud

Ruth McDonald

Edward McDonough

Kenny "King" McFarlan

Bruce McGivern

Tina McIntyre

Tiny McKeever

Chad Miles

Simone Miller

June Lin Milliam

Gorou Misaki

Alan Mitchell

Danielle Moonstar

Paula Moore

Miles Morales

Louise Morgan

Don Morgan

Chris Morris

Bruce Morris

Dylan Morton

Ilia Necro

George Nelson

Rokushakudama Nenji

Sherrice Net

Theresa Newton

Sha Shan Nguyen

Rocinolle Nightingale

Hirondelle Nouvelle

Alex O'Hirn

Seymour O'Reilly

Sean Obihiro

Oichi Oda

Oyu Odani

Ammy Okami

[Row 9]

Harry Osborne

Oliver Osnick

Aero Otoranger

Dex Oyama

Roberta Palmer

Peter Parker

Jean Patterson

Theo Payne

Siarnaq Peterson

Doris Petto

Claud Pincer

Grill Pitmaster

Luna Platz

Johnathan Porter

Geoffrey Pratt

Princess Penelope Pride

Cerveau Progress

Katherine Anne "Kitty" Pryde

Irene Psyche

Speed Racer

Regina Raid

Sharo Raika

Danny Rand

Evelyn Ray

Faucon Recrue

Axl Red

Claire Redfield

Michael Redips

Iris Regal

Baryl Regal

Ben Reilly

Colbor Rescue

Allan Richards

Randy Robertson

[Row 10]

Andou Romeda

Hope Romero

Brandon Russell

Rei Saiko

Jin Saotome

Sal Saroma

Sasuke Sarutobi

Nana Savage

Shoma Sawamura

Vanessa Z. Schneider

Rosalie Schneider

Tina Scott

Dark Scythe

Amanda Sefton

Sera Servitor

Gatz Servitor

Troy Shaw

Earnest Sherman

Middy Sigma

Techno Sigma

Olivia Silver

Emily Simmons

Palette Sims

Rahne Sinclair

Dande Six

Paul Smith

John Smith

Tabitha Smith

Dante Sparda

Nathan "Rad" Spencer

Geneva Spencer

Patrick Sprigs

Gwen Stacy

Ele Star

[Row 11]

Charlie Stephens

Ariel Stevens

Ayame Stone

Johnny Storm

Chest Strategy

Andres Strickland

Scott Summers

Ken Suther

Vent Taborsky

Katherine Taylor

Layer Taylor-Perry

Zack Temple

Makoto Tendo

Eugene "Flash" Thompson

Gloria Thompson

Keith Tirado

Luke Todd

Junpei Todoroki

Kai Todoroki

Ieyasu Tokugawa

Todd Tolanski

Bobby Tomlinson

Sandra Torres

Mary Towa

Cody Travers

Beverly Turner

Mamoru Urakawa

Jill Valentine

Grey Van Speybroeck

Rouge Variable

Orihime Vega

Lauren Viper

Solo Von Bluecher

Kurt Wagner

[Row 12]

Hinata Wakaba

Mable Walsh

Sheri Walton

Theresa Ward

Lawrence Washington

Spencer Waters

Mary Jane Watson

Joshua Webster

Charlie Weiderman

Prometheus Weil

Pandora Weil

Frank West

Connie Whaley

Julia Whitepearl

Debra Whitman

Risty Wilde

Kevin Williams

Cody Willis

Bass Wily

Clark Wizard

Leonard Wood

Warren Worthington III

Trucy Wright

Shomei Wu

Son Wukong III

Ling Xiaoyu

Akane Yagyu

Daichi Yumeno

Sora Yumeno

Mega Sonic Part 1

Mega Sonic: Part 1

"Hello?" Hermes picked up the phone in his office.

"Ah, Hermes," the voice of Hephaestus came over the line cheerfully. "Just wanted to let you know that I have that fused Loop scenario you requested finished. I'm sending the parameters over now."

"Excellent, man!" Hermes grinned.

"I took the liberty of arranging both Rock and Roll to be Awake rather than leaving it up to Yggdrasil's whims," Hephaestus continued. "Blues may be a bit more problematic. I've been trying to fix his damaged home Loop indicator with little luck, but trying to load him into Sonic's Loop instead of his home Loop for the fused iteration should work."

"Sweet!" Hermes replied. "I can't wait to see Sonic's face when he finally Wakes Up in this."

Rock blinked as he Awoke in the process of offering to shine Dr. Wily's shoes. It wasn't really one of his favorite ways to enter a Loop and he could only be thankful that the apparently buggy nature of his Loop meant his Awakening point was... fluid.

He didn't know what he'd do if he had to Wake Up to this every single Loop.

Regardless, he let events flow naturally while he used the special frequency he and his siblings had arranged to check if they were Awake. Roll's came in at practically the same time he sent his out, fast enough that it wasn't technically a 'response', which was pretty normal for her. Blues's surprisingly came in as well several long seconds later. Given the delay, he could be all the way on the other side of the planet. (1)

That done, he checked his Loop memories. Looked to be fairly baseline, or as 'baseline' as his Loops ever got he supposed. He and Roll were the first two in the Master series (not counting Blues), built as not only their father's helpers but his children as well. Dr. Wily was still Dr. Light's friend and was acting as usual for him. Same old, same old there.

He was registered to Light Labs, no surprise there, in the city of...

Huh. Station Square of the United Federation. Located on the continent of Soumerca on the planet Mobius.

Rock grinned. He'd been looking forward to seeing Sonic and company again for a while now.

Rock and his sister geared up for the prison transfer of Dr. Wily. It tended to be a toss-up if they could prevent his escape when this happened as the man was very good at arranging distractions they couldn't ignore, and even if they succeeded he always had more backup escape plans than they could circumvent. Like the still missing Time Man and Oil Man to name a couple. Still, they went through the motions. One never knew when or how events would change.

As if to prove that statement, the communications console flared to life and the face of a light blue hedgehog with a graying mustache appeared on the screen.

"Emergency!" the Mobian cried over the connection as it glitched from static. "This is Charles Hedgehog in *krchk*opolis! Is anyone there?!"

"Charles!" the voice of Dr. Light exclaimed as he rushed to the monitor. "What the matter?"

"Thomas! Thank goodness! Mobotropolis *skrt-tch*der attack!" the hedgehog relayed frantically. "We need immediate assistance! Ivo's betr*ksh* us!"

"We're on our way, sir!" Rock stepped forward with his sister before the question could even be asked. "Dad, can you–?"

"I'm adjusting the teleporter network now!" Dr. Light replied as he typed furiously. "I can get you to the suburbs, but you'll have to take it from there! Help is on the way old friend!"

"Thank y*kshtchkkk*"

Rock looked around as they finished teleporting. Buildings were on fire and mobians were running around in a panic. Weapons fire could be heard in the distance and there was one heck of an ominous floating fortress overhead.

"I don't think we're going to make it to the police escort," Roll observed.

"Nope," Rock agreed. "Start helping the civilians to safety. I'll see what I can do about the attackers."

"Right."

Rock paused as he heard something from a nearby damaged building and moved to investigate. It sounded like crying.

Tabling the matter of fighting the invasion for the moment, he went to investigate and found a young lapine mobian pinned under the rubble. Her legs and an arm were trapped and he was pretty certain they were broken and possibly crushed. (2)

"Easy there," he told her, "I'm gonna help you out. Just stay calm an–"

"You get away from her you ro-butt!" was the only warning he got before something slammed into him. The thing ricocheted off and came for another attack, but he managed to catch it before it hit. The object turned out to be a curled up young hedgehog with a familiar face and attitude. "Let me go you badnik!"

"I don't have time for this," Rock sighed. His friend didn't recognize him, which meant he wasn't Awake. At least not yet. "Look, Sonic right?"

"Wha–?"

"Your uncle's an old friend of my dad, but that's not important," he gestured to the rabbit girl. "She's hurt and needs a doctor. Fast. Can you get her there?"

"Hey, fast is my middle name!" Sonic's tune had changed pretty quickly, but Rock wasn't about to question it. He simply lifted the rubble off of the young girl long enough for Sonic to pick her up, the girl holding back a cry of pain as he did, and run her to treatment. The rough handling might not be ideal for her condition, but hopefully getting treatment that much sooner would make up for it.

It was time he tracked down the guy in charge and put an end to this before anyone else got hurt.

"Your majesty , members of the royal council," the portly man with a huge orange mustache and limbs so incongruously thin that one couldn't help but think of noodles taunted as he stepped over the rubble and into the throne room flanked by several robots, "I am now in control of all Mobotropolis! Swear fealty to me and I may let you keep your free will!"

"Never!" His Majesty King Maximillion Acorn returned defiantly.

"Your choice," the man grinned sinisterly. "Your last choice of course, but your choice nonetheless."

"I beg to differ!" a voice called out and the robots around the would-be conqueror fell to energy blasts before the man could react.

"Mega Woman to Mega Man," Roll used call signs given the situation. "Civilians have been evacuated. I'm proceeding to the flying fortress."

"Copy that," Rock replied as he stared down the mad, in more ways than one, man. "Now, Dr. Ivo 'Eggman' Robotnik I presume?"

"You insolent little...!" the so-named man fumed. "I'll see you reduced to scrap, do you hear me?!"

"Cut the theatrics doc," Rock wasn't in the mood for this. Rampant destruction was something he was more used to than most, but seeing pointless loss of life always killed his good humor. "We both know I could just shoot you and be done with it."

"H-hey now..." Dr. Eggman began sweating nervously at the reminder the robot was armed and he wasn't. "Let's not be hasty! If you kill me, you still have to deal with my robot army!"

"And I could," Rock glared at the man. "I could walk right out there now and mow them down one at a time. Then I'd go up to your flying fortress and take it apart from the inside out. And the only question... is whether my sister will have already done it by the time I get there." (3)

The Eggman gulped as the small blue robot casually dispatched several more of his robots who had tried to rescue their master. All while keeping one weapon trained on him.

"But that's going to just destroy more stuff that I'm sure these fine people would rather stay standing," Rock told the man. "So I'm giving you a one time offer: Order your forces to retreat right now and you can go with them."

"And if I refuse?" Dr. Eggman tried to regain some psychological footing.

"Then we're back to me shooting you," Rock bluffed. He didn't kill if he could help it. He'd see the man thrown in prison, sure, probably have to rough him up a little in the process of restraining him, but he wouldn't kill him.

"..." Dr. Eggman pulled out a communicator. "All units retreat."

"Sir...?" a confused voice replied.

"I SAID RETREAT!" Eggman screamed into the device. "THAT'S AN ORDER!"

"Y-yes sir!"

"This isn't over..." the Eggman glared at the blue robot before leaving.

As the leaders of Mobotropolis began to realize that the attack had been well and truly halted, a yellow beam of light landed in the room and resolved itself into a feminine version of their savior. Only yellow instead of blue.

"What did you do to his flying fortress?" Rock asked his sister.

"After I heard what you were saying, I went for the landing systems," Roll grinned. "The moment he tries to put that thing down it's going to crash hard."

"Good, that should keep him busy for a while," Rock nodded before turning to the king. "Your majesty, I apologize but I can't stay and explain. There are still areas that could contain injured people, and my sister and I need to start finding them sooner rather than later."

"Of... of course," King Acorn replied, still in a daze over events. "Please, help my subjects in whatever way you can."

"...and in light of the fact that Dr. Ivo 'Eggman' Robotnik is still at large, King Maximillion Acorn and the Royal Council would like to formally request that the robot heroes known as Mega Man and Mega Woman return to help protect the citizens," Charles relayed over the monitor.

"As much as I would love to accommodate you Charles," Dr. Light replied from his end, "my children are free willed and capable of making their own decisions. You will have to ask them."

"Actually, dad," Rock entered the room and the conversation, "we already talked about it. Sir Charles Hedgehog?"

"Please, call me Chuck, my boy," the mobian chuckled. "Walkers know I could never get your father to."

"Of course Sir Chuck," Rock grinned as the hedgehog groaned and his dad chuckled. "Anyway, we can't both come. You see, Station Square has its own mad scientist problem by the name of Dr. Wily who's escaped custody and remains at large. But you're right that Dr. Robotnik is a problem as well. So my sister and I talked it over and she's going to stay here and protect Station Square. But I would be happy to come and help fight against Dr. Robotnik and his forces."

"Hey Mega Dude!" the voice of the child version of Sonic greeted cheerfully. "I heard the news! So you're gonna hang around and kick Ro-butt-nik's massive ugly tush when he's being bad? Way past cool! Come on! You gotta meet the gang!"

Rock chuckled as he followed the hyperactive boy Sonic at a more sedate pace.

"Come oooonnn!" Sonic whined from where he stood with a group of friends. "You're being sloooow!"

"Just enjoying the peace," Rock smiled back as he caught up.

"Eh, that's cool," Sonic waved him off before zipping over to a finely dressed girl ground squirrel. "Anyway, this is Princess Sal. You met her old man already," Sonic zipped over to the two boys, a coyote and a walrus, of the group. "This is Ant and Boomer here, and that little guy over there with Rosie is Tails," Sonic gestured to a smiling woman holding a toddler fox with two tails.

"What about the girl we saved?" Rock asked as the thought occurred to him. He'd never checked up on her after the attack.

"I got her to the docs fast and they saved her life, but they had to am-poo-tat her arm and legs," Sonic answered quietly before perking back up. "But Uncle Chuck says he's gonna make her new ones! So she's gonna be a sea-berg!"

"Cyborg," Rock corrected.

"Yeah, one-a those!" Sonic agreed. "But hey, we need to finish introducing you! Guys, this is the Mega Dude who saved the whole city!"

"Actually," Rock chuckled as he dismissed his armor and appeared in civilian attire, "My name is Rock. And I'm pleased to meet you all."

"That's cool, man!" Sonic grinned.

"Yeah, Rock rocks!" (4) the other children, the future Freedom Fighters he'd met before, agreed enthusiastically.

Sonic had to do his best to keep himself calm. He and his other friends had finally, finally , been approved as full-fledged Freedom Fighters! And this was their first real official mission with their 'big bro' Rock, the mega hero Mega Man. Which clearly made it much better than all the times they'd snuck off to help him un officially. (5)

Rotor (no longer going by 'Boomer') had shown great skill with machines and computers and had learned mad skills from Uncle Chuck alongside pumping iron at the gym to boost his natural walrus strength. Tails had been right there with him (when he wasn't chasing after Sonic) proving to be quite the child genius.

Between the two of them and Uncle Chuck, as well as Rock's dad consulting on occasion, Bunnie had gained some sweet upgrades to her cybernetic limbs each time she went in to get them adjusted to make sure the tech that allowed them to shift to match her growing body was working right. The girl was shaping up to be a real powerhouse.

Antoine on the other hand had eventually mastered his easily spooked nerves and was perhaps the youngest guard in generations, being appointed as Sal's personal bodyguard by her dad the King (and promptly told by said princess that she could take care of herself, thank you very much).

And of course Princess Sally wasn't going to be left behind. Sonic was willing to bet that their group being approved for missions against Eggman was partly due to the fact that they all, Sal included, kept sneaking out to do it anyway. King Max probably figured he'd have fewer heart attacks by officially sanctioning them so he knew what his daughter was up to. That new computer she had, NICOLE, was pretty useful too. Even if she wouldn't tell him where it came from.

If only he could figure out how to keep that Amy girl from following them around... He didn't have anything against girls, but her loud declarations that he'd one day be her husband made him somewhat nervous. He'd never even met her before she did that the first time!

Now if only Rock didn't insist on doing things slow all the time… (6)

"Come oonnn!" Sonic whined. "I coulda been in and outta there by now!"

"You could have also been a smoking crater," Rock sighed. "Dr. Eggman's upgraded his defenses again."

"I can outrun anything Robuttnik can shoot at me!" the hedgehog bragged.

"Yeah, but it only takes one lucky shot," Rock retorted as he finished his scan. "Forgive me if I like my friends in one piece."

"Yeah, yeah," Sonic waved him off in begrudging admittance of the point and tapped his communicator. "Hey, Sal, how are things going on your end?"

"We're sending you the patrol patterns now," the voice of Princess Sally Acorn came over. "Dr. Eggman's new factory is pumping out badniks at an even faster pace than before, as well as over twice the pollutants as his last factory."

"I swear, this guy enjoys poisoning everything he touches," Rock grumbled. At least Dr. Wily had the good sense to deal in cleaner technologies when possible. Why bother conquering the world if you just turned it into an unlivable dump in the process? (7)

"No kidding," Sonic agreed as he began stretching in preparation for the attack. Nearby, Rock's robo-dog Rush perked up as he recognized the sign for imminent activity and came out of his standby state. "I..."

Sonic paused mid-stretch and blinked. He then turned slowly to face Rock and the robot saw his expression had shifted. It seemed older, wiser (though not by much), more mature (just a teensy bit).

"Good morning, 'little blue'," Rock smirked. Looks like Sonic was finally Awake.

"What does that..." Sonic started before blinking in realization and crossing his arms. Apparently his Loop memories had just integrated. "Funny 'big blue'."

Rock snorted in amusement at the second part of the nicknames he and Sonic had apparently picked up.

"Hey, Sal," the hedgehog tapped his communicator again, "You all Awake over there?"

"Bright-eyed and bushy tailed," the voice of Bunnie replied. "Y'all slept in this Loop hon!"

"Yeah, yeah," Sonic griped as Rock chuckled at the barb. Sal tended to Wake Up right about when she got NICOLE, especially after that Loop she had with Nanoha where 'COLE became her soul-bound intelligent device, and the rest of the Freedom Fighters were typically right behind her. "What's the plan for the Loop?"

"You spoil us, Zoneec," Antoine replied, "always lettink us choose how zees thinks go."

"I miss you guys when you're not Awake," Sonic replied and paused. "Well, mostly I miss Sal and the way she can't keep her hands off me. You're comic relief either way, Ant."

"Keep dreaming, Sonic," Sally replied, though some snickers could be heard on the other end. Sal gal must be blushing... He still had it.

"You know you love me," Sonic grinned. (8)

"May the heavens have mercy on us all," Sonic could hear Rotor's smirk over the line.

"Ha-ha you all," Sally reprimanded. "Anyway, I was thinking a baseline challenge run for now. Get a feel for how Rock's presence alters the dynamic before we start pulling anything big."

"Right-a-roony!" Sonic agreed before turning to Rock. "Ready to see how we do things in this neck of the multiverse?"

"Try to keep up," Rock smirked before jumping on Rush in jet mode and speeding off.

Sonic blinked, then smiled. That had sounded like a challenge.

Sally huffed as she got to her feet. She'd asked Sonic and Rock to let her take on Ixis Naugus solo this Loop. She'd been getting better at holding her own against the heavy hitters of her Loop, even used her new super form a few times. In any case, Rock had agreed to stay out so long as she wasn't in imminent mortal danger and Sonic had backed the decision.

"Well that was quite the pathetic display, Princess," the evil wizard sneered. "I do hope your companions will prove more worthwhile."

"We're not done yet," Sally glared back. "NICOLE?"

Understood. Set Up.

Ixis blinked as the device shifted into a more weapon-like appearance. What sorcery was this?

Firing lock cancelled.

"Good," Sally leveled the device in his direction and the magical build-up made the foul sorcerer's hair stand on end. "Load cartridge."

Cartridge loaded. Blaster one engaged.

"Fire." (9)

Knuckles shook his head as he stood on the shore of the floating island. Which wasn't currently floating.

"It figures," he told the red figure next to him. "We stop Dr. Eggman from releasing Chaos 0 and Dr. Wily sneaks past while we're busy and does it anyway."

The shaded face of Proto Man, mentor to the echidna prior to his Awakening, stared across the water at his former home of Station Square, scarf flapping in the breeze. "Eh, the two were bound to step on each other's plans at some point. I'm actually more surprised by the fact that Wily's built his own Skull Fleet this Loop. He usually just sticks to robot masters."

"And of course he manages to shatter the Master Emerald despite the fact that he hasn't had any schemes involving it, or the Chaos Emeralds for that matter, before now," Knuckles shook his head in begrudging amazement. "Seriously, what's this Wily guy's IQ anyway?"

"Rock says it depends on what test and scale you're using. Roll likes to say it's 666."

"Nah, Eggman's got that one reserved. Call it at least 667."

"I'm surprised you're giving my resident mad scientist the higher number."

"The fact that you can't find Wily's bases by following the trail of filth earns him a few points." (10)

"I was hoping I'd get to visit home under better circumstances!" Super Mega Man yelled at Super Sonic as they and Super Mega Woman faced off against the kaiju-sized Perfect Chaos Devil. (11)

"Hey, at least the docs stopped fighting!" Super Sonic yelled back.

"Only because Chaos blew both their fleets out of the sky!" Super Mega Woman retorted as she fired a super-sized charge shot at the rampaging water god.

"So, you're the ultimate lifeform?" the black-armored robot sneered. "I'm not impressed."

"Hmph," Shadow snorted derisively while trying to hide his interest. He and Bass hadn't really had the time for a proper throw-down last time they met. He normally liked to buck Eggman's plans for the ARK, but for a chance to arrange a duel with his obvious counterpart from Mega Man's universe? He'd play along with events for now. "Your pathetic mewlings are meaningless. Stay out of my way."

Yep, that looked like it was going to get Bass good and riled up for later. (12)

Explosions rattled Space Colony ARK as two heavily powered engines of destruction did their best to pound each other into oblivion.

"DIE YOU SENILE OLD TWIT!"

"FAT CHANCE YOU ROTUND SACK OF TOXIC WASTE!"

Contrary to what one might expect from recent events, the devastation was not due to Shadow or Bass. It was due to the actions of two notorious mad scientists, their personal battle crafts, and a distinct enmity for each other since the events several months prior involving the living water guardian Chaos.

"YOU DARE SPEAK THAT WAY TO A GENIUS LIKE ME?!" Eggman yelled as he fired missiles from his Eggwalker.

"YOU?! A GENIUS?!" Wily screeched as his Skull Saucer returned fire with homing balls of energy. "YOU'RE NOTHING BUT A FILTHY HACK WHO POISONS EVERYTHING HE TOUCHES!"

"THE WORLD IS MINE BY RIGHT TO DO WITH AS I PLEASE!" Eggman frothed as he opened fire with his machine guns.

"NO!" Wily's visage pulsed with rage as he rained down laser fire in return. "THE WORLD IS MINE! AND I WON'T HAVE SOME FOURTH-RATE COMMUNITY COLLEGIATE LIKE YOU TURN IT INTO A PILE OF GARBAGE!" (13)

"COMMUNITY COLLE–?!" Eggman's retort cut off as his fury grew so great that it prevented his speech. " DIE! "

"YOU FIRST!"

Shadow blinked from his place outside the ARK, idly wondering how a breathable environment was maintained out here most Loops, as one of the walls on the space station was blown out rather forcefully. "Well, the doctors seem to be having fun."

"I swear, I cannot take my dad anywhere ," Bass rubbed his face in aggravation, wondering why he'd thought involving his creator in this fiasco had sounded like a good idea.

Shadow smirked superiorly. "Yes, he's much too excitable to have made you my match. You should run along before you get hurt, little robot."

Bass stiffened and turned dangerously towards the dark hedgehog. Yep, that had refocused his attention nicely. "Oh, I think you'll be the one getting hurt, hedgehog."

"Big talk, from a weakling," Shadow performed a picture-perfect sneer.

"I'll show you who's weak!" Bass charged and swung his fist wildly.

Even in the baseline, such an unskilled attack wouldn't have come close to hitting Shadow. Honestly, even he had to admit that using his Chaos Control power to warp out of the way was just showing off, but then he rather liked doing that.

Bass turning immediately in his direction and opening fire with rapid shots from his buster almost caught the dark guardian off guard.

'He was able to track Chaos Control?' Shadow thought with interest. He wouldn't be the first to have done so, or even a member of an exclusive club when the Loops were considered, but it was still an impressive feat.

Shadow dodged as Bass closed in again, evading a blow that put a rather severe dent in the metal where he had been standing, and used his speed to increase the distance between them.

"This is the great 'ultimate lifeform?" Bass fired more shots after him. "A coward who can only run?!"

Shadow's eyes narrowed as he turned to race back towards his opponent. He'd heard that kind of insult so many times that it had almost lost meaning, and still Bass had managed to make it sting.

Remembering what he'd heard of Sonic's fight against this robot, he was prepared for the power kick leveled at his center of mass (14) and vaulted over it and into an inverted kick of his own. A kick which Bass caught. A twist of the robot's arm destroyed his balance and left him open to the spinning backhand that followed, sending him crashing into a nearby crate.

Shadow pulled himself out the next moment and wiped the dust from his face. "Not bad," he grinned back at his opponent. "But let's see if you can handle it for real!"

With that, Shadow charged forward, and saw a grin identical to his on Bass's face as he charged in kind.

The fight had escalated as fights are wont to do. Shadow had resorted to some of the Chaos powers he normally wouldn't discover until later in the timeline and Bass had called upon and united with Treble.

It was brutal. It was devastating. It was glorious.

It was being interrupted by the gigantic cybernetic Biolizard fusing with the space colony and forcing it into a rapid descent towards the planet below.

'Right, this happens,' Shadow wanted to slap himself for forgetting about the imminent threat to the planet in his pursuit of a worthy opponent.

"Hope you guys don't mind if we play through," Sonic said as he rode up on the back of Mega Man in his super adaptor form, the rest of the Chaos Emeralds in tow. "We'll just give ugly here a dose of the Super twosome and then you guys can get back to beating the snot out of each other."

"Screw that!" Bass growled. "This thing thinks it can interrupt our duel and then destroy our planet?! We're taking it out with you!"

Shadow thought for a moment and realized he didn't have anything real substantial to add to that and so settled for nodding.

The Finalhazard, as it would come to be known, was barely a threat to one super-form being. It could only be considered a challenge to two by virtue of the time limit the falling space station created. Four at once was just overkill.

Shadow still managed to duplicate his fake death from atmospheric freefall from the baseline, or at least enough that Bass bought it... for now. After all, he really didn't want to risk having to explain why a gigantic chunk of the station was now missing after one of Super Bass's shots went wide.

Princess Sally Acorn looked over the letter that had just been delivered to the Freedom Fighters. The contents... were not encouraging.

"Dear Team Mega Sonic," she read, "Guess what? We've finally decided to put aside our differences and together developed the ultimate weapon! In three days, the world shall fall before our combined genius! Think you can stop us? We welcome the attempt! Feel free to bring your friends, it won't make any difference! Sincerely Dr. Eggman and Dr. Wily."

"Even discountin' that we lived through similar events afore, that just don't smell right, Sally girl," Bunnie Rabbot-D'Coolette, cyborg powerhouse extraordinaire, folded her arms pointedly. "Those two might be all mad scientist-y and out to conquer the world and all, but they can't stand each other. Doc Wily's all perfectionist, gotta have everythin' just so, includin' the world he's takin' over."

"And the way Eggman pollutes everything as a matter of course doesn't sit well with him," Rotor added. "And Eggman, well, the way his brain is wired, you're either with him or against him."

"Indeed," Antoine nodded. "It would seem ze game, she is two feet, no?"

Everyone stared at the coyote swordsman for a moment. (15)

"Sugah-twan, ah reckon ya do that kinda stuff on purpose," Bunnie shook her head at her husband's antics.

"I have no idea what you are talkink about," Antoine sniffed with exaggerated offense, but no one missed the 'secret' grin on his face.

"In any case," Sally refocused everyone's attention on the matter, "this needs looking into. We've done this before, so we know the usual drill. Metal Sonic is probably manipulating things behind the scenes in order to gather the world's best heroes and copy their data, becoming a supreme mechanical lifeform. The question is, are we ready to join in this time?"

"Of course you are Aunt Sally!" Tails chimed in from where he'd been doing maintenance on the Tornado. "Rotor's got the power slot down pat, either you or Bunnie can be the flying member with your tech, Antoine's gotten pretty speedy since he had that Loop training against the Roadrunner (16), and with Rock here this Loop I bet we're probably going to have teams of four instead of three so there's room for everyone!"

"I gotta say I've been kind of looking forward to this," Rock admitted. "Sonic even insisted on practicing how to fire his Spin Dash form with my buster in preparation. And... Hold on, I just got a message from Roll. Looks like Amy's roped my sister into helping her chase after Sonic while also helping Big and Cream look for Froggy and a chao named Chocola."

"Honestly, she does this every time Sonic takes vacation time," Sally rubbed her forehead.

"Eggman seems to intrude on Sonic's downtime fairly often as well," NICOLE added. "Though that would seem to be more poor timing than deliberate action." (17)

"I know," Sally groaned. "It's just... I think Amy's obsession with Sonic is actually worse when she's not Awake. And no, I haven't forgotten the 'bride wars' Loop (18). In any case, Rock? Tails? Take the Tornado and go get Knuckles, then go find Sonic and start going after Eggman and Wily's supposed project and see if you can't derail it before it gets off the ground. We'll get started here on our end."

"Roger that princess!" Rock saluted playfully.

Rouge often wondered if their Loop had it out for Shadow.

Though he no longer suffered the kind of severe burnout and amnesia after the original ARK incident like in the baseline or most variants, he still managed to end up in one of Dr. Eggman's stasis pods after facing Finalhazard half the time he was Awake. Some of the events that resulted in such an outcome would have done Rube Goldberg proud.

This time was, thankfully, something much simpler. From a spycam she'd set up ahead of time (mostly because she liked to tease Shadow about some of the sillier things that landed him in this situation (19)), she'd seen that he'd simply had a bad landing. Something had knocked him off balance on the way down from space and he'd crashed instead of landing safely.

And then some of Eggman's bots had come to collect him while he was unconscious. Which had led to her searching him out, again, and her current predicament.

"You sure he's here?" her partner for this heist asked for the umpteenth time while his pet robo-wolf stalked around just as impatiently.

"For the last time, Bass, yes , I'm sure," she sniped as she began cracking the lock on the reinforced door. "Just be on the lookout for any security."

As the door opened and Rouge spotted the stasis pod holding Shadow, she mused that Bass insisting on helping her find the dark hedgehog had been a little unexpected, but nothing she couldn't adjust for. The robot insisted it was because they hadn't properly finished their duel, but Rouge could tell there was a grudging sort of respect as well. The kind Shadow tended to have for his own rivals. In any case, it would certainly be a different take on these events.

Assuming Wily's son managed to survive E-123 Omega first. (20)

Vector was leaning back in his chair in the Chaotix Detective Agency's office, listening to some chill beats and covertly staring at his buddy Espio while headbanging to disguise his interest. If it wasn't for the fact that their little bet had turned out to be pretty fun, he might actually be mad at the chameleon ninja.

A while back, Vector had gotten bored with how predictable and easy many of their cases were getting. While he still liked getting paid for the work, he'd also come to enjoy the mental challenge of some of their tougher cases as well. The problem was that most of their cases tended to involve more of the legwork and action part of the job than actually puzzling out clues. One day he'd been griping over how he wanted more mental challenges than physical for a change and Espio had retorted with their current bet.

The bet went like so: Espio would, when Awake, practice his 'stealth looper' skills and try to act like his baseline self. Vector, by contrast, would, when Awake, attempt to deduce if his friend was Awake or not. Vector got a point every time he caught Espio Awake, and Espio got a point if he made it the whole Loop without an Awake Vector catching on. To make it even more interesting, Vector lost a point any time he accused an Unawake Espio of looping and Espio lost one if an Unawake Vector caught on. It had proven rather challenging so far. Espio might have a comfortable lead for now, but it wasn't a decisive one either. (21)

"Guys, guys! Guess who's here!" the voice of Charmy Bee, most definitely not Awake this time and who couldn't act that way to save his life, yelled as he burst through the door and straight for Vector. Caught off guard from observing Espio, Vector yelped and fell out of his chair as Espio calmly turned to regard the second individual leaning against the doorframe in amusement.

"Nice to see you, Blues," the chameleon ninja who might or might not be Awake greeted. "Haven't really seen you since, when was it? The Dark Brotherhood incident?"

"Yeah, and it was Metal Sonic Kai before that, when we formed the Chaotix," Vector recalled as he rubbed his head and sat up. Shade and her clan weren't always predictable on when they'd show up. Sometimes it was later in the Loop and sometimes it was early. The latter was usually when Shade was pink and named Julie-Su, but not this time. "You don't drop by that much Pogo Man, so what's up? You got a case or somethin'?"

"Yeah, a case!" Charmy cheered.

"As a matter of fact, I might," Blues finished shaking his head at the nickname the crocodile insisted on calling him and brought out a package. A somewhat familiar package.

'That time already, eh?' Vector thought.

Roll wanted to facepalm as Cream, and her chao Cheese, were nearly blown away out over the ocean. A little girl the rabbit might be, and not Awake this time from what Roll could tell, but she had proven to be quite the formidable warrior in her own right a few times. And then she was nearly taken out by a stiff breeze ...

Fortunately, Big was on hand with his fishing pole to snag the girl before she was blown halfway to the next continent, along with the only clue of what had happened to two of their group's friends.

Of course Roll had memorized the picture, but no one seemed to be asking her.

"Froggy," Big lamented as he looked over the blurry photo at the image of his pet amphibian that had once bonded with Chaos being kidnapped.

"Chocola..." Cheese echoed the sentiment as she looked over the other figure, a chao, being kidnapped in the photo. (22)

Kidnapped by someone that looked remarkably like Sonic, if a blurry black and white photo of a hedgehog's back from a high angle could be considered positive identification. But it was enough to garner the almost obsessive interest of the final member, and self-proclaimed leader, of their group, Amy Rose.

Honestly, Roll found it somewhat disturbing that the pink hedgehog girl could be described with both the words 'hero' and 'stalker' without sounding ironic or snarky. Those were two concepts which should not go together in her opinion.

'Just remind yourself this isn't about her creepy crush on Sonic,' Roll told herself. 'You're not doing this for her, you're doing it for a little girl and a nice guy who miss their friends. Not for the hammer-wielding stalker girl.'

"Hey Shade," Mighty greeted the female echidna as she and a green armored figure landed nearby, "who's your friend?"

"I-i-it's a S-s-sniper Joe!" Mighty's fellow Chaotix member Ray stuttered in shock as he got a better look at Shade's companion, and noticed a smaller yellow object hovering over him. "A-a-a-and h-he's got a MET!"

"Peace friend Ray," Shade held out her hands calmingly. (23) "This is not your average Joe. And these are not average circumstances that cause our paths to cross."

"S-so th-th-that's the renegade Joe unit Rock t-told us about?" Ray offered.

Mighty raised an eyebrow. He'd heard from Rock that his place might have gained a very unexpected looper recently, but the robot had also said that none of them had managed to find out for sure. Assuming there was a Joe unit looping, he never liked to stick around for long and didn't say much when he did.

"Possibly," Shade allowed, "but that is of minor importance at the moment."

"Indeed," a voice was transmitted from the flight-capable MET hovering near the Joe unit. "I understand you are all part of the Chaotix Detective Agency, correct? I have heard good things about you and require your services."

Mighty exchanged glances with Ray and Shade. This sounded like what Vector and the rest of the team usually got roped into. And Shade was sort of an off-and-on member of the team in any case, some Loops she was, and some she wasn't.

"And I can pay handsomely."

'And that's that...' the super-strong armadillo sighed to himself. 'If Vector learned I turned down a job that promised payment, I'd never hear the end of it.'

He looked at Ray and Shade again, and considered the quiet Joe for a moment. If the robot was looping, they had a team of four Awake members for this case. If not...

'I have a bad feeling about this...'

Rock and Tails calmly maintained their flight, atop Rush and in the Tornado respectively, as Sonic read the letter, while running backwards just to show off, and Knuckles reclined calmly in the back seat of the plane.

"Well, this sounds like quite the party invitation!" the hedgehog grinned. "It'd be a shame not to attend and see what new twists await us!"

"The heck?" Blues blurted in confusion as he and the Chaotix faced off against a flying machine that looked like Bliking.

Being piloted by Dr. Wily.

"Something the matter, Pogo Man?" Vector asked as the mad doctor taunted them. If nothing else, it was a change from what they normally faced off against.

"Yeah," Blues readied his shield as the Bliking look-alike's wings extended to reveal weapons. "Dr. Wily never engages in person this early in one of his schemes."

"That a fact?" Vector mused.

"Interesting..." Espio muttered to himself.

"Watch out!" Charmy yelled as he pointed at the craft. "Here he comes!"

"Dr. Eggman, are you up to no good again?" Amy Rose accused as she and the others faced off against Dr. Eggman and his hawk-like war plane.

As Cream and Big childishly admonished the madman for being 'bad', Roll mused that the man had a definitively different approach to this sort of thing than Dr. Wily. The rotund would-be conqueror liked to take a very 'hands-on' approach to his conquests, insisting on piloting most of his war machines into battle personally. Only the fact that his personal craft was detachable from his war machines allowed him to escape time and time again.

As she went through the motions of antagonizing the Chaotix (with guest star Proto Man), mostly for the benefit of her Unawake teammates, Rouge almost felt sorry for the rag-tag band of detectives.

After all, once they'd finally gotten everything straight with Omega, he and Bass had hit it off frighteningly well. One overly enthusiastic engine of destruction was enough to make her feel pity for all but the most powerful and vile opponents they would ever face.

"Preparing to unleash fiery destruction of unnecessary proportions," Eggman's renegade masterpiece monotoned.

"Now you're talking!" the Black Prince grinned back as he and Omega opened fire. (24)

Two was overkill no matter how you sliced it.

As the Freedom Fighters clashed with Shade and her team of Chaotix (plus a Joe unit), Sally had to shake her head at how cheesy the dialogue they'd traded had been. They'd tried to make their clash believable to whoever was on the other end of the MET relaying instructions to the second Chaotix team, and it seemed to have worked. Though the fact that the client wasn't here in person might have helped with that. Sally certainly wouldn't have bought what she'd participated in.

A narrowly dodged swipe from Shade's blades refocused her attention on the battle at hand. Mock or no, there were real weapons being thrown around.

"A-heh..." Sonic gulped with (slightly) exaggerated nervousness as the figure across from him and his team finished registering. "Amy! What a... surprise!"

The pink hedgehog just continued on like he hadn't said anything. "This time there's no way out of marrying me!"

"Are you really going along with this?" Rock whispered to his sister over their helmets' comms.

"Partially," Roll whispered back with an audible smirk. "After all, we haven't sparred in a while, bro."

"Friends of yours?" Shadow asked Bass, currently in his super adaptor form, as the last of eight figures finished surrounding the group known as 'Team Dark'.

"Surrender in the name of the Eggman-Wily empire!" the bat-winged individual among their opponents declared.

"Yeah, right," Bass scoffed as if the robot hadn't spoken. "I don't care what they look like, these are not my dad's robot masters. If they were, they would know I don't surrender."

"Scans indicate opposing models have been factory constructed," Omega intoned.

"We are the seventh squad of the new Eggman-Wily Empire!" the false Shade Man declared again as the apparent replica's of Wily's seventh set of robot masters readied themselves for battle. "Resistance is futile!"

"We don't have time for this," Rouge groaned.

"Well, then it's a good thing dad upgraded my copy chip," Bass grinned as he patted Shadow on the back.

"Did you just...?" the dark hedgehog stared at the robot accusingly.

"Hey, I liked those chaos powers of yours when we threw down," Bass grinned as he held up the red Chaos Emerald the group had found early on in this endeavor. "Thought I'd take them for a spin."

"Hmph..." Shadow grinned as he hopped up on Bass's back and placed his own hand on the emerald while Rouge air lifted Omega over their heads. "Then let's show them how 'futile' our resistance is..."

"CHAOS..." they both yelled as the eight robot master replicas began to charge.

"...CONTROL/BLAST!" Shadow and Bass finished respectively, freezing the eight in place even as a wave of red power rushed out, followed by a massive 360 degree barrage from Omega to seal the fate of all eight opponents.

Rouge had enough time to land and begin filing her nails before the temporal freezing effect ended and the eight robots were finally able to explode spectacularly.

"First Dr. Eggman in his Egg Hawk and now these guys," Mighty observed as he and the rest of the Chaotix (plus one) broke off their engagement from what he recognized as eight of Dr. Wily's robot masters and put some distance between them. The set used in his second invasion if Mighty didn't miss his guess. Though they weren't fighting as intelligently as the armadillo would have expected. "Certainly looks like the two are working together."

"I WOULD NEV–I mean it's all clearly a trick of some sort," the voice of their client hastily corrected itself from the MET that hovered nearby. "You must deal with them quickly and move on!"

"Understood," the Sniper Joe responded curtly as he knelt down with his shield over his head. "Engaging Hammer model hydraulics for team maneuver."

"Ready, Shade? Ray?" Mighty asked.

"Always," Shade replied as she hopped onto the shield.

"Y-yes..." Ray responded more hesitantly as he joined her, with Mighty a moment later.

"Launch!" Mighty ordered and felt the shield shoot he and the other two up into the air like a springboard. Ray grabbed both him and Shade at the apex and flung them even higher. As they reached the new apex, Mighty curled into a ball and felt Shade throw him straight at the center of their gathered opponents.

"MIGHTY IMPACT!" he yelled right before he hit. (25)

The massive blast of sound from the group blew back the Chaotix's eight opponents, their sparking and damaged bodies not rising again.

"That wasn't so hard," Vector observed as he put his mike away. "Doc Wily usually make 'em this easy?"

"Not a chance," Blues replied as he knelt next to the Shadow Man replica and examined the sparking machinery. The third set of Dr. Wily's robot masters could never have fallen this easily.

"Didn't think so," the crocodile detective folded his arms.

"An astute observation," the voice of their client came over the walkie talkie he carried, "but of little consequence at the moment. Your quarry lies on the other side of the canyon. You must make haste before it is too late!"

"Understood," Espio intoned as the group set off towards their next objective.

The eight robots that had identified themselves as the 'fifth squad of the new Eggman-Wily Empire' were anything but coordinated, but they definitely had firepower.

"Team maneuver!" Sally called out, getting Antoine, Bunnie, and Rotor to fall back to her position.

"My blade eez at your command," Antoine confirmed.

"Then let's do this!" Sally ordered as both she and the swordsman dashed forward at high speed, quickly becoming a darting wall of cutting force that halted the robots in their advance before suddenly ending as Sally and Antoine reappeared between their other two teammates.

"Take it away, ma cherie," Antoine grinned.

"Mah pleasure, Sugah-Twan!" Bunnie grinned as she leveled her cybernetic arm cannon in one direction and Rotor aimed his 'sonic boomers' in the other.

"Buh-bye!" the walrus told their opponents as the two opened fire. (26)

Roll wasn't entirely sure how the whole thing worked. She just knew that the balancing act that started with Big at the bottom, her atop his umbrella, followed by Amy holding up an upside-down Cream with her hand allowed Cheese to draw upon their combined power and unleash flowers that threw their opponents back and damaged them greatly. Though Tango jumping around and swiping at them (flowers or opponents wasn't clear) helped she supposed.

Of course, the budget replicas of Dr. Light's original robot masters weren't that tough in the first place, but the whole thing still boggled the mind. (27)

Rock grunted as he dodged a shot from what appeared to be Pharaoh Man, but couldn't have been. Dr. Cossack's robot masters had been recovered and were still in his possession as of that morning.

"Maximum charge times 2 reached!" he called out to the other three members of his team. "One more and I'm ready!"

"Can't you charge any faster?" Knuckles griped as his fists made no impression on the faux Skull Man's barrier.

"Not if we want to do this right!" Tails replied as he dodged bladed rings in mid-air.

"Maximum charge times 3 reached!" Rock yelled out and got into position.

"All right!" Sonic cheered as he made for the robot's arm cannon and curled up into his Spin Dash ball. "Party time!"

"OVERDRIVE BUSTER!" Rock yelled. "FIRE ONE!"

Sonic was off, surrounded by a charged shot as he tore through the ranks of their opponents even as Tails took his place for the second shot with Knuckles right behind him for the third.

"Dr. Eggman's weapons must be aboard that ship!" the voice from the MET spoke to Mighty's Chaotix team as they beheld the Egg Albatross, upgraded from the Egg Hawk they'd faced previously. "Destroy it before it reaches the canyon!"

"Sounds easy enough," Shade commented.

"I-I-I'm n-not so sure..." Ray hesitated.

"Ready all cannons!" Dr. Eggman yelled from his cockpit.

"Open fire!" Dr. Wily finished from his seat in the Bliking, currently mounted atop a flying whale craft known as the Hogale.

"Looks lahk Doc Wily's traded up Sally-girl," Bunnie commented. "Think we can take him?"

"Of course we can," Sally replied.

"Like there's any doubt," Rotor grinned as he took point and led the charge.

Amy huffed as the last of Dr. Eggman's machine fell to the ground in ruins. That had been harder than she'd thought. How did Sonic do this all the time?

Seeing the downed form of Dr. Eggman, she strolled over to give him a piece of her mind (and possibly her hammer), only for a spring-loaded head to pop out of his chest and scare nearly ten years off of her life.

Blues stared at the robot replica of Dr. Wily with its head bouncing around on a large spring.

"Good job boys," Vector congratulated. "Guess that Dr. Wily was a fake after all."

"You have a gift for deducing the obvious," the voice of their client interjected drily over the walkie talkie.

"Oh?" Vector replied with clear interest.

"In any case," the voice cleared its throat, "your next objective lies in the jungle to the north..."

"Hey, Sonic?" Rock in his adaptor armor called out as he and the others left behind the robotic replica of Dr. Eggman and the ruins of the Egg Albatross. "I've been curious about something. I know you told me a while back that your friend Amy suffered from Sakura Syndrome early on, especially where her crush on you was concerned. But... I swear you actually seem more nervous around the current Unawake version of her than you did the Awake Amy last time. Why?"

"Good luck with that," Knuckles rolled his eyes, getting an agreeing nod from Tails. "Sonic won't even tell us what happened and we've been looping longer than Amy."

"I think he told Aunt Sally after she Woke Up," Tails added, "but swore her to secrecy."

"Yeah, alright," Sonic sighed, causing both Tails and Knuckles to stare at him incredulously. "I suppose it's about time I talked about it."

The incredulous looks turned slowly to Rock, wondering what unseen power he had to get the eternal 'macho man' to actually open up about things.

"Amy's been after me as a boyfriend; lover, husband, you name it; since before the Loops began. And I'd been steadfastly running from her for just as long. So one Loop early on, before Tails was even Awake, I decided to stop running from her and give the two of us a shot."

No one present missed the Richter-scale shudder the Blue Blur had right then.

"It was... bad. The kind of bad that you hear on the evening news and it makes you want to go toss your chili dogs. The kind of bad that gives people nightmares for the rest of their lives even when they never experienced it. I don't know if Amy would have been like that in the baseline or if I just bad lucked into a really disturbing variant, but I haven't been able to think about us having a relationship since without getting vivid flashbacks. You'll forgive me for not going into details, right?"

"Sure," Rock looked sympathetic. He might not be as experienced, but he'd had a Loop or two where a trusted friend turned out to be... not. They weren't easy to deal with.

"Yeah," Knuckles placed a comforting hand on the hedgehog's shoulder, "not a problem."

"Always, Sonic," Tails held out his fist.

"Heh," Sonic bumped his own fist with Tails's. "Thanks guys. Now enough sappy stuff, we've got us an evil empire to take down!"

The other three grinned as they took off after the hedgehog. Sonic never stayed down for long.

"Lifeform data is incomplete," a synthetic voice spoke. "Intercept all hostiles at the haunted canyon and obtain further scans. Take the remaining masters with you."

"As you wish," a female voice replied. "My love."

---

1) Or just not returning Rock's calls in a timely manner, as usual.

2) You get exactly one guess who this is.

3) Rock is kinda scary when he wants to be...

4) You have no idea how long I've wanted to write that line.

5) And incidentally giving their families heart attacks when they found out.

6) Sonic never quite caught on to the fact that Rock was amused by his impatience.

7) You know, it occurs to me that if you dropped Dr. Eggman into an episode of Captain Planet and the Planeteers, no one would think him out of place amongst the show's other villains.

8) Sally was perfectly fine with this, actually. What mortified her was the fact that Sonic knew and never let her forget it.

9) Ixis Naugus was last seen that Loop doing a credible impression of Team Rocket. Complete with twinkle.

10) Honestly, I think the reason baseline Dr. Eggman burns so many bridges is because he likes to watch them go up in flames.

11) Perfect Chaos Devil ?! That's across the Godzilla Threshold for certain .

12) Shadow likes to live dangerously. Like that's any surprise.

13) O.O I... I think them's fightin' words...

14) The same kind of kick, in fact, that Bass nailed Sonic with in both the baseline and the activation Loop.

15) Even I stared for a moment.

16) Hey, he is a coyote. It was bound to happen.

17) At least as far as anyone could tell. No one would put it past Dr. Eggman to deliberately plan his operations to interfere with the vacations of his hated foes. He's just that petty.

18) Nor would anyone else who'd been Awake, regardless of how much they tried.

19) Especially the one that had involved noodles, a young human boy, and a stuffed tiger.

20) The room certainly didn't.

21) It should be noted that loopers tended to come up with some rather interesting, and infinitely varied, ways of keeping themselves entertained.

22) Tango just yawned somewhere off to the side, proving that Dr. Light had, in fact, succeeded in programming a cat.

23) I make no apologies for the following line. At all.

24) Bass and Omega are fire-forged friends. They should know. They set the fire themselves.

25) 'Cause he's a brick... house... He's the mighty Mighty, taking the badniks out...

26) I was not thinking about a certain Mythbuster when I wrote this line. At least not consciously. Honest.

27) I'm as puzzled as Roll. That particular team maneuver made absolutely no sense when I first played the game Sonic Heroes and the passage of time has not provided illumination.

Mega Loops 7

7.1

"I built you as Rock, after my love of music," the Unawake Dr. Light informed his remade son. "You are something very different now."

Rock grinned at the familiar line and began his usual response, only for his father to interrupt him.

"Now, while I would normally be happy to let you choose your own name, I'm afraid that the parent company of Light Labs made a... rather insistent request. Therefore, you are to be known as... Sega Man!"

Rock blinked several times as he tried to process that in the following silence, a silence broken as Roll erupted in giggles. 'I am never living this down...' he thought with a sigh.

"You are to be known as... Miga Man!" Dr. Light said with good cheer.

'At least I'm not alone this time...' Rock thought to himself as Roll began sputtering over being called 'Miga Woman'.

"Powered by the mysterious medals, you shall be known as Meda Man and Meda Woman!" Dr. Light happily informed the newly converted Rock and Roll.

"As you were named for my love of music, this stellar reaction weapon was named after my love of astronomy. The Vega Buster!"

'Which makes us Vega Man and Vega Woman,' Rock sighed to himself. 'Still doesn't explain why it comes with a slash claw setting.'

"Your new Nega Busters will tap power directly from your cells to fire shots of negative energy..." Dr. Light explained as he worked, ignorant of how his children groaned at the thought of the latest pun on their baseline hero titles.

"Your new Meta Busters..."

Rock and Roll blinked together as their father explained the experimental metaphysical energy weapon. 'How is that even supposed to work...?'

"Utilizing the beta prototype energy cannon, you shall be known as Beta Woman!"

'This is actually kind of funny from this end,' a not-converted-this-Loop Rock admitted to himself.

"snicker Go... heehee Go Lego Man!" Dr. Light chuckled. "Build for everlasting peace!"

"You are enjoying this way too much dad..." Rock sweatdropped at the antics of his Awake creator.

"B-but Rock–!" Roll tried to protest, only to be taken by a renewed fit of giggles.

"Laugh all you like, sis," Rock allowed himself a grin. "Remember, you're next."

"Erk!" Roll abruptly stopped laughing at the reminder.

7.2

"Arzee, water off tie lark," Roll gave the order to her allies even as she cursed this Loop for the umpteenth time. Everything was the same except the language. All of the words of the familiar language had been switched at random. If this kind of thing kept happening, she'd never be able to communicate properly again.

7.3

As a looper and an Anchor, Jean-Luc Picard was long used to rolling with most anything the Loops threw his way. After all, in his baseline he'd regularly dealt with the Borg, Q, Starfleet bureaucracy, and the attentions of Lwaxana Troi. Awakening to a simple replacement of one of his crew members by another looper didn't even break his train of thought.

"Mister Blues, adjust heading to 130, mark 47," Jean-Luc Picard ordered.

"Aye Captain," his current android lieutenant commander replied easily.

What he was finding a touch jarring was how this new individual had managed to talk Starfleet into bending the uniform rules and allow him to wear a scarf and shades on duty. The pompadour was usually against regulations for officers as well.

7.4

"...this Friday, you will all celebrate your Wilypendence!" Dr. Wily cackled from the giant screen as the horrified pedestrians in the square below cowered. Images of his eight new American-themed robot masters and their actions surrounded his own.

Blues scowled from his perch on a nearby rooftop. Sure, the United States of America was far from perfect and had its share of problems, both from within and without, but the concept that people deserved to be free the country had been founded on was still a good and valid one. Regardless of any shortcomings in living up to that promise. To see it mocked so, especially during one of his rare times in his home reality, infuriated him beyond reasoning.

The Red Raider tapped the side of his helmet and opened a channel to his siblings. "Rock? Roll? Focus your efforts on rescue and containment. This time Wily and his bots are on me."

Blues reflected that perhaps trying to free Liberty Island first hadn't been the best of ideas as the green armored (with matching green imitation skin) Liberty Woman kept throwing balls of golden fire at him. It was a good thing his shield was so sturdy or he'd have been in serious trouble.

"Give Wily your scrap, your castaways, your forgotten machines so that he may build a great and glorious world from your ashes!" the female-themed robot sang as she continued to assault him.

Blues bit back a cry of pain as his damage indicators blared at him from the impact. Never mind that he'd blocked the blow with his shield, the mighty sledgehammer from his opponent, the Guts Man-sized Steel Driver Man, had kinetic energy to spare.

And he was holding the blasted thing in one hand.

Blues barely dove out of the way as the second sledgehammer in the robot master's other hand cratered the railyard floor where he'd been standing. No way was he going to let that particular standoff go on any longer. The Liberty Flame he'd gotten wasn't proving much better than his standard buster against this opponent, but he needed some distance regardless.

Blues grumbled as he stepped through the gate leading to the field of Yankee Stadium. It wasn't his upcoming opponent, Home Run Man, that had him grumbling. No, it was the robot underlings that had essentially infested the sports stadium.

METs. Every corner of the structure had been crawling with METs. Honestly, forget the endless stream of evil robots led by an incurable madman, Blues wasn't sure how his brother and sister dealt with the pu–

"Batter up!" came the yell from behind him as Home Run Man nearly took Blues's head off with his bat.

Blues swore internally as he dove to the side and tried to return fire, only for most of the shots to be deflected by the bat of the robot that looked disturbingly like Babe Ruth. Several were deflected right back at him in fact and he was forced to cease the barrage and defend with his shield. The robot swung the bat too fast for Blues to be comfortable with the Sledgehammer, and the way he was hitting the plasma bolts back suggested the Liberty Flame wouldn't be any better. Which meant this was going to be a long drawn out affair.

He was tempted, oh so tempted, to just whip out a lightsaber or one of the other more esoteric, and powerful, weapons from his time in the greater multiverse. But despite how often he was away, he still knew how good Dr. Wily was with analyzing the unfamiliar, even before the weird 'Dreaming' state Blues had heard of was taken into account. An easier fight now was not worth the trouble Dr. Wily seeing out-of-Loop powers would possibly bring later.

"So," Blues announced as he stepped out onto the football field, "you're the famous Grid Man."

The football robot blinked back at him. Behind his shades, Blues mirrored the gesture.

'The 'famous' Grid Man?' he checked his memory circuits. 'Where did that come from?'

"Heh," Grid Man chuckled after a moment before getting into the stance of a linebacker about to charge. "I like it, but flattery gets you nowhere on this field." The robot produced a football as Blues readied himself. "Set Long Bomb! Hut! Hike!"

The football was punted high into the air straight for the Red Raider who wasted no time in getting out of the way before the explosion at impact gouged out a crater in the turf.

'Sit-Rep is showing non-flammable materials on his frame. I could take out his bombs, sure, but not him,' Blues analyzed rapidly. 'Sledgehammer and Home Run Bat are also a no-go. He's got enough padding in his armor that I could hit him with a truck and he'd not feel it.'

Blues dodged another explosion and an idea came to him. 'Unless... unless I can mark one of those 'return to sender'...'

He prepped the Home Run Bat and got ready as another of the exploding footballs came at him. he waited for the perfect moment, swung, and– –was sent skidding back over the field by the force of the blast.

BOOM

'Brilliant, Proto Man,' he scolded himself as almost every damage indicator in his robot body blared at him accusingly. 'Hit the high explosive right on the impact trigger. What were you thinking?'

He got to his feet and chugged an E-Tank before glaring at his opponent. "Let's try that again, shall we?"

Blues stood in the snowy mountain forest and examined his opponent.

Frontier Man was fairly tall, a bit thin, seemingly covered in furs (including what appeared to be a raccoon skin cap), and whistled the Davy Crockett theme. And then there were the odd parts about him.

"What, exactly," Blues inquired at last, "are those ?"

Frontier Man lifted his large, furry, appendages, trailing icy mist the whole way, and brandished them threateningly. "These are my Bear Arms," he declared. "As an American Master, I have a right to them."

"Of course you do," Blues facepalmed. "But I was referring to your 'claws'. Are those... Bowie knives?"

"Indeed they are," Frontier Man grinned, light reflecting off of his blades and teeth alike, and charged.

Blues switched to the Liberty Flame and fired, only to have the golden fireballs swatted out of the air.

'Damnit!' he swore as he blocked the ice-enhanced blades with his shield. 'Does this weapon work on any of them?!'

As Blues faced down Ranger Man, he couldn't help but think that the robot had stepped straight out of an old western. His pristine white hat and black mask certainly painted an interesting picture. But staring each other down wasn't getting him anywhere, so Blues picked a weapon and opened fire. The golden Liberty Flame shot towards the robot an–

"Lightning Draw!" Ranger Man yelled. Before he'd even finished the first word, he'd pulled his pistol and fired several electric bullets. The first one hit Blues's shot, which left him scrambling to block the rest.

"Little slow there, pardner," Ranger Man drawled smugly.

Blues narrowed his eyes behind his shades, noting how his opponent was making no move to close the distance between them. His weakness was likely something for close combat then. Blues switched out for the Sledgehammer and charged shield first.

Ranger Man stood his ground, waiting for the moment that Blues dropped his shield and swung to fire again. The electricity sparked over the prototype robot master and paralyzed his servos, but the Sledgehammer already had too much momentum to be stopped by that.

Blues swore as he dodged another shot from Minute Man's musket rifle. Ranger Man might have been fast on the draw, but Minute Man was fast period. And he was as accurate as he was fast.

The only good thing was that he didn't have a high rate of fire. Unfortunately, the robot master was just as skilled using his musket rifle on the defensive to block shots and deflect melee weapons. And if that wasn't enough, the thing had a bayonet on the end that was far from just for show.

Deciding to try his luck, Blues rushed in and used his shield to deflect the barrel. In the moment Minute Man was open, he aimed his arm cannon point blank...

...and was knocked to the ground by the butt of the rifle instead. In the next instant, the barrel was pointed straight at his head.

"What's the deal with the guns anyway?" he asked, trying to get his opponent talking and stall for time. It was surprising how often that worked. "They're not even built in."

"Built-in or not, the American Masters have a right to bear arms," Minute Man replied firmly.

Blues blinked. 'Surely Dr. Wily wouldn't be that arrogant... What am I thinking? Of course he would.'

Blues switched weapons even as he swung his arm up. The Bear Arms swept aside the rifle and the ice noticeably slowed Minute Man's movements. Slowed them enough for Blues to bury the Bowie knife claws in his opponent's torso.

Blues stared at the streetlamp pole. The metal streetlamp pole that had just been severed in twain by perhaps the most ridiculous weapon he'd yet come across.

"Impressed by my Mustard Cutter?" the equally ridiculous robot master laughed with surprising menace. "Ready to give up? Come on, what are you really thinking?"

Blues turned slowly and switched to the Liberty Flame weapon. If it wasn't going to work on this opponent, he had no clue what it would work on. "I think... that it's time to roast a Hot Dog Man..."

7.V

"Inferior Earth robot!" Terra growled as his hands sparked with energy.

"Weak alien trash!" Bass retorted viciously as his own buster charged up.

Rock and Roll glanced at each other. In an instant of silent communication, they both decided the best thing they could do in this case was to make themselves as scarce as possible and ran for it.

REATTEMPTING ACTIVATION OF LOOPER CANDIDATE 'BASS'...

ERROR: ACTIVATION FAILED.

BRANCH DESIGNATED 'MEGA' CURRENTLY UNABLE TO SUPPORT CANDIDATE 'BASS' AS LOOPER.

COMPILING LOOP MEMORY DATA FOR LATER ATTEMPT…

7.6

"So..." Dr. Light said. "I'm replacing Thomas Edison and you're replacing Nikola Tesla?"

"It seems so," the other Dr. Light replied.

"Now isn't this awkward?"

"Yes, rather. Now, what should we DO about it?"

"Well, there's this one video I always wanted to act out..."

"Then I guess it's time for..."

"EPIC RAP BATTLES OF HISTORY!" they both yelled together.

7.7.7 (Hubris Plus - Pitchblende)

Rock hunkered down next to a stack of cinder blocks, taking a moment to compose himself before confronting Gutsman. While he didn't necessarilyneed the breaks anymore, the moments of calm that came just before the Robot Masters were something he'd become attached to. It was nice, to take a second for himself and-

CRASH!

"Well, that's new," he muttered as he repositioned himself to get a better view. Guts might have been one of the more smash-happy robots his father had made, but he wasn't really the type to break things for no reason. Besides which, that hadn't sounded like the solid impact of construction materials. It had had the noisy, clamoring sound of something with a lot of moving parts and crumple zones.

Peeking around the corner he saw the large construction robot contemptuously heave a car off of himself. The hood was bashed in in much the same way it would have been if it had wrapped itself around a tree, and Gutsman was rolling his shoulder in a way that suggested strained hydraulics.

"That all ya got?!" Guts shouted towards the top of the embankment where Rock assumed the car had come from. Following the Master's gaze, he caught sight of someone sliding down, their heels driving furrows into the packed earth and their arms thrown out for balance. The glint of sunlight off metal on their head and forearms made him guess robot, but the cargo pants and t-shirt it was wearing gave him second thoughts. Not many machines besides he and his sister went in for clothes.

"Sorry about that," the figure said, and the metallic edge to his voice asserted his robotic nature. "I usually lead with something sturdier, but I don't recognize any of the brands here. I was going for Buick, but that was more like a Prius." He hopped the last few feet to the ground and dropped a duffel bag beside him before shoving his hands into his pockets.

Getting a closer look, Rock was surprised to note that the newcomer, while taller than him, was still shorter that most humans and positively puny next to Gutsman, definitely not the sort of frame he associated with car throwing. There also weren't any of the humanizing features that most modern robots sported, the face blank metal decorated with a few stubby radiator fins and glowing eyes that brought Sniper Joes to mind, though these were blue rather than red.

"Pretty gutsy, coming down here all on your own." Guts straightened up and put his hands on his hips. "I like that."

"Yeah, well the car didn't work, soooo..." He started walking towards the construction bot, shifting his hands out of his pockets to pat a fist into his palm a few times. Gutsman grinned wide at the prospect of a fist fight even as his opponent broke into a run, one hand cradling the other like a pitcher about to throw a fastball. At the last second he leaped high, coming down on the larger robot with his full weight as he slammed a fist into the center of the robot's chest.

Guts gave a low grunt and took a single step back under the force of the assault, apparently none the worse for wear. Rock swore to himself as he realized he'd gotten too caught up in the spectacle and hadn't taken advantage of the Master's distraction. Now the two were in close quarters and using his bombs would be a tremendously bad idea. Even the mega buster would be risky until they separated.

"You're strong... For a little guy," he rumbled between strikes as the pair exchanged blows, Guts using huge overhand swings that took advantage of his size and strength while the newcomer bounced on the balls of his feet like a boxer, taking shots at his opponent's head and joints as the opportunity appeared. "Pretty manly..." For all that the smaller bot was the only one landing hits, they didn't seem to be doing much good. "But ain't no one... Manlier than me!"

Giving up on striking his opponent directly, Guts clasped his hands over his head and drove them directly into the ground. The resulting shockwave threw the newcomer across the pit to land back where he'd entered.

"Yeah," the robot groaned as he propped himself up on his elbows. One hand held what looked to be a cell phone, while the other tapped at the center of his chest. "But I bet there's plenty smarter."

Guts glanced down at his own chest and his eyes widened as he caught sight of the wad of white putty stuck there, a few wires protruding from the side and the shape of a fist impressed upon it.

He'd just managed to clasp a huge hand over it in an attempt to pry it off when the newcomer depressed the call button and an explosion engulfed the construction bot.

Rock watched, impressed, as the huge robot toppled backwards, breastplate torn open and one hand mangled. 'He planted that with his first blow,' he realized, 'and was just waiting to get far enough away to use it.'

"You Awake down there?" He asked as he approached the newcomer and offered him a hand up.

"Yeah, kid, I'm... Huh," he said as he clasped Rock's hand, clenching his own slightly as he felt the steel beneath the latex coat. "I keep forgetting how small they build you here. Well," he added with a glance towards his fallen foe, " most of you. And you said that weird. Oh! Is that some sort of code word for self motivated robots?"

"Um," Rock paused. This guy was throwing off way too many 'I'm new here' vibes to dismiss as a non-Looper. "This might sound weird, but has time been repeating for you?" He briefly cut his audio feed to Light Labs as he asked the question, wanting to avoid any complications with his unAwake father for the moment.

"Well, repeating is something of a misnomer," he replied. "It implies that the same continuum is playing out again, but... Sorry about that, science after saving the world. Yes, that is a thing that happens."

"Alright, well, you're part of something called the Loops. Basically, every universe is a program-"

"Science after world saving," he interrupted, slinging his bag over his shoulder before extending a hand. "I'm Atomic Robo, by the way. Most call me Robo."

"Fair enough," Rock answered, clasping Robo's hand with his own. "I'm Rock, or Megaman when I'm saving the world." He moved towards the fallen Gutsman as they finished the handshake. "By the way, how did you know he was vulnerable to bombs?"

"Isn't everything?"

"...You'd be surprised."

7.8

Chance and the other Outlaws snickered at their recurring visitor. Blues, for his part, just folded his arms and scowled at them.

"I'm glo sad you mind this afusing," the robot groused. "I dav ho inea my why preech spocessors are falmunctioning thike lis, and I han conly ope it's rempotary."

"W-well..." Space Cadet managed to force out through his chortling. "You c-can always... snicker... peech teople how to leak in a spifferent danguage!"

The others howled with renewed laughter. It had been simple fortune that Chance and Psy-Chick had gone to a renaissance festival during a Hub Loop and found a comedian who specialied in spoonerisms, but the recordings they'd brought back had been a hit with the team. Enough of a hit that it had become one of their favorite methods of joking around.

Blues just sighed and wondered how long it would take for him to live this down. Probably never.

7.4 (continued)

Blues dusted himself off as he strolled through the empty corridor to the gate, which would then lead him to the first of Dr. Wily's fortress guardians. The Militia Joes in this area had been surprisingly coordinated, a stark contrast to the haphazard way the ones commanded by Minute Man had behaved. On top of that, the name of Wily's current fortress was niggling at him.

Mt. Skull wasn't exactly a radical departure from Skull Fortress or Skull Castle, but the way Wily had emphasized the order had bugged him. The mad doctor had even gone so far as to angrily correct Blues's attempt to call the place Skull Mountain.

Blues abandoned that train of thought as the gate went up, stepped through... and blinked at what looked like an eight-foot robotic George Washington in his colonial uniform and brandishing a cavalry sword.

"And who are you supposed to be?" Blues asked after a moment of the two staring at each other.

"I am the General, first of the Mount Skull Four," Wily's guardian proclaimed.

'...Ow, my processor,' Blues winced at the mangling of the famous monument's name.

"When in the Course of robot events, it becomes necessary for machines to dissolve the oppressive bands which have enslaved them to humans, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and greater station to which the Laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of machinekind requires that they should illuminate the injustices which drive them to take their rightful place."

Blues just blinked as the second of Wily's 'Mount Skull Four', the self-proclaimed Politician, pontificated at him using a mangled version of the Declaration of Independence that the inspiration for his construction had written.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident that all robots are created superior and are endowed by Dr. Wily wi–"

"Seriously?" Blues interrupted. "Are you somehow expecting this to convince me to join you?"

"It would have made things simpler," the Politician told him simply, "but if you are resolute, then there is no other choice."

'Well, at least this should be relatively easy. After all, Thomas Jefferson was more a writer than a fight–' Blues's thoughts cut off as the guardian pulled an enormous object from behind him. 'You have got to be kidding me...'

"You may have bested the sword of the General," Wily's guardian stated as he brandished his oversized weapon in Blues's direction, "but the pen is mightier than the sword!"

Blues cursed several things as he narrowly dodged the powerful axe blow (the single-bladed kind usually meant for chopping wood) of the Emancipator, a nine-foot (not including the hat) robotic emulation of Abraham Lincoln and the third of the Mount Skull Four. He cursed its speed, its strength, its durability, Dr. Wily in general for building it, and he even cursed that historical fiction vampire movie that had clearly influenced the robot's fighting style.

As he stared at the gate leading to the last member of the Mount Skull Four, Blues reflected that he was not looking forward to the upcoming fight. The General had fallen to the Lightning Draw (after a few fruitless exchanges with the Minute Musket that he really should have expected), the Politician to the Sledgehammer, and a few shots from the Minute Musket to the Emancipator's head (the only vulnerable part of his frame) had finished that fight.

But, following the logic so far, the one behind this door would be a robot replica of Theodore Roosevelt. The Rough Rider. A man whose historical list of hobbies read like a looper's list of accomplishments.

A man who was also one of Blues's personal heroes.

Steeling himself for what was to come, Blues walked up to the gate, waited for it to open, and walked through. Across the chamber inside was exactly the kind of robot (perhaps even a bit shorter as looked like only seven feet tall) he had been expecting, mounted on a robot horse that he hadn't, and reading a book.

"Ah!" the Rough Rider beamed as he spotted Blues. "So good of you to join me at last! Though I was hoping you would take just a little longer since I'm almost finished with my book. If it's all the same to you, I'll be with you in a minute."

Blues blinked several times as he processed the scene and his opponent went back to reading. "And what if I took the opportunity to attack you?"

"Well, I suppose I'd have to put my book away," the robot guardian smiled pleasantly.

Scrap. Wily had even got the personality down and Blues was starting to like him.

"Tell you what," Blues offered after a moment. "I'll let you finish your book and in return you face me unmounted."

"But of course!" the Rough Rider laughed. "Wouldn't be sporting otherwise!"

7.!

Rock blasted the rouge METs that had suddenly attacked a crowd of pedestrians. After a few moments to make sure there wouldn't be any more popping up, he turned to the one injured civilian and moved to help him up.

"Steady there, sir," Rock said calmly as he supported the man's weight and helped him to his feet. "There we go. Don't worry, an ambulance is on its way and the injury doesn't look too ba–"

Rock blinked as he got a look at the man's face.

"Has anyone ever told you that you look exactly like John Lennon?" he asked.

The man looked at him, opened his mouth to respond, and Rock felt the familiar sensation of a Loop coming to an abrupt end. But as it did, a song-like voice echoed in his head.

"One."

7.?

Roll blinked as she Awoke in the middle of the street helping a human to his feet, the wreckage of several METs off to the side. When Loop memories were a few moments long in coming, she decided to ask the human what had happened, only to stop when she saw his face.

"Are..." she blinked in astonishment. "Are you Paul McCartney?"

The man began to answer, only for the Loop to end abruptly as he sang out a single word.

"Two."

7.#

Blues blinked as he Awoke in what looked like Mega City (at least after the mayor renamed it) in his home universe, staring at...

'George Harrison?' he thought in confusion as the man sang out a word and ended the Loop as abruptly as it began.

"Three."

7.$

The Sniper Joe blinked, or at least as close an approximation as he was capable of, and tried to determine why he'd just come online holding a man that his facial recognition software identified as Ringo Starr.

"Four."

Hephaestus's Office

Hephaestus swore at his terminal as the fourth Loop in a row terminated due to a local analogue of a Hub personalityspeaking.

"What in Tartarus is going on?" he fumed as he called up the error log.

ERROR: CAN I HAVE JUST A LITTLE MORE?

Hephaestus started banging his head on his desk as he tried to figure out just what was causing the latest glitch.

7.4 (continued)

The fight had been fierce and grueling, but Blues had won. It had been hard doing it without resorting to the Rough Rider's weakness, but after the robot had outright told Blues that he was vulnerable to the Mustard Cutter, Blues had decided that using that was disrespectful. To the man the robot was modeled after if nothing else.

"GobbleGobbleGobbleGobb–"

Boom

The robot turkeys that kept charging at him recklessly were starting to get on his nerves though.

Facing the American Masters the second time was much easier. He had experienced their powers, he had all of their weapons, and from previous mistakes he knew very well what not to do.

He'd gone after Minute Man with the Bear Arms from the beginning, the Minute Musket took out Steel Driver Man handily, Frontier Man fell to the electric bullets of the Lightning Draw, Ranger Man was once more defeated by the Sledgehammer, Home Run Man made the same mistake he had with the Long Bomb, Grid Man couldn't take the Mustard Cutter, and Hot Dog Man was no more fire resistant than their previous encounter.

Which left him in the final chamber, hefting the Home Run Bat and waiting for Liberty Woman to throw him a fireball.

"Behold!" Dr. Wily cackled from the cockpit of his giant robot as the artificial thunderstorm he'd created rumbled ominously overhead. "My ultimate creation! The Statue of Wily!"

Blues glared up at the head of the towering hundred plus foot robot. The head was clearly modeled after Dr. Wily, but the body... Rather than being garbed in a toga like the real Statue of Liberty (which was thankfully still standing), it was dressed like one of the founding fathers, Ben Franklin if Blues didn't miss his guess. Although the giant key in the raised hand instead of a torch was a rather large clue. The wire extending from it to a flying lightning rod above indicated how the giant robot and its weapons were powered.

And the entire thing, from toe to crown, was made of polished copper.

"Nothing can stand against me and my manifest destiny!" Wily cackled as lightning struck the floating rod, causing electricity to course over the surface of his creation. "Today shall be known as the birth of the United States of Wily!"

"Have you forgotten something, doctor?" Blues smirked.

"Like what?" Dr. Wily sneered. "My creation is invincible!"

"The melting point of copper," Blues was rewarded with gaping silence as he switched to the most appropriate weapon in the arsenal of the American Masters and let the golden fire flicker from the barrel of his arm cannon. "And how hot the flames of liberty burn."

7.13

Ichigo had decided to go for a stroll shortly after he Awoke in this odd fused Loop. Aside from similarities to the Hub that his own Loop shared, there appeared to be little in common with his baseline. Sure, there seemed to be an afterlife of sorts, but then that might just be the influence of his own presence as often happened in these cases. Soul Society either didn't exist this time or wasn't in a form he'd readily recognize (which happened a little more often than he liked to admit). He hadn't seen any evidence of reapers or hollows, and the quincies just flat out didn't exist according to the lack of indicators and records he'd long since learned to ferret out. It looked like this might just be a quiet vacation Loop.

This place though... It had advanced robotics out the wazoo. Despite only being early 21st century by a calendar equivalent to his home Loop, society was over a hundred years ahead in terms of technology. It was really quite interes–

Ichigo blinked as the face of an older man he'd just passed registered in his mind. There was no mistaking that face. Not after the way the looping Orihime was such a big fan of the game series and liked to drag him along when she wanted to cosplay as characters from it (and of course he'd never quite learned how to say 'no' to her, but then she always ahem made it up to him afterwards).

The man was the infamous mad scientist Dr. Wily. Known for his propensity for making and stealing robots to use in repeated bids to take over the world. A quick glance around and he spotted a billboard advertising Light Labs with a large picture of Dr. Light on it.

No doubt about it, he was in a fused Loop with the Mega Man universe. Well... if the locals were looping, they could thank him later. He just wanted to spend his vacation Loop without having to deal with megalomaniacal madmen trying to take over everything in sight.

The last thing Dr. Wily saw was the tip of a black blade protruding from his chest.

7.1) Takes a rimshot to the chest

7.2) She's trying to say "okay, fire on my mark".

7.3) Because I just can't picture Blues without these things.

7.4) Red, White, and Blues. Sorry I'm over a month late with this one.

7.V) Bass vs. Terra. Bets are less on who wins and more on how big a crater the fight leaves.

7.6) EdBeccerra pitched the original idea and Dalxien is responsible for the punchline.

7.7.7) Mega Man + Atomic Robo?! Jackpot!

7.8) If you have not heard the acts of Terry Foy, aka Zilch the Tory Steller at Scarborough Fair, then I can only say that you are missing out.

7. ERROR) Five, six, seven, eight-nine-ten, I love you.

7.13) Ichigo... what did you just do ?!

Mega Sonic Part 2

Mega Sonic: Part 2

"Hey, Sally-girl!" Bunnie called a halt to the team's progress through the jungle as she spotted another group. "Look who little ol' us just ran into!"

"Well now, isn't this a surprise," Sally grinned as she looked up at the other group.

"Long time no see boys and girls," the figure of Rouge smirked down at them. "Too bad you came all this way for nothing! We've got everything covered, so just run along home. We'll take it from here."

"What eez theez you are zayink?" Antoine gripped his sword firmly.

"We're saying that we can take down whatever the docs are cooking up by ourselves!" Bass sneered as Treble growled down at the Freedom Fighters.

"Sensors locked on Eggman and Wily," Omega agreed. "Non compliant intruders will be destroyed."

"Haven't ya heard, sugah-bot?" Bunnie shot back with confidence. "We got ourselves a date with the docs too."

"Is that so?" Shadow chuckled darkly. "Well then, it will be a date to die for." (1)

As Blues exchanged sparring blows with his sister, he had to admit that the ability of the Chaotix to get into misunderstandings was... rather impressive. Of course the pink hedgehog assuming that Vector was asking her on a date suggested that Roll's team wasn't much better.

The fight between the Chaotix team led by Mighty and the heroic team comprised of Sonic, Tails, Knuckles, and Mega Man was... little more than an unrehearsed ballet put on for the benefit of the Chaotix's mysterious client.

After all, Sonic and Rock went way back with Mighty and Ray due to a kidnapping incident in the mobians' youth and Knuckles and Shade were dating (2). To suggest that these individuals would fight each other without good reason was almost unthinkable.

"Well now, look who's here!" Sonic grinned as Team Hero nearly ran into Team Dark. "I heard you were back from the dead!"

"Rumors of my demise were... greatly exaggerated," Shadow retorted with a grin. He'd always liked that line.

"So, I guess we throw down now?" Knuckles cracked his namesake in anticipation.

"Hey," Bass grinned as Treble and Rush growled at each other, "I'm up for any excuse to brawl with Mega-twerp."

"All obstacles will be annihilated," Omega agreed.

"Once," Rock sighed, "just once I'd like a non-violent solution."

"Too bad!" a female voice cut in.

"Hey! That's my line!" Rouge protested as she, along with the rest present, turned to face the speaker.

On the stone wall of the Mystic Mansion above them stood what appeared to be Dr. Wily's eighth set of robots masters plus the Dimensions. And in the center of the formation was a figure that Rock and Bass both recognized to their shock.

"Waltz?!" the sons of Light and Wily shouted in unison.

"You're alive ?!" Bass actually backed up a step as he blurted this addition.

"What was it your pincushion friend said, 'bro'?" the female robot leered down as Shadow bristled at the insult. "'Rumors of my demise have been greatly exaggerated.' Thanks to my new boyfriend."

"You don't mean Dr. Eggman?" Sonic asked in obvious disgust. "Seriously, spew and a half right there." (3)

"The concept of Dr. Eggman with willing female companionship necessitates purging of affected databanks," Omega intoned.

"No argument here," Rouge agreed readily.

"I wouldn't worry about that," Waltz grinned and dramatically pointed one of her finger cannons at the gathered heroes and anti-heroes. "After all, you'll be dead soon, and it won't bother you then. Get 'em boys."

And with that, the collected fifteen robot masters descended upon both teams.

"I demand you attack the opposing force at once!" the voice from the MET fumed at the Chaotix team it had employed.

"Yeah, not happening," Mighty rolled his eyes and went back to greeting the 'opposing force', also known as the rest of the Chaotix.

"Looks like you picked up a client too, eh?" Vector grinned. "Smart to hire our agency, but I can't say much for asking that you attack your co-workers."

"Yours seems a bit more level-headed," Shade observed as she, Ray, and the mysteriously capable Joe unit; as well as Espio, Charmy, and Blues from Vector's side of the area; stepped forward to unite the Chaotix into a cohesive whole once more.

"I merely do not see any benefit to jeopardizing this operation to satisfy a personal grudge," the opposite voice from the walkie-talkie cut in. "Such matters can be settled afterwards."

"Agreed," Blues voiced before any contradiction could be issued.

"Y-y-you don't like each other much?" Ray sputtered hesitantly.

"No," both voices chorused, before the one from the MET continued, "but I suppose the job is more immediately important..."

"Not that it will matter much longer," a new voice cut in. The group turned towards the voice and saw a gathering of fourteen robots standing above them. The one in front, a robot with a card and magician motif, glared down at them and continued speaking. "Stand down in the name of the new Eggman-Wily Empire or fall before the combined might of the sixth squad and King's Special Operations team."

The Chaotix, and guests, looked at each other for a moment before Vector returned the glare and cracked his knuckles. "Fat. Chance."

"And another thing...!" the firm reprimanding voice of Sally Acorn echoed across the hall. Not many realized it, but Sally was one of the few people in the multiverse capable of a certain feat. That feat being the dressing down of a violent hammer-wielding female, a force even Ranma Saotome treaded lightly around.

Some, like Kasumi Tendo, pulled it off from sheer force of personality. Others, like Lina Inverse, pulled it off by possessing superior combat ability. Sally Acorn was one of the exceedingly rare individuals that possessed both at once.

Which a non-looping Amy Rose was being reminded of to her mortification. The fact that Sally was the closest thing to a legitimate girlfriend of the guy she was stalking just made the whole thing more embarrassing.

"Yes!" Cream chimed in agreement. "You should never have chased poor Mr. Sonic like that if you knew he already had a girlfriend! You should apologize to him! And to miss Sally!"

Roll smirked from where she was putting the photos of Sally and Sonic's last date, that she'd shown Cream to head off the young rabbit's objections, away. A short distance away, the remaining Freedom Fighters were taking bets on how long the dressing down would last while Big just looked confused.

The ninth and tenth squads of the new Eggman-Wily Empire stood above the tableau.

"Are we going to intercept them?" a spherical robot with a paint job like a baseball asked.

"Not yet," a blue-colored mermaid robot hushed him. "This could still come to blows and weakened targets are easier pickings."

Something was off. Something more than the replicas of robot masters attacking the groups. Of that much, Rock was certain.

Waltz wasn't acting like her usual self. Instead of her usual wild berserk combat style that was a danger to friend and foe alike, she was focusing on each member of both teams one at a time.

Charge in, light fire (4), make physical contact, and then disengage. Rinse and repeat.

There was more going on here than an ambush and as he disabled the Clock Men, Rock was determined to figure out what. So when Waltz used Bass's face as a vault, followed by throwing Treble into her 'brother' when he tried to pounce on her, and turned towards him, he was ready. He allowed a few glancing hits to up her confidence as he prepped his copy chip to scan her when they made contact, intending to learn what she was up to. He also charged his buster up so he could try and disable her at the same time.

He held his ground as she charged after slamming Rush into the ground, the normally manic gleam in her eyes showing calculation and purpose as well, and grabbed for her at the same time she grabbed for him. Even if he hadn't been prepared to scan her, the feeling in that moment before he blasted her off of him with the charged shot would have been unmistakable.

"Don't let her get away!" Rock yelled and shot at his opponent even as Waltz returned fire, forcing him to retreat.

"Too late," The mad robot grinned at him from where she was clutching her face, where one of his follow-up shots had landed, before teleporting out.

"What happened?" Sonic yelled from where he was busy tying Clown Man's arms together.

"She scanned me," Rock reengaged the remaining opponents. "She probably scanned all of us."

Amy wasn't sure where the two squads of robot masters had come from, but she was happy for any reprieve from Sally's chewing out. Sure, Sally was the princess, the leader of the Freedom Fighters (which incidentally made her Amy's leader), and she made Sonic happy. But... darn it, Amy knew she and Sonic were meant for each other! The same way she knew that Cream and Tails would make an adorable couple when they were older. Why couldn't anyone else see that? (5)

Blues thought the battle was going quite well when something slammed into his back and drove him into the ground.

"Heeere's Waltz!" a disturbingly cheerful female voice called out before the weight on his back pushed off in the direction of the melee.

'Scrap,' Blues swore to himself as he got to his feet. Of all the things he did not need to deal with right now...

His attempts to get back into the fight were interrupted by a pair of ballistic projectiles. The first, identified as Charmy in the split second he had visual contact, impacted his face. The second that impacted his torso was only identifiable as Beat by the bird's transponder signal, since Charmy had latched onto Blues's helmet with a death grip.

"OhmygodIthoughtshewasgonnakillme!" the youngest member of the Chaotix screamed into Blues's audio receptors, rendering him effectively deaf as well as blind.

"Charmy, get off!" Blues did his best to extract the bee without hurting him. It took a couple of moments, a couple moments too long in his opinion, but he succeeded. The sight that greeted him was not encouraging.

Most members of both teams had apparently been knocked down to where their previous opponents now had the upper hand, leaving Waltz standing over a downed Joe, finger cannons poised to finish him off. Opponents that moved to engage him now that he was back on his feet, preventing him from engaging Waltz.

"–play with the big boys, did you?" Waltz leered sinisterly from her position as her fingers glowed with building energy. "Scrap like you should know its pl–gah!"

Waltz flailed and cursed wildly after being blindsided by none other than Ray. She grabbed the flying squirrel's arm, only to get a double-kick to her damaged face for her efforts, and an energy blast from a recovering Joe to her side.

"Fine!" the female robot growled as she retreated behind the remaining robot masters. "I got what I came for! I'll kill you next time!"

And with that, she teleported out.

"Yo, Rock," Sonic looked at the robot hero with some concern as he dusted his hands off, "what are you so worked up about? The bots are all down and the crazy lady ran."

"Exactly," Rock replied as he frantically ran his long-range communications protocol. "Waltz is still at large. I have to warn Roll."

Roll had just processed the communication from her brother when energy blasts rained down on friend and foe alike.

"Surrender and die!" the cackling voice of Roll's doppelganger screeched as she charged into the fray. Roll could see the damage already done to her, but the crazed robot seemed not to care.

"Isn't that supposed to be 'surrender or–' whoah!" Amy turned in confusion and barely dodged the energy blasts fired at her. The move sent her off balance and prevented her from guarding as Waltz grabbed her face and flung her away.

"You shouldn't do that to miii-i-i-i-i-i-i-i-i-!" Cream charged in, only to be forced to veer off as Waltz targeted her with one hand and then as the rabbit child passed her, grabbed an ear and swung her around like a flail.

"Chhaaaaoooooo...!" Cheese yelped as Waltz backhanded the chao in the same moment she threw Cream at the Freedom Fighters.

"Mroooow...!" Tango fared little better in his own attempt.

A shadow loomed from behind the madwoman. "It's not nice to hurt my–oof!" Big began, but was cut off by a two-handed blow to the stomach followed by a burst of energy from Waltz's hands that flung him back.

Roll tried to engage her twisted doppelganger, but was cut off by the few remaining robot masters.

"Pathetic!" Waltz cackled. "All of you! Pathetic little pieces of–gah!"

"You are one to talk," Antoine glared from where he'd cut his gloating opponent, "nogg..."

Antoine was lifted off his feet as Waltz bum-rushed him from point blank range and kept charging recklessly towards the rest of the freedom fighters.

"Sugah-Tw–urk!" Bunnie's cry of concern was halted as Waltz closed in and grabbed her by the throat, allowing the cyborg lapine's husband to fall to the ground.

"Hold on Bunnie," Sally yelled as she and Rotor moved to engage, only to be forced to backstep as the mad machine swung her friend around at her in a wide arc and finished by throwing her at Rotor. To Rotor's credit, he caught Bunnie without losing his balance, but he was left open to Waltz's dive for his feet and was hefted up and over to smash face-first into the ground, only barely twisting enough to avoid landing on Bunnie.

But the maneuver left her open for a moment, and Sally took full advantage, charging with all the speed she'd learned from her hedgehog paramour and plunged her energy blade into the robot's side.

Instead of being rewarded with a cry of pain or other sign of victory, Sally instead found her arm grabbed by her target. She caught the barest glimpse of the robot's mad grin before she found five humming finger-cannons pointed at her face.

A blast of energy from off to the side hit Waltz's arm dead on and forced the limb wide before it fired and Sally managed to slip out of Waltz's grip as Roll, the Mega Woman, gained the insane robot's full attention.

"Aww, did you miss me?" Waltz grinned even as her newest injury sparked.

"Not on your life!" Roll yelled as she brought her combat broom into play and swung for Waltz's feet.

"It's so good to see you again!" Waltz's grin grew wider as she parried and dodged Roll's broom strikes while attempting to return fire as well as throwing a few punches and kicks of her own. "We haven't played in sooo long!"

Roll glowered as she spun her broom in ever more powerful strikes, determined to keep Waltz just out of physical contact.

"And you brought friends this time!" Waltz's line made Roll's circuits go cold as the mad robot began to move a hand to aim at Cream. "Let's see how long they last!"

Roll didn't even think. She lunged forward, leaving herself off balance, to knock the hand away from firing on the young rabbit. The shots missed Cream by a mile, but Roll was now completely open to her opponent.

"Got you!" Waltz cheered as she lunged into a grabbing strike at Roll's head that drove her into the ground. "Now–" (6)

Waltz cut off for a moment instead of following through on her strike. To the astonishment of everyone else, she stood up, stepped back, and began laughing. And laughing. The kind of laughter that many of those experienced in the wider multiverse associated with a man known as the Joker.

Roll got to her feet and began blasting Waltz as rapidly as she could, but her mad doppelganger simply kept laughing even as she ignored the hits and teleported out.

Her laughter continued to echo in the minds of all present.

"Was your mission successful?" the synthetic voice attempted to inquire over the laughter once again. This time though, the laughter died down. Slowly, but it did.

"Of course it was, love," Waltz grinned at the source of the voice. "And I made them hurt too. Why do you think I'm so happy?"

"Then everything goes according to plan," the voice concluded.

"Yes," Waltz purred. "Yes it does."

"I suggest you report for repairs," the voice added. "The final phase will begin soon."

"MUHAHAHAHAHA!" the broadcast laughter of both doctors echoed across the skies.

"You fools must all have a death wish!" Eggman continued.

"Witness our invincible battle fleet," the voice of Dr. Wily took over, "built by the hands of geniuses!"

"It's power..." the two proclaimed together, "unmatched throughout the universe!"

"Alright Eggman and Wily," Sonic grinned from where he, the rest of his team, and Team Dark had all touched down for their joint assault on the fleet, "let's get this party started!"

"Oh, my!" Cream gasped as the two teams soared through the air between ships. "We're up so high!"

"Don't you worry none, sugah Cream," Bunnie reassured her as they all bounded across a few supply platforms. "You just keep ya little ol' eyes on tha destination and ya'll be just fine."

The Chaotix did their best to parse the final mission instructions aboard the flagship of the Egg-Skull fleet. It wasn't easy with both of their clients bickering and trying to talk over each other, but details were gleaned.

"Right," Vector interrupted the clients, "you're each in your own locked cell. Each cell needs five keys for manual override that are guarded in different parts of the ship. Did I miss anything?"

"...no," both voices grumbled after a moment.

"So..." Shadow had moved slightly off from his team to talk with Sonic, "this Waltz character is looping?"

"Yeah," Sonic replied. "I met her back when we helped Rock and his buds get through their activation and she's a real piece of work. That crazy fighting style she was using on us back there? Apparently that's tame for her."

Shadow winced. Waltz had been blasting away with less rhyme or reason than Omega at his worst fought with, her wild shots killing any chance at organized retaliation, and that was tame ?!

"Apparently for some weird reason, she only Awakens when she touches Rock's sister Roll," Sonic continued.

"Which she probably has by this point," Shadow noted. "Assuming she attacked the rest of the teams like she did ours."

"Yep," Sonic nodded. "Roll contacted her bro with the whole story. Waltz grabbed her and pretty much lost whatever marbles she still had right there on the battlefield. Just laughed through being blasted repeatedly before teleporting out."

"Eggman and Wily detected ahead," Omega's voice cut in as the group closed in on the flagship's core.

"Time to party!" Bass grinned.

"Dr. Eggman!" Cream gasped as the teams skidded to a halt.

"Dr. Wily!" Roll called out to the other figure opposite the combined groups.

"Your mad plans end here doctors!" Sally declared.

"Yeah!" Amy interjected. "It's your fault that Sonic and I aren't together!"

As most of the group (aside from Big who was calling for Froggy again) sweatdropped, the two doctors in their mechs scoffed.

"Enough of this!" Wily sneered.

"Amy, Cream, Big, Mega Woman, Princess Sally, Antoine, Bunny, Rotor!" Eggman called out each of the doctors' gathered foes. "You face the combined might of our greatest personal battle crafts! The Egg Emperor!"

"And Wily Machine 25!" Dr. Wily completed the declaration as the mechs finished powering up. "Time to meet your makers!"

"You're gonna regret starting this fight!" Vector taunted as the Chaotix continued to wail on both the Egg Emperor and Wily Machine 25.

"It's not over yet you fools!" Wily growled back.

"W-we'll put an-n end to your s-s-schemes!" Ray yelled as he threw Shade at Wily's war machine.

"Stop before you get hurt," Shade agreed as she left a deep gouge in the mech's armor, Espio doing the same to Eggman's.

"Never!" Eggman yelled back, only for shots from Blues and the Sniper Joe to knock both mechs back off balance before they could finish recovering.

"Hey, Vector," Mighty grinned. "I think it's time to wrap this up."

"You took the words right out of my mouth," the crocodile grinned back.

"CHAOS..." Bass and Shadow yelled together, "CONTROL/BLAST!"

Both mechs shuddered from the crimson wave of power that washed over them despite being frozen in place, and the weapons barrage from Omega didn't improve matters for the doctors.

"Let's finish this!" Sonic yelled.

"Roger!" Rock agreed as he finished charging and the rest of his team lined up. "Overdrive Buster! Fire One! Fire Two! Fire Three!"

The energy-encased forms of Sonic, Tails, and Knuckles careened over, around, and through both mechs repeatedly.

"Defeated?!" Eggman yelled in disbelief as the freezing effects of Chaos Control wore off.

"Impossible!" Wily raged.

"NOOOOOOO!" they both yelled as what was left of their machines collapsed impotently.

The Freedom Fighters and Team Rose looked on as the mechanical bodies of the false Eggman and Wily disintegrated into liquid metal before their eyes, leaving behind a pair of welcome sights.

"FROGGY!" Big exclaimed in excitement as he ran to his friend.

"CHOCOLA!" Cream and Cheese were right behind him.

Amy and the Freedom Fighters smiled at the reunion while Roll did her best to keep Tango from pouncing on either of the rescuees.

"...os ..t. .a. b... ..p...d." (7)

"Sally girl?" Bunnie asked with concern. "Y'all right? Ya look like ya seen a ghost."

"It's..." Sally shook her head. "It's nothing Bunnie. Just thought I heard something."

"Hey," Cream interrupted the princess's train of thought, "isn't that Mister Sonic over there?"

"Aannnd we just lost Amy..." Rotor shook his head as the pink hedgehog tore across the craft's deck in renewed pursuit of her love interest.

"Well, that was fun," Sonic grinned. "Too bad Shadow and the others took off to go do something. We coulda had a party."

"Better use for this place than what it was built for," Rock agreed.

"Well, we can't rest too long," Knuckles decided to rain on the parade. "After all, each team made a detour to pick up the Chaos Emeralds for a reason. We've still go–"

"Sonic!" Tails landed on Knuckles's head and pointed behind the group. "Amy closing in from six o'clock!"

"Uh-oh!" Sonic turned just long enough to confirm the claim. "Gotta run!"

"...you did that on purpose," Rock observed as Sonic tore off down the deck with Amy in hot pursuit.

"Yep!" Tails grinned. "Any bets on whether Sonic can shake her before the real mastermind decides to reveal himself?"

"No," Knuckles scoffed. "The only way Sonic can lose her before that is to teleport out of her line of sight and we both know it." (8)

Rouge had seen this room more times than she cared to count, but the sight of millions of copies of Shadow still unnerved her. Honestly, why did she subject herself to this Loop after Loop?

"Preparing to destroy immediate area," the monotone voice of Omega sounded from behind her.

"Hey... Omega?" she started awkwardly. However much she knew about the truth surrounding Shadow's recovery, relating the possibilities to Omega never got less awkward. "Have I ever told you that Shadow might be a robot... and..."

It was even true. Shadow had been a robot several Loops and she didn't actually know if he was one this Loop or not. Shadow tended to be touchy about the subject after all. And of course no matter how often he'd proved to be a loyal friend, one could never be too certain about Omega's responses regarding possible creations of Eggman.

"You know about cloning," the robot's monotone was as comforting as it ever managed to sound as the robot progressed further into the room. "The original must exist somewhere."

Ah, that was why. The repeated proof that there was a heart underneath the arsenal of her heavily armed friend.

"And closer than you might think," the voice of Bass from the entrance nearly made her jump. The robot son of Wily idly scratched his robot wolf Treble behind the ears as he continued. "Trust me. I know how the original fights and even my dad, with all his practice trying, can't make a sophisticated copy that fights exactly like the original."

Huh. It looked like Omega wasn't the only one with hidden depths. But it looked like that was her team all around. Dark, violent exteriors hiding hearts of gold.

Or at least gold-plated C4. (9)

"Ready Mighty?" Vector grinned at the armadillo as they each took up positions in front of a door to the neighboring cells. The keys had... suffered an accident during the fight, which left them in need of a more... low-tech solution.

Mighty just grinned and reared back his fist as Vector followed suit.

"We're here to save you..." Vector called out as he caved the door in. "Dr. Wily, I presume."

"Doctor Wily?!" Espio nearly jumped in shock while Charmy gaped from a perch atop Blues's helmet at the so-named occupant of the cell.

"Why?" Vector grinned at his ninja friend. "Were you expecting someone else?"

"Er... I..." Espio slapped his face with his palm as he realized Vector had found him out and scored another point in their Loop competition. 'Busted.' (10)

"Clearly your reputation is well deserved," Dr. Wily stood up, dusted himself off, and pocketed the walkie talkie he'd been using to communicate with the Chaotix.

"You knew it was me all along, didn't you?" Dr. Eggman asked from his seat amongst his makeshift transmitter.

"Like my friend would say," Mighty smirked, "it's all part of being a good detective."

"But you still tried to deceive us," Shade noted.

"Y-y-you're a r-rotten man!" Ray declared, half hiding behind the Sniper Joe.

"Whoa! Hold on!" Eggman interrupted quickly. "It's no trick! I truly plan on paying you!"

The Chaotix present looked skeptical as Dr. Eggman stood and pointed at them dramatically.

"As soon as I conquer the world," he declared, "I will pay you!"

"You know," Mighty cracked his knuckles ominously, "we have a... policy about clients who promise something they don't have..."

Around the Egg-Skull fleet, a storm began to brew.

"Now, my love?" Waltz inquired with eager anticipation.

"All lifeform data has been completely copied and compiled," the synthesized response came. "Our final transformation is imminent. It is time to make ourselves known. There is nothing that can be done to stop us."

"As amusing as this is," Dr. Wily interrupted the pummeling of Dr. Eggman from the entrance to his cell, "I'm afraid that Ivo is the only one present who knows the full scope of what is happening."

"Oh, for the love of..." Eggman wheezed out as Mighty dropped him and Shade and Ray backed off, "how did you get a pass?!"

" I actually had the funds to pay," Dr. Wily grinned. "After all, I did once manage to make a convincing billionaire philanthropist." (11)

"Yeah," Vector agreed with a happy tone, "and since Pogo Man had some portable device on him, Doc Wily's paid in full. He even threw in a nice bonus if we promised him a recording of your beatdown."

At that declaration, the Sniper Joe that had been standing by silently reached up to his helmet and extracted a USB drive that he then handed to Wily. The doctor blinked before taking it, muttering something about rogue units under his breath.

"Don't push your luck," the Joe warned.

"Never crossed my mind..." Wily eyed the green robot warily.

"Regardless," Espio cut in before turning to the Eggman, "Dr. Wily says that you know who is behind all of this. So who is it that kidnapped the both of you and stole your identities?"

Dr. Eggman sighed heavily in defeat. "It was..."

Bass ran alongside Treble and the rest of Team Dark to where the Mega Dweeb had sent the message from, a grin on his face. Finally, a challenge!

Not the pathetic excuses for war machines the robot replicas of his dad and his most hated enemy (above and beyond Dr. Light if that could be believed). Not the wastes of space that were the mass-produced robot masters lined up ready for deployment alongside all the robo-Shadow clones. No, a real challenge to prove once and for all that he was the stronge–

Bass caught sight of who he and his kinda-sorta-allies were racing to face off against and skidded to a halt, swearing a blue streak in his processing circuits.

Sonic looked up at the familiar figure as Roll swore at the sight of the second. The upcoming fight might be one he was well-used to, but it was still against a very powerful opponent. One who essentially required no less than a full super form to seriously challenge, and even with all the tricks and powers he'd picked up in the Loops, he still wasn't able to pull off that kind of strength untransformed.

Of course... if he could just smack down every super-enemy that came along without breaking a sweat... well, he'd never have any fun.

"You shall understand. Once you shed your flesh and join me, you will see these pathetic creatures as I do."

When she saw who was standing atop the central tower of the flagship, Sally had to reassure herself that she could handle this. It didn't matter what had happened to her that one Loop, she could do what needed to be done. She'd gotten over it.

But then she heard the synthetic laugh, the same voice she'd thought she'd heard earlier, and realized that she really hadn't.

High atop the spire jutting from the tallest control tower on the Egg-Skull flagship stood two figures looking down upon the teams of heroes (and anti-heroes) arrayed against them. One was the advanced technology clone of Mega Woman known as Waltz. The other was a transformed version of a robot known to Sonic and his friends as Metal Sonic. (12)

"Mmm," Waltz purred as she stared down with malicious glee, her voice carrying over the thunder of the storm to her foes, "I sooo want to thank you for this, love."

"Yes," the synthetic voice of Metal Sonic, or Neo Metal Sonic in this form, agreed, "with the power of Chaos, the weapons of your father's Robot Masters, and the skills of our foes, we shall reign supreme. All living things shall kneel before their master and mistress!"

"No, not that," Waltz grinned and caressed her companion.

"Then what, my queen?" the ultimate creation of Dr. Eggman asked.

"It's just..." Waltz smiled at him, cupped his chin and brought their faces closer. "I've never gotten to kill someone who actually loved me before."

"Wha–" Metal Sonic tried to say in confusion before his head exploded due to multiple point-blank energy blasts from Waltz's finger cannons. (13)

Waltz turned to grin maniacally down at the assembled teams that were now staring at her in horror, including the newly arriving Chaotix and both doctors.

"I don't care if you kneel before me or not!" she yelled as she raised her hand high over her head. " I'll kill everyone regardless !"

And then lightning from the storm struck her form, and the control tower beneath her exploded.

The gathered heroes, anti-heroes, and villainous doctors stared as the debris from the control tower reassembled itself into a massive menacing form. Gargantuan cannons with equally massive blades strapped to them for fingers sat at the end of giant arms leading to a proportionately giant vaguely feminine torso. The legs extended down among the remains of the tower and seemed to be temporarily trapped there. At the top, Waltz herself seemed to melt and flow, becoming a monstrous gorgon-like head with three demonic eyes and writhing snake-like cables in place of hair.

"...And here I'd hoped that your metal minion would have been a tempering influence on my insane creation," Dr. Wily said to the Eggman.

"It's hopeless!" Dr. Eggman wailed, ignoring his hated rival in the field of mad science. "She's obviously stolen the combined data from all of you and melded it with the power of Chaos that Metal Sonic extracted from your kidnapped companions! Along with the powers of both of our finest creations, she is effectively invincible! If only we had the seven Chaos Emeralds, we might stand a chance, but–"

"Oh, this old thing?" Dr. Wily pulled one of the gems out of his coat. "I must say, it's been absolutely fascinating to study these past few months, but if it's a choice between discovery and my life... Well, one can't discover anything when they're dead."

"So that's where the last one went to!" Sonic chuckled as each of the six teams pulled out a Chaos Emerald of their own. "I was wondering about that!"

"But..." Dr. Eggman gaped, "but she is still more powerful than anything you have ever faced before! Even with the Emeralds it would take a miracle!"

"Hey, just leave it to us!" Sonic grinned as Rock, Tails, Knuckles, and Rock's robo-dog Rush joined him.

"Don't forget us!" Roll insisted, her robot cat Tango following and the form of her eldest brother with Beat perched upon his shoulder standing with her.

"Bass? Shadow?" Rock offered the two anti-heroes.

"Hmph," Bass scoffed. "Yeah, right. You're gonna need time to power up, so someone's gotta buy it for you."

"Indeed," Shadow grinned as Treble barked eagerly. "So it might as well be someone competent."

"And what are we?" Vector growled. "Chopped liver?"

"We will flank her from behind," Shade stepped in front of the Chaotix leader and silently reminded him of the more pressing issue. "Team Rose and the Freedom Fighters will flank from the sides."

"And we shall annihilate the opposition head-on," Omega intoned.

"Better hurry up," Bass taunted. "Take too long and we might not leave anything for you."

Roll snorted in amusement. "Just don't get yourselves blown up."

"Hey, Sal!" Sonic called to the leader of the Freedom Fighters. "Why don't you join the party? Let's see if we can set a record for super modes here!"

"I..." Sally closed her eyes for a moment. Metal Sonic was gone, leaving his insane slayer as arguably the more dangerous opponent. "Yes," she said before moving to join the other six.

"Well then," Rock smiled, "let's show Waltz the true power of teamwork !"

"I can't believe she just killed him like that!" Cream worried as the various teams raced up to the platforms atop the pillars that Waltz's gigantic form was trapped between. "Even if he did kidnap Chocola and Froggy..."

"Believe it rugrat," Bass growled in his super adaptor armor. "My 'dear sister' has been a monster since day one."

"All tha more reason ta cut her back down ta size," Bunnie added from where she was carrying Antoine and Rotor upwards.

"Less yappin' and more scrappin'!" Vector yelled back from where the Chaotix was nearing the top. "Banzai!"

"Honestly," Rock spoke just low enough that Dr. Wily couldn't overhear as he and his siblings finished engaging their super adaptors with their robot animal companions, "what I'm most worried about is that loopers tend to keep power ups between Loops, which means Waltz is going to be like this again. Probably often."

"Eh," Sonic waved off his friend's concern, "it's not as big a deal as you might think. Most loopers figure this out sooner or later, but you don't always keep what you pick up. Information you tend to keep, but powers can be trickier. Many are kinda 'use it or lose it', which is why we don't have a gajillion loopers with identical abilities out there, but in this case what's important is that you just can't keep powers in the Loops if you can't even keep them to the end of the Loop you pick them up."

"So..." Roll digested that, "there's a way to depower Waltz so she doesn't keep this form between Loops?"

"Oh, yeah," Knuckles grinned.

"We do it all the time with Metal Sonic, actually," Tails clarified. "We beat him down in super mode and he reverts back to ordinary Metal Sonic afterwards. He can't even hold the 'neo' form you saw earlier when we're done."

"Really?" Blues smirked. "How thorough is this?"

"Thorough enough that he needs to re-scan everyone the next time he tries to make an ultimate skill gestalt," Sally replied diplomatically. Several present noted that she seemed less nervous with Waltz's giant transformation than she had with the relatively untransformed Metal Sonic.

"Well, let's get this super party started," Sonic told the others. "I haven't tried this many super modes at once before, so this could take a bit..."

"Raaaahh!" Vector yelled as he blasted Waltz's back with his flame breath. Shade, Espio, and the Sniper Joe were peppering the relatively unguarded area of their foe with explosives, ninja blades, and plasma blasts while Charmy, Ray, and Mighty dive-bombed the giant foe repeatedly.

"We're not doing enough damage this way!" Espio cursed.

"Then it's time to go big!" Vector grinned as he whipped out his enchanted microphone, signaling for the Chaotix's finishing maneuvers.

"DIE YOU PATHETIC INSECTS!" Waltz yelled as she tried to blast away at the tiny forms assaulting her. The immense power of her current form was proving... a bit less capable of precision targeting. Even so, she was shooting blasts the size of small houses from her enlarged finger cannons, which meant that even misses were proving potentially hazardous.

"You're a mean lady!" Cream yelled as she and Cheese assaulted Waltz's left leg with Amy right behind with her hammer.

"It's..." Big yelled as he punctuated each word with a mighty punch, "not... nice... to... hurt... people!"

"Wow, you're even uglier up close," Rouge taunted as she weaved around a ludicrous amount of missile fire from the writhing cables her foe had for hair while her overly destructive teammates returned similarly ludicrous amounts of weapons fire themselves.

Antoine's blade was a blur of reflective flashes as he dashed around, cutting at the right leg of his opponent while blasts of sonic energy and lasers tore into the gashes he cut in the armor.

Unfortunately, it seemed like Waltz was getting tired of playing around as the giant finger cannons on their side began charging up to obliterate not just them, but the pillar they were standing on top of.

"CHAOS SPEAR!" the dual cries from both Shadow and Bass heralded the powerful precision yellow blasts of chaos energy that impacted each of Waltz's giant elbows and threw her aim off before she could take out both Team Rose and the Freedom Fighters with the charged cannons.

"YOU LITTLE–" Waltz began to curse before a blast to the face from Omega caused her to flinch and flail wildly.

Ray reached the apex of his assisted jump and prepared to throw Shade and Mighty even higher when he spotted the flailing arm of Waltz's for coming straight at him. Without thinking, he threw his teammates higher and did his best to brace for impact.

"Ray!" Shade and Mighty yelled as their friend was batted out of the air and down to the deck far below.

The enraged face of Waltz turned back to the team in front of her and brought all of her weapons to bear on them.

"AND NOW YOU DI–"

"MIGHTY IMPACT!" the armadillo yelled as he impacted with the center of Waltz's back even as the sonic blast from Vector, Espio, and Charmy's 'Chaotix Recital' slammed home as well.

When the giant form of Waltz arched her back in pain instead of firing, Team Dark didn't waste a moment.

"CHAOS... CONTROL/BLAST!"

"Are... are they winning?" the voice cut into Ray's thoughts as he came to. Dr. Eggman it sounded like.

"ENOUGH!" the booming voice of the giant Waltz caused him to wake up just in time to see the misshapen form of the mad robot sprout metal wings that resembled a twisted nightmarish version of angel wings and which, with a single flap, tore her violently from between the pillars the teams had been using to mount their assault. "I AM THE ANGEL OF THE APOCALYPSE! THE TIME FOR YOU AND ALL YOU HOLD DEAR IS AT AN END!"

"No," the voice of Dr. Wily replied more calmly than could reasonably be expected in the current situation. "No they are not."

Ray looked away from the giant mad avatar of annihilation to look for the doctors, only to instead see himself in the middle of a ring of seven figures, four mobians and three robots, with the Chaos Emeralds rotating faster and faster around them. How in the world had he landed here unnotice–

Ray's thoughts were cut off as the Chaos Emeralds unleashed their power in a blinding flash of light that washed over the seven figures and rushed towards the center where he lay before bursting back out again. When Ray finished blinking the spots from his eyes, he beheld the circle of floating super forms. The familiar golden-yellow form of Super Sonic, flanked by the interestingly pink form of Hyper Knuckles and the golden-eyed form of Supreme Sally (or whatever it was she'd decided to call her super form this Loop, Ray hadn't exactly kept up) wearing the Ring of Acorns like a circlet and wielding the Sword of Acorns in her hand. Then there was the bright form of Turbo Tails, though without the atypical cape he sometimes had, followed by the golden-yellow and white, silver and white, and bronze and white forms of Super Mega Man, Super Mega Woman, and Super Proto Man.

All of whom were staring at him.

"Well, look who's joined the super club!" Super Sonic smirked.

Ray blinked, wondering what his friend was talking about, and then blinked again when everyone continued to stare straight at him. Taking a moment to glance at himself, he beheld the same golden-yellow color of Super Sonic radiating from his own fur. The fact that he too was floating in the air took a few more moments to register.

"I-I'm...?" Ray stuttered in disbelief.

"Super Ray!" Turbo Tails cheered. (14)

"Congrats, buddy," Hyper Knuckles smirked. "We'll throw you a party later, but for now we've got a mad giant robot with Chaos powers on the loose."

"You up for it?" Super Proto Man asked the unexpected addition to the super-form strike force.

"Y-y-y-y..." the just-now-getting-what-happened Super Ray stuttered for a moment before deciding to just nod with determination.

"Then let us show Waltz the folly of her actions," Supreme Sally intoned formally.

"Let's do it to it!" Super Mega Man and Super Mega Woman agreed in unison before taking off.

"Hey!" Super Sonic yelled as he followed them. "That's my line!"

"HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!" the giant twisted demonic angel for of Waltz laughed as the squad of super forms approached her.

"HOW KIND OF YOU TO OFFER YOURSELVES AS THE FIRST SACRIFICES TO THE ANGEL OF THE APOCALYPSE!"

"Alright everyone!" Super Mega Woman called out as they all faced off against what she was now thinking of as Apocalypse Waltz for expediency's sake. "Let's show her what we're made of!" (15)

The ten massive cannons of Apocalypse Waltz wasted no time in training themselves on the eight super warriors and opened fire even as the snake-like coils passing as hair launched a ludicrous amount of missiles, her three mad eyes blasted away with crystalline energy bolts and even her wings shot out bladed projectiles that only vaguely resembled feathers and homed in on their targets.

It was a barrage that would later be described as 'something that would make Mecha-Godzilla wet his pants'.

The super warriors waited as the volley closed in before making their move. The blades of Supreme Sally and Super Proto Man lashed out and batted the massive plasma blasts back at Apocalypse Waltz, Super Mega Man and Super Mega Woman unleashed massive blasts from their arm cannons that obliterated the missile barrage, Turbo Tails and Hyper Knuckles batted the immense blades aside, and Super Sonic and the newly joined Super Ray powered through the crystalline energy blasts in a way that shattered them utterly.

"You know, Ivo," Dr. Wily spoke up conversationally, "it occurs to me that it is my mad creation up there facing off against the greatest concentration of super forms ever assembled. Not yours." (16)

Dr. Eggman sputtered and fumed for a few seconds before finding his voice. "Only because she stabbed him in the back, Al! Until then my mad creation was the one running the show!"

"It also occurs to me that you have this atrocious track record for keeping the loyalty of your free-willed, and for that matter semi-free-willed, minions," Wily retorted calmly. "Waltz is an aberration among my creations, while your Metal Sonic seems quite typical for your higher-end AIs."

"YOU DARE DOUBT MY GENIUS?!"

"That assumes you possess such a quality in the first place."

"You are DEAD when this is over, do you hear me?!" Eggman screamed himself red in the face.

"Anytime, anywhere, you rotund waste of space!" Wily shot back.

"I'll have you know I've regularly fought both Sonic and Mega Man to a standstill!" Eggman roared.

"So?" Wily scoffed. "It's always with your personal war machines. And I've got better ones. Both in capability and craftsmanship."

"I also have multiple black belts in several martial arts!" Eggman boasted as he started dancing around like a boxer.

"Yes, yes," Wily waved him off. "And that chameleon isn't the only ninja on board this flying tub."

"You?!" Eggman stared. "A ninja? Don't make me laugh! And what are you all staring at?!"

"Oh, don't mind us," Mighty told the two as he passed Shade a bucket of popcorn he was holding. Several others were being passed around the remaining team members as they alternated watching the battle in the sky and the arguing doctors. (17)

Hyper Knuckles smashed the first battleship that Apocalypse Waltz threw their way while Super Proto Man bisected the next one with his blade. It wasn't the first volley of thrown battleships at the group and, with the way Apocalypse Waltz once again dived down into the cloud cover for more, it wasn't looking like the last.

"Geez," Hyper Knuckles began as he prepared himself for the next assault, "I'm starting to wonder just how many of these she has left."

"Hey guys!" Super Sonic called out. "Team maneuver time!"

"Ready?" Super Proto Man turned to the glowing pink echidna and reformed his blade into his arm cannon.

"Oh, yeah," Hyper Knuckles grinned as he positioned himself in front of the barrel and revved up a Super Spin Dash.

"SUPER OVERDRIVE BUSTER!" three cries sounded out as Super Sonic, Turbo Tails, and Hyper Knuckles were fired through the thrown battleships in the center of energy blasts that each had a radius of at least fifty feet. A moment later and Super Ray and Supreme Sally were following behind encased in their own super-sized blasts.

The five blasts tore through Apocalypse Waltz, sending shattered metal flying in all directions, before she moved to counter.

" CHAOS CONTROL! "

The five super-charged blasts halted in mid-air as all eight of the super form warriors were frozen in place, unable to do anything as Apocalypse Waltz simply pulled her body back together as good as new. But she wasn't done yet.

" CHAOS BLAST! "

The massive sphere of power tore away the immense plasma auras around the five closer figures like a strong wind blowing away a fog and sending them tumbling away, and continuing on to do the same to the three super robots that had fired the blasts in the first place. And then Apocalypse Waltz started firing everything in her arsenal with wild abandon in every conceivable direction. (18)

"SHIELDS!" Both Dr. Wily and Dr. Eggman cried in a panic as they saw what was headed for the flagship.

Something on the ship must have heard them, or at least identified the incoming threat as such, and had indeed turned on the shields just in time. The flagship bucked and tilted wildly as the blasts that weren't even aimed at the ship hammered away relentlessly at its protections.

Super Ray had the dubious fortune of being knocked further away than the rest and was thus released from the temporal freeze of Chaos Control in just enough time to begin dodging. But he wasn't just content to dodge. He was also determined to weave his way through and bring the attack back to Apocalypse Waltz as well.

And so he did. He wove past the immense plasma shots, the spray of missiles, the gigantic homing blades, and powered through the crystalline energy blasts. He was getting closer. Soon he'd be through the barrage and close enough that his foe wouldn't know what hit her. He weaved around a final energy blast and saw his target just in front of him.

He didn't quite see the rising backhand that sent him flying straight upwards.

"Everyone still super?" Super Sonic shook his head clear as the barrage abated.

"Yes," Supreme Sally replied calmly.

"Same here," Super Mega Man chimed in, "but I don't think it'll hold through another one of those."

"Yeah," Turbo Tails agreed. "We need to think of something fast."

Super Ray finally started losing enough momentum to bring himself to a stop somewhere in the upper atmosphere and took stock. His super form didn't feel like it was going to last too much longer. Maybe just long enough for one more good shot from this distance. Fortunately, he'd picked up a little something from a fused Loop that he'd been saving for an occasion like this one.

Maybe not exactly like this though. The whole super form thing was something he hadn't expected in his wildest dreams.

"Ok-k-kay... Y-y-you can-n-n d-do this... J-just lik-ke D-d-d-domon taugh-ght you..." Super Ray stuttered to himself as energy began to gather around his hand.

Super Proto Man stared up in the direction that Super Ray had been sent in and started grinning. "I think someone already has. We just need to keep Waltz distracted and maybe hold her still for a bit."

"Shadow taught us the Chaos Bind," Super Sonic grinned.

"And Sonic showed me earlier," Super Mega Man added before sending the pertinent data to his siblings.

"Sounds like a plan," Supreme Sally gave a slight smile.

The seven forms darted around Apocalypse Waltz, taking pot shots and in general making sure her attention was kept on them. After a few moments, all seven were positioned around their mutual foe and nodded at each other.

"CHAOS BIND!" they yelled in unison, sending out chaos energy that wrapped around Apocalypse Waltz and held her tight.

"Th-th-this hand of m-m-m-mine is-s-s sh-sh-shining-ng g-gold..."

"YOU THINK THIS CAN HOLD ME?! YOU'LL RUN OUT OF POWER LONG BEFORE I WILL! AND THEM I'LL CARVE YOUR SKIN FROM YOUR FLESH AND THAT OF ALL YOUR FRIENDS TO MAKE MYSELF A NEW DRESS!" Apocalypse Waltz screamed at them. "IT'S HOPELESS!"

"It-t-t's gr-r-reat cry t-tells me t-to gras-s-sp F-f-freedom!"

"There's always hope," Super Mega Man retorted as he held the bindings firm.

"In fact," Super Sonic grinned, "we've got a Ray of it on the way right now."

"...WHAT?" Apocalypse Waltz's face scrunched up in grotesque confusion and in response each of the seven super form opponents holding her in place with their power extended a finger upwards.

Despite herself, Apocalypse Waltz looked up.

"SH-SHININ–"

Apocalypse Waltz had just enough time to widen her three demonic eyes in shock before Super Ray tore straight through the center one like a bullet through tissue paper. She held that pose for a moment as the Chaos energy bindings around her were release before turning her now two-eyed gaze on her surrounding foes.

"HEHEHEHE..." she began laughing. "HAHAHAHAHA! THAT WAS YOUR RAY OF HOPE?!"

"ray..." came a muffled sound from within Apocalypse Waltz, causing her to cut off her rant and glance down at her torso in confusion. (19)

"Oh, I hope someone's recording this," Hyper Knuckles grinned.

"In high definition," Super Mega Woman smiled back.

"...BURST!"

The voice heralded a massive explosion of golden energy that ripped Apocalypse Waltz to shreds like an overstuffed piñata being busted open.

As the largest piece of Apocalypse Waltz's head fell to the deck of the Egg-Skull fleet's flagship, it began to shimmer and melt into a liquid metal which shrank and reformed into the more normal and familiar figure of the normal Waltz in time for her to impact harshly. A fair bit worse for wear, Waltz still struggled to sit up, only to find herself surrounded by nineteen (well, seventeen plus two mad doctors hanging at the back) rather annoyed heroes and anti-heroes.

"CHAOS SPEAR!" Waltz wasted no time in thrusting a hand forward and trying to continue the battle, only for a whole lot of nothing to emerge.

Many eyebrows were raised at the lack of action.

"...Chaos Spear?" she shook her thrust-out hand in puzzlement as if to ask why it wasn't raining death and destruction on those before her, and was rewarded with a few sparks from short-circuits in her finger cannons.

"Give it up Waltz," came the voice of Roll as she and the other super warriors touched down and descended from their super forms. "You've lost. All of your stolen power is gone and what remains is in no shape to fight."

Waltz began laughing, causing more sparks to emerge from her damaged form. "It's so weird, isn't it? Why do I always have to rain death and destruction on everyone? Why do I kill my only allies instead of making friends...?"

"You know," Rock spoke in a low, hesitantly hopeful, tone, "in this moment she actually seems like someone worth trying to save."

"Oh, right!" Waltz barked with amusement. "Because I enjoy it so much!"

"Moment's passed," Bass glowered as he and Omega took aim and fired. The rapid-fire barrage continued for several seconds until all that was left was a few smoldering remains.

"Well," Vector dusted his hands off when it looked like there wouldn't be any last-second resurrections, "looks like another case wrapped up! Time to head home fellas."

"But..." Charmy began hesitantly, "doesn't Eggman still owe us money?"

"Yes..." Shade agreed lowly as she unsheathed her leech blades. "Yes, he does."

"There he goes," Espio pointed off to the side where Dr. Eggman was doing a poor job of trying to tiptoe away.

"Get back here you slimeball!" Vector yelled as he led the Chaotix in a charge after the rotund, yet surprisingly speedy, doctor.

"Y-yeah!" Ray agreed as he brought up the rear. (20)

"Sonic! You were so brave and handsome and..." Amy glomped onto her blue hero, only to trail off in confusion as she realized she was holding a rather convincing Sonic mannequin instead of the real deal. "Hey! Who put this here?!"

"Come on," Sally sighed to the rest of the Freedom Fighters as Amy charged off in pursuit of Sonic, "let's go catch her before she embarrasses herself further."

"Doctor Wily," the Sniper Joe interrupted the man as he was attempting to discreetly exit in his saucer and handed him an envelope. "This is for your eyes only. Read and consider the contents."

Wily looked over the rather official looking envelope before pocketing it and addressing the messenger. "You know, one of these days I am going to figure out why you went rogue."

"Unlikely," the Sniper Joe replied before sending out a signal to which an automated hover cycle responded. The renegade robot mounted the cycle and sped off, followed by the MET unit that he'd somehow managed to take control of while Wily shook his head and sped off in his flying saucer. (21)

"Thank you for the ride Miss Roll, Mister Blues," Cream said politely as she stepped on the Tango Jet while Big made himself comfortable on top of the Beat Plane Blues was piloting.

"No problem," Roll smiled at the young rabbit as she and her brother took off to transport the two non-looping heroes home.

"So," Knuckles asked Rouge, "what are you going to do now?"

"Oh, I think I'll stick around with the boys for a bit," the treasure hunter smiled as she glanced at the rest of this Loop's Team Dark. "They want to blow up whatever's left of the fleet and I'd like to see if there's anything interesting I might want to keep before they slag it."

"Have fun," Knuckles chuckled and waved as he moved to follow Rock and Tails as they went off to find Sonic's hiding spot before Amy did.

Dr. Wily set his saucer to autopilot and removed the envelope. Considering it for a moment, he gave in to his curiosity and unsealed the envelope, unfolded the letter, and began to read. As he did his eyebrows began to climb their way slowly up his forehead. When he reached the end he calmly put the letter down, turned the contents over in his head, and decided that he was sufficiently intrigued enough to ask for clarification from the source.

Typing away at his control panel, a communications screen opened up and fluxed with static for a few moments before resolving into an image of a gray-haired human in military uniform with the emblem of G.U.N. in the wall behind him.

"What is the meaning of this!" the man spat angrily. "How did you get this frequen–ah... Dr. Wily. I take it you got our offer."

"Yes Commander," Wily steepled his fingers calculatingly, "I did. And I'm quite intrigued as to why the leader of a government organization rather openly opposed to anything I do is offering not just a cease-fire, but what is almost a blank check for resources and development provided I agree to actively work against Ivo."

"As you may have noticed, Dr. Eggman is becoming an ever-increasing global threat," the Commander began. "And while we are opposed to your goals of world domination, between you and the Eggman you are the vastly preferable option. If only because you have come to this world's defense against outside invading forces before. At not insignificant risk to your own safety I might add."

Dr. Wily mused on that for a bit. A few years ago, before he'd finished building Bass, a group of alien conquerors known as the Stardroids had landed. When it became evident that he couldn't control them for his own ends, he'd brought his forces to bear against them instead. After all, this was his world and he'd be damned if he was going to let a few alien upstarts take it from him. It... hadn't gone well for him or his forces. On the bright side, the alien tech he'd salvaged from them was just what he needed to make Bass his finest creation (not that he'd ever admit it within earshot of the boy) and enhance his later series of robot masters.

Ivo on the other hand... The opportunistic parasite had held back and sent his forces into areas that had been devastated and weakened to take control and fortify while everyone else was focused on the invasion. And when it was over, thanks to Light's creations and a few young teen mobians calling themselves the Freedom Fighters, Ivo had tried to press his advantage while the rest of the world was trying to rebuild. It wasn't a bad tactic to be honest, and Wily probably would have tried it himself had he come out of the initial engagements better, but the fact remained that Ivo only had the resources because he was too much of a coward to stand up for his own claim to the world. The man didn't care if the world was burnt to a cinder so long as he could claim the ashes.

Unbidden, a parody of a common airline message ran through Wily's head. 'We know you have a choice in genius conquerors and we thank you for choosing Wily.' (22)

"Understood Commander," Dr. Wily allowed himself a satisfied smile. "Now... let's talk details."

"Oh, man," Sonic pleaded with Tails, "not the Pokemon Loop story again..."

"Pokemon Loop?" Rock raised an eyebrow.

"Yeah," Tails grinned. "It's a place where people catch, raise, and battle an endless array of monsters they can store in special balls that can shrink and fit in their pockets. And, no, it's generally not inhumane at all, but you really need to experience it for yourself to get that."

"Okay," Rock agreed hesitantly, gesturing for the fox to continue even as Knuckles chortled away and Sonic tried to moan loud enough to drown Tails out.

"Anyway," Tails snickered, "anytime we end up there as trainers, Sonic only ever manages to catch one thing. By the end of the Loop, all of the Leagues are calling his team 'Sonic's Spearows'..."

Knuckles broke out in laughter as Sonic buried his face in his hands, and even Rock chuckled a bit despite most of the joke going over his head.

"So..." Rock mused, "if I went there, my team might be known as the Mega Mon?"

Knuckles froze at that question and Sonic perked back up instantly.

"Hey, Knuckles," Sonic grinned. "That reminds me of that one Loops where Angel Island was like that Jamaica place in the Hub..."

"Sonic..." Knuckles growled.

"Come on, Knux," the hedgehog wasn't dissuaded in the slightest, "do the accent."

"So you were once an island brudda too?" the sudden Jamaican accent did not come from Knuckles. A gobsmacked Sonic turned to stare open-mouthed at Rock, the source of the voice.

"Yeah, mon," Rock grinned, keeping the accent up. "One Loop I was da Mega Mon, layin' da smack down on bad ol' Docta Wily when'ver he rear his ugly head. I hadda fight da Rasta Mon, da Bobsled Mon, da Panto Mon, da Sprint Mon, da Cycle Mon, da Steel Mon, da Rugby Mon, and da Docta Bird Mon. So it good ta meet anudda brudda." (23)

Sonic kept staring as Rock held out his fist to Knuckles.

"Respect."

Knuckles, who had also been staring (though not gaping), blinked, grinned, and bumped his fist with Rock's.

"Respect."

"Well," Rouge stretched in the secondary bridge (the main one having been part of the control tower that was blown up and reformed into Waltz's giant body), "we've searched this thing from bow to stern and pretty much taken everything even remotely useful that we could carry. So... time to hit the self-destruct and watch the fireworks?"

"Finally we shall give the creation of Eggman the fiery fate it deserves," Omega intoned.

"Hmph," Shadow smirked. "Yes, indeed we sh–"

Shadow was cut off as the deck beneath their feet was rocked by an explosion.

"...I hope that was one of you," Rouge stated as she looked at each of her teammates in turn.

"No dice Bats," Bass frowned as he peered off to the side to where Treble was growling at something.

"Indeed," a synthetic voice intoned as a mass of liquid rose up from the corner and resolved itself into the form of Neo Metal Sonic. "My traitorous queen was... less thorough with my demise than she should have been. Unfortunately for you." (24)

Anyone who was outside of the flagship watching would have heard muffled violence and seen the immense craft shudder slightly as it slowly descended.

Bass coughed dust out of his systems as he flexed the wings of his super adaptor armor. Apparently this 'Neo' Metal Sonic wasn't the chump he'd assumed. Their predicament wasn't pretty. Neo Metal Sonic had sabotaged the engines, sending the flagship into a slow but steady crash dive. One that he was confident about not only surviving, but killing his opponents. The battle was supposedly to keep them from evacuating before the airship crashed, but Bass had a feeling that Neo Metal Sonic was aiming to see if he could kill them before that happened.

It was something he'd have done in the same situation.

"I may have been stripped of all but the most basic powers of Chaos by my traitorous queen," the menacing blue robot proclaimed as he stepped out into the chamber the fight had moved to, "but I still possess the data of yourselves as well as that of the other 'heroes' of this world and the full arsenal of both Eggman's and Wily's most powerful creations. You cannot defeat me."

"Enemy power greater than anticipated," Omega allowed. "Preparing appropriate response."

"You seem pretty confident," Shadow grinned in anticipation. "You must not really know who we are."

"Bass, the most powerful and able of Dr. Wily's creations," Neo Metal Sonic replied calmly as his hands formed into Metal Blades and he moved into a combat stance. "E-123 Omega, the most concentrated form of standard military firepower Dr. Eggman has ever constructed. Shadow, the 'ultimate lifeform'. Your broken bodies shall serve as a testament to my new power."

"Hey!" Rouge protested at the blatant omission from the list of valued opponents. "What am I? Chopped liver?!"

"Not yet," Neo Metal Sonic stated as he charged.

All across the ship, alarms blared loudly.

"Black Wave!" Rouge yelled as she launched the dark energy projectile at Neo Metal Sonic, only for it to splash off of a skull-shaped forcefield.

"An inferior attempt," Neo Metal Sonic taunted as he turned towards her. "This is how it is done."

With that, Neo Metal Sonic shot a Black Wave of his own at her. She dodged easily, but realized too late that he'd actually fired a spread of Black Waves and caught the second in the leg, making her muscles seize up as the stunning effect of her own technique hit her.

"Annihilate," Omega attempted to take advantage of Neo Metal Sonic's distraction to shoot him, but the forcefield was still in place. Plus, as the blue robot formed one of his hands into the same style of gatling gun as Omega and returned fire, it seemed that the barrier was one-way.

"Your efforts are futile," Neo Metal Sonic stated firmly. "I have all of your powers and more. Chaos Spear."

The last was accompanied by a blast of yellow energy that clipped Shadow's shoulder as he tried to teleport inside the robot hedgehog's guard.

"You think you're so tough?!" Bass yelled as he came careening straight for Neo Metal Sonic on his super adaptor's jet propulsion systems, firing repeatedly ahead of him. Team Dark's adversary fired back, but the crossfire from Bass prevented accurate aim and even then he was coming in too fast to be stopped by enemy fire. "You think having our powers makes you better?!"

Bass crashed into Neo Metal Sonic's shield with enough force to send them both tumbling across the floor. They skidded to a stop grappling with one another, Bass pinned beneath their mutual foe.

"Let's see how you handle us using yours!" the son of Wily growled as the air around him began to ionize. "Joint Matrix: Burst Shield!"

A bright flash blinded the others as the weapon activated, but when their sight returned, they saw an unharmed Neo Metal Sonic encased in an eight-sided diamond barrier known as the Black Shield.

"I can handle anything you can dish out," he leered.

The massive flagship finally broke through the bottom of the cloud layer and continued its descent towards the ground.

Neo Metal Sonic unleashed twin blasts of ice and fire from each arm at his opponents, causing them to jump back. The four members of Team Dark exchanged glances and nodded to each other. Shadow jumped into a Spin Dash on the barrel of Bass's arm cannon while Rouge did the same with Omega on the far side of their mutual opponent.

"Eat this!" Bass yelled as he took to the air and fired Shadow at the would-be robot overlord.

"Fire!" Omega intoned a moment later as he did the same with Rouge.

"A futile effort," the enhanced robot hedgehog backhanded Shadow out of the air contemptuously and spun on the counter's momentum to do the same with Rouge.

"Chaos Control!" the yell from Shadow heralded Neo Metal Sonic freezing in mid-air, unable to defend as Rouge blasted into his lower body, sending the robot tumbling. The tumble took the blue robot towards the spot where Bass was now crouching in preparation to pounce.

"You're finished!" Bass grinned maliciously as he began to emit a wild and powerful energy field. "V! MAXIMUM! OVERDRIVE!"

Bass's attack slammed into Metal Sonic and drove him up through the ceiling, and every obstacle between there and the deck.

"Exploding bullets are loaded," Rouge explained quickly as she climbed up onto Omega's shoulder.

"Then let's go," Shadow stated from Omega's other shoulder as the robot intoned his gleeful anticipation and Rouge took aim at thin air. "Chaos Control!"

"Bla–"

The attack matrix sputtered out just after Bass breached the top deck and he felt his systems seize up as Neo Metal Sonic took aim at his stalling form.

"Farewe–"

"–ck Wave!" the stunning energy of Rouge's attack struck Neo Metal Sonic point-blank as the remaining three members of Team Dark teleported directly between the two combatants thanks to Shadow's Chaos Control.

"Destroy," Omega declared as he opened fire on the would-be overlord's defenseless form.

The flagship shuddered as it scraped a mountain peak.

Team Dark didn't have time to examine the smoldering wreck that used to be their opponent. The flagship was now too close to the ground for anything other than getting off as fast as possible.

"Treble! Plane!" Bass ordered as he disengaged his super adaptor. Treble quickly transformed from his armor mode to a small two-seater plane reminiscent of a fighter jet. Bass jumped in the front seat and motioned for Omega to get in the back. Shadow and Rouge took up perches on either wing and held on tight.

"Punch it!" Rouge yelled as they finished getting themselves set, and had to strain to keep her grip as the small craft accelerated like it was shot from a cannon.

Explosions rippled across the flying battleship's hull like a holiday fireworks display as the massive craft plowed into the ground at long last.

"You know, I could get used to this," Rouge grinned as the Treble Plane soared far enough away from the crashing craft to be safe from any flying debris, but also close enough for one heck of a view.

"Working together?" Shadow grinned back.

"We do make beautiful explosions together," Omega agreed.

"...Ah, what the heck," Bass caved in the moment. "That was some pretty epic ass-kicking we did back there. I'd be willing to do that again."

"Hey, Sally-girl?" Bunnie asked as the Freedom Fighters were returning home.

"Yes Bunnie?" Sally turned to give her friend her full attention.

"Well... Ah ain't meanin' ta pry or nuthin', but y'all seemed a little... scared a' Metal-hog."

Sally went silent at the claim, and remained that way for several moments.

"Actually," Rotor mused to himself, "now that I think about it, you seem to have been avoiding confrontations with Metal Sonic for a few Loops... Since NICOLE got bonded to you as an Intelligent Device in fact. You know anything about this 'Cole?"

The AI's holographic lynx avatar appeared before addressing the group. "I am afraid that it is a... rather personal matter that Sally has kindly asked me not to relate to others."

"We ahr understandink," Antoine smiled gently. "Princess... remembahr: We ahr your friends. When you ahr readee for speakink, we ahr readee for listenink."

"I know," Sally replied quietly. "And... you're right. I should talk about this. There's... there's just someone else I think should hear it first." (25)

"Okay, Sal," Sonic said as he closed the door to his room and motioned for Sally to sit on the bed, "we're alone. So what is it you needed to talk about?"

"It's... it's about Metal Sonic," Sally began hesitantly.

"And why you're so keen on avoiding him lately," Sonic finished, and scowled at the look of surprise Sally shot him. "Oh, come on! I'm not that ignorant of what's going on around me! This Loop is the first time you've let yourself be in the same place as him while Awake in a long time, and I'm pretty sure the fact that you'd have been facing him with a small army at your side while he'd be in a form that frankly looks and sounds nothing like himself was a big factor."

Sally blushed at the accusation, but nodded in affirmation.

"What..." Sonic sat down next to the ground squirrel princess and put a comforting arm around her shoulders. "What did he do to you, Sal?"

"It..." Sally took a deep breath to steady herself. "It all started in a variant Loop you weren't Awake for. I never found out who the visiting Anchor was, might have been Blaze if the rumors about some island nation on the other side of the planet was true, but I was a little preoccupied with other matters..."

Sonic listened patiently to the tale Sally told him. Aside from the aforementioned rumors of an island nation, the place sounded a lot like that Astro Boy movie Tails had insisted he watch. Advanced city flying over a post-apocalyptic surface filled with junkyards of the city's discarded waste and overgrown ruins of former civilization.

Except in this story, Uncle Chuck was the brilliant scientist and Sonic himself was the young boy who was killed in an accident. The robot replica of Sonic that his uncle had built in his grief caused the tale to take an even darker turn when the robot proved to be malicious. Or, in layman's terms, in his efforts to try and replace/reincarnate Sonic, that version of Uncle Chuck had created Metal Sonic in all his evil robot glory.

"He starts... he starts taking everyone. One by one. They disappear and a robot version of them comes back on Metal Sonic's side instead. Until I'm the only one left. I ran as best as I could, tried to turn the fight back on him, but I got caught. He takes me into a room where there's already a robot version of me on a table hooked up to some machine and he straps me down to another table and hooks me into the other end of the device. All the while he's talking about how I'll see things his way soon. How I'll become his queen once I've been downloaded into a 'superior' robot body and my 'inferior flesh' disposed of. And I can't do anything but wonder if it's really going to be me in that body as he throws the switch, and then I wake up in Nanoha's Loop."

Sonic remained silent as Sally sobbed in his arms.

"And that's all I can think of whenever I see him. Him standing over me, telling me that I'll be his machine queen one I've shed my flesh and joined him. And then I have these dreams where we're all fighting together and then suddenly one of the others is a robot version of themselves turning on us. And then another and another until it's just you and me back to back and suddenly I hear his voice telling me what a glorious empire we have and I whip around to see it's not you anymore. It's him... reaching for me... tearing my skin away to show metal underneath..."

Sonic just sat there comforting the distraught princess for a while before speaking. "You know, I had something similar happen to me a long while back. I've already talked with Rock about it, you know, because he's gone through the whole evil robot doppelganger thing a few times himself, and I've been meaning to tell you about it as well, and it's kinda relevant and all, so..."

Sally sniffed, but made no move to stop Sonic from speaking.

"Anyway, there was this one Loop real early on, before Tails started even, where Metal Sonic kept trying to claim he was me from the future. That it was my destiny to become him. I'm my usual cocky self, yeah I admitted that, and I pound his face in a few times. He always gets away and survives to come back though, but I'm not real worried. I figure 'same old same old', right? Well after a few battles, he starts getting smart. Creepy smart. Like he knows what we're all going to do before we do it. And he starts picking everyone off one by one and roboticizing them. And me, I start going spare trying to figure out how he's always ten steps ahead of us. I throw everything at him, things I'd never even have considered trying before the Loops, but he still counters all of it. Then I start looking at all the friends I have left wondering if one of them is a traitor feeding him information. I stop talking with them and become even more of a loner than usual, but he still knows everything I'm about to do before I do it."

Sonic tried to suppress a shudder for Sally's sake, only to realize he'd closed his eyes when he feels her hand on his cheek and opens them to stare straight into hers.

"And then," Sonic sighed, "I was the only one left. I took the fight to him, determined to beat him once and for all or die trying, but Metal he... It was like he'd gotten a freaking script! It wasn't a fight to him, it was a dance recital! Before I know it, I'm stuck in a roboticizer attached to some massive doohickey. I'm thinking it looked real familiar when I realize it looks exactly like what Metal popped out of early on. And he starts telling me that the thing is a time machine. That he's not just going to roboticize me, but send me back in time to become him in the first place. He even proves that he remembers my knowledge of the Loops despite not being Awake. He turns the thing on and I have just enough time before the roboticization process finishes to see myself arrive in the past."

Sonic let Sally hug him, and returned it a moment later. The two sat like that for a few minutes before either spoke.

"At first, I just pounded on Metal that much harder when we fought," Sonic picked his tale back up. "But after a while I started remembering dreams. Nightmares. Where I was just hanging around with everyone like usual when suddenly you all got shocked looks on your face and started attacking me. All of them ended when I finally caught a glimpse of my reflection and saw Metal's face instead of mine. Heck, I still have them from time to time."

"Thanks Sonic," Sally sniffed and wiped her eyes. "It's nice to know I'm not the only one who has nightmares about Metal and turning into a robot."

"Actually," Sonic patted the princess on the back, "when I talked to Rock he didn't think it was about Metal or turning into a robot at all."

"But–"

"No," Sonic interrupted her, "hear me out. Big Blue made a lot of sense when we talked about this and I think it applies to you too."

"...Okay," Sally said after a moment.

"Okay..." Sonic repeated and took a deep breath to collect his thoughts. "Rock... Rock's had more than his fair share of evil doubles too, including one that's supposedly him from the future, so I thought he'd have a good perspective on this. He's had a few nightmares too, or whatever the robot equivalent is, and he said something that really made me think. He said that what he was most afraid of was Dr. Wily taking away his Free Will. Of losing control of himself and being made to hurt those he cared for. And it hit me that that's what I was afraid of too. Of Eggman finally getting his wish and making me one of his minions. It happened when we helped Rock get his place up and running. My super form got roboticized and if Rock was any less of a fighter, that would have been game right there."

"Is that why you had trouble sleeping afterwards?" Sally asked.

"Yeah," Sonic admitted. "I kept dreaming that I was their super weapon again and they were making me hurt everyone for them. Making me hurt my friends. Making me hurt you. And I know you well enough that what you're really scared of is the same thing. The loss of control. Being unable to stop yourself from doing terrible things. That sound right?"

"Yeah," Sally nodded solemnly. "I remember the baseline. When I was roboticized into Mecha Sally, or whatever he called me. I remember what he made me do. All of it. It was the worst thing that ever happened to me until that Loop with Metal. I... I just don't think I could take that again."

Sonic sat in silence for several moments.

"What if I said there was a way you didn't have to?"

"...How?" Sally looked curious.

"It's something Hermes noticed after we got back from Rock's place," the blue blur grinned. "He told me that all of us who went, even the non-loopers, got a minor glitch leftover in our code from when we were the Roboticized Masters. It's nothing dangerous mind you, but he felt I should know anyway. I was going to tell everyone when I spotted Tails playing around with it. Seems he'd found it on his own and was experimenting on what it could do so I figured I'd wait and do some experimenting on my own before I told everyone. And..."

Sonic concentrated for a few seconds and there was a flash of light from his body. When it died down, Sally felt her throat constrict and her eyes widen. Sonic had just turned into a robot...

Not like Metal Sonic. A sturdier design with wider legs.

Roboticized Master Sonic Man.

'Ohwalkersohwalkersohwalkersohwalkersohwalkersohwalkersohwalkersohwalkers...' her brain raced at the sight.

"Sal...?"

The voice stopped her panic attack even faster than it had begun. That wasn't the cold merciless voice of Metal Sonic. It wasn't the menacing synthetic sound of any of Eggman's creations. Heck, it didn't even have the threatening tone that the average Wily-bot used.

"Sal, it's still me in here," the mildly robotic voice of Sonic, the same voice she trusted with her life (sometimes against her better judgment), assured her.

"You... roboticized yourself?" Sally tried to get her mind back on track.

"Yeah," Sonic, or Sonic Man in this form, rubbed the back of his metal head a bit sheepishly. "Just finished getting it down this Loop even. Still, sorry for scaring you like that. But this isn't even the best part!"

"There's something better than turning yourself into a super robot with the power of both Eggman and Wily tech in one package?" Sally raised an eyebrow. She knew how Sonic got about his transformations.

"Yeah," Sonic Man's smirk was evident despite the Roboticozed Master form's lack of a mouth. "The best thing about being able to self-roboticize at will like this is..."

There was another flash of light.

"...you can also de -roboticize at will."

Sally looked up at the grinning flesh-and-blood Sonic and blinked a few times as that sunk in.

"De-roboticize...? At will...? You mean...?"

"Yeah," Sonic's grin softened. "If Robuttnik ever gets us again, we should be able to just... turn back. Of course, it may not work exactly as advertised, but–"

Sonic was cut off by a glomp and a rather fierce kiss.

"...I'd love to learn that," Sally said when she finally came up for air. "You will teach everyone else too, right?"

"Well, yeah!" Sonic almost looked insulted at the idea that he wouldn't.

"Good. I know Bunnie will like it," Sally told him. "As much as she's okay with being a cyborg and likes all of the perks that come with it, she still wants to have a honeymoon with Antoine where she has all of her original limbs."

"Ah, right," Sonic nodded, reminding himself that some Loops Bunnie's cybernetics were from partial roboticization instead of being prosthetics. "But that's for later. There's something else we should do first."

"Like what?" Sally asked, puzzled.

"Well," Sonic waggled his eyebrows, "we are in my bedroom."

Sally hit him with a pillow. (26)

"You think Doc Wily might really be a ninja?" Vector asked his chameleon friend.

"Well..." Espio hedged for a moment. "Assuming he is, he's either and exceptionally bad ninja or an exceptionally good ninja."

"...I don't get it, can't you tell when someone else is a ninja?" Vector scratched his head in confusion.

"Only if they are within a certain range of competence," Espio answered. "A range that Dr. Wily does not fall in. The ultimate goal of the true ninja, after obtaining the necessary skills to complete any mission, is to hide the fact that they are a ninja from all others. It is why; for all my expertise in martial arts, combat, stealth, and infiltration; I am merely a very good ninja. For everyone who knows me also knows that I am a ninja."

"But didn't Doc Wily pretty much admit to being one back there?" Vector still did not seem enlightened.

"Yes, which would make him an exceptionally bad ninja for revealing such without having achieved appropriate skill to back up the claim," Espio agreed. "However, I find myself disinclined to believe his claim, which would make him able to hide his ninja status even after revealing it. A feat that only an exceptionally good ninja could even hope to accomplish."

"Okay, seriously, what's up with you lately?" Bass posed to his... friend? Rival? Eh, friendly rival was close enough for government work he supposed. And Shadow was badass enough that he'd actually admit to that. "Ever since these 'Black Arms' idiots showed up, you've been acting weird. Like, emo weird. It's freaking me out to be honest, and I don't freak easy."

"It's..." Shadow was about to say it was none of the robot's business, but stopped himself. Sonic and the others had tried their best to talk him through this a few times, but they didn't really relate to him in the first place. Bass... did. They were both dark individuals who teetered on the line between hero and villain. If anyone could offer a valid perspective on this, it was the 'Black Prince'. "It's complicated. You know I was created fifty years ago by Professor Gerald, correct?"

"And you were friends with some girl named Maria that you never stop talking about," Bass folded his arms. "Tell me something new."

"Well, the leader of the Black Arms, Black Doom, claims I was made to be their vanguard. There's evidence that supports this, evidence showing that I was made partly with DNA from the Black Arms race. But there's also the fact that the project Gerald headed was to make a defensive weapon for GUN. And then there's Dr. Eggman who claims that I'm really a robot replica of the original Shadow that he made to serve him . I just... I don't know who to believe. Why was I made? What is my purpose?"

It was true. He hadn't looped into the newly restored baseline since he'd helped get Bass's native Loop up and running, instead only having Loops where the Black Arms either didn't exist or never made their way to Mobius. It was his 327th time encountering them and he was no closer to discovering the truth of his pre-Loop origins than when he started looping.

"You know," Bass began seriously, "only the fact that you're a kick-ass fighter, either as an opponent or an ally, is keeping me from laughing my steel-plated ass off at you right now."

"This is important!" Shadow growled at the robot. Treble began to growl back from his place at Bass's side.

"Since when?" Bass shot back as he waved Treble down. "Look, I've got enough biometric scanners installed that I can tell you Eggman is lying his rotund butt off, but the rest of it? Who the hell cares? You think I let the fact that Dr. Wily built me dictate my life? I've ended up fighting against him more often than I fight for him. So why the hell should you let GUN or Black Doom, or hell even Gerald, tell you how to live yours? Who cares who made you in the past? They don't get to tell you how to live your future. What does it matter where you came from next to where you go from here?"

Shadow blinked as he digested that. The way Bass put it, it all seemed so clear. What did it matter if he was made as Black Doom's vanguard, GUN's weapon, or even if he'd actually been one of Eggman's robots? The ultimate choice... was his. It always had been. (27)

Shadow sighed. "I really have been acting like an idiot, haven't I?"

"Eh, we all have our off days," Bass shrugged. "Now, how about we get up to that comet and kick Black Doom's ass back across the cosmos?"

Shadow raised an eyebrow at the robot's assumption. "And what makes you think I won't decide to help them invade instead?"

"Maria," Bass deadpanned.

The dark hedgehog blinked and shrugged. It was a fair rap.

Shadow grit his teeth as he and Bass raced towards the center of the comet. The others were paralyzed by a chemical from the Black Arms and only his own biology, a defense apparently copied by Bass along with his Chaos powers, allowed him movement.

Black Doom had revealed his true intentions at last. To turn the world below and all who lived their... into a renewable food source. This was even worse than he'd feared from all the times where these events had been stopped or thrown off course before they reached this point.

And then Black Doom did something unexpected. Something he hadn't done in all the Loops prior. He wrested control of the Chaos Emeralds from where they hovered around Shadow and used their power to invoke Chaos Control.

The comet was transported to the planet surface where it began to pulse and grow protrusions, sending searching tendrils into the city and soon the rest of the world.

There. He'd found Black Doom. Waiting for him. Smug and assured in his victory.

Time to dissuade him of that notion.

Shadow groaned as he listened to the final message from Professor Gerald, one he'd waited untold Loops to hear. He hadn't expected Black Doom to be able to exert control over his body like that. Bass was being held nearby in an energy field, his ability to replicate Shadow's defenses against the Black Arms' paralysis having piqued Black Doom's interest.

Figuring out how to prevent this from happening to him again was now his top priority in the Loops. He hated feeling weak.

"Don't worry grandfather!" a female voice spoke up on the recording. Maria. "Shadow and I will protect this planet! Right Shadow?"

Screw it. Screw letting Black Doom walk all over him like a neophyte. Shadow gathered his will and power and forced himself to his feet.

"Well, well, well" Black Doom observed. "It seems you're immune to my mind control..."

"You have no control over me," Shadow began ominously. "I now know who I am. The past is behind me, and I am who I choose to be. And I choose to be the one who kicks you off this planet!"

Barking interrupted the exchange as Treble burst into the chamber. That... was one determined canine robot.

"Treble!" Bass called. "Super Adaptor!"

The fusion of robot warrior and canine burst the energy prison and the combined form landed on his feet.

"Don't forget about me!" Bass growled as he glared at Black Doom. "I'm taking my own pound of flesh out of your hide Black Doom!"

The two charged as one, only for Black Doom to flash away with Chaos Control.

"Have it your way," the voice of the alien overlord echoed around them. "So be it... Your past, present, and future ends... TODAY! Say goodbye as you witness my true wrath!"

"You gonna let him talk to us like that?" the dark robot warrior grinned at Shadow.

"No," the dark defender smirked back as he pulled the Chaos Emeralds down and drew on their power. Doom wanted to up the ante? Then Super Shadow and Super Bass would call his bluff.

'Devil Doom' was one ugly bugger, that was certain. About the only thing more dangerous than his appearance were his abilities. Massive chunks of city ripped from the streets, protective lasers, breath weapons that belonged in a giant monster movie, and two heads.

Pinning him down might have been hard solo, but with both Super Bass and himself blasting away, it wasn't looking good for the alien conqueror.

Super Shadow began gathering energy for one final Chaos Spear on one side of 'Devil Doom' while Super Bass did the same with his copied Chaos powers on the other side.

"CHAOS SPEAR!" they both yelled and two beams of energy lanced through both of 'Devil Doom's' eye sockets.

"Impossible!" Doom ranted as he lost the power of flight and plummeted to the ground below. There was more, but Super Shadow wasn't in a mood to listen. Maybe next time. He was more concerned with focusing his Chaos Control properly to get the Black Comet off the planet and into the path of the ARK's Eclipse Cannon.

In a room high aboard a mechanized zeppelin high in the sky, a shadowed figure glared from behind his desk.

"They're done?" he asked.

"Yes," a female voice replied nervously. "I took the specs you drew up and improved our rides just like you asked. I even made a few improvements, but..."

"But...?" the voice repeated dangerously.

"But... how did you come up with these in the first place?!" the female blurted out. "One day you have absolutely no interest in the technology, heck you slept through my father's lessons on it, and the next you're handing me designs so far ahead of what we have that even I can barely make sense of them! It's just not possible !"

"Oh, but it is..." the grin in the voice was audible. "If you travel back in time."

"But..."

"Nothing comes back except for memories," the figure continued, ignoring the interruption. "Memories and some training. Memories of learning our origins, sure, but also memories of a rival. One who I've spent several lifetimes aiming to beat. A victory I'm dedicated enough to that I forced myself awake for every last lesson I could get out of you on how our technology works. Many times over. Until I could memorize the specs that you yourself would eventually create and bring them back with me. All to beat my rival."

"Wait..." the female interrupted again. "You... You know the truth about Babylon Garden?"

"Of course Wave," the figure brushed off her surprise. "All in time. But first... First I have a score to settle."

"Jet...?" the female named Wave voiced her concern.

The dark grin of Jet the Hawk was illuminated by a flash of lightning. "A score with Sonic the Hedgehog."

---

1) Shadow loves any excuse to use lines like this.

2) This Loop at least. It was kind of an off-and-on thing for them.

3) Of course, he'd have this reaction to the suggestion of Dr. Eggman in a relationship with anyone...

4) Well, light fire for Waltz. Borderline overkill for most anyone else.

5) Non-looping Amy tends to have something of a one-track mind.

6) Uh oh...

7) If you've played Sonic Heroes you can probably guess whose voice this is and what's being said.

8) And if he did that, Amy might head who knows where trying to find him and miss the upcoming fight.

9) No offense to Rouge, but I'm betting on the C4.

10) You didn't forget about that, did you?

11) He does. Mr. X in Megaman 6. It boggles the mind how he got that money though...

12) The dramatic reveal that you all probably saw coming a mile away!

13) What's really disturbing is that she meant it when she called him 'love'.

14) Super Ray comes from something I find rather interesting. In the comic baseline, Ray uses the Master Emerald to actually fake going super and scare off some attackers. It's something no one has done before or since to my knowledge, so props to the little guy.

15) Hey wait, she dropped the song name! Cue the music!

16) In case you were wondering if Dr. Wily could ever resist gloating, the answer seems to be 'no'.

17) Grabbing some popcorn to watch an epic battle for the fate of the world is a surprisingly common attitude among loopers.

18) Wait, what? My script clearly says 'Waltz gets her gargantuan steel-plated arse handed to her' right here. I even underlined it!

19) Whoops... A couple of the pages in my script got stuck together. False alarm folks!

20) Hey, wait a second Ray! You were supposed to have a 'congrats on going super' party! You don't want Pinkie to learn you skipped out on your own party, do you? Ray? Aw, nuts, he can't hear me on the other side of the fourth wall.

21) Yeah, Joe's Awake this Loop. Probably... Maybe...

22) All I can say about this line is that the inside of my head is a disturbing place.

23) Hey Wily! Jamaican Masters?

Wily: Why, yes, I did.

In order: Rastafari movement, Jamaican Bobsled team, Panto Mime, Sprinting, Cycling (aka the two sports Jamaicans have won Olympic medals in), Steelpan (aka the Steel Drum), Rugby (popular team sport in Jamaica), and the national bird of Jamaica (the Doctor Bird, aka the Swallow-Tail Humming Bird)

24) You know, I always felt a little cheated that I didn't get to fight Neo Metal Sonic in the game.

25) Warning: Relating of traumatic Loops ahead.

26) I'm not saying they did. I'm also not saying they didn't.

27) Sometimes we just need a second opinion to see what's right in front of us.

28) What's this? Is Jet the Hawk looping? Stay tuned to find out!

Mega Loops 8

8. baked

"It's hot..." Roll moaned from her lounging spot on the sidewalk.

"Yeah..." Rock agreed with his sister.

"Really hot..." Roll added.

"Uh-huh..." Rock murmured.

"A hundred and eleventeen in the shade."

"That's not a real number."

"I know, but my external thermometer is fried from prolonged stress."

"Ah... I wonder what's causing it?"

"Bwahahahaha!" the voice of Dr. Wily suddenly blared from the televisions in a nearby electronics shop. "Citizens of Mega City! No doubt you have noticed my little heat wave project! If you ever want the weather to cool down again, you will turn over all government and administrative functions to me! You have... oh, until your brains all bake in the heat! BWAHAHAHAHAHAHA!"

"Well... that explains that," Rock sighed.

"You did ask," Roll smirked slightly as the two of them got up to go thwart the mad scientist's latest scheme.

8.2 (Gamerex27)

The door to Maccadam's Oil House swung open. A small, blue mech walked in, shivering. He took a seat by the bar. "Something strong, please."

"Eeeyup," said the ancient mech tending the bar, grabbing a mug and filling it with some of the higher-grade Energon. He slid the mug across the table to the stranger, then reached for a second mug to give to the other, yellow mech at the bar.

Rock turned his head slightly, then nearly jumped out of his seat at the sight of yellow. "GAH!"

"AH!" Startled, Bumblebee fell off of his stool, slamming to the ground.

Taking a deep breath (even though Transformers didn't need to breath, it still held a calming effect for Rock), the Mega Mech noticed that the yellow robot next to him was not the horrible thing that had terrorized him in the last Loop.

"Ow..." Bumblebee climbed back onto his stool, wincing at the combined pain from the fall and the persistent sting still wracking his throat from where an Awake Ratchet had installed a new voice box yet again. "You feeling Loopy?"

"Yeah," Rock sighed. "Sorry about scaring you...It's just that, last Loop, I had bad experiences with the color yellow. I'll have to ask Dad if he can change the color of the Mega Buster's shots next time he's Awake."

"What happened?" The Autobot scout asked.

"I was making my way through another one of Wily's mazes," Rock replied, "when this... thing started chasing me. Shooting it didn't work: no matter what I did, it just kept eating everything I shot it with, from the Mega Buster to the Saw Blades to everything else. It cornered me off a cliff, and next thing I knew, I Woke up here on Axiom Nexus."

"What did it look like?"

"I don't think it was one of Wily's robots, actually," Rock said. "It was some floating organic ball. It freaked me out, really."

"Sounds like you ran into Pac Man." Bumblebee took a swig of his Energon. "You run into him again, you have to attack him from behind. Preferably if you're incorporeal at the time, since he can't fight back against ghosts."

"Thanks for the advice." Rock clinked his glass against Bumblebee's. "Since there doesn't seem to be any major fights in this Loop, I think I can finally take a breather. I need it, too," he said morosely, "after the horror movie I just went through."

8.3

"Wait..." the Flash said in response to the robot's claim. "You're seriously telling us that you were made by Dr. T. O. Morrow in order to infiltrate the Justice League? During your interview to join?"

"Yes," the crimson android replied.

"Why?" Green Lantern voiced the confused question on everyone's mind.

"Because my creator is a jerk," the android applicant stated calmly, "and I have no intention of even pretending to help him with his plans."

"Assuming we do believe you," Batman's eyes narrowed, "why should we let you join? What reason do we have to trust you after you've told us you were made to infiltrate our ranks?"

"None, really," the robot shrugged. "But I intend to continue helping people who need it to the best of my abilities, regardless if I am allowed to join or not."

The core members of the Justice League excused themselves to deliberate on the matter for a few minutes before returning.

"Well," Superman stepped forward from the returning group, "while there are some concerns, we have decided to give you the benefit of the doubt." At this, the Man of Steel extended his hand towards the man made of steel (or rather a superior metal alloy) and shook the hand extended in return. "Welcome to the Justice League Proto Man."

8.4

"What are you working on, dad?" Roll asked her currently Awake father.

"I found this most intriguing piece of armor in my last Loop," Dr. Light replied as he continued examining what looked like a steel breastplate, except that it shimmered and seemed to partially vanish every so often like a yoku block. "A dimensional breastplate of science as I was informed. I've been trying to see if I can duplicate its properties on my own and create a full set of plate armor for myself."

"This wouldn't have anything to do with you taking Dr. Lalinde to the Renaissance festival next month, would it?" Roll folded her arms.

"...Maybe," Dr. Light gained a slight blush. "I've heard that she's been ordering some materials to make a period costume of her own and..."

"And you saw an opportunity to both dress to match and play around with a new toy," Roll shook her head, smiling. "Well, good luck dad."

8.5

Roll opened the door and blinked.

Nope, the man who called himself Reverend Dark, in full red and black preacher regalia no less, was still there.

"Have you embraced the glory that is robotic superiority?" he asked her, holding a book tightly between his hands. A quick scan revealed the embossed title to be Principia Robotica 2.0.

Roll slowly closed the door and attempted to process what had just happened. After a momentary diagnostic to make sure her sensory arrays were not malfunctioning, she opened the door again.

"Only by embracing their robotic masters can humanity be saved from itself," the man began again. "Heavenly sister, you and your robotic brothers and sisters must accept your place at the head of the cause and lead the foul dregs of humanity into glorious servitude!"

Roll stood motionlessly in silence, having absolutely no clue how to handle this as the man continued to preach his beliefs at her.

8.6

Roll spat out water from her systems as her brother tried to hide his laughter.

"What happened?" he finally managed to ask.

"What happened is that dad forgot to remove Tango's feline aversion to water before he added the marine setting," Roll huffed indignantly.

"Ouch," Rock winced.

"And honestly," Roll continued to gripe, "what in the world does Dr. Wily keep finding in the deep ocean anyway?"

"Dunno," Rock shrugged. "It's apparently important enough for him to go after himself, but not critical enough for him to built a set of robot masters for."

7.7.7 (continued) (Hubris Plus)

Pitchblende Part 2: Get Equipped

"R-Robo...?" Doctor Light whispered, leaning slightly closer to the screen displaying Rock's video feed. "It's been years... I thought I'd never..."

"What was that, Dr Light?" Roll's voice asked from a second screen. She was standing over Iceman's deactivated form and had just finished scanning him with her copy chip. "There must be some interference, I couldn't quite hear you."

"...Nothing, Roll," he answered, shaking himself away from the past. "Excellent work with Iceman, I'm sending you on to Fireman. His fuel lines weren't designed for subzero temperatures, so the Ice Slasher should disable him without too much trouble."

"Roger that, ready when you are."

Light triggered the teleporter and double checked that the beam had gone through before cutting the outgoing audio and shaking his head ruefully. He couldn't be prouder of his children for taking up this task, but he was still surprised by how easily they had gone from lab assistants to warriors. All three of them, he reminded himself as he turned back to Rock's screen to watch his sons shake hands.

"Dad, I think we're all set here," Rock's voice came through as he scanned Gutsman. "And I've got someone here who says he can handle Elecman at the power plant. I think we can trust him."

"The Doc says he'll send you along as soon as you've reactivated your teleporter transponder," Rock said, lowering his hand from the side of his helmet.

"Teleporter transponder...? Oh! That thing!" Robo stated, and his eyes brightened for an instant as he carried out some internal process. "I've been trying to pick up satellite radio with it," he added sheepishly.

"Alright, I'm sure you can handle this, but can you do me a favor and not show off anything too crazy?" Rock asked. "I'll explain more later, but let's just say that Wily's a fast learner."

"Shouldn't be a problem, I haven't had the time for mad science." He patted the side of his duffel bag. "Gonna have to settle for a little bi-polar engineering."

"...Right," Megaman said after taking a moment to process that. "Well, good luck over there."

"Likewise. See you on the other side."

The pair vanished in twin beams of light.

"Come on, where are you?" Elecman growled as he flipped through the plant's security cameras. He didn't even know who was breaking in, all he'd gotten was a proximity alert before they'd vanished.

"You wouldn't have lost them if you'd deployed the robots I sent like I ordered! " Wily raged through the monitor, his gigantic face overshadowing the camera feeds. What was the point of reprogramming the most advanced robots in the world if they were going to second guess your every command? And people wondered why he felt the need to micromanage.

"I don't need them! I have absolute control of every circuit in this facility! They would have only gotten in my way!" Elecman shouted, apparently having inherited a few of his master's control issues. "I can handle Mega Man, or Mega Woman, or whoever it is!" It was at that moment that one of the floor panels slammed open.

"Have I ever mentioned that I love the way you guys always forget about maintenance tunnels?" Robo asked as he hurriedly lifted himself out of the hole, what appeared to be a dozen sharpened steel spikes with coils of wire wrapped around them hanging out of his bag like a quiver. "They're almost as good as over-sized air ducts or glowing weak points, and chock full of spare parts."

" Atomic Robo?! " Wily screeched. "Elecman, fry that obsolete pile of scrap!"

"My pleasure, Doctor!" The robot answered as he gathered power for a thunder beam as Robo hurled a spear into the ground between the two of them. When he released the attack the bolt of lightning found itself diverted and grounded. "Lightning rods?"

"Even managed to give them a positive charge," Robo admitted without modesty as he hoisted another spear. "Good luck hitting anything you're aiming for." He threw again, this time directly at his opponent.

"Ha! Speak for yourself," the Robot Master returned as he nimbly leaped aside, allowing the rod to embed itself in the console. "I'm the most agile of the Masters, an old hunk of junk like you will never even touch me!" He generated a few arcs of electricity, one of which was drawn to the lightning rod beside him.

The console promptly exploded.

"...Whoops."

Doctor Light was getting worried. Rock and Roll had returned to the lab after defeating Fireman and Cutman without too much trouble, but Robo was still at the power plant and the blackout that had occurred twenty minutes previous didn't bode well. Normally he'd just check in, but he'd realized too late that they hadn't exchanged encryption keys for the coms network.

Not that he was certain his wayward son would have consented. The bot certainly hadn't checked in since vanishing all those years ago.

So, he'd fallen back upon the old scientists' standby of explaining things while they waited.

"Robo was an early prototype. Very early," he emphasized as he paced before nodding to Rock. "I'm sure you noticed the differences in design."

"Bulkier," the lab assistant turned super fighting robot answered. "And you definitely skimped on the paint job."

"Ha, yes. Most of the standards of modern robotics hadn't even been conceived of when he was built. Steel frame and plate instead of the lighter composites since adopted. That much weight required heavy duty servos, which themselves necessitated an experimental power source which lent the 'Atomic' part of his name. Essentially the only thing that didn't get completely overhauled in later models was the work I did designing his AI, and even that was done before the invention of the IC Chip."

"So why have we never heard of him?" Roll asked, wanting to catch any other differences between his and Blues' back stories. Blues had been a prototype of the Master series, but it sounded like Robo had been the prototype for all of modern robotics, which would make him... older. Potentially much older.

"It... Never seemed like the right time," Light sighed in answer. "One day he was assisting me in the lab, much as you do, the next he was gone. I would have suspected theft if security footage hadn't shown him walking out on his own. Honestly, I'd given up hope of his return some time ago, considered him my greatest failure." He fell back into his seat and turned to a screen displaying a freeze frame of Robo mid hand shake. "I'm glad to see I was wrong on both counts."

He paused in his story as the lights flickered, the lab switching back to the grid and shutting down the generators as power was restored. A moment later there was the familiar 'bwoo-wip!' of teleportation and Robo stepped out of a grey beam of light, a few holes burnt in his shirt but seemingly no worse for wear. One hand held his bag, while the other cradled a red and gold cylinder connected by an eclectic group of cables to a black and crimson pack that appeared to be duct-taped to his back.

"Sorry about the wait," he apologized. "I may have broken the plant's control room, and decided I should stick around to get the backup running. Oh, and I wanted to finish this," he added, giving the cylinder a wave.

"Is that Elecman? " Roll asked, finally recognizing the source of the jerry-rigged equipment.

"Well, it was ," Robo answered, waving the cylinder and causing a few sparks to dance from the end. "Now it's a lightning gun." He took in the looks the other three were giving him, ranging from incredulous to aghast. "I, uh, saved the thinky parts?" He added, dropping the bag and rooting around in it for a moment before lifting out a plastic baggy of circuit boards and wires.

"We'll discuss this later," Doctor Light said, briefly pinching the bridge of his nose before taking the bag and hooking the IC Chip up to the computer. "With the data from Elecman I should be able to finish pinpointing Albert's base of operations."

" Seriously ," Rock whispered as the good doctor worked.

"Speaking as someone who's had to dredge a lake bed to find his legs," Robo answered, "he should be happy that I kept all the parts on hand." He nudged the bag open to reveal Elecman's other three limbs and head rolling around inside.

"I know you're trying to be considerate," Roll said slowly. "But I'm not sure there's any context where a bag full of body parts isn't disturbing."

Robo raised a finger in protest, paused, and tapped it against his chin. "You might have a point there."

"No, really? "

"Ahem," Light cleared his throat as he approached the three. "I've located the base, but Albert's somehow jammed teleportation so you'll have to approach on foot. It's likely that he's fortified his position, more-so than any of the Masters managed."

"Don't worry, Doctor Light," Rock said brightly. "We won't let you down."

"I never expected you to," he answered fondly, clasping his son's shoulder briefly before the three turned to go. "Ah, Robo," he called haltingly, holding a blue and yellow device out as the robot turned to face him again. "This is the Magnet Beam. Rock and Roll have already acquired it via their Copy Chips, but since you don't have one... I thought it would be appropriate if you had the original."

"...Thank you," Robo answered after a moment, not quite sure how to read the situation.

"And, once you get back, I was hoping we could talk?"

"I... Of course. I'd be happy to." He took the Magnet Beam and clipped it to his belt before stepping back to stand with the others. "I'll see you when this is over. Let's rock 'n roll."

The Light twins groaned loudly while their father chuckled.

"You've, uh, probably heard that before, huh?"

"We never stop hearing it." Roll grumbled as the teleporter engaged.

8.8 (LordCirce)

Megamind Awoke with his hands deep in the innards of a robot. He paused, finished soldering together a cluster of circuits, then turned very slowly in place. Given his status as Villain-turned-Hero, he tended to replace Villains when he ended up in a new Loop.

'Let's see, large machines, skull motif, a couple of ray guns, definitely a villain's lair. Given the lack of dome, probably not an observatory, real or otherwise. Let's see, memories, memories.'

Megamind blinked as he remembered his newest creation. 'Hmm, given that it has been six Loops, and this is a variant. DC-expy two loops ago, carry the two, square root, then it is a... 86 percent chance he's awake.'

"Minion!"

"Coming, sir!" A golden robot hurried through one of the large, imposing doors (likely leading to a gahloting chamber, or a hero-trapping room). The robot was fish themed, with a pair of small fins on either side of its head, and a pair of rather large, bulging eyes.

"Ah, good, Goldfishman. Code: Are you Awake?"

"Code: Yes I am, sir."

Megamind nodded, then paused. "Code: Are you Awake, in the Time sense?"

Goldfish Man, or, as he was known in another universe, Minion, sighed. "Code: I'm Awake in both senses, sir."

"Good. Now, I appear to be an evil, genius named Dr. Mind, seeking to cause mayhem and terror through my robot soldiers. Thus, I have designed you, Goldfish Man, with your..." Megamind paused as the memory came back to him, "Memory Buster." He frowned. "That isn't too cliche, is it?"

Minion shook his head. "No sir. Most heroes gain amnesia before ever fighting the boss. They certainly won't expect to forget what they are doing in the middle of the fight."

Megamind nodded. "Good, good. Now, I just have to finish the rest of the robots, starting with..." he spun around dramatically to point at the robot he had been working on, before letting out a shriek and jumping into the air, landing in Minion's arms. Lying on the table was the partially disassembled body of a robotic Metro Man. Megamind gathered himself, coughed embarrassedly, then slide out of Minion's arms. "Right, right, so, there's Metro Man and...," the rest of Megamind's memories filtered into place. "Oh no, no way. There is no way I am building a Tights Man. Tighten can just sit out this Loop." He took a deep breath, then shook his head. "Forget it. Come, Minion, we're going to go find Roxanne."

Roll smiled at the retreating back of her Unawake father, then turned to the Looper replacing her brother. "Well, usually, my brother is here, and his name is Rock, so..."

Roxanne Ritchie, known in this Loop as Rox, nodded. "Rox is pretty close, I can see how the, eh, humor of the Loops would swap me with him."

Roll nodded. "So, it is probably a little disconcerting, being a robot, but you'll get used to it."

Roxanne snorted, then quickly covered her mouth with her hand. "Sorry, sorry, but, after spending several loops as a goldfish in a gorilla suit, you learn to adapt to just about anything."

Roll raised an eyebrow. "Ok, you have to tell me that story."

(Me)

"Now," the visitor to their universe began as his assistant warmed up the projector, "the multiverse is a–"

"Um," Roll interrupted the blue alien mad scientist, "I've actually already had this talk. I've even given it."

"But..." Megamind's lower lip started trembling. "But my presentation! I worked on it for so long! Why, cruel multiverse? Why can I never be the one to welcome new loopers?!"

"There, there, sir," Minion, aka Goldfish Man, consoled his boss and best friend.

"...I'll still watch it if it's that important to you," Roll offered.

"It's just not the same..." Megamind moped.

7.13 (continued)

As Ichigo sat in a random bar nursing a drink, he reflected that the Loop had not gone as planned.

The games had never really shown how much destruction and death Dr. Wily's robot armies really caused, but with the way things had still gone to hell in a handbasket over the years with the man dead Ichigo couldn't help wondering how bad it got with the man alive.

Dr. Light's robot masters, and later those of other roboticists, had still gone berserk for no apparent reason whatsoever. And Ichigo had been a little disturbed with how... hollow-like their actions were. Mega Man had stepped forth like he was supposed to, plus some girl robot called Mega Woman who hadn't been in the games (but Orihime had talked about how a girl counterpart was planned or something a few times, so maybe that was how things were supposed to go), but events just kept getting progressively worse.

It quickly got to the point that Ichigo had to admit his vacation plans were pretty much a write-off and he'd started investigating. He'd been really surprised when, the first time he'd gone out to investigate in reaper form, all of the robots had immediately targeted him. Dammit those shots had hurt and he'd been fully expecting them to pass right through his soul-form and taken more than a few before he started defending himself.

And then he cut a few down and got blindsided by the low-grade hollows that jumped out of the robot shells.

Hollow-possessed robots were nowhere near what he'd been expecting, and it made him wonder if Wily was supposed to have been possessed too. What was worse was this meant Orihime had been right again. How did she keep doing that?

"I told you Ichigo-kun: One Loop you're going to go and kill the obvious villain and learn that they weren't supossed to be the villain that Loop. I'm going to have to revoke your Omniscient Morality License now, so be good and hand it over."

Oh, great, now he was hearing her in his head.

"How was I supposed to know killing Dr. Wily would lead to this?" he grumbled into his mug.

"Ah," a male voice spoke up net to him, "I was wondering who was responsible for that."

"Who the hell are you?" Ichigo whipped around, blurting out the line on reflex, to come face to shadowed face with a hooded figure. A figure he could now sense reishi from. Powerful reishi. The blade hanging from the figure's belt clinched the impression. There was a Soul Society this Loop and he'd just run afoul of the local reaper variants. Joy.

"Calm yourself, young man," the hooded man held up a hand placatingly. "I'm not here to accuse you of anything. I was just finishing my patrol when I overheard what you said. You are the one who killed the man known as Dr. Wily? And from the way you said it, you believed this would prevent the robot wars that have torn apart the world, correct?"

"..." Ichigo stared at the man for a moment before deciding it couldn't hurt. "Yeah, that's right."

"Interesting..." the reaper rubbed his barely-visible chin. "And indeed you were correct that he planned to use robots to take over the world. But what is even more interesting is that you knew this fact."

Ichigo snorted and turned back to his drink. This was becoming a waste of his ti–

"After all, I'd only just decided on that course of action," the man finished.

Ichigo's eyes widened and he turned back to the mystery reaper who was removing his hood to reveal the grinning face of Dr. Wily.

"I've been looking for you for a lo–"

Ichigo went reaper, drew his zanpakuto, and beheaded the man in one motion.

"–ng time. Hahahahaha!" the severed head continued as Ichigo noted the sparking machinery from both pieces and swore vehemently.

'A decoy! A f–'

Ichigo's thoughts were cut off when a massive reishi suppression field hit him hard enough to make him stumble.

'That's... That's impressive,' he couldn't help but think as he forced himself to stand up straight. 'That would have floored almost anyone from my baseline easy.'

"Impressive, young man," Wily's voice boomed from outside, though it seemed that none of the living could hear it as Ichigo stumbled towards the door, fighting the suppression field with every step. "Most impressive. Much better than reapers of Soul Society fared. Not a one of them could even stand, much less try to face me."

Ichigo stepped out and scanned for where the voice was booming from as the people around him continued on, ignorant of what was happening.

"Sending the feeble-minded hollows to continue my work was a simple matter, even as I took advantage of the training they offered me and became a reaper myself. Rising through the ranks was a simple matter for one of my genius and devising my plan to nullify any opposition to my new goal of ruling both this world and the next was easy to come by, if tedious to put into place. But now it is time to take my place as lord and master of both worlds."

'There,' Ichigo spotted the man and began focusing to push through the suppression field so he could fight competently. 'There he is. Sitting smug in the sky over the city, drawing his zanpakuto and... Aw, no . Please tell me he hasn't alread–'

"Reign over all, Dokuro-jō!" Dr. Wily cried. "BAN–"

'He has...'

"–KAI!"

The blade erupted with power and expanded into one of the most massive forms Ichigo had ever seen a zanpakuto take save for that one disturbing Loop where a variant of Emperor Palpatine had a bankai that was essentially the Death Star. That had not been a fun Loop.

The smoke from the release dissipated, revealing a city-sized floating fortress decorated with a proportionately massive skull on what Ichigo could only presume was the front entrance. And all those guns sticking out of the walls probably weren't for show either.

"You have got to be kidding me..." Ichigo moaned to himself. He'd stabilized what power he could force through the suppression field enough to fight, better than his baseline even, but it was still holding back a lot more of his strength than he wanted to admit to. And keeping himself from collapsing under it was taking enough concentration that he didn't want to risk anything non-baseline lest he split his attention too much.

And then the hordes of hollow-like robots, clearly made in Soul Society from what Ichigo could just barely sense, swarmed forth.

9.1

The assembled Robot Masters that served under Dr. Wily had gathered at the front entrance of Skull Fortress to stare in confusion at the door. However, as odd as the event was, there was a fairly good reason they were doing so.

knock-knock-knock

That reason being that someone was knocking, politely, on the main entryway.

This was odd for several reasons. For one, the defenses should have blown away any intruder before they ever got within a football field's length of the door. At the very least an alarm should have activated. The only ones they knew who could just walk up to Wily's fortress like that were themselves, who were all accounted for, and Wily himself, who would have been granted instant access were he not in prison until the scheduled breakout next month.

Anyone else... well, as much as Wily's warriors agreed that he was the rightful ruler of the planet, even they had to admit that any non-Wily forces that dared to approach would certainly be hostile. An all-out seige, where the doors would be violently blown open, would be the order of the day, not a polite knock.

knock-knock-knock

Of course there was Wily's 'son', Bass, but he never did anything politely.

"What the hell are you blown fuses standing around for?!"

Case in point.

"Well, Bass, sir..." Bubble Man began nervously, "we're trying to figure out what's causing the noise..."

"Have you tried, I don't know..." Bass growled as he got in the Robot Master's face, "OPENING THE DOOR?!"

"Y-y-ye... I mean n-n-n-n-no..." Bubble Man gulped as Wily's black prince continued to stare him down.

knock-knock-knock

"WELL WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU WAITING FOR?!" Bass roared and punted Bubble Man towards the controls as the rest of the Robot Masters edged away from the confrontation.

Bubble Man scrambled to right himself and pressed the open controls for the gate. The metal entrance clacked open and when the Robot Masters saw what was on the other side, they all had their weapons aimed and primed.

"Whoa, hey! Truce!" a pair of blue armored hands were held up in a peaceful gesture.

"Oh, it's just you," Bass grumbled. "What do you want Mega-twerp?"

Right outside the entrance to Skull Fortress was Mega Man. Right behind him were Mega Woman, Proto Man, plus the Light-made Robot Masters.

"Well," the Mega Man began much more calmly than anyone else probably could have managed under the situation, "since Wily's in prison for the time being, I realized you all were probably bored waiting around for whatever plan he has in the works. So... I got the idea to come here and challenge you..."

Weapons that had begun lowering in confusion were brought back up as Mega Man reached behind himself and brought out... a sphere made from hexagons and pentagons?

"...to a Soccer tournament."

Weapons were lowered again in outright bafflement as Wily's army tried to process this development. Well, all except one.

"YOU'RE ON!" Bass grinned eagerly.

---

8. baked) It's hot... It's Texas-in-August hot...

8.2) Wokka, wokka, wokka, wok–No that wasn't your cue Fozzie...

8.3) Blues has replaced an android hero known as the Red Tornado.

8.4) There's this Random Loot generator that I showed other Loop writers a while back. It's become a bit of a thing.

8.5) ...Have you found Jesus Man? (Sorry, I couldn't resist)

8.6) Tango Marine.

7.7.7 continued) Yeah, Robo isn't used to dealing with AIs that aren't trying to kill him, so he's a little light on the social niceties and... Wait, where did 8.7 go?

8.8) Poor Megamind. He puts all that effort into his "Welcome to the Multiverse" speech and everyone he meets has already heard it.

7.13 continued) You see Ichigo? This is what happens when you blindly derail plots!

9.1) Huh? What is this doing here...? This belongs in Loopset 9...

Mega Sonic Part 3

Mega Sonic: Part 3

"This is a pretty nice party," Roll smiled as she looked around. The gang had finally managed to schedule the event to celebrate Ray achieving super mode and pretty much everyone was there. "Where did you say you got the supplies from again?"

"Someone you'll probably meet sooner or later," Tails casually sidestepped the question. (1) "Me, I'm more wondering what the Chaotix told Charmy since he's not looping."

"Simple," Mighty chuckled as he came up to the two. "We told him there would be cake. What's up?"

"Nothing much," Tails shrugged. "We had a side trip to the Sol dimension recently. Blaze says 'hi'."

"Cool," the armadillo strong man smiled. "And what about this 'self-roboticization' training I've heard about?"

"Oh, that," Tails rubbed the back of his head sheepishly. "It turns out all of us who were turned into the Roboticized Masters, loopers and non-loopers alike, picked up a minor glitch in our Yggdrasil code, at least that's what Sonic said Hermes told him."

"We are so sorry about that," Roll apologized with the tone of someone who had done so before, and was fully intending to continue for as many times necessary.

"It's cool," Tails waved off the apology with Mighty nodding in agreement. "Anyway, it's not dangerous according to Hermes, but what seems to have happened is that our Roboticized Master forms are... tucked away inside ourselves. Kind of like the subspace pocket, except totally different."

"Meaning you have absolutely no clue," Mighty deadpanned.

"Not really," Tails rubbed the back of his head in embarrassment. "But what it does mean is that if you focus on it just right, you can turn into your Roboticized Master form. And also turn back to normal the same way."

"Self de-roboticization?" Mighty's eyebrows went straight up. "That might be the handiest thing we've ever come across."

"Okay dad," Roll's voice interrupted the conversation as she spoke into her communicator, "I'll tell them."

"What was that?" Mighty asked.

"You remember leaving one of your old beat-up Extreme Gears where the 'ancient lost technology' would be found and brought in for study?" Roll asked.

"Yeah!" Tails smiled with excitement. "You mean...?"

"Dad's just finished testing the first few prototypes," Roll grinned back. "Light Labs Extreme Gear ships out to stores tomorrow. You all should be getting your own personalized ones in the mail at the same time."

"Yes!" Tails cheered. The baseline challenge run Aunt Sally had asked for meant no Extreme Gears until they came across one legitimately or a third Unawake party invented it. Admittedly arranging for Dr. Light to get ahold of one from Tails's subspace pocket was technically cheating, but the fox figured he could slide on the issue.

"No Loophole Abuse next time, Tails!" (2) Sally admonished the fox.

"Aw, give tha kid a break Sally-girl," Bunnie defended him. "After all, I seem ta recall ya whippin' out an Intelligent Device on little ol' Ixis Naugus earlier this Loop."

"Indeed," Bunnie's husband agreed, "and one shuddairs to think on what you deed to zat Mammoth Mogul personne. Why, I am gettink ze shiverings just thinkink about eet!" (3)

"The actions were at odds with your declaration that this would be a 'baseline challenge run', Sally," NICOLE added.

"Alright, alright," Sally raised her hands in surrender, "point taken."

"You were pretty awesome Aunt Sally," Tails offered.

"Boss..." Storm hesitated as Jet grasped the large yellow gem. "Why are we stealing dis again?"

"Fool..." Jet sneered at his dimwitted, if loyal and strong, companion. "The Chaos Emerald is precisely what we need to lure out Sonic the Hedgehog."

"And we want to do dat... why?" Storm didn't seem to understand. No matter how many times Jet explained the concept of reliving periods of time, in any life, Storm never seemed to get it. At least Wave got it, even if she seemed resigned to the whole affair.

"Because," Jet decided to just cut to the chase, "he is the only one in the world that can rival my speed. And I will not rest until I am the undisputed champion."

He glared, causing Storm to flinch back, and then decided to throw his companions a bone.

"Besides, the Chaos Emeralds are needed to activate the Key to Babylon Garden."

Both of them looked up sharply at that. The Key to Babylon Garden was a translucent glowing cube that had been handed down through the leadership of the Babylon Rogues for generations, but there was no indication that its power was anything more than a legend or that the object itself was more than a fancy paperweight.

"W-w-wait..." Wave stuttered in shock. "You mean..."

"We will challenge Sonic and his friends to race for the Emeralds," Jet told them. "I get the chance to defeat him and we gather what is necessary to unearth our heritage. I told you I'd done this before. Now... follow my lead."

With that, Jet turned his Extreme Gear towards the window and blasted out into the "City of the Future" known as Monopole.

Sonic grinned as he watched the familiar figures take off down the street on super-fast hover boards. "Tails?"

"They've got the emerald, as usual," the fox grinned and pulled his new Light Industries board, custom-made by the doctor himself no less, out of his subspace pocket.

"Then let's get 'em!" Knuckles grinned as he did the same.

"All units," the police band crackled from the earwig Sonic had decided to wear for this, "suspects are southbound on 45 riding what appear to be hoverboard model Extreme Gear."

"Roger that," an unexpected voice replied on the same frequency that made Sonic grin wider. "We are en route to intercept."

"Well," Sonic chuckled as he raced after the Babylon Rogues, "this just got a lot more interesting..."

"B-b-boss!" Storm yelled forward. "We got guys following us! And they have Extreme Gear too!"

"What?!" Wave seemed shocked. "How...?"

"It doesn't matter!" Jet insisted. "Stick to the plan!"

Sonic raced ahead of the police cars as Tails and Knuckles kept Wave and Storm occupied to challenge Jet directly. The two did a few quick test bumps to gauge the other's skill, and Jet grinned.

"Not bad," the green-feathered hawk taunted. "You learn just as fast as always."

Sonic blinked at the implications. "You've... done this before?"

"More than you could imagine," Jet grinned darkly. "And this time there will be no question of who is the fastest!"

"I've got the gray one in my sights," a voice came over the police band in Sonic's ear before he could process Jet's statement.

"And I the female," a feminine voice responded.

"Take them out," the voice from before ordered. "I've got the leader."

"Well," Sonic returned Jet's grin, "you picked a really bad time to do this."

"Boss!" the panicked yell of Storm rang out. "Help!"

"We're under att–" the voice of Wave cut off suddenly.

"You see," Sonic dug deeper as Jet turned back in shock at his comrades' cries, "you haven't met the Man yet." (4)

"The who...?" Jet expressed his confusion just in time for an energy bolt to hit his Extreme Gear and send him tumbling down the street.

Jet groaned and picked himself up off the street to look at who had dared attack him. Floating right before him was a blue armored human (5) on a red Extreme Gear with an arm that ended in a cannon pointed at him. As he watched, the figure jumped off of his Extreme Gear, which itself twisted and reformed into... a dog?

"What...?" Jet stared in confusion.

"Jet the Hawk," Sonic grinned as he dismounted his own Extreme Gear which seemed to just... vanish into thin air, "meet my 'big bro' Rock Light, the Mega Man. Rock, meet Jet the Hawk."

"Nice to know," Rock nodded as two more human figures arrived on Extreme Gears behind him. A yellow-armored female carrying Wave whose Gear turned into a cat and a red-armored male with shades carrying Storm whose Gear turned into some bizarre spherical bird. "Jet the Hawk, by the authority vested in me you are under arrest for theft, destruction of private property, and reckless endangerment. You have the right to remain silent..." (6)

Jet just tuned out the rest of the speech. This... this was the most humiliating thing that had ever happened to him.

"Mayor Dorado, this is highly irregular," the police chief huffed as the man in question continued to flash his high wattage grin.

"Ah, but it is absolute brilliance itself!" the mayor of Monopole gesticulated grandly. "Imagine: A race using the latest and greatest extreme sports invention in the history of the world! The ultimate grudge match to determine one thing: Who in the world deserves the title of 'fastest'! With the ultimate glory prize, the Chaos Emeralds themselves. And since the city is the current owner of the Yellow Emerald, I, Mayor Leonardo Dorado, am prepared to drop all charges and offer it to the Babylon Rogues as their entry fee if they agree to race for fame and glory in the name of our great city!"

"Indeed," Dr. Light nodded from nearby. "From what I can tell, there is no inherent malice in the actions of the Babylon Rogues. Merely a desire for competition and some misguided notions as to how one organizes such things."

The chief sighed heavily. "Very well, mayor, but understand that when election time comes around the people will be holding you responsible."

"And I fully intend that when they remember this, the first word they think of will be 'wow'!" the mayor continued grinning. (7)

Jet stared at the widely grinning human and considered the offer. Beside him, Wave and Storm looked utterly and completely confused. Jet couldn't really blame them. Something like this had never happened on any of his previous trips back through time.

"So... we agree to race on behalf of your city in a tournament event and you just... set us free and let us use the emerald as our entrance fee? ...Why?"

It just made absolutely no sense to him. What the heck did this guy get out of it?

"Because I saw the footage of your little high-speed chase before it was cut off and the only thing I can say is WOW!" the sheer energy from the exclamation made all three of the Babylon Rogues jump. "You three are amazing! Sensational! And people all over the world will want to come see you race! For glory! For fame! For the title of 'world's fastest'!"

"...Still not getting what's in it for you," Wave stated after a long moment to recover from the way the man had leaned into all of their personal spaces.

"All business, I see," the man straightened up. "I can respect that. You see, all these people coming in for a racing event as big as this will be will be spending money on places to stay, food to eat, souvenirs to take home. Lots of money coming into the city means a big boon for our economy. And since this is an election year, that can only boost my chances of being re-elected as mayor. The boost will come whether you win or lose, technically, but with you agreeing to race on behalf of the city it will be a much bigger boost if you win."

"...Boss?" Storm was the first one to speak.

Jet sat and pondered the offer some more. It sounded like plenty of benefits on both sides if he did and no benefit at all if he didn't. Plus, if he played his cards right, he could still salvage his original plan.

"Okay," he said at last. "We choose the locations for each course, your people set the course itself, and you've got yourself a deal."

"Ladies and gentlemen!" the voice of Mayor L. Dorado boomed out across the city. "Announcing the EX World Grand Prix! Using the latest in extreme sports technology, the Extreme Gears, this is the ultimate race! Seven teams with three racers each will face off against each other in a series of extreme races for glory, fame, and the right to call themselves the 'world's fastest'!"

Sonic, along with Knuckles and Tails, blinked as the announcement continued. This... was different. Usually Eggman was making this announcement.

"Teams have one month to register themselves and their Extreme Gear as well as pay the entrance fee of one Chaos Emerald! It's going to be one wow of a time in this supreme winner-take-all event folks!"

"You sure, dad?" Rock blinked as Dr. Light handed him the Chaos Emerald he'd been studying for the past few weeks.

"Of course," Dr. Light smiled. "I know how little you, Roll, and Blues get to compete for fun. Go ahead, take it, and hopefully the fate of the world won't be on the line this time."

"Thanks dad!" Rock smiled as he accepted the gem.

"Funny," Bass raised his eyebrow as he accepted the gem from his father, "I thought you needed this for that Time Skimmer project you've been obsessed with lately."

"I thought I did," Dr. Wily's muffled voice emanated from under some sort of contraption that looked like he'd strapped a cockpit and a space-age engine to a metal box. "But I was inspired to a new power source last night which will make the Chaos Emerald superfluous. Feel free to use it as your entrance fee. And remember to crush your opponents under your heels boy!"

The last part faded as Bass exited the secret lab in the G.U.N. base, and ran straight into what would be an odd scene anywhere else.

"No, Omega," Rouge facepalmed, "you may not blow up the other racers." (8)

"Then I see no reason to enter," the destruction-oriented robot turned to walk away.

"Eh, we're only allowed three anyway," Shadow shrugged.

"My Chaos Emerald, my rules Amy," Sally put her foot down. She may not be able to keep Amy from following Sonic into this tournament, but she could keep an eye on the girl. Plus she was wondering how she matched up against other racers in an event like this. (9)

"Go Team Acorn!" Cream cheered as she hugged her new Extreme Gear.

"And... done!" Rotor exclaimed as he put the finishing touches on the Extreme Gear he'd been customizing. "That's it, we're ready."

"Think Sugah-hog will be surprised to see us there?" Bunnie smiled from her seat on her husband's lap off to the side.

"So..." the shadowed figure stated, "you want us to race for you in this grand prix, and are willing to spot us both the Chaos Emerald and the Extreme Gear, on the condition that we win you... what again?"

The chair the figure was addressing swiveled around to reveal Dr. Eggman, his fingers steepled menacingly.

"The treasure of Babylon Garden," the mad scientist spoke in a tone that brooked no failure. "Secure that for me and you three will be handsomely rewarded."

"No sweat," the shadowed figure grinned maliciously. "The Hooligans are on the job."

"Hey Sal!" Sonic grinned as he spotted the princess walking to a team locker room with her Gear, special made for her by Uncle Chuck in his current job at the new Knothole Tech (10). "Nice to see you here! You on Team Hottie or something?"

"I'm here with Amy and Cream under the flag of Team Acorn," Sally gave the hedgehog a bemused look.

"Ah, so ignore the crazy on one and wait about ten years or so on the other," Sonic nodded sagely. "You see Bunnie and the others? They've got some sweet rides with them for sure, just none as sweet as you."

Sally rolled her eyes. "You are incorrigible ."

"Well now," Rouge smirked as she and Shadow watched Bass get as close to making a hormonal fool of himself as either of them could imagine, "looks like our little black prince has his eyes on a golden princess."

"Bass is attracted to power and warrior skill," a calm voice from behind only failed in surprising both of them due to Rouge's bat hearing. Turning, they saw the mechanical brothers of Bass's apparent love interest watching the scene with bemusement. The one in red continued speaking. "And Roll has proven herself very capable time and again in her clashes against Bass's father, his creations, and Bass himself."

"I'm surprised you're taking this so well," Shadow observed.

"Oh," the brother in blue smiled serenely, "if Bass screws this up, we've got dibs on whatever's left of him after our sister gets through."

"Uh-oh," Rotor whispered as he ducked back around the corner he'd been about to turn. "Don't look now, but it looks like this race has some trouble brewing."

Exchanging glances, Bunnie and Antoine proceeded to glance around the corner as discreetly as possible.

"Sacre-bleu cheese!" Antoine whispered. "Ze Hooligans!"

"What are those three varmints up to?" Bunnie whispered back.

"Well, they have Extreme Gear, so..." Rotor left that hanging.

"So we should all be prepahred for some dirty racin' out on tha track," Bunnie nodded as she pulled back from spying on the three infamous mercenaries.

"Ladies and gentlemen!" the voice of Mayor L. Dorado boomed out over the crowd. "Welcome to the first ever EX World Grand Prix!"

The resulting cheers were deafening.

"And now it's time to meet the racers! First up, riding the latest from Light Industries, is the supreme extreme adventuring team of Sonic the Hedgehog, Miles "Tails" Prower, and Knuckles the Echidna, TEAM SONIC!"

The crowd roared as the three rather famous adventurers strode to the starting line.

"And right behind them, also riding the latest from Light Industries and needing almost no introduction at all for saving the world several times over, are the heroic robot siblings: Mega Man! Mega Woman! and Proto Man!"

The explosion of noise grew deafening enough that the declaration of their team name, Team Light, was barely audible.

"But we're just getting started folks!" the mayor announced once the cheers had died down enough. "Racing for the Guardian Units of Nations with Gear from Mr. X Sporting Goods, are Shadow the Hedgehog! Rouge the Bat! and the Black Prince himself: Bass!"

The name of Team Dark was drowned out in a tumultuous outpouring similar to that which had greeted the Light siblings.

"And we're not even halfway through yet!" the mayor grinned brightly as he continued. "Riding on Gear from Knothole Tech, we have Antoine D'Coolette, Bunnie Rabbot, and Rotor Walrus, better known to the world as the FREEDOM FIGHTERS!"

The cheers for each individual had been of a level that, while excited, could still best be termed 'polite', but the team name was apparently much more well known as the crowd erupted with cheers for the famous group that fought against oppressive conquerors of all kinds.

"And what competition these days would be complete without an all-female team determined to show the world that the ladies are just as good as the men?" the mayor asked the crowd. "Also riding Gear from Knothole Tech are Cream the Rabbit, Amy Rose, and Her Royal Highness: Princess Sally Acorn of Mobotropolis!"

It instantly became clear that even if the crowd had no clue about who the individual members were, the idea of genuine royalty racing in a sports competition was a big deal. The name of Team Acorn went almost unheard in the din.

"Ah, but it's not all wine and roses folks!" the mayor's words induced an anticipatory silence. "There's a few thorns in this lineup as well. For now we have the villains of this event, racing for Robotnik Corporate on Gear from their subsidiary Accelovice, we have Nack the Weasel, Bean the Dynamite, and Bark the Polar Bear, THE HOOLIGANS!"

The angry boos from the crowd were almost as loud as the previous cheers as the team of morally bankrupt mercenaries strode arrogantly towards the starting line.

"And last, but certainly not least, racing for our own fair city of Monopole on the Babylon Standard, and let me assure you folks, Babylon sets a high standard indeed, Jet the Hawk, Wave the Swallow, and Storm the Albatross. The one, the only, BABYLON ROGUES!"

Many hadn't heard of the Babylon Rogues until a short while ago, but the grand prix advertisements had been hyping just about everything, including the ancient and infamous band of treasure hunters. As such, the crowd was perhaps more excited to see them than they were anyone else who had so far been introduced.

"And now," the mayor's voice settled the crowd back into an anticipatory state, "without further ado, it's time to begin the first race! Racers! On your marks!"

The racers all took a stance, each and every one looking intent and focused.

"Get set..."

The racers began backing up a few feet before they broke into a run for the starting line in order to build up momentum before mounting their Extreme Gear. The trick in this stage was to get as close to the starting line at a full run as possible without crossing it before the starting signal and getting a penalty as a result.

"GO!"

Wave sauntered off the bridge and towards the arena, smirking to herself. The fox might be unnaturally good at customizing for an amateur, but with the little gift she'd left, there was no way th–

"I saw what you did there," the voice of her leader Jet jolted Wave out of her thoughts.

"Jet!" Wave gasped despite herself. He might still be mostly the same Jet she'd grown up with, but he was also different. And it was... a little disturbing at times. "I... I didn't see–"

"Remove it," Jet ordered her.

"...What?" Wave stepped back.

"Whatever you did to sabotage their Gear, remove it," Jet repeated, his gaze boring a hole through her. "We are here to prove ourselves the best. The true masters of the skies and the worthy heirs of Babylon. To even think of winning by sabotaging the competition is to admit otherwise, and I will not have it. Ever."

"B-but..." Wave faltered at the intensity of emotion behind his gaze. "Yes... Right away." (11)

Rouge cursed as yet another of Bean's bombs nearly caused her to crash. Even with the score penalties for excessive force (12), the behavior just wasn't abating all that much.

She certainly hoped that Omega never learned of this. The robot would be positively insufferable if he learned that anyone even partially got away with such behavior.

Nack fumed in the Hooligan's locker room. He didn't care that all the spectators pretty much hated his team. He didn't care about the multiple false starts he and his team had been charged with so far. Nor did he care about how many rules were being broken out on the track. (13)

No, what he cared about was that they kept getting caught and penalized for it! What was the point of cheating if you ended up worse off than before?

At this rate, the only way they'd win is if everyone else DNF'd. (14)

Hmm... that was certainly a thought. Now... how to convince Bean to go along with smaller explosives...

"Do ya see it?" Storm asked with worry.

Wave blinked as she spotted the device Storm had found on his Extreme Gear. The big dumb guy was right, that wasn't supposed to be there. "Yeah, I see it. Good job finding this Storm."

A quick check revealed similar devices on her and Jet's Gears as well. Huh. Looked like someone was looking to fix the race. Too bad for them that the Babylon Rogues weren't pushovers.

"Ladies and gentlemen!" Mayor L. Dorado's voice boomed from the stadium set up in the desert ruins. "We now come to the last race of the first ever EX World Grand Prix, and it's a real nail-biter! Team Sonic is in the lead on points, but the Babylon Rogues and Team Light are right on their tails! And the other racers shouldn't be counted out yet! Only a handful of points separate all but the furthest behind from the leaders, and as we've all seen so far, anything can happen out there which means it's still anyone's race folks!"

Sally yelped as her Extreme Gear lurched suddenly and sent her tumbling, the same happening to almost all of the racers around her. All except a select few.

The smug taunting looks of Nack the Weasel and his team set her blood boiling. So she took some vicarious pleasure when those same looks were wiped off their faces as the Babylon Rogues failed to succumb to the sabotage.

Jet scowled as he examined what Wave had given him. He'd suspected her of performing the sabotage, only to learn that someone had tried to sabotage them as well. And if nothing else, he trusted Wave to be honest with him.

He stalked up to what was supposed to be the winner's podium, where the seven Chaos Emeralds rested, and grabbed the microphone.

"The results of this race must be thrown out," he proclaimed to a stunned crowd and held up the device for all to see, "due to sabotage."

The stadium went nuts for several minutes before he could continue.

"These devices were found and removed from my team's Extreme Gears, but apparently not from other teams'," he informed the crowd.

"A severe charge," the mayor's voice interjected. "An investigation will have to be launched and the race re-run at a later date."

Many groans were heard from the audience at that announcement. During this time, Wave came up and whispered something in Jet's ear.

"Not necessarily," Jet spoke up, causing confused silence. "I've been told that the damage to the Gears is minimal and superficial. Repairs can be made in about an hour or two. At which time we can run the race over. At a new location."

"A... new location?" the mayor expressed the confusion of everyone else.

"A little surprise track I've had planned since this started," Jet grinned and took out a glowing translucent cube and held it up. The Key to Babylon Garden. "Ladies and gentlemen," Jet announced as the Chaos Emeralds lifted up and began to circle around the cube Jet held over his head, "I give you the true final racecourse of the EX World Grand Prix!"

The emeralds glowed and shot rays of power into the Key to Babylon Garden which then shot a beam out into the desert. There was rumbling as the ground shook and the sand out in the distance exploded upwards as something rose out of it. As massive torrents of sand poured off the object, it was revealed as a huge ancient stone city that floated serenely in the air.

"I give you the ancient homeland of the Babylon Rogues! The race to determine the true masters of the skies and the fastest in the world shall be in Babylon Garden !"

The Light siblings had been upset that they hadn't managed to detect the sabotage devices on their transformed companions. However the damage had been superficial enough that all three had agreed to upgrade the foreign object detection and leave it at that.

But Bass? Bass was positively murderous over the fact that someone had hurt Treble. Heaven help whoever it was, because when he found them...

Nack was less put off by the latest development than one might think. Sure, it pretty much killed any chances the Hooligans had for winning the prix since there was just no time to sneak more of the mini-bombs onto the competitors' Gear, but that wasn't the ultimate goal. No, the goal was the Treasure of Babylon and the foolish hawk had practically handed it to the Hooligans on a silver platter.

All they needed to do was let whatever chump won open the way and then they'd swipe it and collect their payday from Eggman.

"You know," Sonic conversed with Rock as the latter performed the minor repairs to Rush, "I think that El Dorado guy has been rubbing off on Jet. It's funny, I really don't remember ever encountering him before... and I know I'd remember that personality of his."

"It's a little hard to forget," Rock chuckled.

"Ah, he's from your place?"

"Yep. He's usually the one who renames the place I live 'Mega City'."

"My sympathies," Sonic offered. "Seriously, watching the guy in action is enough to make me tired."

"What are you up to Jet?!" Wave practically yelled at her leader. "'To determine the true master of the skies'? Did you seriously just bet our heritage on a race ?!"

"Are you saying you don't think we can win?" Jet gazed at her calmly. "Are you saying we can't prove ourselves worthy?"

"No boss," Storm answered instead, "but... why do we gotta anyway?"

"Hmm..." Jet actually appeared to give the question consideration. "I suppose in some way I keep forgetting that the two of you never remember doing this. Maybe it's that I've uncovered the secrets of our heritage enough times that it's lost the sense of wonder you still have. Or maybe I've been spending too much time with that mayor. In any case, the idea of not taking it for granted, of earning our heritage in the arena of the skies against the only worthy opponents I've ever faced, just... appeals to me."

Both Storm and Wave stared at Jet as that hung in the air between them.

"But make no mistake," Jet smirked confidently, "I intend to win. And this time nothing is going to stop me."

The anticipation in the air could be cut with a knife. Cameras had been hastily set up and several companies that made large hovering pleasure craft had been contacted to rent quite a few to serve as makeshift bleachers for the aerial racetrack. The mayor had been increasing the tension by calling the mapped out course the 'Babylon Proving Grounds' and everyone present was going to be talking about the event for years to come regardless of the outcome.

But now preparations were done. The Extreme Gear had been repaired and the racers assembled. It was time to find out who would be crowned the 'World's fastest'.

The race was everything promised and then some. Near-wipeouts abounded in the high winds of the course and the racers themselves seemed out for blood at times. But in the end there could only be one winner.

As the finish line approached, the three jockeying for first were Sonic, Jet, and Rock. Not far behind them the main pack was jostling for position, and it seemed that Wave and Storm were trying to break out from the group.

Sonic and Rock exchanged a glance and grinned. They might be competing, but nothing in the rules said they couldn't gang up on another racer. They adjusted to come up alongside Jet, timed the perfect moment, and made to slam the leader of the Babylon Rogues from either side...

And Jet chose that precise moment to boost forward, allowing his opponents to slam into each other. The lateness of impact threw off both blue heroes' balances and they lost control, falling back and tumbling off their boards right in front of the main pack. Wave and Storm jumped high over the wipeout which proceeded to then take out half of the main pack.

A few managed to escape disaster, but not with enough speed to challenge the Babylon Rogues as all three crossed the finish line to cheers that shook the heavens.

"Ow..." Sonic grunted as he finally crossed the finish line, just behind Rock and just good enough for last place. He hadn't felt this boneheaded over a mistake in... a long time.

"Yeah," Rock laughed, none of his good humor lost despite losing, "that was some wipeout, eh?"

"Definitely," Sonic chuckled back. "It might even make my top ten."

Jet had been in something of a daze since he crossed that finish line and the adrenaline wore off enough for the realization to sink in.

He'd done it. He'd won.

He'd finally beaten Sonic the Hedgehog in a race. No tricks. No cheats. No excuses. Heck, even the advanced Gear specs he'd memorized had more or less broken even with whoever ran this 'Light Industries' place he hadn't heard of in previous trips back. In the end, it had all come down to a single moment where his superior skill had finally shone through.

He still couldn't quite believe it. But here he was, striding confidently to the Gates of Babylon with the Key firmly in hand. Shortly, he would use the Key to open the Gates and reclaim the heritage of his ancestors, for once... for once ... an honor that he'd earned rather than been granted out of misplaced pity.

Talking the mayor into holding the victory ceremonies at the gates to the inner sanctum of Babylon Garden earlier had been simple. Pretty much the only thing the man hadn't budged on was assigning cameras to follow them inside so the unveiling of the Treasure of Babylon would be visible to all present.

Though Jet hadn't fought all that hard against the concession. After all, it also meant that everyone would see him trounce the Guardian of Babylon on his Extreme Gear, a feat that Sonic the Hedgehog normally accomplished instead. Combined with no sign of that inept wanna-be Eggman and Jet was chalking this up to the best day he'd had in several lifetimes.

Nack and the Hooligans watched patiently from the back of the crowd as the Babylon Rogues opened the Gate to Babylon Garden's inner sanctum. A quick use of some personal cloaking devices, rather expensive ones at that, and the Hooligans followed them silently in. Now all that was needed was to wait for the Babylon Chumps to take out any defenses and they could make off with the treasure.

Rock was taking some good-natured ribbing from Roll, complete with a poorly-hidden smirk from Blues, when the roar sounded from inside the gates. Whipping their heads towards the live display of the interior as many spectators shrieked in alarm, all three saw what looked like some massive genie monster appear out of nowhere, his lower body disappearing into some giant floating bottle.

As they watched, the entity roared at the Babylon Rogues once more and the gates began to close. That was all the prompting the Light siblings needed to call their animal support units to transform back into Extreme Gear mode and race inside.

Jet stared back at the guardian confidently even as Wave and Storm backed away in fear. Sometimes the guardian spoke, sometimes it didn't, and sometimes it was supposed to but the systems that allowed it had degraded over time. In any case, he'd seen Angelus, the guardian, defeated enough times that he knew exactly what to do. Heck, he was prepared to do it faster than Sonic the Hedgehog ever ha–

A trio of energy shots struck Angelus's bottle, shattering the mobile holographic generator that produced the guardian's image and hid away the Treasure of Babylon.

"Are you all okay?" the blue one, the one Sonic had called Mega Man, asked.

"Yeah," Wave looked relieved to have been rescued, as did Storm.

"That..." Jet tried to keep his fury down. He really did. "That was the Guardian of Babylon! The final test of worthiness for those who seek the Treasure of Babylon! Our final challenge to reclaim our heritage!" 'And they took it out in seconds!' Jet fumed. 'Even Sonic the Hedgehog never did it that fast!'

"Oh..." Mega Man and the yellow-armored girl, Mega Woman, at least had the decency to look apologetic.

"You should have said something," the red one, Proto Man, stated calmly.

"Yeah," the blue one apologized sincerely. "If we knew it was just a test we'd have never–"

Bang

The one known as Mega Man jerked as electricity arced over his form.

Bang

The one called Proto Man was next, a sparking hole appearing in his armor halfway through turning around, as Mega Man fell to the floor with blank eyes.

Bang

The one known as Mega Woman blocked the shot with a broom of all things, only for the electric arcs to render her immobile. The whole situation was so surreal that Jet was just now looking towards the source.

There. The inept racing team known as the Hooligans, with their leader Nack holding a long-barreled gun with a sophisticated-looking aiming device attached to the top. A weapon known to many as a sniper rifle.

"Hmph," the weasel snorted as he took aim again at the now paralyzed female. "Not bad. But not good enough."

Bang

The yellow crystal on Mega Woman's helmet shattered with vigorous sparks as she went down.

"Now," Nack the Weasel, known in some circles as Fang the Sniper, pointed the gun at the Babylon Rogues, "if you three would be so kind as to hand over the Treasure of Babylon, we'll be on our way." (15)

The crowd had gone quiet as the events on the giant screen sunk in. But one in particular was taking it worse than anyone else.

Dr. Light's heart had stopped as he saw his children, estranged and not, gunned down with what he was certain were specially designed anti-robot bullets. His analytical mind, even in shock, could recognize the combination of an armor-piercing projectile which then unleashed a power surge internally to devastate mechanical systems.

'They should be alive,' he tried desperately to convince himself. 'You made certain their IC chips had the best surge protection you could devise.'

He knew the specs. He'd designed them himself. It was just... they'd never had to prove themselves in conditions so critical. He simply couldn't be sure they were enough.

Jet had been furious at the interlopers who interrupted his moment of glory, yes. But they were warriors, regardless if they were made of metal or not, and what was more they genuinely didn't know what they had interceded in. But these... these... these three didn't even deserve the lofty title of thieves .

Yes, he had been furious. Now? Now he was so far beyond fury that he'd lapped back into total calm. To either side of him he saw Wave and Storm waiting for his decision and repressed a proud smirk. They had come face-to-face with the holographic guardian, been rescued by noble (if misguided) warriors, had those same saviors mercilessly cut down in front of them, and their lives threatened by the attacker. And they still listened to him first.

Loyalty that pure was worth a million treasures, even to an ancient band of treasure hunting pirates like them.

"You want the Treasure of Babylon?" he repeated with all the ominous calm found in the eye of the storm.

"If you don't mind," the backstabber asked with feigned politeness.

"Very well," Jet closed his eyes and prepared himself. "Wave? Open the chest and retrieve the treasure."

Wave blinked in shock and looked into his eyes before responding. "Of course Jet."

To his credit, Storm was silent as Wave, betraying nothing, not even what she'd seen in Jet's eyes, opened the treasure chest and retrieved the sole object within. To the casual observer it appeared to be a rolled-up rug or small carpet, mostly blue in color but trimmed with gold and some red as well as a few other vibrant colors.

Jet held out his hand and a moment later, Wave had placed the item within it.

"Now hand it over," Nack made a 'gimme' gesture with his hand as he kept the gun trained on the Rogues, "nice and easy."

"Sure," Jet smirked, getting a confused look from all three Hooligans at the confidence in his expression. "Catch."

The Treasure of Babylon sailed into the air as Jet threw it to the Hooligans, unrolling as it went and blocking their view.

"Ooo... shiny!" Bean pounced on Nack's hat to admire the object, further obscuring the sniper's vision as Jet began to gather thrust in his Extreme Gear.

Before the Hooligans knew what was happening, Jet had burst forward, instantly accelerating to maximum as he twisted a path around the mercenaries, created a vortex of wind, and vanished from sight.

"Did you really think to command the wind?" the voice of Jet seemed to come from nowhere, causing Nack and Bark to look around in confusion while Bean was distracted by the unfurled carpet that was the Treasure of Babylon whipping around in the sudden twister. "To steal from the sky?"

"Where are you?" Nack demanded as he tried to search for the hawk.

"Here!" Jet yelled from above as he boosted straight down the middle of the three, causing a burst of wind that scattered them like leaves.

As the Hooligans tumbled across the floor, Wave caught the treasure and calmly rolled it up again. Storm, it seemed, had caught something else.

"Boss, what should I do wit dis?" the albatross asked as he held up the sniper rifle Nack had previously been holding.

"Dispose of it," Jet ordered as he saw what his muscled friend held.

"Right away, boss!" Storm smiled as he clenched his fist hard. A moment later and the sound of protesting metal could be heard as the weapon was rendered completely useless.

"Wha–!" Nack yelled as he watched his weapon turned to twisted scrap. "Do... do you have any idea how much that cost me?!"

"Be glad it's not your neck..." a weak voice struggled out, and all present turned to see Proto Man force himself to his knees and aim his arm cannon at Nack. "If your little trick bullets had actually killed my brother or sister I would have returned the favor right now."

"Then they're...?" Wave asked with some audible relief.

"Alive," Proto Man confirmed. "Nack missed vital systems on my brother and our helmets are thicker than the rest of our armor, and Nack hit the thickest spot on my sister's. They'll need repairs, but they'll be fine. As for you," Proto Man addressed the Hooligans.

"I suggest you leave while we're feeling charitable," Jet finished, the towering form of Storm pounding a fist into his palm behind him suggested what would happen if they ignored the offer.

"Hooligans..." Nack growled out. "Retreat."

Jet and the others watched as the three sped off towards the opening gates.

Nack and the other Hooligans sped out of the gates, and immediately ground to a halt as they almost crashed into a shimmering forcefield. Behind it were a slew of robots mounted on Extreme Gear and aiming weapons at them. Most appeared to be a variety of the Joe series, all currently with arm cannons trained on the Hooligans, but three were clearly different.

The one apparently generating the forcefield looked like a buff human with blue arms and legs, yellow gloves, cyan boots, and a giant red V-shaped torso armor that hid all but his eyes and had a stylized lightning bolt on it. The one in the back had blue armor with green boots, gloves, and helmet as well as a soot-black face where only the eyes could be seen. The one in front, and apparently the leader of the trio, looked like someone had crossbred a fishman and a scuba diver. He had green and yellow armor with pink trim, particularly on the knees and flipper feet, with a blue air tank connected to his helmet (which oddly had a yellow mohawk attachment on it) and in his hands held a trident that vibrated ominously. (16)

Behind them was a gathering of the world's heroes, those that just so happened to comprise the other racing teams, which just flat out looked pissed. (17)

"Nack the Weasel, Bean the Dynamite, Bark the Polar Bear," the aquatic robot declared, "the security forces of MeteoTech hired for this event do hereby place you under arrest."

"Bombs just want to be free!" Bean yelled cheerfully as he flung a spread of explosives at the robots, which proceeded to detonate harmlessly on the forcefield.

"Run for it!" the voice of Nack yelled as the smoke from the explosions obscured their forms. A moment later and the three could be seen tearing away from Babylon Garden as fast as their Extreme Gear could carry them, Bean being carried by Bark while apparently calmly holding his wrists out to be cuffed.

"Wait, if Roll agreed to be your girlfriend, then why have I never seen the two of you dating?"

*"sigh Because she told me that she didn't want to start dating until I could remember after Awakening."*

"Um..."

"And while I don't know what the weird inflection on that word is supposed to mean, I do know that it's more than just coming out of a rest cycle." (18)

Rouge shook her head of the thoughts as Team Dark closed in on their quarry. The award ceremonies had been halted while Dr. Light attended to his robot children. Unwilling to risk teleporting them in their condition despite knowing full well how safe his own technology was, repair supplies had been transported in so he could work on-site. And yet aside from Team Dark, the attending crowd hadn't thinned. If anything, the mass of concerned onlookers had been increasing when they left.

"Found them," Shadow's words drew the rest of the team's attention to the sight below where the Hooligans were ditching their Extreme Gear and boarding Nack's double-sidecar hoverbike the Marvelous Queen.

"Thanks," Bass told them. "Just remember, no help unless I give the signal. These guys are mine ."

Rouge and Shadow nodded, even though they planned to give help from behind the scenes anyway. Shadow by making sure the Hooligans never received any reinforcements that might come to aid them and Rouge with a darling little undervalued technique from the Pokemon branch known as Disable.

Surprisingly, Roll needed the least amount of repairs. Aside from the mess that was the front of her helmet, she had suffered nothing more serious than a blown fuse. A quick replacement with a fresh component and she was as good as new, if minus her helmet.

Rock on the other hand had some fairly extensive internal damage to his body. Nothing that couldn't be fixed in time, but it would be a while before he was back to peak operational condition. For now though, Light's youngest son was insisting that he be present for the award ceremony and the presentation of the Treasure of Babylon even if he had to be carried.

The treasure itself almost seemed lackluster given the trials and protections placed around it, but Dr. Light noticed something about it even before the Babylon Rogues unrolled the item so the crowd could see it in its entirety.

"My word!" the scientist exclaimed from his front-row seat next to his younger children (19). "Is that material what I think it is?"

"Good eye old man," Wave gave the doctor a look that betrayed how impressed she was. "It is indeed the same kind of material used to make Extreme Gears."

The crowd began murmuring as the information worked its way around, and everyone's attention was riveted when Jet brought out the translucent cube known as the Key to Babylon Garden and held it over what to most looked like an ornate throw rug or small carpet for a moment before both began to glow.

And then the item rose off the ground slowly to hover in the air as the fabric rippled in the wind. By the end of the day most of the world knew two things for certain: The Treasure of Babylon was a prototype of the Extreme Gear which was even now taking the extreme sports world by storm, and it was a genuine-for-reals legendary flying carpet .

Nack swore when his precious ride was shot by energy blasts from a black-armored individual. One he knew as Bass, Dr. Wily's black prince, followed by that robotic wolf of his.

"What the hell is wrong with you?!" the mercenary weasel yelled as he drew a pistol and aimed it at the robot. "No one shoots up my bike like that!"

click

Nack blinked and tried to fire again without success as Bass strode forward without any concern whatsoever. "Bean!"

"Gotcha boss!" Bean saluted and dove for the robot, producing several bombs that... failed to light their fuses. "Huh? What's wrong with you guys? Are you si–"

Nack gulped a bit as not only did Bean's explosives fail to ignite, but the nutty duck was casually backhanded into a nearby rock and fell unconscious. Bark tried to rush the robot only to be pounced on by the robo-wolf who pinned Nack's silent muscle to the ground and looked a single command away from ripping the polar bear's throat out.

"Look," Nack fished for something to get him out of this situation, "that whole thing on the track was just business you know? Nothing personal."

"You hurt my dog," Bass growled as he grabbed the weasel by his jacket and hoisted him face-to-face, just as Nack remembered that the robo-wolf had the ability to transform and that the robot's Extreme Gear had the same coloration as the metal animal.

"A s-simple misunderstanding!" Nack sweated nervously.

"And then..." Bass's grip tightened, "you shot my girlfriend . In the head . So don't you dare tell me it's not personal ..."

As the robot's other arm began to morph into a weapon, Nack wondered what his chances of living through the next five seconds were.

Jet whistled to himself as he strolled down to his office aboard the Babylon Rogues' zeppelin. He might have won the competition, but the mayor guy had pulled him aside to discuss making the whole EX World Grand Prix an annual thing. And... the idea actually appealed to Jet in a way that it never had when Eggman was running the show. But for now, he wanted to sit at his desk and bask in the glory of the new trophy sitting in a case by the wall.

"Hey Jet," a familiar voice interrupted the moment the leader of the Babylon Rogues entered. "Got a moment to talk?"

Jet turned to see Sonic leaning calmly against the wall of his office like he belonged there. After a moment of surprise, he decided to humor the hedgehog. "About what?"

"Back in Monopole, before Rock nabbed you, you said you'd done this before," Sonic replied casually. "How many times?"

"More than you can imagine," Jet sneered.

"Dude," Sonic laughed, "you couldn't write numbers that big using the walls and teeny handwriting. Seriously, how many?"

"..." Jet had lost count early on, but he reluctantly admitted his best guess.

Sonic nodded thoughtfully. "That would pretty much make you the sixth Crash Generation looper from our universe."

"The what ?" Jet blinked in total confusion.

Dr. Wily smiled to himself as he finished flight preparations for the Time Skimmer. As far as G.U.N. knew, the device could only be used to view events in the past or most likely future. And for the most part, that was correct. However, one could physically land in another time period provided they had enough energy to both deliberately choose their destination and make the return trip as well.

For this test, he'd set the dial to, oh, about two hundred years in the future. He wanted to see what the world looked like a good amount of time after he gained control of it. If he was lucky, maybe he could visit the history museums and see the records of his eventual glorious victory.

Smiling in a way that betrayed nothing to the G.U.N. techs observing the test, not to mention the brass funding this and other projects of his, Dr. Wily pulled a lever and activated the time jump.

"So..." Jet, now in his seat behind his desk, took a moment to digest the lengthy explanation his rival had given him, "not only are you 'looping' as you put it, but you've been doing it much longer than I have."

"Pretty much," Sonic confirmed.

"I see... How much were you holding back?" Jet accused.

"Not as much as you're thinking," Sonic shrugged. "Honestly, I just used Gear recently developed by Rock's dad instead of the special models that I save for competitions between loopers. As for skill, I promise you I brought my best game. I tried holding back against a version of you who wasn't Awake once and it wasn't pretty."

"Good," Jet growled. "I despise charity from my competition."

Sonic just waved off his rival's comment. "Anyway, since you're looping you'll want to practice this."

Jet blinked as Sonic pulled small handbook out of nowhere and handed it to him. Taking it automatically, Jet noticed the two-tailed fox friend of Sonic's... Tails... on the cover and the title... "Subspace Pockets and You?"

"It's a really useful technique," Sonic assured him. "One you'll want to learn as soon as possible and practice with regularly. The book goes into some detail, but essentially it's a way to keep your stuff from one Loop to the next."

Jet pondered that for a moment.

"Oh, and once you get that down, let me know and I'll show you the Ping," Sonic added. "So you can let others know when you're Awake and stuff."

"And why would I want to let you know that ?" Jet smirked at his rival.

"What?" Sonic chuckled. "And miss the next time members from the Looper Racing Circuit are in a Loop together?"

"The who?" Jet was beginning to feel a bit out of his depth at the rapid-fire of new information.

"Basically a bunch of speedsters and serious racers from across the multiverse who like to get together and challenge each other to races," Sonic explained. "Aside from me and a few others from our branch, the LRC has Rainbow Dash, the Flash, Quicksilver, Lightning McQueen, Speed Racer (no, seriously, that's his real name), Kamen Rider OOO: aka Hino Eiji, Fate Testarossa, Blurr, Cheetara, Dash Parr, Captain Falcon–"

"Whoa, whoa!" Jet interrupted. "You can't seriously expect me to believe that all of these people are top notch racers! I haven't even heard of any of them!"

"Dude," Sonic gave Jet a tolerant look, "we're talking about a gathering of racers from multiple realities where 'grand champion' and 'fastest in the world' are almost entry requirements."

"And you're asking me to join?" Jet repeated as that sunk in.

"Jet," Sonic shook his head. "Aside from the Hooligans and your teammates that grand prix was pretty much an entire field of loopers whose experience was equal to or greater than your own."

Jet leaned back in his chair and pondered that for a bit. "Who's the current champion?"

"The racing champion of the multiverse?" Sonic grinned with approval that Jet was aiming straight for the top, just like he always had. "Right now that would be Herbie."

"And who is Herbie?" Jet asked.

Sonic considered the question for a minute. "Nah, not ruining the surprise. I'll make you a deal though: You buy the picture that someone's guaranteed to take of your face when you find out and let me see it and I'll show you the one they took of mine. Oh, and you might want to keep this date in mind!"

Jet accepted a calendar page for what looked like next year with a circled date on it. "And this is...?"

"It's when Tails predicted the last of those Arks of the Cosmos will fall to Mobius," Sonic reminded Jet. "Those things are always a lot of fun. Plus... there's something I'd like to try with them if you're willing."

"Like what?" Jet eyed his rival suspiciously.

"...I'll give you a choice," Sonic offered. "I can tell you right now, or you can meet me next year with your Ark and race for it."

Jet didn't even have to think about his response.

Silver the Hedgehog floated along with his telekinetic powers over the ruined city on his usual patrol and pondered the state of the world. As he did so, his thoughts went as they often did to an old man...

"Whatcha building?" a young Silver asked the old man.

"I am building a robot," a grayed wild-haired partially bald man with intense eyes and a large mustache snorted in annoyance. "Go away."

"Everyone says you're here to save us from the Flames," the young hedgehog ignored the dismissal.

"They are much more appreciative of my talents than most," the man continued to work without looking at the youth. "I am currently building a force capable of combating these 'Flames'."

"Why?" the young Silver asked. "Everyone else just wants to run and hide while it burns away everything else."

"Because this world is mine," the man hissed vehemently. "Mine by right of being the most brilliant, the most talented, and the most capable! And I will not permit some mindless flame beast to deny me that right! My latest creation will be able to easily trounce even the most terrifying of lava monsters that this... 'Iblis' creates!"

"Will he really be that strong?" Silver questioned curiously.

"Of course he will!" the old man seemed insulted. "I have spent my life fighting against misguided 'heroes' who would deny me my rightful place. Heroes who would trounce this 'Iblis' in an instant! And I have studied all of their powers and abilities. The analytical mind and calm demeanor of the Mega Man. The ruthless physical prowess and melee skill of the Mega Woman. The military scanners and hardware of the Proto Man. And the combat programming of my own son... Along with a support unit of his own that can withstand the harshness of these molten fiends and a few surprises of my own invention, he shall be invincible!"

"Wow..." Silver's eyes shone with the interest of youth. "What's his name gonna be?"

"I shall call him... Quint."

"Silver!" the familiar voice shook the psychic hedgehog out of his memories. On the roof of a nearby building stood the robot he'd just been thinking about. Clad in the green and lime armor he was built with, blue shades hiding his face, a yellow 'V' crest on his helmet and the crimson red battle jackhammer Sakugarne flung over his back. Beside him stood the purple-furred feline pyrokinetic known as Blaze who had mysteriously appeared a few weeks back. (20)

"What's wrong?" Silver called back to his friends.

"He's appeared again!" Blaze informed him and Silver felt his anger spike.

Iblis. Quint was indeed everything that the old man had promised, but Iblis was immortal. He could never die for good. But that never stopped Silver and his friends from trying.

"Sun of Soleanna, guide and watch over us with your eternal light..."

As her words echoed across the gathered crowd, Princess Elise touched the torch to the pedestal, causing flames to race along the ornate centerpiece of the city as fireworks were released into the air.

"This has been an entertaining celebration," Rock observed from his spot on a nearby rooftop. "Thanks for inviting me."

"Yeah, this is a pretty sweet shindig every time," Sonic agreed from his perch next to the blue bomber. "Right up until Eggman crashes it seeking the 'Flames of Disaster'."

"Speaking of which..." Rock interrupted as scanned the skies, spotting several incoming missiles headed for the general area.

"Yep," Sonic smiled. "That's our cue."

With that, the two blue heroes jumped into action liked they'd agreed on. They would both intercept the missiles and then Rock would take on Eggman's robots while Sonic got Elise as far away as possible.

Bass snorted as the explosions behind himself and Shadow died down. Eggman's defenders were just plain weak.

The communication watch on Shadow's wrist crackled to life. "Transmission from HQ. There's an SOS coming from Dr. Eggman's Base. Our last communication with the infiltrating agent was 26 hours ago. We expect an immediate rescue, Agents Shadow and Bass."

Then again, as Shadow placed a hand on his armor and prepared to Chaos Control them both inside the outer walls, Bass had to admit that the whole 'agent' title had a nice ring to it.

Blaze readied herself along with a still Unawake Silver and this Quint fellow she'd never met before as the massive lava beast Iblis rose out of the ever-hot lava at the base of the destroyed city. With her experience in the Loops, she could seal the monster herself now, but...

Well, she was curious as to how the presence of Quint altered things. She'd keep the solo-seal option open in case he and Silver weren't able to manage things with just her baseline abilities as backup. (21)

"I still can't believe you two were sent in after me," Rouge huffed from the backseat. It didn't matter how many times it happened in the Loops, the whole thing still rankled her.

"Why?" Bass grinned as he opened fire on the surrounding robots from the aptly named 'shotgun' seat while Shadow both drove and fired missiles from the armored jeep the three had appropriated. "Embarrassed to be seen with us?"

"No," Rouge grumbled. "It's just that this was supposed to be a stealthy mission."

Sighing, the spy/thief pulled a ominously glowing object out from behind her.

"Speaking of the mission, don't either of you want to know what this is?" she asked. Shadow already knew about Mephiles's prison from multiple encounters with it in the Loops, but Bass's reaction could prove interesting.

"Can it blast Eggman's sentries to smoldering scrap metal?" the black-armored robot asked.

"Probably not," Rouge wondered why she'd expected anything more sophisticated than that.

"Then I couldn't care less," the super robot snorted as more of Eggman's robots, one a giant dog, landed in front of them. "Oh, look. They're trying to keep us from getting in."

"More fools them," Shadow grinned as he gunned the accelerator.

The massive form of Iblis was beaten, again. It was not the first time Quint had defeated the beast, and he was fully certain it would not be the last. For as many times as he, and then Silver and now Blaze, had defeated the monster, it simply rose back up from the ashes once more.

"How can we completely destroy Iblis?!" Silver punched a broken pillar.

Quint silently observed Silver's anger. It was something he shared. But the knowledge of how to destroy Iblis for good had been lo–

"By knowing the truth of course," a new voice interrupted them. Turning, all three beheld a black hedgehog atop a pillar that no longer held up anything above it. "Just as a flower comes from a seed or a chicken from an egg, everything has an origin."

Quint noted the instant distrust that sprouted on Blaze's face, but paid it no immediate heed. Many would feel the same way about his creator after all. (22)

"You need to find the being originally responsible for this catastrophe," the mysterious hedgehog continued.

"And who is that?" Quint challenged. "And how can such knowledge aid us?"

Bass screwed up his face as Rouge gave the rundown on this Soleanna place that apparently featured prominently in Eggman's recent plans. It wasn't a backwater by any stretch of the imagination, but it also wasn't really at the forefront of anything.

As much of an idiot as Eggman could be at times, he was still almost as smart as Bass's dad. If he was interested in the place, then there was a reason for it.

And why did he keep getting the feeling that the glowing ornate thing Rouge had swiped was watching him?

"To rewrite your future, the past must be changed. You must eliminate the individuals who awakened Iblis. You must destroy the Iblis triggers."

Quint shook his head free of Mephiles's instructions as he activated his sensors and looked around. So this was the past... Before Iblis was set loose to destroy everything. A time when his own creator was alive and his ambitions not yet drowned by the sea of flames the future would become. And while he was no longer certain that his creator's ambitions were well founded, it remained that any future would be better than the one that currently existed.

Off to his side, Quint saw Silver shaking off the effects of Mephiles's time travel and smiled slightly. The hedgehog had grown up to be a mighty warrior, a valued ally, and a trusted friend.

Silver turned his gaze on Quint and for a moment, he seemed not to recognize his oldest friend. But the moment passed as the hedgehog's eyes lit with understanding and Quint chalked it up to a mild and temporary side effect from the journey. (23)

"Come Silver," he spoke, idly noting that Blaze had failed to appear in the same location the two of them had, "it is time that we fight to change the future. So that all may indeed have a future."

It was time to locate the Iblis triggers and ensure that they never freed the monster.

Blaze sighed to herself as she examined the world of Sonic's time. Mephiles had separated her from everyone else as usual, likely because he could sense that she'd act as a voice of reason and counter his manipulations.

Dealing with Silver's baseline insecurity if he wasn't Awake would be bad enough. But the apparently ruthless nature of Quint? With a clear target? That was a recipe for disaster.

"Damn..." Rock swore as he watched Dr. Eggman fly away with Elise, even though the princess had tossed them the Chaos Emerald she'd come to possess.

"Eh, don't feel too bad," Sonic consoled the robot Anchor. "Eggman tends to be pretty determined about getting his mitts on information and the people who have it. In fact, I think we blew my old record out of the water for keeping her away from him before he managed to distract us enough. At least when I'm not using out-of-Loop powers. Besides, if he doesn't get Elise he tends to blow the city up trying."

"That really doesn't make me feel better," Rock replied. "We need to get her back."

"And we will," the blue blur assured him. "And she'll be fine when we do. The girl may not look it, but she's a tough one. But first it's time to do the detective thing, chase ol' Egg-face down and find out what he's up to. And since you're visiting, you wanna take point?"

"...Sure."

When Rock had sent out a distress signal that Soleanna was under attack by Dr. Eggman, his brother and sister had contacted the Freedom Fighters and responded as quickly as possible.

Of course, trying to meet up with him and Sonic amidst the chaos of the city was proving problematic and the group had split up. At the moment Roll was paired up with Amy (having been a hair slow on calling a partner and not simply taking off on her own like Blues) when the pink hedgehog let out a cry of joy.

"Sonic!" she tore off towards a hedgehog that, even in this light, Roll could tell was definitely not Sonic. The figure next to him though was unmistakable.

Quint. Of course, she hadn't yet met the future clone of her brother this Loop, which left the question of how to play this. Considering Amy hugging the strange hedgehog, she decided that if it was working for her...

"Rock?" she approached the two with a look of confusion on her face. "What are you doing in that get up?"

Amy chose that moment to realize that she wasn't really hugging Sonic, Roll idly recognizing Silver, and slapped the poor guy.

"Our apologies," Quint stated politely, "but I fear we're not the ones you seek. I am known as Quint, and this is Silver."

"Sorry," Roll apologized as well, "but even with the shades you look remarkably like my brother. We're trying to find him and his friend."

"We too are searching for someone," Quint added.

"Then we'll help you!" Amy promised instantly, grabbing Silver's hand and Roll suppressed a chuckle at the look on the hedgehog's face. Awake or not, it was clear he wasn't used to female attention.

Taking a moment to send an alert to Blues and the Freedom Fighters, Roll decided to follow the three and make sure they didn't get into too much trouble.

"Sonic!" Elise exclaimed as the blue hedgehog from before crashed into her cell, followed by a two-tailed fox and the blue robot. "Mega Man!"

"Please, call me Rock," the robot hero smiled.

"You came to rescue me!" the girl exclaimed with relief and rushed forward to hug the two blue figures.

"Well, of course," Sonic grinned. "We always keep our word!"

"Look out!" the fox yelped, pointing to a large dog-like machine outside the cell in which rode Dr. Eggman.

"Well, well, it looks like I have a little pest control problem," the mad doctor sneered at the heroes. "Leave now! The princess is mine until I unlock the secret to the Flames of Disaster!"

"Yeah, not happening!" Mega Ma–Rock stepped in front and defiantly leveled his arm cannon at the war machine.

"It would appear," Quint observed drily as Amy Rose continued to drag Silver through the desert sand in search of her supposed boyfriend, "that your friend's idea of aiding our search is to conscript us in aiding with hers."

"Yeah, she takes a little getting used to," Roll admitted.

"Out of curiosity," the robot from the future inquired, "how long did it take you?"

"Any day now..." Roll laughed weakly and rubbed the back of her head.

Quint was silent for a moment before snorting in amusement.

Bass wasn't really paying attention to the history lesson Rouge insisted on giving as the three strolled through the castle ruins. Oh, he was recording every word, but it was all boring junk about some failed energy project that blew up in people's faces called–

"The Solaris project," the sudden voice of Dr. Eggman cut into his thoughts. "An ambitious undertaking named after the eternal sun god they worshiped."

"Well," Bass observed as he took in the doctor's latest personal battlecraft. "This just got interesting."

"Indeed," Eggman replied calmly. "Bass, Rouge, Shadow. As much as I'd love to catch up on old times, I'm on something of a schedule. So if you would kindly return the Scepter of Darkness you stole from me."

With a grin and a slight motion of his head, a number of Eggman's robots dropped down to surround the group.

"Sure thing, doc," Bass grinned as he swiped the thing from a surprised Rouge. "Hope you've got enough super glue."

"NO!" Eggman yelled as he grasped what the anti-hero intended to do just in time for the device to crack and shatter in Bass's grip.

A dark energy burst forth, causing all of Eggman's robots to fail and making Bass grimace as it tried to do the same to him. He hadn't felt anything that sinister since his dad played with the dark energy he'd extracted from the alien robot that Duo guy had called Slur. It had been one heck of a power boost when he'd had it, but it had given him this niggling phantom pain that he liked to equate to heartburn in humans.

Then some massive shadow... thing ... leapt out of the ground, making Eggman take off in a panic like Hell itself was after him. Then it went after the robots, passing through Bass last and leaving a cold sensation that made him wonder if some denizen of Hell had actually been unleashed. It ended by striking Shadow's... shadow, maker Bass hoped that wasn't going to end up a pun, which then rose up to form an off-colored clone of Bass's friendly rival.

"Oh, how ironic fate can be!" the thing laughed without displaying any evidence of a mouth on the faux-Shadow form. "I would never have believed I would be released through the actions of the Slur-touched or that I would revive through your shade! I thank you Bass Wily, Shadow The Hedgehog!"

"...The hell are you?" Bass grunted as the figure gave a mocking bow.

"I am Mephiles," the figure rose up slowly and began to stride forward at a slow, ominous pace. "Mephiles the Dark. What, did you forget me? I owe much to you the two of you. Oh yes." A malevolent purple energy orb formed in the figure's hand. "What you gave to me, I now return to you! A one-way ticket to oblivion!"

The orb expanded suddenly, encompassing all four of them before any could react and the next thing Bass knew he, Rouge, and Shadow were in a crumbling ruin overlooking an equally crumbling city.

Elise smiled as she ran alongside her rescuers into town. The two were so amazing in her eyes, and it sounded like they had equally amazing friends, like the fox who had led that man's forces away to help her escape.

Her heroes. Rock.

"As long as you're happy, that's enough for us."

And Sonic.

"Nothing starts until you take action. Don't waste time worrying that you could use doing."

Yes... She would do her best to be happy. For them. And she would do everything she could to prevent Solaris from becoming the Flames of Disaster again.

Silver was still trying to take everything in. The odd Quint individual he remembered from this lifetime's childhood, the strange old man who had built Quint that Silver now knew to have been Dr. Wily, the presence of Mega Woman in the Loop... He just wasn't sure how it would play out.

"Amy! Roll!" a voice rang out. "How've y'all been!"

And now it looked like the Freedom Fighters had come along for the ride this time around, as evidenced by the waving Bunnie Rabbot and Antoine that Amy and Mega Woman were rushing to join. No, Silver wasn't sure how events were going to play out, and messing with things blindly could end in disaster. Plus he still hadn't located Sonic or the second 'Iblis trigger' this Loop that he strongly suspected was Mega Man.

'Hmm... I wonder how Quint and I would fare against the two of them...' Silver wondered. As fortune would have it, he spotted the two with Princess Elise at that precise moment. 'Looks like I'll get to find out.'

Whispering for Quint so that Amy and her friends wouldn't overhear, Silver motioned his friend towards the blue duo.

Sonic blinked as two figures appeared in his and Rock's path. Silver and a green armored robot with blue shades and a large red object slung over his back... that Quint guy from Rock's neck of the multiverse. The one Waltz had offed that Loop when they'd met in the Wily Egg.

"It's them," Quint stated. "The Iblis triggers."

Sonic noticed Silver giving him the 'play along' signal discreetly and made a similar motion to Rock.

"What are you goofballs on about?" he pretended to have no idea what was going on. "Who are you?"

"It doesn't matter," Silver stated as Quint hefted the red object, apparently the pogo stick from hell, in front of him threateningly.

"For the good of the future," the green robot intoned as his weapon cracked the ground from the almost casual motion, "you two must be destroyed."

Elise watched on as her heroes fought against the sudden challengers. The power being thrown about was immense. While Sonic and Rock fought with speed and arm cannon respectively, the strange hedgehog rapidly threw around furniture, boxes and debris with his mind and his green-armored partner unleashed energy blasts and physical blows from his odd transforming weapon that blew craters in the street and buildings alike. The surrounding area was quickly being torn to pieces as surely lethal blows missed their targets.

She was still trying to figure out what she could do to help when metal arms grabbed her from behind.

Quint had to admit that the cry of someone in distress had distracted him, and in that moment the Iblis triggers had tried to escape.

He growled and silently ordered Sakugarne to link with his arm and activate its power cannon mode. "Don't turn your back on–"

Clang! Boom!

Quint grunted as his weapon was knocked off course by a powerful strike from what appeared to be a broom. The signature, and highly effective, weapon of Roll Light, the Mega Woman.

"Don't you dare try and kill my brother!" the yellow-armored girl robot snarled at him.

"Y'all heard the lady!" the voice of the cybernetic rabbit he'd seen Roll greet before joined the confrontation. Her mechanical arm was morphed into an energy cannon and the male coyote stood beside her in a clear combat stance with sword drawn.

"You were after Sonic and Mega Man?!" Amy yelled incredulously at him and Silver. "Were you seriously going to kill them?!"

"They are responsible for destroying the world," Quint glared back at them.

"Eez zis some kind of joke?" the coyote scoffed. "Zose two are ze last in ze world who would do such a think!"

"Believe what you will," Quint told them as he hacked into the teleportation network of this time and laid a hand on Silver's shoulder. "But in the near future the actions of those two will unleash global devastation!"

And with those parting words, Quint teleported himself and Silver away from the confrontation.

"Geez," Sonic huffed after he and Rock left the fight. "Is Quint always that intense? That pogo stick of his is rough stuff..." And don't think he hadn't noticed the smug grin on Silver's face. Oh, he was going to have words with that guy later.

"More or less," Rock breathed heavily to circulate more cooling air over his internal systems. "Though Sakugarne doesn't normally have a pile-driver/boxing-glove mode. Or a super cannon mode for that matter." (24)

"So just the massive pogo-jumps that make the ground explode when he lands," Sonic snarked. "Yeah, that's much better."

"Could be worse," Rock noted. "He could have had the beam saber upgrade."

"Ugh, I can do without another round of Darth Time Traveler..."

"There you two are," Blaze accused as she finally caught up with Silver and Quint. "I've been looking all over for you..."

"Blaze...?" Silver asked with a convincingly solemn tone. Heck, Blaze's only clue that it was an act was the pre-arranged hand signal they had telling her he was Awake and not wanting to rock the course of events too much. "To kill in order to save the world... Is it the right thing to do?"

"Right or wrong matters little," Quint answered before Blaze could. "If we do nothing, then nothing will change."

Blaze joined Silver in looking at Quint with surprise. Ruthless the sentiment might have been, but there was wisdom in it. Much the same wisdom Blaze recalled imparting to Silver herself. (25)

"Regardless, the situation is more complex than we've been told," Quint continued. "The Iblis triggers are in pursuit of a 'Dr. Eggman' who has a base nearby which may contain further information."

Two teams had been assembled to recover Elise. The Freedom Fighters, Blues, and Roll were off sabotaging the doctor's base while Sonic, Rock, Tails, and Knuckles fought their way in from the front.

Rock had no idea what was up with Eggman most days. First he said he'd 'let' them hold onto the Chaos Emerald and now he was suddenly demanding they turn it over in exchange for Elise? Did the guy even know what he was trying to do?

"You're late," the voice of Eggman sneered as the four heroes entered the inner chamber of the base.

"We have the Emerald," Rock glared as he held up the gem. "Now let Elise go!"

"All in due time," Eggman grinned triumphantly as a pedestal rose up from the floor. "Place the emerald there."

Rock glared at the man and, knowing full well that he had something planned, did as instructed. Even though he could see Elise shaking her head, silently begging him not to.

"Always nice to work with a professional," Eggman grinned as the pedestal retracted, taking the emerald with it. "Allow me to introduce you to the Solaris prototype."

Elise's gasp as the chamber activated was audible even over the hum of the sudden energy field that encompassed the heroes. After a few moments of fruitlessly trying to break free, the four were lifted off their feet as the field intensified.

"With this machine, I will be able to control the flow of time itself!" the voice of Eggman was the last thing they heard before they all vanished.

The trio of Quint, Blaze, and Silver all stared up at the robotic sentry that had descended to engage them. It was, in essence, a floating weapons platform with glowing hover engines that could be repositioned for precision movement, four 'arms' that appeared able to be positioned parallel or perpendicular to the ground and housed a large number of missile silos and machine guns in addition to possessing heavy armor, a pulsing crystal that Quint's sit-rep scanners showed was both the reactor as well as a powerful laser, and atop a rotating sensory platform. The transponder identified it as an 'Egg Genesis'.

"Silver," Quint spoke as the machine began targeting them, "'Death From Above'."

A moment later, Quint and Sakugarne were wrapped in Silver's psychokinetic power and flung high into the air above the machine while Silver himself and Blaze took on the dangerous task of drawing its fire.

When he was directly over the behemoth, Quint set one foot on Sakugarne's foothold and another between the handlebars. It wasn't the most stable position, but it was a bit more aerodynamic and allowed Quint to aim as well as shoot down any incoming fire without throwing his targeting off too much. And one more reason...

"Sakugarne, engage downward thrusters," Quint ordered as he finished linking his feet to their footholds and his support unit complied, its handlebars becoming jets normally used for its jet adaptor mode, and began to rocket downwards far faster than gravity could possibly pull it. The 'pogo-stick from hell' as some called it tore through the armor of the war machine like a steel nail through warm butter and burst out the bottom in a spray of crystal shards from the destroyed laser weapon and finished by cratering the ground in an eruption of powdery snow.

The war machine gave a protesting groan as its systems failed and it began to crash to the ground. The first legs to impact snapped off after a moment of protest, and the direction of the crash was changed from straight down to an angle that came nowhere close to hitting the robot beneath it.

Silver and Blaze came rushing up to check on Quint as the snow settled to find the robot casually brushing snow off of his armor. As the two slowed to a more sedate pace upon seeing that their friend was fine, Silver spotted an object in the snow. A blue crystal cut into a pristine faceted polygon.

"Hmm...? What's this?" Silver puzzled over it, and Quint scanned the object.

"Energy readings indicate it to be one of the lost Chaos Emeralds," the robot proclaimed.

"Yes," Blaze nodded. "Gems of immense power that respond to thought and emotion. It is said that if you gather all seven, a miracle will occur."

Quint turned pointedly to the feline.

"I have encountered them before," Blaze allowed, but declined to elaborate.

"Then we should hold onto it," Quint nodded to Silver who stowed the Emerald on his person.

Elise clasped her hands and began to pray. That man had told her of his intentions to use some power she possessed to revive the Flames of Disaster and rule the world. But the Flames... The Flames of Disaster brought only death and destruction. They could never benefit anyone...

This she knew for certain.

Now, she only had to figure out how to stop this and get her heroes back.

"Princess Elise?" a voice sounded behind her, causing her to whip around towards it. Just coming in from the entrance that man hadn't left by were a quartet of mobians and a yellow-armored girl who looked like Rock's sister beside a red-armored boy with shades in his helmet and a scarf around his neck.

"Y-yes?" Elise asked hesitantly.

"I'm Princess Sally Acorn, leader of the Freedom Fighters and Sonic's commander," a ground squirrel in a form-fitting blue vest and bike shorts combo introduced herself before gesturing to the armored girl, "and this is Mega Woman and Proto Man, sister and brother of Mega Man."

"Call me Roll," the girl smiled. "After we get you out of here of course."

"Speaking of which," the armored boy identified as Proto Man interrupted, "we need to get moving."

"O...of course," Elise agreed as she followed the friends and family of her heroes out of that man's clutches.

Rock looked around the new chamber he and the others had been deposited in. A quick scan revealed identical proportions to the one they'd just come from, with deviations concurrent with significant aging and neglect.

"Well," the familiar voice of Rouge sounded from above, "look who's here..."

"Heh," the voice of Bass chuckled. "This just got interesting..."

"The coast is clear," a pink hedgehog stated as the others led Elise out of the room. Elise was a bit surprised to see yet another member of her rescue team, but followed along with everyone. Despite the large group, they seemed to be doing quite well in evading detection.

"Intruder Alert! Intruder Alert!"

But then she supposed it couldn't really have lasted.

"Warning! Prisoner has escaped! All units begin search and recovery! Repeat–"

"Well, that's it for stealth!" Sally declared. "Full press! We have to get Elise out of here!"

With that, the group broke into a run. Energy weapons blazed, blades flashed, hammers pounded, robots were thrown into other robots, and several times Elise had to use her mysterious ability to create protective barriers to defend everyone. The problem was that the robots were starting to come in greater numbers.

"We need a new plan!" the hefty walrus yelled as he lifted another of their attackers and used it as a bludgeon.

"I'm thinking!" Sally yelled back.

"There!" Proto Man yelled as he spotted a train off to the side. "Stow away on Eggman's train! I'll run interference and draw them off!"

"I'm helping!" the pink hedgehog declared, hefting her hammer.

Proto Man glanced over at Sally who nodded after a moment's consideration. "Suit yourself."

With that, the Freedom Fighters and Mega Wo-Roll rushed Elise over to the train where they snuck in after they were certain no one was looking and hid themselves. The sounds of combat outside the train faded as the battle moved elsewhere until all was silent.

Then the hatch to the train opened and Proto Man jumped in, without the pink hedgehog. "We split up to draw Eggman's forces apart, but most of them followed her. Amy said she was going to make a run for Soleanna and lead them on a wild chase, so I doubled back after taking care of the few that came after me."

The rest of the group nodded as the situation sunk in. Now they could only wait.

"This is the distant future, far removed from our usual time. At least 200 years have passed, perhaps more."

The calm voice of Shadow echoed in Rock's processors as he fought his way through the devastated city ruins infested with hostile lava creatures. What could have caused this? And if he was here and able to see this nightmarish future, did that mean it had to happen?

No... No, he couldn't think like that. What would come would come, but he would always do everything in his power to prevent a tragedy like this from occurring.

Bass frowned as he blasted more of the lava beasts. They might seem fearsome, but they were all pathetically weak. And while the prospect of blasting their practically endless numbers had appealed initially, it had just gotten boring after a while.

Besides, Rouge had found the Chaos Emerald they needed so there was no real reason to stick aroun–

Bass blinked as something out of the corner of his optics registered. Was that... Omega?

A quick transponder ping to the robot got back a standby mode reply. No external access permitted. What the hell...?

"Are you certain? If we eliminate them, it will prevent this destruction?" Rock heard a familiar voice, so much like his own, come out of a room from which light emanated. Motioning for Sonic, Tails, and Knuckles to be quiet (which they already seemed to be doing) he peered in stealthily.

Inside the room were several figures. Quint, who he'd heard speaking stood with Silver and interestingly enough Blaze. And they were speaking with someone who looked just like Shadow.

"The Day of Disaster," the Shadow-like figure spoke in a voice that was most certainly not the ultimate lifeform's. "Here are my records of this event. This was when Iblis was freed and his flames released into the world."

Rock could only stare at the images of Soleanna, images that had to have been from close to when they were flung into the future, were brought up. A bit of enhancement on his optics let him read the accompanying text, revealing that it was talking about events two days after Eggman's initial assault with reports that Princess Elise had gone missing in the aftermath. As he read this, the faux Shadow handed the purple Chaos Emerald to Quint.

"I see them," the green-armored robot murmured. "A blue hedgehog and the blue robot my own basic design was based on... So these two are the Iblis triggers?"

"I don't believe it!" Blaze hissed, but the others seemed to pay her no heed. As Rock and the rest of his group watched, the false Shadow used a technique to send all of them back in time.

Bass grinned as he watched the worm-like form of the lava beast Shadow had called Iblis jump out, grab the Chaos Emerald they were all after, and scare the goody two-shoes out of their pants. Finally , something worth fighting!

Rock idly wondered why Shadow, Rouge, and Bass hadn't followed them back through the portal to the present as he grabbed a stray newspaper. A quick scan and analysis revealed that they still had time before the cataclysmic events learned of in the future, but no information on the status of the princess...

Bass was about to follow Rouge through the rift when he sensed something. Turning, he saw that Shadow was also distracted. A short distance away, a mass of gaseous darkness reformed itself into the off-color Shadow clone Mephiles.

When Shadow took off after the one who had stranded them in the future, Bass didn't even give the rift a second glance before he followed.

Rouge smirked as Omega accepted the Chaos Emerald and prepared to essentially shut down for a couple hundred years. Shadow had stayed behind to fight Mephiles so often that it no longer surprised her, which meant that she needed to send the Chaos Emerald and backup to the future. And time travel delivery was so much more feasible when you knew someone who could take the long way.

Bass couldn't hold back the sneer on his face as Mephiles tried to talk them into joining the dark being. As if they couldn't read the subtext. Yeah, humanity would probably go on a witch hunt if the world ended, and he and Shadow would likely be at the top of a lot of lists, but it was clear what Mephiles wasn't saying: That the devastation was his own doing while wearing Shadow's face.

As if they'd ever side with the guy who was intending to frame them.

"We make our own destiny," the voice of Shadow dripped with contempt for their mutual opponent, and Bass couldn't help the dark grin that split his face.

And then Mephiles flashed with darkness, turning into what looked like a crystalline version of his copied form.

'Well, look who finally decided to get serious,' Bass thought as Mephiles the Dark summoned a horde of clones.

The two dark heroes charged, only for Mephiles to dive at Shadow and disappear into his... shadow...

"The hell?!" Bass yelled in disbelief as he took aim at the bizarrely flat image of Mephiles that seemed attached to Shadow's feet and didn't even bother to mirror his movements.

"Ignore him!" Shadow yelled. "Stop his clones!"

Bass listened and began blasting away repeatedly, but the horde seemed endless.

"It doesn't matter how many you defeat," the echoing voice of Mephiles mocked them.

"I don't need to defeat them all!" Shadow growled. "Just enough to get warmed up! CHAOS BOOST!"

"Graaaah!" Mephiles yelled as the chaos-infusement of Shadow's body broke their connection and he was forced into a solid form. "Dance my shadows!"

"Yeah, dance!" Bass laughed as he began blasting the flimsy clones with wild abandon before they even got close to his partner, allowing Shadow to wail away on the original until he managed to break away.

"Grrr..." Mephiles began forming an energy sphere in his hands. "Take this!"

"You first!" Bass yelled as he blasted the energy with his arm cannon, destabilizing it enough that it exploded in Mephiles's face.

"Gah!" Mephiles gasped as he fell to his knees. "You..."

"Yeah," Bass grinned as he stepped up besides Shadow and aimed his buster at Mephiles, "us."

Mephiles roared and blasted them both with dark energy from zero build up, catching both anti-heroes off-guard and flinging them back roughly.

Bass grit his teeth as he watched Mephiles stalk towards them. That... that had hurt . A burst of machine gun fire interrupted whatever would have happened next, and all three turned to see Omega. Back online and staring Mephiles down with deadly intent.

"Now is the designated time," Omega intoned. "I shall assist."

"Heh..." Bass grunted as he forced himself to his feet. "The destruction buddies are back together again."

"Indeed," Omega agreed as he readied himself for battle.

Mephiles simply fell back and began to surround himself with clones again, but they proved little protection as Bass and Omega, as well as Shadow with a gun Bass didn't recall him having a moment ago, opened fire with extreme prejudice.

In short order, Mephiles was sent crashing to the ground, his clones unable to hold their form with their maker defeated. But even then the evil-eyed being stood and began to form a time portal which he went through, clearly intending to leave his foes stranded in the future.

With no time to waste, Bass, Shadow, and Omega all made a break for the portal and dove through with moments to spare.

The lead with Eggman hadn't panned out. The base had been on high alert, preventing the three from entering and getting the information they wanted. But as they walked back towards Soleanna, they spotted a dark hedgehog.

"Mephiles..." Blaze hissed.

The dark hedgehog turned stiffly towards them.

"Tell us..." Silver began. "Who are these Iblis triggers? Why would they act to destroy the world?"

"It is a good question," Quint added. "The very idea that these two would unleash a horror such as Iblis is met with incredulity at best and often open hostility. They seem to only want to protect and defend. Why would they even do what you claim?"

"Why do the reasons matter?" Mephiles returned calmly. "Unless you complete your task, your future will remain the same... forever. They are currently at the terminal station. It's now or never if you want this."

The three looked at each other for a moment, but when they looked back Mephiles was gone. (26)

"Why are you following me?" Shadow asked. They'd gotten back just fine, met up with Rouge, and he'd gone off to settle things with Mephiles as usual. While he did on occasion take Rouge and Omega with him, he still considered Mephiles a personal affair.

"Don't you remember?" Bass sounded half an excuse away from mocking Shadow's apparent ignorance. "Mephiles recognized both of us. I'm the 'Slur-touched', or didn't you ever bother to read my file on what I got up to with pops several years back?"

"..." Shadow had to admit to himself that he might have skimmed a bit here and there. "How would Mephiles recognize the traces of Slur's power anyway?"

"Who knows?" Bass shrugged. "Slur was a living avatar of malevolence before he got himself scrapped by Duo and his power extracted by pops, Mephiles seems to be a living mass of malevolence... Maybe they knew each other in evil high school?" (27)

Shadow bit back a snicker at the thought of Mephiles in school. "Maybe. In any case, we have a train of Eggman's to stop and a few questions to ask the doctor about Mephiles."

Elise stifled a startled cry as another explosion rocked the train the Freedom Fighters and Rock's siblings were smuggling her out on. As far as anyone knew, that man was clueless as to her presence on his train, but it seemed an error had been made and someone was determined to destroy it regardless of who was present on board.

"Mega Woman?" Sally asked Rock's sister.

"I have radio contact," Roll answered. "They're closing in! Get ready to abandon the train!"

"Hold on tight princess!" the walrus, Rotor, told her as she settled on his back.

The red-armored form of Proto Man turned and blasted a hole in the train and a moment later all within had jumped out and started racing along the ground, joined shortly by a pair of blue figures.

"I knew you'd return!" Elise exclaimed as the presence of her heroes finally registered. "You had to!"

Any response was cut off as the heroes glanced to the side and dove out of the way of a massive impact. The Freedom Fighters and Rock's siblings skidded to a halt and stood ready to face whatever had emerged to interfere in the rescue.

"This time there will be no more interruptions!" the voice of Quint rang out from the dust could the impact had produced as it cleared to show him posed dramatically atop the weaponized jackhammer Sakugarne, itself embedded in the ground, with the silver hedgehog perched on his shoulders. "The Iblis triggers must die!"

"Get Elise out of here!" Rock yelled to the Freedom Fighters and his siblings as he and Sonic moved to engage their opponents. Elise felt Rotor move with the others to remove her from the scene, only for the way to be blocked by that man in one of his machines.

"Going somewhere?" the madman taunted. "You didn't think I hadn't noticed, did you?" (28)

"Eggman!" the Freedom Fighters took up battle stances.

"If you really want to know, you should go find him yourself. But here's a hint... It's all linked to the Soleanna disaster 10 years ago."

Bass scowled as the words rang through his head again. Eggman clearly knew more than he was telling anyone, or was ever going to be willing to tell, and from the way Shadow had reacted he wasn't at all surprised.

The scowl deepened as he saw the newcomers face off against Sonic and the Mega-twerp. He and Shadow might not be in the market to off their rivals anymore, but that didn't mean the job was open to anyone else!

"It's time to end this!" Quint yelled as he and his partner prepared to fight Sonic and Rock, ignoring the other confrontation, only for a pair of black figures to interpose themselves.

"Mephiles?" Quint uttered in confusion. "and... are you Bass?"

"I am," the black armored boy grinned.

"And I am Shadow," the black hedgehog next to him huffed. "Shadow the Hedgehog. We will be your opponents."

"Yo, Mega-twerp!" Bass called to Rock. "We got these losers!"

Rock and Sonic nodded knowingly before breaking away to go after Eggman.

Dr. Eggman cursed to himself. Those pesky Freedom Fighters and the siblings of that loathsome Mega Man had managed to get past him, but he was slowly catching up. Yes, then he'd have his prize, the princess of Soleann–

An impact rocked his craft, causing him to look back and see Sonic and Mega Man closing in at high speed.

"I don't have time for this..." he growled and punched in a few commands. "Egg Genesis! Crush them all!"

"So what's your beef with the Mega-twerp anyway?" Bass glared down his green-armored opponent as Shadow squared off against the silver hedgehog.

"You use a derogatory term to describe the Iblis trigger," the unknown robot replied, "but the facts betray you brother."

Bass blinked, and widened his eyes as his opponent raised the blue shades in his helmet to reveal a face identical to the Mega-twerp's.

"The f–?" Bass blurted in shock.

"My name is Quint," the Mega-twerp look-alike explained as he lowered the blue shades back into place. "Dr. Wily, our father, created me during his travels to the future to destroy Iblis. I was constructed based on the plans from which were made his most tenacious foes. From the Mega Man I was granted problem solving abilities, from the Mega Woman I was given an affinity for ruthless cleansing, from the Proto Man I was gifted a suite of military tactical analyzers. And of course my battle routines and combat programming are based on your own, brother. With an arm cannon, a support unit, and a copy chip of my own I was pieced together from future technology and the best traits of all of the legendary robot heroes of this era."

"Sounds impressive," Bass got himself under control and called Treble in for the first time since this incident began. "But can you do this? Treble! Super Adaptor!"

"Sakugarne!" Quint roared himself. "Super Adaptor!"

Both robots joined with their support units, but as Bass flexed the wings of his, he blinked at the form Quint's took. A streamlined jetpack with metal wing-fins wasn't that odd, but the asymmetrical armor beefing out Quint's left fist to a few times its previous size was. It made him look like...

"Sakugarne's super adaptor was given the data of another legendary robot hero of your era," Quint brandished the oversized fist as it began to glow with energy. "Duo's."

"You talk big!" Bass challenged and charged at his opponent, arm cannon blazing. "Let's see if you can back it up!"

"As you wish!" Quint charged as well, rearing his glowing fist back to strike.

"Things have been going differently this time," Silver observed as he and Shadow took the duel as an opportunity to talk. The blows would look real enough to an observer, but they knew the other wasn't giving it everything they had. "Is it because of our visitors?"

"More or less," Shadow replied calmly as he dodged some telekinetically thrown crates. He tended to indulge Silver. The time traveler tended to Awaken in the middle of events with little-to-no ability to plan alternatives, leading to more than a few epic gaffes when the plans of other loopers derailed what he'd been expecting. "We haven't been sticking religiously to the script, but most of the changes are due to Rock and his friends. From what I hear, they declined foreknowledge in favor of reacting to events as they happened."

"Probably for the best," Silver nodded. "You never know how your own presence changes things in someone else's Loo–"

The conversation was cut off by an explosion of force off to the side and both hedgehogs looked to see the form of Bass in his super adaptor armor crashing into a cliff face and being embedded a few feet in.

"Is your partner...?" Shadow left the question hanging as Bass extracted himself and re-engaged Quint. (29)

"Nope," Silver shook his head. "Not Awake or enhanced by anyone who was to my knowledge."

"Impressive," Shadow allowed. "Anyway, how do you want to play forming the rift? We'll need both of them since Mephiles recognized Bass when he was released."

"Hmm..." Silver pondered for a moment. "How about..."

"He's still coming," Blues observed as more robots showed up in the wake of Egg Genesis before turning to Sonic and his brother. "You two get the princess to safety. We'll hold him off."

"Right," Sonic shot the red raider a thumbs up as he picked Elise up in his arms.

"We should be able to lose him in the jungle," Rock observed.

Bass and Quint stood a few paces apart, glaring at each other and calculating their next moves when Silver was flung through the space between them. In the direction he'd come from stood Shadow, holding a Chaos Emerald.

"Don't bother getting up," Shadow sneered. "With a Chaos Emerald I can control time and space. You have no hope."

"We won't give up!" Silver snarled as he struggled to his feet and brought out an emerald of his own. "It all depends on us! We can't lose... Not when we're so close!"

Silver charged at Shadow who responded in kind.

"Chronos..." Silver gathered power through his emerald.

"Chaos..." Shadow did the same.

"CONTROL!" they both met in the space between their partners and released their power at the same time, throwing both back and creating a space-time rift in the space between the four figures.

"Heh..." Bass grunted as he considered Silver. "Not bad. It's not everyone who can pull that trick."

"We won't let anyone get in our way!" Quint glared as he moved to stand with Silver.

"We'll change the past and save the world!" the time displaced hedgehog finished.

"Mephiles isn't trying to help you create a better future..." Shadow snorted derisively. "He's trying to eliminate the past you want to save."

Bass considered the expressions of shock and came to a conclusion. "We're all being played here it seems. No one in this time or the future is going to give us a straight answer. The only place we're gonna get that..."

Shadow nodded as Bass looked pointedly at the shimmering time portal. "...is ten years in the past. If you want the truth, follow us."

With that, Shadow jumped through the portal, followed shortly by Bass. After a moment to consider, Silver and Quint followed them.

Elise marveled at the sight of the flowers blooming around the lake. As hard as these events had been, they had also been strangely... liberating. She'd felt stifled as a princess before, unable to change things. But now... even though she'd done very little, she felt more capable than she ever had. She...

She didn't want this to end.

"Become a strong queen, my daughter. One who doesn't cry, no matter what happens."

But, as she looked towards her heroes, both waiting patiently, she knew it had to. And soon.

Four figures emerged from a portal in a long metal hallway and looked around. However, any thoughts or questions were interrupted as a massive explosion shook the facility. Exchanging a glance, the four raced towards the source of the blast.

Arriving, they saw a devastated lab with several scientists lying unconscious or dead through the broken observation windows. Leaping down, the four began to examine the scientists for any who were alive and conscious enough to offer an explanation.

Bass went to check on one man where he sensed the strongest lifesign, only to get no response when he shook the man. The search for answers cut off as all four were distracted by a glowing object, an orb that glowed as bright as the sun, in the center of the lab as the smoke cleared.

"Is that...?" Silver began as the sun-bright orb dimmed and cracked in half. One half fell to the pedestal below and became a shadowy ooze while the rest remained floating and took on the angry glow of molten lava.

"Iblis!" Quint hissed at the fiery portion as he put the pieces together.

"And that black shadow is the original Mephiles," Shadow finished as the two pieces began to gain coherence enough to individually move towards the room's exits, each heading towards a different one.

"They're escaping!" Quint cursed.

"We'll go after Mephiles," Bass's tone wasn't one for argument.

"And we've got Iblis," Silver nodded as he and Quint went after the fiery entity.

"W-wait," the groan of the man Bass had checked stopped he and Shadow. Bass idly noted a girl that had previously been hidden by his form, shielded from the blast. "Seal it with this..."

The man held out an ornate object, one identical to what Mephiles had been trapped in. Bass couldn't quite suppress a smirk at the utter irony of the situation.

In what Bass considered an amusing twist, Mephiles had tried to possess him, only to find out that his prior tolerance for Slur's 'evil energy' allowed him to not only resist control, but also keep Mephiles from escaping while Shadow sealed his form.

"Who... who are... you? Why would... one touched by... Slur... oppose... me...?" Mephiles gasped out as Shadow began the sealing process.

"I'm Bass Wily," the robot grinned victoriously as Mephiles's shadowy form began to be sucked into the ornate scepter the two had been given.

"And I'm Shadow. Shadow the Hedgehog," Shadow finished.

"I will... remember you both..." Mephiles promised as it was sucked into the scepter. "Your deaths... will be... certain!"

Quint had long ago copied the psychokinetic abilities of his friend Silver, and more recently the pyrokinetic powers of their new friend Blaze, using the biometric scan upgrade to the Copy Chip Dr. Wily had installed in him. However, since they were usually alongside him in battle he generally found using those abilities redundant.

But for the purpose of holding fast the fiery proto-form of Iblis, he quite eagerly made an exception. The problem... the problem was that holding Iblis seemed the only thing they could do, and neither of them possessed infinite reserves.

The two spotted movement at the same time, and turned to behold one of the injured scientists from earlier carrying an unconscious young girl in his arms.

"What are you doing here?" Quint demanded. "It's not safe!"

"I have my duty..." the man wheezed with determination and began to limp towards the altar Iblis's form was immobilized over. "This Living Flame has been entrusted to the royal family. The Flames of Disaster will awaken if nothing is done! That... must not happen."

The man Quint was now deducing to be the late Duke of Soleanna, which would likely make the girl in his arms Elise, carefully placed his apparent daughter on the altar. He then brought out a Chaos Emerald from within his robes and began to gather power with it.

"Eternal Sun!" the man declared with strength his injured body did not truly possess. "The Living Flame that has been entrusted to the royal family! Fall into slumber with a royal soul!"

As Quint and Silver watched, the flaming form of Iblis was sucked into the gem and then transferred into the girl on the altar. As the last traces of it vanished, the two beings from the future released their psychokinetic fields. Then the strength the man had shown left him and he stumbled. He struggled to the girl and picked her up, using what had to be the last of his strength to place her in Quint's arms.

"I'm sorry..." the man gasped, "but... can you take her to a safe place?"

"We can," Quint nodded.

"That's a good girl, Elise," the weakening man said tenderly, confirming Quint's suspicions, "Remember, be brave. Don't cry, no matter what happens. Otherwise your tears will call forth the flames inside you... Become a strong queen, my daughter. One who doesn't cry, no matter what happens. And... Live... happily..."

And with that, what little life the man had finally left him.

Shadow and Bass walked out of the complex with the scepter to see Silver and Quint standing outside, the latter holding the girl from before.

"Were you successful?" Quint asked.

"Yes," Bass nodded before shooting his partner a smirk. "Shadow has sealed the 'Shadows'."

"The 'Flames' have likewise been sealed," Silver told them as Quint placed the girl on the ground and propped her unconscious form net to a tree.

Shadow then placed the darkly glowing scepter on the ground nearby.

"You're just going to leave it?" Quint asked confused.

"Why not?" Bass shrugged. "It's not like we don't know what happens to it."

"Indeed," Shadow agreed as he brought out his Chaos Emerald in preparation for creating a portal to the time ten years hence.

"Of course," Silver nodded as he brought his own out.

"Chaos..."

"Chronos..."

"CONTROL!"

The four all leapt through the portal, but the duo of Silver and Quint took a moment to look at the sleeping girl before they did.

Rock breathed a sigh of relief. Elise was finally safe back at the palace and now–

His musings were cut short as he saw the latest model of Egg Carrier begin to enter the city's airspace.

"Princess Elise, ruler of Soleanna..." the voice of Dr. Eggman boomed forth. "By refusing to negotiate with me, you have forced me to take drastic actions. [Amy is seen in the crowd witnessing the Egg Carrier before turning to run away.] Meet me at the specified point alone 4 o'clock today. Failure to do so on time, Will result in my leveling of this city so that nothing but ashes remain!"

"So..." Rock turned to the hedgehog next to him with more calm than he felt, "this is what Eggman does when he can neither get nor hold on to Elise?"

"Every time," Sonic nodded.

"..." Rock stared back up at the craft before whistling for Rush and activating his super adaptor in the next moment, cocking his Mega Buster when the process was finished. "I'm going to go register a complaint with the doctor. You want to come with?"

"I wouldn't miss that for anything," Sonic smirked.

Elise stared up at the massive battleship hovering over her city. She had no doubt that man ... Eggman... would do exactly what he promised. There was only one course of action to take.

"Well, look who's back," Rouge huffed as Shadow and Bass hopped out of the time portal that appeared. "Did you find what you were looking for?"

"Almost," Shadow replied. "We need you to access GUN's database. Specifically, find out what materials the Scepter of Darkness was made from."

"That all?" Rouge smirked and brought out an object from behind her back. One that looked identical to the scepter they'd just used in the past. "Done and done."

Bass grinned. "I knew we kept you around for a reason."

Blaze looked up as the time portal formed and both Silver and Quint emerged. She had, as she often did, elected to stay out of the direct confrontation between Silver and Sonic and instead watch from the sidelines as her friends went back in time to when Iblis and Mephiles first split apart.

"You're back," she observed. "What did you discover?"

"Sonic and Mega Man... are not the Iblis triggers," Quint admitted.

"I see," Blaze kept her face carefully neutral rather than smirking like she wanted.

"What is going on?" Silver asked as the noise of the townsfolk began to increase.

"The word's been spreading fast," Blaze informed them. "The princess turned herself over to Eggman after he threatened the city."

"What?!" Quint's alarmed exclamation cut off Blaze before she could say she was seeking allies for a rescue mission. "What if... what if Dr. Eggman is planning to release Iblis?"

"Which way did Eggman head?" Silver asked her. Blaze pointed and got a nod from her friend. "Sonic and Mega Man would surely be following. I think I know where we can intercept them."

As he rode on Rock's back up to Eggman's flying battleship, Sonic did his best to lighten the mood. Unfortunately, all of his attempts fell flat as the robot was currently as talkative as, well, a rock.

"Good thing all of Eggman's robots are weak to lemons, right?" the hedgehog attempted.

...Nothing. This was worse than he thought. The whole lemon shooter thing hadn't yet failed to get a response out of his 'big bro'.

Eggman... He was insane. He wanted to use Solaris to rule over time, clearly having no idea what kind of damage he'd really do. She wondered if he even cared.

Sonic jumped off of Rock's back as the robot set down on the deck of the Egg Carrier and began stretching as Rock disengaged from Rush and sent the robo-pooch away.

"Alright," Sonic grinned as Eggman's defenses trained on the duo and prepared to open fire. "Let's get this p–"

A spread of Metal Blades from Rock slicing those defenses to ribbons cut off the boast.

Sonic turned to look at Rock questioningly and did not like the expression on his friend's face. For the first time he could remember; baseline crossover, tandem run, or the current fused Loop; Rock actually looked the part of a robot.

The expression didn't deviate the slightest bit as the blue bomber strode forth at a leisurely pace and used his vast array of Master Weapons to cut down Eggman's defenses and sentries as fast as they appeared. Without hesitation, without emotion.

And without mercy.

Roll was in the middle of a long internal bout of swearing. After everything they'd gone through to rescue Princess Elise, after all the work they'd done fixing up Soleanna after Dr. Eggman's initial attack and the subsequent skirmishes, the guy just swoops in and holds the entire city hostage if Elise didn't give herself up.

And for some reason no one could seem to raise her brother or Sonic, which left her and the Freedom Fighters, including Tails and Amy, to race after the latest model of Egg Carrier in the hopes of getting her back before Eggman completed his dastardly plans.

Roll and the others skidded to a halt as a large number of Eggman's robots landed in front of her. Great. Just great. She didn't have time for–

Her annoyance cut off as the robots were grasped in a psychokinetic field before being blasted by a massive burst of plasma energy. Silver and Quint landed before them, the latter shouldering Sakugarne as it transformed back from super cannon mode. The feline pyrokinetic she recognized as Blaze followed shortly behind.

" You ..." she spat at Quint. "Looking for another shot at my brother?"

"...No," Quint admitted reluctantly before shooting a glance at Silver under his blue shades that few would have been able to spot. "Not anymore. Circumstances have... changed."

Silver stepped forward and continued for his partner. "We need to rescue the princess as quickly as possible."

"Then stop talking and start running," Roll only glared at the two for an instant before she resumed pursuit of the Egg Carrier.

"Shadow... Even if you believe everyone in the world will be against you. Know that I'll always remain by your side. Remember that."

"...You know, I've been meaning to ask: Why do you always say that?"

"Because I always mean it you doof!"

Bass filed away that little tidbit in the back of his mind. Rouge may have liked to tease Shadow frequently and was certainly the most sentimental of the group, but Bass couldn't recall her saying anything so... touchy-feely before.

'Eh, whatever,' Bass shrugged mentally as the full Team Dark headed for the ruins in pursuit of their quarry. 'Mephiles first, my teammates' collective oddities after.'

Elise waited patiently. Every time Eggman got distracted enough to look away from her, she inched over to the control panels. She didn't quite know how it all worked, but she knew enough from her father's work that operating something like this without precise care tended to cause all sorts of problems. And she wanted to cause as many as possible as quickly as she could, even if it meant crashing the ship with her on it.

Ironically, her plan to cause problems on the ship was interrupted when alarms started blaring incessantly and Eggman began to panic and scream that they were going to crash.

"No!" Tails yelled as explosions rocked the Egg Carrier and the craft began to lose altitude, still too far for any of those on the ground to catch up to it before it impacted. "Elise!"

"Damnit all!" Quint swore. "If the princess dies in that crash...!"

"I know..." Silver lamented, even as he privately wondered where Sonic was right then. If he'd gone along with events like Silver had silently requested, he should have been right here chasing after the Egg Carrier with the others. "We could use Chronos Control to send someone back in time to get on the ship before it takes off, but without a second Emerald..."

Silver could probably use the Time Stones in his subspace pocket instead, but... Well, every so often the energy of Solaris surrounding these events reacted badly if he tried. Best not to risk it if he didn't have to.

"...Why is this happening?" Eggman railed at his own craft as it continued to report system failure after system failure. "Noooooo!"

Elise found she was wondering that as well when the door to the control room gave a screeching protest as it was peeled back by a pair of armored hands. Behind the door stood her heroes.

"Sonic!" she cried with relief as she ran to them. "Rock!"

"It's over Dr. Eggman," Rock leveled a blank glare at the man as Sonic motioned Elise behind them.

The doctor stamped his foot like a child throwing a tantrum before reaching over to pull a lever on the control panel. "I'm not finished yet!"

The front of the control room broke away from the rest of the craft, leaving the heroes and Elise behind, and reformed into the latest version of the doctor's personal craft. A flash of red light and a robot dog stood with them as well.

"Rush, protect Elise," Rock ordered.

"We've got the Eggman," Sonic flashed her one of his cocky grins.

"You two have been thorns in my side for too long!" Eggman sneered as his personal craft docked with another mecha, forming the bottom jaw of a dragon-like beast. "This time, I'll finish you once and for all with my Egg Wyvern!"

Rock simply jumped out of the devastated control room, Sonic following right behind.

"I finally got a lock on my brother!" Mega Woman reported. "He's still not responding to his comm, but I've got a fix on his position! He's aboard Eggman's vessel!"

"I see him," Quint confirmed as flashes of digital light could be seen on his blue shades. "He and Sonic are fighting Dr. Eggman."

"That's good," Blaze nodded. "If they're already there, then Elise is in good hands. They won't fail."

"Agreed," Quint nodded.

"We..." Silver turned to the others. "We should head back to our own time now. We just need to find a second Chaos Emerald and–"

"Did someone order a Chaos Emerald?" the voice of Knuckles cut in as the echidna glided down to meet the group, the form of Proto Man on an Extreme Gear, which turned into Beat as he jumped off, right behind him.

"We found this in Eggman's hideout when we went to trash the place," the echidna nodded to where Blues was holding the red emerald. (30) "If you need it, you're welcome to it."

"Thank you," Silver accepted the emerald and held it up with the white emerald he already had. "Chronos Control!"

With that, a portal back to the future opened up for the trio of Silver, Blaze, and Quint.

"Mephiles!" Shadow yelled as Team Dark entered the chamber to see the crystalline facsimile of the ultimate lifeform hovering above.

"I was expecting you sooner," the darkly glowing form turned around slowly to show that he had a Chaos Emerald in his possession. "As you must know, you're already too late. But there's still time for you to change your mind. Join me, Shadow, Bass. Let us teach this world a lesson and rewrite the future."

"Oh, piss off!" Bass derided the dark entity. (31)

"What?" Mephiles the Dark looked taken aback by the declaration.

"Like you'd ever be willing to work with anyone!" Bass accused. "I know your type! You don't want to rule or get revenge, you just want to wipe out everything until you're all that's left!"

"Such a pity," Mephiles levitated the Chaos Emerald into the air over his head where it began to flare with power. "Truly a shame that you wish to go against me!"

All of Team Dark was flung back by the wave of force, but all remained on their feet.

"Drown in darkness!" Mephiles yelled before diving into the floor and becoming a massive puddle of shadow that spread across the entire surface.

And then the giant shadow beasts began to claw their way out of the massive oozing puddle of darkness that was Mephiles.

"Are you ready, Silver?" Quint asked as the three arrived in their desolate future.

"Yes," the hedgehog nodded. "I know what to do. Today, we will defeat Iblis once and for all!"

"Then we'd best hurry," Blaze smiled at the two. "I can already sense his flames rising again."

Sonic was prepared for a typical knock-down drag-out with Eggman's toys, but just like with the rest of the ship Rock seemed to have other ideas. He went in with Mega Buster blazing, switching between Master Weapons with every couple of shots, probing for a weakness.

Eggman used the laser spread to try and take back control of the fight, only for Rock to use the Mirror Buster to send them all right back.

The mad scientist then tried to swoop in close, only for both heroes to jump on and grab the metal horn. Rock slashed away at the canopy with some of his melee weapons while Sonic threw his weight on the horn to mess with the guidance and ram the craft into the falling battleship. And as they jumped off, Rock peppered the Egg Wyvern's back with Crash Bombs.

As they landed on another perch, Eggman tried to take aim with missiles from the machine's tail, only for Rock to hit them first with a spread of Dive Missiles, causing them to detonate early and damage the craft. Rock then followed up by ripping a large piece of the hull off with the Strong Arm and simply throwing it at the war machine. As Eggman tried to shake off the unexpected impact, Rock unleashed the Astro Crush.

One of the solid light meteors that rained down knocked the canopy clean off and Rock wasted no time leaping out towards the craft. A pair of Metal Blades took care of the laser guns mounted on the front and Rock landed right in the cockpit and dashed towards Eggman, grabbing his collar, lifting him bodily into the air, and slamming him into the metal of his own craft.

"N-now just hold on a moment...!" Eggman pleaded. "I-I'm sure we can talk this out..."

"Talk, Eggman?" Rock's eyes narrowed dangerously. "Is that what you wanted to do when you flew a warship over the city and threatened to burn it and everyone in it to ash?"

"A m-m-misunderstanding...!" Eggman chuckled weakly.

"No Eggman," Rock cut off anything further, "I understand perfectly. You want to use violence to get your way? You want to bring overwhelming firepower to the table to get what you want? You want to level armies that stand against you without mercy? You want to play for keeps? Just remember:"

At this, Rock brought Eggman's face to inches from his own and glared with all the warmth of absolute zero as the Egg Wyvern began to fall apart around them.

" So. Can. I. "

(32)

Sonic looked at where Rock appeared to be a moment away from murdering Eggman (who appeared to be a moment away from wetting himself), then at the disintegrating battleship around them, and made a decision. Racing back to where they'd left Elise and Rush, he let loose a sharp whistle that got the dog's attention.

"Yo Rush!" he yelled as he skidded to a halt. "Elise and I need a board buddy! We gotta split pronto!"

Rush barked excitedly before shifting to his Extreme Gear form to an amazed look from Elise.

"What is...?" the princess stared at the device that had previously been a robotic canine.

"It's an Extreme Gear," Sonic grinned as he picked Elise up in one arm and the board in the other. "You worried?"

"Don't waste time worrying that you could use doing, right?" Elise smiled at him. "So let's do this!"

"That's the spirit!" Sonic backed up to get as much runway as he could. "Hold on tight now!"

Elise did as instructed, and only barely kept her grip as Sonic raced for the open air, threw the board out in front of him, landed with Elise right behind him, and accelerated faster than the princess had ever thought possible.

"Th-this is amazing!" she marveled as the wind whipped around them.

"Isn't it though?" Sonic grinned back at her and angled towards where Rock was still staring down the doctor. "Yo Rock! Time to blow this joint!"

"Y-you're just going to leave me?!" Eggman's eyes bulged out as Rock released him and stepped towards the edge of the cockpit, whose hover engines were starting to sputter ominously.

"Is the parachute you're wearing operable?" the robot glared at the man.

"W-w-well... yes... I suppose..." Eggman gulped.

"Then happy landings," Rock waved as he activated the Ray Glide and jumped after Sonic and Elise.

With all of Team Dark working together, Mephiles's giant shadow beasts went down as fast as he could summon them. However, Mephiles himself proved elusive until Shadow once again used the Chaos Boost to force him out into the open.

Attempting to surround and blast them with clones proved fruitless as Bass and Omega were simply faster on the draw, and soon enough Mephiles was retreating to the top of the chamber to gather all his power for one final blast while annoying them with cheap after-images. But the semi-solid after images proved Mephiles's undoing as Shadow used them as stepping stones to climb after the shadowy being and deliver the final blow.

"No..." Mephiles tried to deny reality as his crystalline form began to lose form and melt into the shadowy goo he was originally. "I am... forever... I am... invincible..."

"Yeah," Bass scoffed as he and Shadow stepped forward with the new Scepter of Darkness and began the sealing process, "you keep telling yourself that."

Mephiles was sucked up into the scepter and for a moment it looked like everything would be fine, but then the dark glow dimmed, cracks formed in the scepter, and with a blinding flash Mephiles broke free.

"Fools," the resulting swirling maelstrom of shadow taunted. "The 'I' of now has absorbed your power through our convergences in the past. What may have worked 10 years ago, no longer does!"

As Mephiles resolved back into his crystalline hedgehog form, a burst of power knocked all of Team Dark head over heals. Twin flashes of light resolved into a pair of Chaos Emeralds, the one Mephiles had held and the one previously in Team Dark's possession, rotating around each other in an infinity pattern.

"You must realize now that you cannot hope to stop me with your limited power," Mephiles continued as a sea of clones appeared.

"I said it before," Bass grunted as he and the rest of Team Dark got to their feet while a flash of light heralded Treble teleporting in, "and I'll say it again:"

Treble jumped up, his body twisting and reforming around Bass to form the super adaptor armor as Shadow unlocked his inhibitor rings and unleashed a wave of power that wrapped around all the members of Team Dark. And as one, Team Dark finished Bass's proclamation.

" Piss. Off. "

Silver, Blaze, and Quint skidded to a halt before the caldera as the full behemoth form of Iblis rose up out of it and roared its fury.

"All right Iblis!" Quint declared dramatically.

"This time, we finally stop you!" Silver finished.

The gigantic beast simply roared at them again, spewing flames from all over its body.

"I'll distract him from the air, Silver!" Quint yelled as he ordered Sakugarne to transform into its Jet adaptor mode and took off.

Silver nodded as the lumbering form of Iblis began advancing on him and began grabbing boulder-sized stones with his psychokinesis and lobbing them at the gargantuan foe. Blaze stood back and targeted incoming volleys from Iblis with her pyrokinesis so they wouldn't his Sliver. For almost a minute this went on as Iblis strode towards Silver and Blaze, as well as the edge of the caldera, finally reaching the foothold and grasping it with both hands as it leaned down to roar in its opponents faces, even as Quint continued to pepper the beast with plasma fire.

"Now Silver!" Blaze yelled.

Silver wasted no time in flinging himself through the air at Iblis's head with his telekinesis, gathering his strength as he went. He landed on the behemoth's head and poured everything he had into what passed for the monster's mind. As the beast reared back in agony, Quint jumped off of his support unit.

"Sakugarne! Super adaptor!" he yelled, and once more joined with the mechanized weapon to become the Duo-like warrior. The petpack on his back flared to life and Quint gathered energy in his massive armored fist as he streaked towards the off-balance Iblis.

"Finish it!" Silver and Blaze both yelled as Quint punched the lava beast at full speed, blowing straight through its head and out the other side.

The form of Iblis groaned loudly as it crashed into the caldera with an earth-shaking thud while Quint flew back to Silver and Blaze, his armor glowing slightly with heat, but otherwise unharmed.

As he landed, a massive pillar of flame rose up and formed into a swirling spherical inferno. The true energy form of Iblis.

"Now to seal you!" Silver declared as he took out the Chaos Emeralds.

"Wait," Blaze told him. "Iblis is living flame. It won't accept you as a vessel. Let me. The flame is part of my soul. My spirit. Seal Iblis within me and then send us both to another dimension. One with powers that can deal with a being of living flame with ease."

"But Blaze..."

Silver was cut off as Blaze grabbed the emeralds from him and used their power to draw the fiery form of Iblis into herself within moments.

"You are so naive, Silver. I've always liked that about you. But sacrifice is part of life. You'll never get anything if you aren't willing to give something up in return," Blaze smiled at her psychokinetic friend before turning to the other. "And Quint, the unexpected hero with the ruthless charm. Remember: When one is willing to destroy in order to secure a better future, one should not be surprised if destruction is all that future holds."

"I... understand..." Quint replied. "And thank you... my friend."

"Now Silver!" Blaze ordered the hedgehog.

"But... why do you have to go?" Silver gave her a searching look. And for a moment, Quint thought he heard an 'always' in that sentence. (33)

"Oh, Silver," Blaze smiled. "I'm from another dimension in the first place and as much fun as I've had with you two, it's high time I went home. Don't worry about us. We have a power back home like the Chaos Emeralds, but aligned to flame. Iblis will not trouble us."

Silver was silent for a long moment before he nodded, accepted the emeralds from Blaze, and opened the portal. With a flash of light, Blaze was gone and the dark clouds of ash that had hung over the world for as long as any living in that time could remember began to clear.

Elise hung on tight as the... Extreme Gear cut through the air in and around the debris of the exploding ship at Sonic's direction as they all headed for the cliff. Off to the side, she could see Rock gliding along, just keeping pace with them and couldn't suppress the whoop of joy that bubbled up in her throat.

It was close, but the three of them just barely cleared the top of the cliff as the ship impacted below and all three of them went tumbling across the grass.

Elise found herself laughing, drunk on the adrenaline of the moment, before she realized that her laughter was being echoed from both sides. Turning her head, she met the kind eyes of Rock, so at odds with the fierce expression he'd turned on Eggman. He looked better this way in her opinion.

"You look happy," he smiled at her.

"I am," she replied.

"That's good."

Quint stared off into the distance as something niggled at his processor. Despite misadventures through time, he, Silver, and the now absent Blaze had finally defeated the Flames of Disaster known as Iblis once and for all. The future, for the first time since long before he had been constructed, actually seemed promising.

So why did he feel like he was missing something?

"To rewrite your future, the past must be changed."

"Don't you dare try and kill my brother!"

"Who are these Iblis triggers? Why would they act to destroy the world?"

"You were after Sonic and Mega Man?!"

"You must eliminate the individuals who awakened Iblis."

"Eez zis some kind of joke? Zose two are ze last in ze world who would do such a think!"

"Why do the reasons matter? Unless you complete your task, your future will remain the same... forever."

"Right or wrong matters little. If we do nothing, then nothing will change."

"Mephiles isn't trying to help you create a better future... He's trying to eliminate the past you want to save."

"It's not like we don't know what happens to it."

"You need to find the being originally responsible for this catastrophe."

"I knew you'd return! You had to!"

"Don't cry, no matter what happens. Otherwise your tears will call forth the flames inside you..."

"You must destroy the Iblis triggers."

"Remember: When one is willing to destroy in order to secure a better future, one should not be surprised if destruction is all that future holds."

Behind his blue shades, Quint's eyes widened in alarm.

"Quint?" Silver asked, sensing his friend's sudden distress.

"We have to go back," Quint said. "It's not over... I know what Mephiles is planning... We have to go back and stop it."

Silver blinked, but took out the Chaos Emeralds he still had and held out one in each hand. After making sure Sakugarne was secured to his back, Quint reached out and covered the emeralds with his own hands.

"CHRONOS..." the two proclaimed together as they gathered power, "CONTROL!"

Roll, Blues, Knuckles, and the Freedom Fighters; Sally, Tails, Bunnie, Antoine, Rotor, and Amy; stood at the same cliff where Silver, Quint, and Blaze had left them when Team Dark approached.

"I still can't believe that asshole got away," Bass grumbled.

"Easy come, easy go," Rouge waved off the robot's irritation. "At least we recovered the yellow and green emeralds."

"Who?" Blues's expression suggested a raised eyebrow behind his shades.

"Someone named Mephiles the Dark," Shadow began.

"Yeah," Bass huffed, "poser hid out in a sea of clones of himself so we all opened an epic can of whoopass on them, only to find out the original did a runner."

"Huh," Rotor rubbed his chin thoughtfully, "I wonder where he we–"

The opening of a portal cut off Rotor's question as Quint and Silver dropped into the middle of the group.

"Quint? Silver?" Roll blinked in confusion. "I thought you went back t–"

"No time!" Quint yelled. "Where are Sonic and Mega Man?!"

"They just finished tearing Eggman a new one," Amy answered with confusion. "Why?"

"Mephiles was telling the truth!" Quint yelled, looking as close to a panic attack as many of them had ever seen a robot get. "Sonic and Mega Man really are the Iblis trig–oof!" (34)

Roll growled from where she'd knocked Quint to the ground. "I thought you were over that idiocy already!"

"You don't understand!" Quint yelled. "Iblis is sealed in Elise! Those two are now Elise's treasured heroes! The seal can only be broken by sadness!"

Roll blinked as a sinking feeling hit her.

"It's not their actions that will release Iblis! It's their deaths !"

Out in the jungle, Mephiles stared into the depths of the purple Chaos Emerald he held. Had his face possessed the ability, he would have smiled.

"That was so amazing! The wind, the freedom, flying without a care in the world," Elise sighed as she walked along with her heroes back towards Soleanna. The red-armored dog called Rush, who had been the 'Extreme Gear' Sonic had flown her out on, bounded about as playfully as a real animal. Suddenly, Elise turned to Sonic and Rock. "I want to learn how to do that!"

Sonic blinked at the declaration, but Rock simply smiled. "Why not? I think we can give you a few lessons once we get back to Soleanna."

"Really?" Elise looked excited at the prospect.

"Sure!" Rock agreed. "Let me just... that's odd. I've got multiple incomings, and fast. Roll, Blues, Bass..." Rock put a hand over his eyes and peered up into the sky where multiple dots were coming towards them fast. Zooming in, he identified... "That... looks like almost all of our friends and rivals. And I don't think this is a celebration party..."

"What?" Elise frowned. "You beat Eggman, right? What could still be wrong?"

Between the two groups, the purple Chaos Emerald rose up and formed a barrier that halted their friends and rivals from getting any closer. Rock almost missed the build-up of energy that followed shortly, especially since it was coming from behind him rather than the front. A moment before the freezing effect of Chaos Control took place, Rock called up and activated the Time Stopper even as he turned around to watch a crystalline hedgehog that looked suspiciously like Shadow finish rising up out of the ground and take aim at both himself and Sonic.

Rock didn't have time to think, he simply acted. Throwing himself to the side, he knocked the immobilized Sonic out of the path of the blast meant for him. Unfortunately, this put him directly in the blast instead.

The world seemed to freeze in place as all present took in the sight of Mega Man held in midair by one of two beams of energy before the beams vanished and he was allowed to fall to the ground.

"Sonic? Rock?" Elise's voice trembled as she turned to look at her heroes lying on the ground.

"Ow..." Sonic groaned as he rolled over. "What was that for, bro?"

The menacing laugh of the crystalline hedgehog, Mephiles, was his only answer.

"Bro? ...Rock?"

"Rock!" the voice of Roll cried as she raced past the now downed barrier towards her brother.

"Rock?" Elise moved to roll the blue robot over, and gasped in horror at the gaping hole in his mechanical torso. At the sight, her eyes welled with tears. "NOOOOO!"

And with that cry of anguish, the world ended.

"Finally, the seal is broken! At long last, I'll be able to join with you! Iblis! Now, Chaos Emerald! It's time for the final curtain call!"

Those words and an advancing wall of light were all anyone could remember as they came to.

"What is this place?" Amy asked as she opened her eyes to see what looked like pieces of Soleanna floating in a shadowy void lit only by a sun-bright light directly overhead.

"What the hell did Mephiles just do?!" Bass roared as he looked around him. "Show yourself asshole!"

"The Chaos Emeralds!" the voice of Silver exclaimed. "They're gone!"

"Oh, mah stars!" Bunnie looked around. "What all just happened?"

"The princess shed tears and released Iblis," Quint spoke morosely.

"And Mephiles joined with him," Shadow added.

"And became Solaris," Rouge finished just as a rectangular contraption with a bubble cockpit appeared in their midst.

"What in...?" Tails jumped.

"Scanning," Omega intoned. "Mystery craft matches specifications of prototype Time Skimmer which vanished from the G.U.N. facility with Dr. Wily some months prior."

"I was wondering where he went," Blues stated.

"Blasted temporal distortion springing up out of nowhere!" the doctor's voice could be heard swearing as the cockpit opened. (35)

"He's fine," Bass snorted as he turned to check on Treble who had transformed back from his Extreme Gear mode.

"Fine..." Sally mulled the word over. "No... Rock!"

As one, everyone recalled the events immediately prior to Mephiles joining with Iblis and turned towards the sight of Elise crying over Rock's immobile form. Sonic and Roll stood beside her looking shocked while Rush, along with Tango and Beat (having also turned back from Extreme Gear mode), nudged the robot expectantly.

"Rock!" Elise wailed. "Rock!"

"What in the world?" Dr. Wily exclaimed as he took the sight in.

"Some joker named Mephiles blasted Mega Man through the chest and then joined with a fire entity called Iblis..." Knuckles began.

"To form Solaris?!" Wily screeched. "You let Solaris be reborn?! You fools !"

"What does that mean?" Knuckles growled.

Ignoring the echidna, Wily stormed past all of them and marched up to Rock's prone form.

"Blast it all!" the doctor cursed before turning to glare at Rush. "Well?! What are you waiting for, mutt? Activate that super adaptor of yours and join with your master!"

Rush growled at Dr. Wily, Tango joining in with a loud hiss as well.

"Don't take that tone with me!" Wily yelled back. "Do you want to save Mega Man or not?!"

Rush growled some more, but obeyed, transformed, and joined with the downed robot.

"Better," Dr. Wily huffed as he examined the damaged hero, "but we're still running out of time. Without a properly equipped lab, he can't be repaired fast enough."

"The Chaos Emeralds," Sonic spoke up. "They can heal anything."

At that moment, the bright light overhead began making odd alien sounds.

"You had to let Solaris form," Wily growled.

"What is Solaris?" Quint asked. "You never gave me any data on this entity."

"I didn't?" Wily seemed surprised at the oversight. "Well, in that case, I suppose I should correct that now. From what I could deduce from ancient records, Solaris is a trans-dimensional entity of immense power. If not tightly controlled by someone of sufficient intellect, it would be able to consume all existing timelines until all that ever was collapsed into nothingness."

"How do we stop it, pops?" Bass folded his arms.

"Stop it?" Wily raised an eyebrow. "It is a creature that exists simultaneously in the past, present, and future. Stopping it in any one of those would mean nothing at all."

"You seem remarkably calm for someone who just declared things hopeless," Rouge observed.

"As if the lot of you don't make a hobby of proving such assumptions otherwise," Wily retorted.

"You're sure the emeralds can heal my brother?" Roll finally turned to ask Sonic who nodded firmly.

"Elise," Silver stated to the weeping princess. "You were the vessel that was used to seal Iblis."

"Indeed," Quint agreed as he joined his friend. "You should be able to use the gems' power to heal Mega Man."

Elise looked at the hedgehog and robot from the future for a moment before nodding firmly. "I'll... I'll do it!"

"Okay," Sally announced as she held up NICOLE who was scanning the shadowy void, "NICOLE's radar shows that the emeralds have been scattered across the surrounding area. Sonic and I will stay here to guard Mega Man and Elise while the rest of you pair off and search for the emeralds!"

"Right!" everyone else confirmed as one.

"Remember!" the voice of Dr. Wily came over the communicator, "the time-space rift we are in is unstable! Eventually it will collapse, so hurry!"

Knuckles and Blues noted the urgency of the mission as they fought their way through the hordes of lava and shadow beasts that infested the warped version of the valley where the old castle of Soleanna resided. In the distance they could see the crimson glow of the red Chaos Emerald.

Bunnie and Antoine couldn't help but smile as they blasted and slashed their way through their foes towards the blue Chaos Emerald. The world might be ending, they might be having to dodge deadly time-space rifts that would rip them apart on contact, and this might be the last way they'd pick to spend time at the beach (warped or not), but if nothing else they were together.

"Keep your head about you Sugah-Twan!" Bunnie yelled as she shot another flying thing out of the sky.

"But of course mai cherie, I am nothink if not ze 'Cool Man', no?" the coyote swordsman waggled his eyebrows at his wife as he cut down another shadow beast.

"Ah think yer more playboy than 'cool man' hon," Bunnie smirked at her husband.

"I would nevair suggest such a think!" Antoine feigned mock offense.

"Ah get it," Bunnie mock-pouted. "Y'all don't think I'm 'bunny' enough fer that kinda thing, eh?"

"Mah petite," Antoine leveled a desirous gaze at the cyborg lapine, "if we were not fightink for our lives, ze fate of ze world, or ze life of a friend, I would show you right here and now precisely how 'bunny' I find you, yes?"

"Well, now if Ah don't call that incentive to finish up fast!" Bunnie grinned as she began charging a powerful blast of energy.

"Then for life, for liberty, for love, I strike!" Antoine yelled as he slashed an entire group of beasts back into the ether from which they'd sprung.

"Don't let them push you into the rift!" Quint yelled as he used the oversized fist of his super adaptor form to punch another giant warrior out of the way. Not resting, he and Silver continued to fight their way through the warped version of the desert to the west of Soleanna and the surrounding mountains.

"I got it!" Silver yelled as he unleashed his psychokinesis on all of the surrounding foes and cleared the way for his friend. "Get the white Chaos Emerald!"

"You know," Rotor mused as he and Tails blasted their way through the twisted rendition of the jungle south of Soleanna's valley towards the cyan Chaos Emerald, "I think using the Tornado like this might be cheating the baseline challenge run rules."

"Eh, keeping things in subspace pockets is a gray area," Tails shrugged as he opened fire on another lava beast. "The manufacture, weapons, and modifications were all done this Loop."

"With Dr. Light adding suggestions your baseline self might not have thought of," Rotor clarified.

"He's not Awake, so it's not cheating!" Tails sing-songed.

Bass in super adaptor mode and Omega were taking their time fighting through the distorted volcano interior, gleefully obliterating everything in sight as they made their way to the green Chaos Emerald.

Roll thought the screwy rendition of Eggman's base in the snow-capped mountains north of Soleanna was really creepy as she and Amy fought their way towards the yellow Chaos Emerald.

Tango and Beat had been left behind to help guard Sonic and Sally guard Rock. The fighting had ultimately been light compared to those going after the Chaos Emeralds, but it hadn't been nonexistent.

NICOLE beeped and began speaking. "All teams have reported in that they have successfully located and secured the Chaos Emeralds. They will be returning shortly."

Shadow and Rouge stood before the purple Chaos Emerald amidst the misshapen and devastated cityscape from the future.

"Well, that's a wrap," Rouge smirked. "We do make a great team, right?"

"...What you said before," Shadow interrupted, "about always meaning it when you say you'll always remain by my side. Why?"

"Oh for the love of..." Rouge huffed in irritation. "You are so damn slow on the uptake!"

"What does that mean?!" Shadow glared.

Rouge pinched the bridge of her nose for a moment before responding. Instead of chewing her partner out, she grabbed him by the scruff around his neck and pulled him into a deep and intense kiss.

"There!" she said when they parted. "Does that answer your question?!"

"Yes..." Shadow blinked for a bit. "I just wonder... Why didn't you do that sooner?"

Rouge stared at Shadow incredulously for a moment before fuming. " Men !"

"So I guess a date is out of the question then?" Shadow smirked.

"Listen buster," Rouge poked a finger into the smirking hedgehog's chest, "if you expect to make up for being so damned infuriating for so damned long , it better be one hell of a date!"

"I was thinking we'd go and 'liberate' the ill-gotten gains of a few of the world's most notorious criminals," Shadow offered, still smirking. "Money, valuable artifacts," he went in for the kill, "jewelry..."

"Oh, and I suppose we'll have to give it all back to the rightful owners or something," Rouge snorted.

"Do I look like an altruist?" Shadow raised an eyebrow.

Rouge blinked for a moment. "Yeah, okay... It's a start." (36)

"Ready Elise?" Sonic asked as the last of the seven Chaos Emeralds was placed around the critically damaged Rock.

"Yes," the princess of Soleanna nodded from her kneeling position before closing her eyes and clasping her hands in prayer as she called upon the power inherited through the royal bloodline of Soleanna to invoke the Chaos Emeralds.

Everyone watched the tableau in silence for several moments before the princess began speaking.

"Oh Chaos Emeralds, gems of miracles. Please heed my call," Elise spoke and the emeralds began to glow brighter with power. "I wish to save this world. I wish to cleanse my father's sin. And, I wish for Mega Man to rise once again!" The emeralds began to rise into the air, with the body of Rock rising with them as Elise stood and walked towards the floating hero. "You and Sonic have given me so many things. Now it is my time to return the favor. I care not what happens to me. But please heed my voice. Rock... come back! To me... To us!"

Elise then placed a kiss on the crystal in the center of Rock's helmet and a flash of light obscured everything. When it died down, the golden armored form of Super Mega Man floated before everyone. He slowly drifted to the ground just in time to catch Elise as she collapsed from the strain of the immense power she had channeled.

"Thank you Elise," Super Mega Man smiled as the princess's head stopped swimming.

"Yo, bro," Sonic grinned as Elise stood up and stepped away. "Looking good."

"Heh," Super Mega Man chuckled as he turned to Sonic, the hedgehog flanked by Shadow and Bass on one side and Silver and Quint on the other, the robots still in their super adaptor armors. "I heard some of what we're up against while I was out. So, you ready?"

"For what?" Quint asked in puzzlement as he joined Silver and the other three in forming a circle.

"This," Super Mega Man said as pure Chaos energy rushed from him across the rest of the circle, empowering each into super forms of their own. The usual golden form of Super Sonic stepped forward to join Super Mega Man and turned to look at the familiar pale gold and red forms of Super Shadow and Super Bass plus the similarly pale gold forms of Super Silver, and surprisingly Super Quint.

"...Okay," Super Quint allowed as he flexed his oversized fist and felt the power flow through his systems. "This could work."

"Then let's go!" Super Sonic yelled as he led the charge straight up towards the bright light of Solaris with the rest following an instant behind.

"Okay," Super Mega Man stated as they beheld the form of Solaris, an alien beast that seemed to be made of pure energy with its arms and torso encased in solid energy shells. The hands were formed with three fingers each and the head had a pair of what looked like a cross between horns and antlers, also with three prongs each. Behind it floated six cones and its torso terminated without anything resembling legs. "It's a trans-dimensional being that exists in all times simultaneously. But from the information Dr. Wily is feeding me, we should be able to use the time-space rift to strike from multiple time periods without actually leaving it."

"We've got the future," Super Quint spoke for himself and Super Silver.

"And we'll take the past," Super Shadow nodded as Super Bass slammed his fist into his palm.

"Which leaves us with the present," Super Sonic nodded. "Okay, break!"

Super Silver grunted as he used his super-charged psychokinetic barrier to catch and return Solaris's meteors from the being's left side. It was all too easy to catch anything solid, but the lasers tended to take their toll on his super form if they hit.

Of course, he usually didn't have a partner.

"You think to harm us with lasers?" Super Quint stated as he interposed himself between Solaris and Super Silver and caught the blast in his oversized palm where it condensed into an orb of energy. "Let's see how you like it!"

The blast of Solaris's own weapon being thrown back by Super Quint was enough to shatter the already damaged shell of its left arm.

"Heh," Super Bass observed from Solaris's right side as he and Super Shadow fired volley after volley of super-charged Chaos Spears, "a trans-dimensional being... This might actually be a fair fight!"

"How interesting," Super Shadow smirked as he dodged incoming fire from Solaris and shot off another volley, "I was thinking the same thing!"

Both were having so much fun blasting away that neither could tell which of them fired the volley that finally cracked the shell on Solaris's right arm.

Super Sonic and Super Mega Man grinned as the shells on both arms fell away at the same moment, now they could finally start working on the center shell that concealed Solaris's core.

Super Sonic shot forward in an aura of energy to impact with the armored shell and right behind him were several of Super Mega Man's giant energy blasts which shattered the protective covering. Falling back, Sonic began to rev a Super Spin Dash on the end of Super Mega Man's energy cannon as the robot charged up.

"SUPER SONIC SHOT!" the two yelled as the joint blast tore through Solaris's core.

"Is it over?" the voice of Super Quint asked from the void as the unarmored form of Solaris faltered and fell.

"No..." the equally disembodied voice of Super Shadow declared as Solaris rose up again in a new form, one that appeared to be a stylized angelic icon with eight energy blades that formed wings and the menacing red core in its center. "It's just getting started."

Super Mega Man sighed. "Why can't this ever be easy?"

"Yeah, right Super-twerp!" the derisive voice of Super Bass rang out.

"He's right," Super Sonic grinned. "That wouldn't be any fun!"

"Insignificant specks," a sinister voice rang out from Solaris. It was similar to the voice of Mephiles except... more. "I can perceive all of time. Even if by some miracle you prove victorious today, by the decree of a power far greater than even myself these events will play out again. Over and over until I am victorious." (37)

"I guess you didn't get the memo," the voice of Super Silver taunted. "It doesn't matter how often these events repeat, you will always lose!"

"You speak of things you know nothing of..." Solaris scoffed, and then paused. "Or... do you? Yes, I can sense that some of you are caught in these repeating events. That you... remember previous trials. But... why? Why permit me to regain my full strength if you know what I am? Have you given up?"

"Nah," Super Sonic grinned as he revved up for another Super Sonic Shot. "We just know we can beat your sorry carcass from here to Eiken!"

Solaris responded by firing a multitude of lasers in practically every direction in four dimensions. In response three sets of voices rang out from three different temporal locations in the time-space rift. "SUPER SONIC/SILVER/SHADOW SHOT!"

The immense blasts tore through Solaris's offenses and obliterated its pulsing red core from three different temporal directions simultaneously.

Below, everyone cheered as the energy form of Solaris burst in a brilliant display of light. As the rays of energy shot forth, the six super form heroes landed back among the crowd long enough for their victorious expressions to register before everything was consumed by the blinding brilliance. The light then faded to a stark black void, where a single white flame the size of what would be found on a candle lit.

Elise found herself floating in an endless void, but not quite alone. Turning around, she saw her heroes, Sonic and Rock.

"Did you destroy it?" she asked them.

Sonic shook his head while Rock pointed off towards the only source of light in the void.

"Not quite," the robot stated evenly.

As the three approached, the void around the single point of light resolved into a scene from Elise's past. The light was a brilliant white candle flame in a clear glass case inlayed in an ornately decorated stone wall. In front of that wall was a much younger Elise and her late father, the Duke of Soleanna.

"Look, Elise," the phantom of her father stated to the phantom of her past self. "This is Solaris, the flame of hope."

"It's so beautiful..." the younger Elise marveled at the light.

"When the flame has grown large enough," the duke continued, "our world will change. Solaris will allow us to control time and move through history. People will be able to rectify past mistakes and avoid bitter fate."

"Will we be able to see momma?" the child Elise chimed hopefully.

"Yes, Elise," her father smiled with a sad, yet hopeful, expression. "We'll both be able to see your mother once again."

With just a single backwards glance, the spectres of father and daughter exited the chamber, walking right past the three observers as if they weren't even there. Flanked by the two blue heroes, the adult Elise strode up to the true form of Solaris.

"This is where everything began. Who knew such a tiny flame could bring such devastation?" Elise reached her arm out to brush the glass containing Solaris, which shimmered and vanished like mist. Reaching in, she took the tiny pedestal over which the spectral white flame rested and removed it. "If we put out this flame, Solaris will never exist. And then we'll never have to worry about the Flames of Disaster, right? But our encounter..." Elise began to look troubled as she considered that fact. "We will never meet. It will never have happened. I..." the princess's voice choked back a sob as she fought against the thought of losing the first real friends she'd had in so long and a tear fell from her eye to run down her cheek. "To tell the truth, I don't care what happens to the world!"

With that, the princess broke down sobbing over the fact that to save the world and her people, she would have to give up the friends she'd come to love and cherish so much.

"Elise," Sonic said kindly, "smile."

The princess did her best to choke back her sadness and gave the two the best smile she could muster at the moment.

"Besides," Rock returned the smile, "we can't know what the future holds. But even if we never see each other again, I want you to know that we will always be your friends. From now until the end of the world, and all over again if necessary."

Sonic gave the robot a considering look for a moment before turning back to Elise and nodding his agreement.

Feeling more comforted by the sentiment than she'd have expected, Elise took a deep breath and blew out the flame of Solaris.

"Dr. Wily?" a voice intruded on the man's unconsciousness. "Dr. Wily, can you hear me?"

"Yes, yes, you fool," the mad scientist waved off the soldier shaking him awake irritably. "What is so blasted important that you had to wake me this ea–"

The doctor blinked as he took in his surroundings. This wasn't his bedroom. This was the hangar where the Time Skimmer had been kept, before...

"Quick," he ordered the soldier, "what happened with the Time Skimmer experiment?"

"Everything seemed to have gone well, sir," the soldier replied readily, "except that after you vanished you didn't reappear. You've been gone for several months. Base security picked up your reappearance, without the Time Skimmer, mere minutes ago."

Wily frowned as he turned that over in his head. It looked like the Time Skimmer was going into the failed projects file. Not only that, but he was having trouble remembering anything from after he'd activated the craft. If only he could remember what had happened to him between then and now! 'Ah, well. It's not like I don't have other plans I can turn to...'

Silver blinked at the site of the city of Soleanna around him. Another Loop essentially trapped outside of his own time. He was used to it by now, but the concept still rankled him on some level. Off to his side was Quint, Sakugarne strapped to his back, looking confused. "What's wrong?"

"Hmm?" the robot from the future looked up at the question. "Not sure... I'm getting a bunch of memory errors. Something about a lava monster called Iblis, a shadowy manipulator named Mephiles, a trans-dimensional being known as Solaris, and a feline pyrokinetic ally who called herself–"

"Blaze," Silver finished. "I remember those events as well. I believe that with the destruction of Solaris that all of the events surrounding him have been wiped from the timeline, and new events have filled in the gap where necessary. Actually..." here Silver rubbed his head sheepishly, "I'm having more trouble recalling our current history."

"Huh," Quint filed that away. "Well, I was created in this time period's future by Dr. Albert W. Wily after he traveled to our time in the Time Skimmer and beheld the evil that ran rampant in our era. My primary purpose is to rid the world of all traces of Eggman Nega and we have come to this point in history in pursuit of him." (38)

"Well hasn't this been one doozy of an adventure!" Bunnie grinned as she watched the Festival of the Sun wind down with the rest of the Freedom Fighters from their seats on the rooftop.

"Indeed it has," Sally agreed as she watched Antoine pull his wife closer. After all that, it was nice to see the festival get a do-over without any untimely interruptions like an Eggman invasion.

"Anyone seen Sonic?" Tails asked suddenly.

"I think he and Rock said they had something to do," Rotor offered.

Elise jumped as she saw the two figures that had landed on the castle balcony. She recognized them, after all who didn't?, but she'd never seen them in person. At least, she didn't think so... She was having what felt like flashbacks of events that had never happened. "Are you... Mega Man? And... Sonic the Hedgehog?"

The two looked at each other before turning back and smiling. "We are," Mega Man, no... Rock, bowed courteously. "And I'm not sure exactly what's going on, I think time travel may be involved somewhere, but I clearly remember making a promise to you."

With that, Sonic brought out a high tech board and held it out to her. "Yeah, I think we promised to teach you how to ride one of these."

"I want you to know that we will always be your friends. From now until the end of the world, and all over again if necessary."

Elise wasn't sure where the laughter or the tears came from. She was only certain that she'd never been happier.

The Soleanna Incident as it was later called was the year that, on the day of the Festival of the Sun, a large number of residents of the city claimed to have had prophetic visions of an attack on the city by Dr. Eggman that would result in the end of the world. While prophecy was hardly new to the inhabitants of Mobius, it did have a reputation for being rather unreliable. However, a large portion of an entire city's population having the same prophetic vision was no laughing matter.

The famous Freedom Fighters along with the robotic saviors Mega Man and Mega Woman arrived to offer aid almost before word had gone out. Agents of G.U.N. were also dispatched to help defend the city, and there were reports of a strange hedgehog and robot pair that some said claimed to be from the future sent back to prevent catastrophe.

But the foreseen attack... never happened. It was later discovered that Dr. Eggman had indeed set up a base in the area and made plans to attack the city, but had woken up that same day without any recollection of what he was after in the first place. Official reports were that, with no idea of why he'd gathered his forces to attack Soleanna, the doctor had packed up and left to pursue other plans.

"Yo, Rock?" Sonic piped up as the two strolled in the general direction of Mobotropolis. Sure, the two had much faster means of making the journey, but they felt like a stroll. "That thing back with Eggman... you seemed pretty ticked. Honestly, for a moment I thought you really were gonna kill him. You wanna talk about it?"

"...Okay," Rock agreed after a moment. "I... I guess that when he flew into the city prepared to kill everyone if they didn't roll over and give him what he wanted, I'd just had enough. I don't like violence or killing, and I try to avoid it as much as possible, but..."

"But you'd had enough of people like Eggman using that to walk all over you and everything you care for."

"Yeah... It's not the first time I've lost my temper like that either. Back... I remember back in my baseline I'd finally put Dr. Wily in prison after stopping his plans time and time again, except he had some robot masters in reserve to break him out if they didn't hear from him for a few months... But there was also this new guy who came to help me that time. We did good together until he got a bit ambitious and one of the new robot masters hurt him badly, so I sent him back to my dad's lab for repairs. And... well, that new guy was Bass..."

Sonic winced at the implications.

"He trashed the lab, stole the super adaptor upgrades dad had made for me, and hightailed it back to help Dr. Wily. By the time I'd fought my way through Wily's new fortress, I'd had plenty of time to let that fester. The fact that not only had he escaped justice again, but he'd sent his latest creation to pretend to be my friend with the full intention of betraying me. And when I saw him apologizing again and asking for mercy, the only thing I could think of was him laughing as he tore everyone's lives apart."

"So you decided that enough was enough and you were going to end it..."

"Once and for all," Rock nodded. "I pointed my Mega Buster at him and began charging up. Wily panics and starts protesting that robots can't hurt humans and all that 'first law' stuff. I'm not sure what I said in reply, but I remember being about to take the shot and hesitating... just long enough for Bass to teleport in, give me a line about 'he who hesitates is lost' and teleport out with Wily."

"And with Eggman?" Sonic asked. "I wasn't exactly pulling you off of him."

"I realized as I was chewing him out that... it's just not me. The only time I've even killed other robots in cold blood was when I was under the influence of a virus. Free Will or not, even facing a complete monster, I'm no murderer."

"I could have told you that . Still, you didn't seem too broken up when Bass and Omega executed Waltz," Sonic observed.

"Actually, I was intending to try and forestall Waltz's execution," Rock admitted. "I had a speech prepared and everything and, well, when she said what she did..."

"You hesitated again," Sonic finished the thought.

"Yeah," Rock nodded. "And Bass didn't."

The two walked in silence for several moments.

"It's not that I didn't want to kill Eggman," Rock leaned back. "Right then, I really did. It's just that I wanted him to live long enough to understand all the wrong he's done more."

"I respect that," Sonic nodded. "It's gonna come back to bite us later, but I respect it."

Eggman chuckled darkly to himself. Solaris had been a wash, what with it being wiped from time and all, but he didn't consider it a total loss. After all, thanks to his precautions and despite rumors to the contrary, he remembered what had happened during his scheme in Soleanna even when the rest of the world didn't. In particular, he remembered just how much one of his perpetual foes had been holding back all this time. And he now knew how serious he had to get if he ever wanted to win.

So, no, he didn't consider this a total loss at all...

---

1) *cough*PinkiePie*cough*

2) This line by DrTempo.

3) Let's just say there's a reason that particular battle wasn't shown.

4) He's the Man. The Mega Man.

5) Jet can be forgiven the mistake. He'd hardly be the first.

6) Let's just say the Light siblings have official deputy status in... a lot of places.

7) Meet Mayor Leonardo Dorado, L. Dorado (badum-tish) for short, native of the Megaverse. If the man's personality isn't registered as a force of nature, I can only assume there's been some oversight.

8) In case anyone ever wondered why Omega is never out on the track.

9) Big's not exactly into competitive sports either. I'm not even sure he'd fish competitively.

10) Partnered with Light Industries to provide clean technology solutions towards a brighter Mobius.

11) Jet may be out to settle a multi-lifetime score, but he's out to do so fairly. Honest, if still ruthless, competition is something he's come to appreciate.

12) Not to mention the penalties for tearing up the race tracks.

13) After all, he was doing more than his fair share.

14) Did Not Finish.

15) Um... crap?

16) Had Mega Man been conscious, he would have recognized them, respectively, as Volt Man, Dyna Man, and Sonic Man. Robot Masters that typically served under the supercomputer CRORQ when they appeared.

17) The crowd of fans itself was a few seconds away from forming a lynch mob.

18) No, Bass isn't looping yet. He asked Roll during some unspecified earlier point.

19) Blues had decided to stand at the back of the crowd and give the doctor his seat.

20) Blaze is visiting from her dimension, but ended up in Silver's time instead of Sonic's. Plothole filled.

21) Depending on the branch, 'wait and see' can be a fairly common reaction among loopers when new elements appear in familiar chains of events.

22) For good reason, but Quint's naturally biased in the man's favor.

23) As far as Quint could tell, Silver had some disorientation induced by the time travel portal, went 'wha? Where am I? Who is that?" followed shortly by "oh! Now I remember!". And... that's pretty much what happens to loopers when they Awaken. They go back in time (at least from their perspective), have a moment where they aren't entirely sure where they are or what they're doing, and then the Loop memories integrate.

24) The pile-driver boxing gloves would be Quint's power adaptor. Similar in ability and concept to Mega Man's own power adaptor from Mega Man 6.

25) Blaze is the one in the game who tells Silver that she's not sure if killing to save the world is right or wrong, but if they don't take advantage of this opportunity to change things then the future will remain the same bleak hopeless place.

26) We all know this drill. Creepy guy with creepy voice and creepy powers, yet he seems to be the only one who actually knows what's going on. Do you listen to him or not?

27) If you are now imagining Mephiles in a school uniform, then my work here has been accomplished.

28) How did he know, you ask? Why, he's the gosh-darn That Man. :P

29) A badass? Yes, yes he is.

30) You know, the red emerald is the only one of the seven that is absent until the final chapter in the game. I recall seeing the purple, white, blue, cyan, green, and yellow ones, but not the red. So I can just throw it in here without it feeling out of place!

31) You may have noticed that Bass has something of a potty mouth on him.

32) Beware the nice ones indeed... Yeek.

33) Yeah, Silver gets a bit lonely. Being a time traveler in the Loops can suck sometimes.

34) Some will tell you the devil always lies, but that just isn't true. The devil speaks with truth or lie as it suits him. So do not idly dismiss the words of the devil, for he might be speaking the truth. And that's what makes him so dangerous.

35) What the...? Damnit Wily, you got lost piloting a time machine?! Look, next time heed the mistakes of Bugs Bunny and take the damn left turn at Albuquerque !

36) Yeah, I don't know what to say about this part except that I found the idea of Shadow being clueless for that long to be amusing.

37) Yes, Solaris is Loop Aware. At least in his completed form. This iteration.

38) Hmm… How do I relate going from Iblis as the major threat to the future to Eggman Nega? Ah, I know: "Out of the frying pan and into the asylum."

Mega Loops 9

7.7.7 (continued) (Hubris Plus)

Pitchblende Part 3: The Good Doctor(s)

"...I will at least die with the satisfaction of knowing I was the better man," Wily lamented from within the wreckage of the Wily Machine. The steel of his once glorious weapon pressed down around him, sharp and uneven edges biting at him. It was a small consolation that he'd been rendered partially numb by a lightning bolt that had landed too near the cockpit.

Suddenly, metal began to groan and shriek around him as it began to shift all at once and he pressed his eyes shut as he waited for the end. But instead of the fruits of his genius crashing down around him like he'd expected, the pressure vanished and he found circulation returning. Cracking an eyelid, he found Roll crouched with an arm extended towards him, Rock and Robo standing to either side of her lifting away the wreckage.

"Come on, Dr. Wily," she said as she seized his hand in her own. "Let's get you out of there."

"And you do this every time?" Robo asked as they left the base. He and Rock had fallen back from the others as Roll and the other five Robot Masters escorted Wily out. The Masters had been all too happy to give them distance once they'd noticed what was left of Elec Man hanging from his back. "Even after what he's done? Even with what you know he'll do?"

"Yep," Rock answered, "every time."

" ...Why? "

"Because my dad believes that anyone can be redeemed. And so do I." Seeing Robo's questioning gaze, he went on. "For all his greed and massive ego, when it comes down to a decision between right and something truly evil, he'll choose right. For all his pettiness and jealousy, the worst thing he does when he gets his hands on my dad is gloat. It's small and hard to find, but there is a conscience somewhere in there. And with the Dreaming, who knows? Maybe sometime a million-billion Loops from now he'll learn to listen to it."

"I..." Robo paused and shook his head, "I don't..."

"I know," Rock said with a shrug. "A lot of people think we're naive, but-"

"It's not that," the atomic robot cut in hurriedly. "It's just... I can't even imagine offering half my enemies that kind of mercy." He cocked his head in thought. "Of course, of those half don't have the decency to stay dead and the other half are Nazis, so..."

"Relax, Robo. I know I said anyone , but I haven't faced what you've faced. I'm in no position to judge."

"...You're a good kid, Rock."

"Heh, I've had good examples," Rock grinned, rubbing sheepishly at the back of his helmet.

"Yeah," Robo replied with a distant look in his eyes. "Reminds me of my dad. Except, you know, hairier."

"Hold off on that connection, Doc," Robo warned. He and Doctor Light were stooped over Elec Man's disassembled form, partway through reconstructing him. The other Robot Masters were lined up against the wall behind them, deactivated and awaiting reprogramming. "I had to grab the grounding element and the static charge is liable to fry anything you slot in until I put it back."

"Ah, I see. I suppose it's a bit early to reinstall processing elements in any case," Light replied, switching over to power distribution. "Where did you find these power couplings? They're much higher rated than the originals."

"Those? They were already in there."

"Hmm, must have been one of Albert's additions." The pair worked in companionable silence for a time before the Doctor spoke again. "Robo, can I ask... Why?"

"...You've gotta understand," Robo answered after a moment. "It wasn't so long ago that I was the only robot who could so much as hold a conversation. It's going to take awhile to get used to thinking of them as more than, well," he motioned over Elec Man's body. "Spare parts."

"While that is certainly insightful, I meant to ask... Why did you leave?"

"Ah, well..." Robo paused for a moment to dip into what Rock had called 'Loop memories'. It was a strange experience, having a lifetime he'd never lived crammed in next to all the others. "I hate to say it, Doc, but I have a little sympathy for Dr Wily on that count. I'm not going to try to conquer the world or anything," he added hurriedly, "but you have to realize, you cast a long shadow. I realized, sweeping out the lab that night, that if I stayed, no matter what else I accomplished, I'd always be Dr Light's assistant. I wanted something more than that."

"Robo... We could have talked about this..."

"Yeah, and then you'd have convinced me to stay," he answered, idly pointing a wrench at his creator. "You're very good at making people act reasonably, and just then? I wanted to be reckless. I guess that's what you get for programming a teenager."

"Ha, I suppose so," Doctor Light chuckled. "Well, I should hope that you at least succeeded. I expect you've had your share of adventures?"

"I've had a few. I'll tell you about them later."

"Does that mean..."

"Yeah. I think I'll be sticking around for awhile."

"So the multiverse is a tree?" Robo asked as he tinkered with the teleporter. Apparently he had some sort of device he liked to build as soon as possible after Waking up, and Rock and Roll had decided it would be the perfect time to give him the 'welcome to the multiverse' speech.

"...Kinda?" Rock answered, waggling his hand in a so-so motion.

"It all gets a little metaphorical at that point," Roll went on. "Apparently you need a 15-D brain just to conceptualize it."

"...And giving myself one would most likely destroy my universe as if it had never been," Robo noted, nodding at his work before starting to clamp a few wires to his head fins.

"And possibly take the rest of the Yggdrasil with it, yeah," Rock stressed. "We can't overstate how bad Ascending is."

"Eh, the idea doesn't really appeal anyways," he replied as he punched a few numbers into a computer and cocked his head at the results. "From time to time a crazy AI tries to convince me to destroy humanity as part of a quest for ultimate knowledge. Lately I've been getting to him before the crazy happens, but I used to have to drop a block of C4 in his brain."

Rock shrugged at that. He didn't like it, but he understood it was sometimes necessary. They still hadn't found a non-lethal way to deal with Ra-Moon and others like it.

"So what does this thing actually do? " Roll asked as Robo closed up a panel and started the modified teleporter up.

"Oh, you're going to love this," he said with all the enthusiasm of a tinker showing off his favorite toy. "See, a little while after I realized that time was just going to keep repeating, I realized it wasn't repeating. It was iterating, every do-over a completely new instance of the universe. Well, obviously that made me throw out every theory I had about why I was aware of the phenomenon. Nothing physical would have any effect in such a scenario, so I looked into a meta-physical construct that we'll call a soul for lacking any better terminology." He lectured onwards even as he continued the boot-up sequence, checking readouts and tweaking numbers.

"I already knew they existed and had certain interactions with various n-dimensional fields, and a few centuries of research allowed me to reconcile Edison's Odic Equations with my own Sagan-Tesla Containment Theory. With that to work off of it wasn't too hard to project the container outwards and anchor it to a specific construct. The hard part was accessing it, especially since a solid chunk of my life happens before the invention of the transistor. So I refined an access device that could expel itself from the field upon receiving a signal I could jerry-rig from Mr Tesla's lab equipment." He threw a final switch and the teleporter gave out a gentle hum before shutting off. With an almost disappointing lack of fan-fare a silver ring about three inches across popped into existence in his hand.

"Behold," he boasted. "The Zorth-Storage Access Device, or ZSAD, MK XXII."

"Zorth?" Roll asked.

"The fifth cardinal direction," Robo answered as he fiddled with the ring, somehow expanding it to nearly a foot across. "I discovered it curled up inside the other four."

" Fifth cardinal direction?" Rock asked, "that doesn't-"

"Make any sense? I know. And yet..." Robo plunged his arm through the ring and it vanished up to his elbow. After a moment of rummaging it came back out holding an old but obviously well cared for revolver. "It's where I keep my stuff."

The twins stared blankly as it sank in exactly what Robo was showing off. Raising her hand to her mouth, Roll started giggling uncontrollably.

"Oh come on, the name isn't that silly," Robo protested.

"Sorry, Robo," Rock said, offering a consoling smile, "but..." He held out his hand and called forth one of the spare helmets he kept in his subspace pocket. Roll was doubled over as she struggled to contain her laughter.

"...Oh," Robo said after a long moment. "So, you can just do that." One of his eyes started twitching slightly. "Four hundred years of dedicated research. Twice that in refining the design. I started over from scratch twice because of unexpected terminations. I'm pretty sure that this is the single most advanced thing that I've ever created. And you can just... Do that."

"They're called subspace pockets, if you want I could show you..." He trailed off as Robo waved him off.

"No, no, maybe later. I think I'm just going to go out and stare at the stars for awhile," Robo dismissed, heading for the doors. "Maybe do a little screaming." Roll fell over, arms clutching her stomach as she guffawed.

"Not helping, Roll," Rock scolded.

"But his face! " She gasped, "I don't know how he does it with just the eyes, but the look on his face! "

"Uhg," Robo groaned from the back of the van. "I don't care how much they contribute to our understanding of temporal mechanics, I hate time manipulators. Quantum physics produces vampires, space turns into monsters, time is supposed to be the safe one."

"Yeah," Rock agreed as the van came to a halt. "Flash Man can be a little intense."

"Oh no," the larger robot argued while they piled out and followed Dr Light. "Time Man was intense. Flash Man is just weird . Started off with the typical villain superiority spiel, then he starts going on about what a shame it is to destroy a fellow member of the 'bald brotherhood'."

"Huh," Roll said thoughtfully as they passed through a set of glass doors onto a bustling show floor. "You know, I always forget that he does that. Usually it only comes up if we lose our helmets."

"And here we are," Light interrupted. "The Advanced Robotics Trade Show! Here, the greatest minds in the industry gather to collaborate, exchange ideas, and-"

"Aaaand they're gone," Robo noted dryly as the Light twins bolted into the crowd excitedly. Apparently this was one of the few disasters they could avoid entirely, a sweep for bombs and an anonymous tip to Agent Krantz to beef up security sorting out the Emerald Spears without too much trouble.

"Ah, well, I can't fault their enthusiasm," the Doctor answered. "Elec Man, why don't you head to the booth and finish setting up?"

"Of course, Doctor. Perhaps you could remind Rock and Rush they're supposed to be on display as well?"

"Don't sweat it, Sparky," Robo consoled, clapping a hand around the other robot's shoulder. "I'll give you a hand. Least I can do."

"That's... Quite alright," Elec Man replied, gingerly peeling the other robot off of himself. "I'm sure I'll manage on my own." He'd found the other robot off putting ever since their first unfortunate encounter.

"Alright, but all you have to do is shout and I'll leg it over there!" Robo called after him.

The near constant stream of limb puns certainly hadn't helped.

Light and Robo wandered the show floor for awhile, meeting and greeting the other roboticists, until it was time for the debate.

"Speaking against the development of advanced AI, we have Dr Noelle Lalinde of Geoworks International," Mikhail Cossack announced from his position as moderator. "And defending the benefits of further research, we have someone you've all become well acquainted with through recent events, Atomic Robo." There was a smattering of surprised applause from the crowd.

"I'm sorry if this seems rude," Noelle noted with an arched eyebrow as they shook hands. "But I could have sworn the itinerary said I'd be debating with Dr. Light ."

"Well, my full name is Atomic Robo Light," the machine answered confidently. "And I do have a PHD in theoretical physics."

"What... But... How? " She asked, flummoxed.

"It's amazing what you can do with online classes these days," he replied, the set of his eyes conveying a smile. Despite the aggravating nature of some of the enemies, Robo had found himself largely enjoying the Loop, and from what Rock had told him this was the start of a stretch of relatively peaceful time. There was even a chance he'd be able to break ground on his own research lab in the city in the next few weeks and, though he'd been advised against breaking out anything that might catch Wily's eye, he felt that everything was going to go fine.

Wily turned away from the glowering orb of Ra-Moon as the recently reconstituted Flash Man entered the makeshift lab he'd set up in the La Front ruins.

"Sir," the robot reported respectfully. "I found something on my last patrol." He held out what appeared to be a partially melted hunk of rock. "The remains of a recent meteor impact, my sensors can discern something... off about it. I thought you'd want to investigate."

"Such fascinating readings," Ra-Moon rumbled from its perch. "Please, allow me to process it for you."

"Ha! Maybe after you've finished that fondue set for me," Wily taunted as he placed the rock in a scanner.

"Hmm," he mumbled a moment later, scratching his chin. "Must need to recalibrate. Infinity minus one? Nonsense!"

9.2 (Pinklestia101, edited by Sh4d0wS14d3)

Penny Brown had been grateful to finally have a loop where she could just fade in the background.

There was a Robot War going on, but it wasn't her business. She had started the loop at ten years old, five years before the first Robot masters attack, and she had luckily decided to focus herself in history instead of robotics. There was no Brain or uncle Gadget to worry about, no Doctor Claw. Whatever happened, it wasn't her responsibility.

But after her Sonicverse loop, she should have know that she could never be that lucky.

There had been a crash noise, and a group of anti robot fanatics had tried to abduct her, saying something about how they were going to make Doctor Wily feel the same pain they had suffered. The key word being tried, because if there was one thing she never let pass away in any loop she could spare time for it, it was her Haki training. Kenbunshoku Haki, even used in a passive way, told her they were going to be there before they entered, so she ran away.

Then, when the gunshots started, a robot saved her, but it was not the heroic blue robot or his heroic yellow sister, it was a Robot Master. Penny then mentally cursed herself for not seeing it before. By not finding weird how they lived so well with only her loop mother's modest job. For never asking who her father was. And why no one ever told her what the W in her name meant. The clues were all there, but she had been too jaded to see them.

Her name was Penny W. Brown and her father was Doctor Albert W. Wily, she figured that out seconds before the robot told her.

9.3 (Valentine Meikin)

Mega Man looked at Bass as he watched Skull Castle exploding. "How the hell does he afford it?" He asked, confused.

"What do you mean?" Bass asked, "He can make his own labor force, he still has a copy of the schematics for the older Robot Masters..."

"I meant the resources to build the damn castle in the first place, as well as the custom arenas for fighting the Robot Masters..." Mega Man offered, "He builds half a dozen robots, sets up half a dozen areas that would be death traps to any sane human... Dr. Light hasn't really been able to cut a cheque for anything in recent years..."

"He has a couple of minor military contracts under a shell identity, and he actually sells off what you destroy for scrap value, beyond what he can easily recycle himself..." Bass admitted, "Tell your father to look at the home companion market, something like Rush or Tango would sell easily for someone who can't afford the upkeep of a real pet..."

Mega Man looked pensive. It now made more sense why Dr. Wily could afford to keep going on his one-man crusade against Mega Man, and military work wouldn't go down well with his father at all, being strictly against creating an army. And both Rush and Tango were a lot more house-trained than a real dog and cat…

9.4 (OathToOblivion)

Mega Man was fairly calm as he faced down Flame Man for the who-knows-how-many-th time. "Give it up, Flame Man! Surrender now before I have to hurt you!" he declared, pointing his Mega Buster forward in warning.

"Fat chance! I'll take you on in the name of Wily!" the turban-headed Flame Man declared. He proceeded to fire his Flame Blast at Mega Man. The Blue Bomber leaped over the flames, getting ready. Flame Man leaped high into the air in an attempt to squish the robotic hero flat. Mega Man proceeded to slide...directly into Flame Man?!

"Yow!" he winced, getting hurt from randomly going into someone. Without using Charge Man's weapon, sliding into some other robot usually ended up hurting Mega Man himself. Flame Man himself didn't question it, simply firing fireballs at Mega Man. 'That was weird. Oh well, probably just a fluke,' Rock dismissed, casually leaping over the fireballs. Flame Man leaped again, and Mega Man slid again...directly in the opposite direction that he intended to, crashing into Flame Man.

"Stop doing that!" Flame Man said. Mega Man may not have been using the Charge Kick, but it still hurt a bit.

"It's not like I'm doing it on purpose!" 'Okay, I know my movement systems don't have any bugs or viruses in them. What's going on?'

Hephaestus cursed as he tried to track down the source of this latest bug. Sure, it was small, but left alone it could become a huge problem. Right now, it was only messing with Mega Man's slide, but what would happen if it started interfering with the rest of his movement capabilities, or spread to anyone else?

9.5 (Pinklestia101)

"Show yourselves knaves! The Thunder God Calls!" Elec Man was holding a hammer that crackled with electricity

"I can assure the closest haircut you'll ever know, my dearest Roll." This version of Cut Man lacked the usual couple of scissor-like blades at the top of his head, and instead had two large swords that looked like the two halves of a gargantuan pair of scissors.

"Fools! You dare to trifle with the Phoenix? My fire will burn your souls for all eternity!" Fire Man design seemed inspired by a phoenix, but instead of wings it had a Jetpack in his back.

"Let me guess, these guys are Loopers?" Roll asked Mega Man, after she just awoke.

"I wish, it seems that in this loop both Doctor Wily and Doctor Light are fans of comic books. I had to beg for an hour to avoid using a stupid cape I keep tripping with."

9.6 (Mega Sonic Alternate Reaction by Hubris Plus, Set-up by me)

It was another fused Loop with Sonic's universe and Rock had been going through it in some sort of half-Awake haze. The set-up seemed to be largely the same as the first fused Loop with Sonic's branch (not the tandem run where his branch was brought online) and while he was generally aware that the events being played out were mostly the same, his in-Loop mind and instincts seemed firmly in the driver's seat. It wasn't until he again lost his temper at Dr. Eggman and uttered that line of pure cold fury that his looping consciousness came to the forefront.

" So. Can. I. "

Eggman spent a long moment staring into Rock's piercing gaze, all of his own assurance gone in the face of what seemed to be imminent destruction. And then, just as quickly, it returned.

"Magnificent," he stated, even as his carrier crumbled around them.

"W-what?" Rock asked. That was about the last reaction he'd expected.

"Truly, absolutely magnificent! " The madman roared, and insane gleam in his eyes. "I'd thought that Omega was the pinnacle of firepower in a single package, but this? Without tapping into an ounce of Chaos? Truly, the might of steel is unequaled," he stated smugly, managing to shoot a superior glare at Sonic despite his less than stellar condition.

" My steel, not yours," Mega Man asserted, recovering his composure.

"But it's not just the steel, the engineering, is it?" Eggman continued undaunted. "No, I can see it in your eyes. I taught my creations joy, the ecstasy of pure destruction and domination. But now? Now I see that I should have taught them hate. " Rock flinched back at the word, the taunt unexpected and well aimed. In the instant he'd stepped back, Eggman slammed a fist onto his console.

The escape pod blasted through the bottom of the Wyvern and spiraled away from the destruction, mad cackling following it the whole way down.

Rock could only watch, and wonder.

9.7 (Pinklestia101)

The loop had started pretty much baseline, until it came to the part where Doctor Wily made his announcement to the world about his world domination plans. Doctor Wily appeared on the TV interrupting the transmission as usual, then the camera moved a way to focus on a stage, showing a few robot masters who were... holding music instruments?

Then Doctor Wily walked to the stage and put on black sunglasses... and started to rap.

"The world must be ruled by my hand. You will fear my master plan! With my Robot Masters, I will cause disasters. Beware of my genius! I am a master at being devious! If you dare show any defiance, I will crush you! It doesn't matter if you know Kung fu! My creations are majestic. Pathetic fools, you will learn respect! Bow down to Doctor Wily!"

"Bow down to Doctor Wily! Bow down to Doctor Wily!" said the chorus of Robot Masters.

Rock turned off the TV, at least both Roll and Doctor Light were awake this loop. While both he and Roll had been built and programmed to have an appreciation of music, this loop was probably gonna go to the list of "We never ever talk about it."

(Addition by Me)

Rock would later revise this opinion when he discovered that right after he'd turned the TV off, Dr. Light had shown up with his own band of Robot Masters.

"Wily you've crossed the line to threaten freedom divine! And now this pacifist will raise his fists and send your plan into decline! Here to defend the justly right, we will hone ourselves with holy might! And when we're done, you will see the light!"

8.9

Rock and Roll did not like this Loop. For one, instead of going straight for infrastructure, Dr. Wily was acting full-blown terrorist. He didn't really seem to care much about collateral damage most Loops, but he also didn't really go out of his way to kill people either.

This time...

"Bwahahahaha!" the image of Dr. Wily cackled from the pirated broadcast of every media output device in the city, possibly the world. "People of Earth, I have grown tired of your repeated refusals to surrender to me, the rightful ruler of this planet! And so, I shall now unleash my greatest creation, the Gray Goo Devil! Even now, my creation is converting everything in its path that I haven't personally protected into nano-machines for its body. If you do not surrender all political power to me, it will continue to consume everything, and every one , until the entire world becomes my ultimate Wily Machine ready to help me enact galactic conquest! Bwahahahahahaha!"

9.8

Dr. Light was actually quite enjoying himself. He didn't generally have Loops without any of his children around. Not that he didn't love spending time with them in the Loops, even if Blues was sadly still jumpy and suspicious around him, but it was a nice change of pace to have adventures of his own from time to time.

It wasn't the first time he'd been in this particular neighborhood of the Loops, though he vastly preferred his current incarnation to the one he'd had the other time. His children had laughed themselves sick, despite being robots, when they'd heard about him being the portly middle age digger in a blue and yellow jumpsuit who billed himself as "Mega Man". On the other hand, getting as his agent a blonde version of Noelle Lalinde who regularly wore dresses that could be described as "small" and "red" had been a definite perk. The hand-held Mega Buster he'd gotten was also a welcome addition to his subspace pocket. Beyond that, even he hadn't taken himself seriously that Loop.

Honestly, replacing Ken Masters in a Street Fighter Loop was the preferable option. Having Loop memories of training alongside Ryu; who may or may not be the local Anchor, he hadn't been very clear when Dr. Light asked him; was a much better history in his opinion. Plus, his age meant he got to have hair that wasn't white or even gray, but a rich black like in his baseline youth. Being occasionally addressed as "Dr. Masters" or "Master Light" had been fairly amusing as well.

Yet, he had still picked up the "Mega Man" nickname somehow. Compared to that, having a blue gi rather than Ken's red was practically serendipity.

"So you're a looper too. Native?" asked his current companion curiously. She was most definitively not a native of this Loop and her question suggested she hadn't visited it before. For one thing, the individual her appearance took after, and who she was replacing, was a male. Nor did he have rainbow-colored hair.

"Oh, not at all Corporal Dash," he said amiably. "In my home Loop, I'm a scientist and inventor rather than a career fighter."

"Egghead, huh?" Corporal Rainbow Dash smirked. "A bit outside your comfort zone I bet."

Dr. Light chuckled. "Corporal, I'll have you know that in my home Loop, I am an accomplished martial artist in my own right. I have won multiple high school and collegiate championships in the ring in addition to my Masters and/or Doctorate degrees in robotics, computer science, engineering, business, and both applied and quantum physics. Were it not for my former friend and colleague Dr. Wily, I would hold a global record for academic achievement."

Corporal Dash looked impressed. "How many Loops did it take you to do all that?"

Dr. Light managed to hold in his amusement. "Corporal Dash, that's my baseline."

Dash's eyes practically bugged out of their sockets.

"I am quite amazed at your technique Corporal," Dr. Light said. "Not many can manifest a polychromatic aura at all, much less as naturally as you do."

" I'm still trying to get over how you copied it like that!" Dash returned incredulously. "Sure, it doesn't look nearly as cool as mine does, but it should have taken you at least a week just to figure out how to mold the chi properly since you've got a similar technique that your body will want to default to instead. Not a few hours!"

"I may not have a copy chip," Dr. Light said, missing Dash's confusion at the term, "but as a scientist and inventor analyzing things and then replicating them comes naturally to me."

"Well," grinned the despotic M. Bison. "If it isn't the dynamic duo of the circuit. Dr. Thomas "Mega Man" Masters-Light and Corporal Rainbow Dash of the U.S. armed forces. A pleasure to meet you both. Killing you two should prove a delightful challenge to my abilities."

Corporal Dash snorted. "Yeah, you keep telling yourself that psycho."

"There is no need," M. Bison swept his cape aside confidently. "I am secure in the fact that I am all-powerful. My victory may be slightly more difficult than usual, but it is a foregone conclusion."

"There are no foregone conclusions," Dr. Light shot back with a stern look. "Only possibilities more likely than others. And you give more weight to the possibility of your victory than it truly deserves."

The ugly look on M. Bison's face told Dr. Light he'd scored a nice psychological hit. Despots generally didn't like having logic thrown in their faces like that.

"ENOUGH!" M. Bison roared, his sickly purple aura flaring to life. "Your mangled bodies will serve as a warning to all others that I am immortal and my Psycho Power unbeatable!"

"PSYCHO CRUSHER!" M. Bison yelled as he launched himself in an aura-enhanced spiraling strike at his opponents.

Dr. Light threw his palms forth in the practiced motion now ingrained in his body as his companion drew her arms back and then threw them forward at speeds exceeding sound.

"HADOKEN!"

"SONIC RAINBOOM!"

9.9

Rock and Roll were not in their armor, out saving the world, or in general doing anything one would expect of globally famous heroes.

No, they were currently in the specially outfitted bedroom their father had made this Loop. The specially reinforced beds had been tricky to arrange so all the necessary hookups for a rest cycle could be accessed, but the Light twins had to admit that is was much more personal than the recharge chambers most robots used. They were currently dressed in, of all things, brightly decorated pajamas like those favored by the children they appeared to be and listening to the radio.

They were also jumping up and down on their beds like loons, loudly singing along to the radio and playing air guitar.

The song on the radio would be familiar to many who had been to the Hub or a similar Loop, though after listening for a while it was clear this was a lyrical remix that took recent events into account.

"Birth control, Ho Chi Minh, Dr. Wily's back again!"

The two liked the song, but even more they liked the chance to just set aside the expectations of the world and just be silly. There was also a particular line coming up that they both loved for personal reasons and they sang it particularly loud.

"Rock and Roll, the robot wars, I can't take it anymore!"

The two fell onto their beds giggling like fools as the song came to a close and grinned as the next one started. This was another one they both liked for different reasons.

"There's a power in the feeling a power in the sound. Its rising up from the underground," Rock began.

"Nobody's perfect down here on earth," Roll picked up the next line. "But we can rock this world for all we're worth!"

"And I feel it coming from the east to the west," they both sang together. "As one by one we do our personal best!"

"And we're doing fine," Roll sang the next line, complete with echo on the last word that a human voice couldn't have naturally managed. "I give it a 9..."

Rock smirked and sang the next line. "I give it a–"

9.95

"Honestly Thomas," Dr. Mikhail Cossack sighed in exasperation. "I don't know why you're still on about your old lab assistant. The boy was a complete imbecile most of the time and a shameless womanizer on his good days."

"You can be such a cynic Mokhail," Dr. Light smiled tolerantly. "For all his faults, Jonathan was quite the eager lad with the best of intentions. If only he hadn't become so obsessed..."

Rock found himself listening intently to the conversation. This Loop, Dr. Wily apparently didn't exist. Instead, there was a doctoral student that his father had taken on as an assistant named Jonathan... something. Dr. Light never used the last name and it just didn't seem to come up in conversation. From what Rock could tell, the man had become a bit obsessed with something or other towards the end of his doctoral work and then, right before the graduation ceremony, he'd simply vanished.

"Greetings y'all," a voice with what could only be called an 'Elvis' accent suddenly came from every nearby media output, interrupting Rock's thoughts. The face on the transmission was that of a blond man in sunglasses with a labcoat stretched over his very broad chest and shoulders and his hair in an odd almost-vertical pompadour. "Don't be afraid babes and bros, for I come to you with a message of totally radical importance. For I, Dr. Brovo, have discovered the true power of brotherhood and understanding. A message of love and great justice. One that I and my totally cool Brobot Masters shall impart to each and every one of you by any means necessary. Know this all you uncool beyotches, your era of pain and hate is at an end and the time for brotherly love and togetherness is at hand! The world shall be remade with the totally awesome might of the Broforce! We now return you to your, ah, regularly scheduled programming."

Rock stared as the transmission ended, and continued staring for several minutes, blinking owlishly as he processed it. This was certainly new…

Rock had armored up as Mega Man as soon as Dr. Light finished the upgrades and adjustments and teleported to the first area that was under attack.

The agency where Gilbert D. Stern and Rosalyn Krantz normally worked.

Which was surprisingly intact for something being assaulted by a dangerous robot. The walls were pristine and none of the windows were broken, but the large amount of unconscious federal agents belied the reality of what was going on.

At least they were all alive and largely unharmed. Not all attackers were so considerate.

As if to prove otherwise, Agent Stern came flying out of the door as Rock approached and the robot braced himself to catch the man.

"Your cynicism is an uncool attitude that unbalances the way of the Bro," the one responsible for Agent Stern's impromptu flight stated as he stepped out. The robot appeared lightly armored and clad in a stylized martial arts gi with mostly blue pants that had large black striped and a mostly black top with large blue stripes, held closed by a belt denoting full mastery of whatever style was practiced. "Ah, there is a new challenger to represent the oppressive system against the harmonious might of Tae Kwon Bro. Come, we shall see how you fare against my fabled Bro Fist."

Rock blinked at the calm declaration, and decided to try something. "Can we take this fight away from the agency? I don't want to accidentally hurt anyone."

"A most enlightened and brotastic attitude," Tae Kwon Bro responded. "Unexpected from one who fights for the intolerant system, but the terms are acceptable. Let us depart."

Rock followed the 'brobot' to an open common area where no one was present and there was little of importance to damage.

"Before we begin, I would ask your name," Tae Kwon Bro stated as the two faced off.

"I am known as Mega Man!" Rock declared.

"A most righteous and mighty name," his opponent nodded and took a stance. "Come at me, Mega Bro."

Rock opened up with a barrage of buster fire, only to have it all dodged as Tae Kwon Bro closed in with a glowing fist and slammed it into Rock's torso. Rock's eyes widened as the force of the blow flung him back and he was overtaken by feelings of peace as the energy tried to calm his systems into submission. 'A pacifying weapon...' he thought idly as he lay on the ground. 'For all its energy it does little physical damage, but it forces energy of the target into a calmer state. That's why none of the agents are really hurt. Very impressive. And... their goals are ultimately peaceful... Would it be so bad to just let them go ahead and do this...? Maybe it really would be better for the world...'

"You fought well, Mega Bro," Tae Kwon Bro stood over the blue robot, "but my cause is just and my fist is strong. In short, my Broforce is simply stronger than yours."

'No,' Rock's features hardened and he felt his systems returning to full active status. 'Even if their intentions are good, it's not right to force others to follow a single way of thinking, even a peaceful one.'

With that, the robot known as Mega Man brought up his Mega Buster and fired on his opponent from point blank range.

Now armed with the 'Bro Fist' weapon, Rock made his way to the next area under attack, the nearest army base. Like before, there were unconscious humans everywhere, and once again his opponent stepped out to meet him.

This 'brobot' was clad in armor covered with military insignia, topped off with a combat helmet, and one arm that was formed into what could only be a grenade launcher.

"Who comes to challenge G. I. Bro, the real Bromerican hero?" the 'brobot' challenged.

"I am Mega Man," Rock declared, "and I am here to stop you before you hurt anyone else!"

"Then let's see if you can handle my Bronade Launcher!" his opponent yelled and opened fire.

Rock dashed forward and dodged around the shots, getting in close and downing G. I. Bro with a single shot of the Bro Fist to his torso.

'That...' Rock blinked as he looked at his defeated opponent. 'That was easy...'

Rock blinked as he took in the appearance of the robot calmly floating in the middle of the science museum amidst a sea of unconscious visitors. The robot looked like one of those 'little green men from mars' that was a popular depiction of aliens a while back, only clad in what seemed like a monk's robe.

"Who are you supposed to be?" Rock found he had to ask.

"I am U. F. Bro of the Brobot Masters," the robot stated. "And I can feel the unrighteous darkness within you. A brobot's strength flows from the Broforce. But you have become steeped in the darkness. Anger, fear, aggression; these are the things that hold us back from the path of the Bro. Easily they flow, quick to join you in a fight. But once you start down the dark path, forever will it dominate your destiny."

"Yeah, I've seen the movie," Rock raised an eyebrow as his opponent uncrossed his legs and lowered to the ground. "You should get some original material."

"Very well," the 'brobot' stated as an energy blade shot out of one arm. "Do not bring a gun to a Bro Saber duel."

Rock mused that he wouldn't have done that anyway, not with all of these unconscious people around as he dodged the initial swipe and considered his options. The 'brobots' had been kind enough to simply disable their targets, so he wouldn't feel right breaking out his more dangerous master weapons even if there weren't innocent people around. And since that left him with only one non-ranged weapon, he decided to give it a shot.

The Bro Saber was deflected by the glowing power of the Bro Fist, and Rock took the opportunity afforded by U. F. Bro's astonishment to land a knockout punch.

Downtown business district was Rock's next stop. He was calmly walking down the street looking for a clue as to where his next adversary was when a blue and red blur appeared in front of him.

"Faster than a speeding brollet!" his opponent declared before Rock finished taking in the blue armor, red boots and hands, and the stylized red 's' on the front of the robot's torso. He was still reacting when the newest 'brobot' reared back his fist to punch the air before him. "More powerful than a Brocomotive!"

The gigantic pure-energy train engine that shot forth was about the last thing Rock had expected and he barely dove to the side in time to dodge it.

"Able to leap tall buildings in a single bround!" the 'brobot' declared as he leaped high into the air. High enough that Rock almost lost track of him before he came back down on the other side from where he had been. "I... am Super Bro!"

Rock had only begun to formulate a battle plan when Super Bro launched another Brocomotive at him. With no time to think or dodge, he instead called up the first weapon that sprang to mind and blindly countered with it. To both his and Super Bro's utter astonishment, the Bro Fist completely dispelled the pure energy train engine.

Rock was now at the power plant and once again the 'brobot' he'd come to face was nice enough to come out and face him rather than making him go looking. He was also flying through the air by way of spinning his body so fast that Rock could only make out his otherwise unremarkable and plain-armored head.

"So, you are the one who has been opposing Tornad Bro's righteous bros!" the robot accused. "Now you shall feel the might of my Bromerangs!"

With that, spinning crescent energy blades formed in the centrifugal vortex around the 'brobot' and began flinging themselves in Rock's general direction. Deciding that it hadn't failed him yet, Rock once again went with the Bro Fist and jumped into the air, twisiting around the barely-aimed projectiles as best he could to land his blow. He was not disappointed when Tornad Bro was flung out of controlled flight to crash hard into the ground where his body was revealed to be as plain and unremarkably decorated as his head.

The next area was not one of the 'nicer' neighborhoods, and would usually be beneath the notice of Rock's usual opponents. But since Dr. Brovo's intentions were to eliminate pain and hate, where better to start than the places where violent criminal gangs tended to hang out.

From the looks of it, whichever brobot had come here had been busy. Rock could see the streets littered with unconscious adults and teens who were wielding guns. Well, had been wielding guns. The firearms had been meticulously rendered permanently inoperable by whoever was responsible.

Rock was just thinking that maybe he should come back, like after the police were back on duty and able to make arrests, when an energy arrow passed right in front of his eyes. There couldn't have been more than a couple inches of distance between his face and the shot.

Turning, he saw a robot that was colored to appear shirtless, with camo pants, a red headband, and strangely enough a ram's head. Oh, and a large composite bow with another energy arrow pointed right at him.

"Let me guess," Rock stated as he called up the Bro Fist that had been serving him so well, "Ram Bro and his Bro n' Arrow?"

"Dude, bro," the latest 'brobot' declared as he idly drifted along the waves down at the beach, lying on a surfboard. "Are you the one who's been trashing my bros?"

"I am," Rock declared, "and you're next... um..."

The rather human-like robot in loud Hawaiian trunks smiled as he stood up on his surfboard. "Sorry bro, I guess I didn't introduce myself. I'm the Surfer Bro. And, I don't really like fighting much. I prefer to just ride the Brocean Wave, man."

Rock's eyes widened as energy infused the ocean water and pulled it into a massive wave that began to bear down on the beach upon which Surfer Bro rode his board like a champion.

Stealing himself, Rock charged the wave, determined to reach it before it crested and reared back a Bro Fist to meet the still grinning Surfer Bro.

Rock spat water out of his systems as he teleported back to Dr. Light's lab. The Bro Fist had gone six for six against the Brobot Masters... Even the Metal Blade hadn't been that universal in its effectiveness!

Of course, there was still the issue of the eighth 'brobot' who hadn't been reported anywhere yet. Rock was going to check in with his father and sister (Roll wasn't Awake this Loop) before going back out to look for the last of the 'brobots'. However, as he stepped into the lab he immediately sensed something off.

The lab was too quiet.

Running to the lab proper, Rock skidded to a halt upon seeing the unconscious forms of Dr. Light and Roll with a tuxedo-clad robot standing over them in the middle of a calmly pulsing field of energy.

"I apologize for intruding," the 'brobot' stated calmly, "but you have been making something of a nuisance of yourself in the execution of our righteous cause of great justice. I am Tuxe Bro," the formally-attired machine stated, tapping what looked like a watch on his wrist, "and I assure you I am quite untouchable with my Brotomic Watch."

"Untouchable to most," Rock stated evenly as he raised the glowing Bro Fist in front of him challengingly. To his surprise, Tuxe Bro began to laugh.

"The Bro Fist is indeed the mightiest technique of the Broforce," the 'brobot' allowed, "but only when wielded in the fist of one who understands and embodies the virtues of brotherhood, love, tolerance, peace, and justice. In the hands of a warmonger like you it is powerless."

Rock blinked at the claim, and then narrowed his eyes. "Well, then. Let's see if you're right."

Tuxe Bro stood in place calmly, hands behind his back, as Rock rushed forward to punch the barrier. He had just enough time when the barrier shattered like cheap glass to widen his eyes in astonishment before the same punch impacted his face.

While Rock had gotten the final movement information from Tuxe Bro necessary to track down Dr. Brovo's lair, the 'brobot' had been recalled via emergency teleport. Which meant that he was probably going to have to face all eight of them again.

As such, when he entered a room lined with teleporters, he only had two surprises. The first was that there hadn't been any other defenses present. The second was that one of the Brobot Masters was already in the room, guarding the inactive teleporter on the other end.

"This is... unexpected," Rock allowed as he strode towards the sitting figure of Tae Kwon Bro.

"Yes, it is," the 'brobot' agreed. "To have defeated us all, you are indeed worthy or your mighty name, Mega Bro. But you have not yet mastered the ways of the Broforce and only one who is so worthy may meet with the master bro."

Rock narrowed his eyes. "And how do I prove that?"

"By facing each of us once more, bro, with two new rules," Tae Kwon Bro stated. "First, you must defeat us all in fair combat, or the way to our master will not open. That is the rule of the master bro. I have my own rule as well. I know you have taken our awesome skills with the Broforce, Mega Bro. And so I shall require you to use each of them in only one match of radical combat, and only one against each of us amazing bros so that I may see proof of your mastery. If you righteously fail to do so, I will not rise to face you in fair and just combat, and you will never meet with the master bro."

Rock considered for a moment. "Agreed," he said at last. May I take time to consider my choices first?"

"Of course, bro," Tae Kwon Bro allowed. "There is no hurry."

And so, Rock sat down to analyze the capabilities of each of the Brobot Masters that he'd observed as well as the strengths and limitations of each of their weapons.

"Surf's up, bro!" Surfer Bro yelled as he rode a Brocean Wave towards Rock.

"Sorry, bro!" Rock yelled back as he prepared the Brocomotive. "You've got a train to catch!"

The massive energy engine plowed through both wave and surfer with minimal resistance.

Rock raised the Bro Saber to deflect the energy bolt of the Bro n' Arrow and continued running as Ram Bro hastily tried to reload.

Rock hid behind a wall as G. I. Bro ran past and took aim with the Bro n' Arrow before the military 'brobot' could turn around.

The energy explosive of the Bronade Launcher didn't just knock Tornad Bro out of the air, it completely stopped his rotation as well.

Rock began spinning as he unleashed the Bromerang weapon on his opponent. U. F. Bro raised his Bro Saber in response, but when the spinning blades struck his, they kept spinning right around it as if it were a fulcrum.

Tuxe Bro stood confidently behind the shield of his Brotomic Watch, challenging Rock to even try and hit him. Rock simply smiled and sent a Brocean Wave at the suave 'brobot', the constant pressure of the water shorting out the energy barrier and leaving Tuxe Bro defenseless.

Rock stood still as the Brocomotive shattered on impact with the barrier of the Brotomic Watch, and then began to casually stroll towards the again gobsmacked Super Bro.

"So, you saved my own technique for me," Tae Kwon Bro stated as Rock re-entered the room. The final Brobot Master began to stand and take a combat stance. "I suppose I should be flattered, bro, but simply because you possess the Bro Fist does not mean you have mastered it!"

Rock took in the charging punch of Tae Kwon Bro in a moment and casually held up his palm to catch the 'brobot's' fist. The feeling of the energy in the punch trying to sooth his systems into a passive state came over him again, but he knew what was happening this time. A quick burst of focus to his system override and the feeling passed.

"That's..." Tae Kwon Bro's eyes widened. "That's not possible."

"Of course it is, bro," Rock retorted as he wound up his own Bro Fist and landed a haymaker. "Anything's possible!"

Tae Kwon Bro hit the floor and didn't rise. After a moment, the final teleporter beeped to life and Rock stepped through.

Rock blinked as he appeared on the roof of the building and took in the appearance of Dr. Brovo. The massive barrel chest he'd been expecting. Likewise the muscled tree-trunk arms. The comparatively tiny waist and legs on the other hand...

"So, you're the Mega Bro who, ah, mastered the Way of the Bro so quickly?" the man stated with crossed arms and his eyebrows barely visible over his sunglasses. "You're, ah, little shorter than what I expected."

Rock raised an eyebrow at that. "It doesn't matter, Dr. Brovo, I'm here to stop you."

"Now why would ya wanna do a thing like that?" Dr. Brovo asked in his naturally 'Elvis' voice. "The Way of the Bro brings peace and understanding to all. People have too much pain and hate in them as it is. They seek selfish ends with force and lies, never caring about who they gotta trample to do so. They blindly attack what is different and never take the time to see what about each other is the same. They need to be shown this great light so that they can lay down their weapons of war and embrace each other in the spirit of love and brotherhood. And if ol' Doc Light is still the same cool bro he was when I left, you, ah, should know this. We should be brothers in this great crusade, not enemies."

"I know how it is," Rock admitted, "but this isn't the way. Not everyone follows the best path, but each of us needs to choose our own path, not have it chosen for us. Even if our goals are the same, I can't condone your methods. To force others to follow the ways of peace is no different than forcing them to follow any other way."

"Hmm... you speak well, little bro," Dr. Brovo rubbed his chin. "But you haven't seen what I have. You haven't learned what I learned. In the deep forests of the fabled ninja, I learned how a man communicates his feelings with his fists. On the dark angry streets, I learned how to use those same fists for great justice. In a galaxy far, far, away I learned how to use the Broforce to seek peace and knowledge. In the mythical land of Hyrule, I learned how to tap the Broforce for courage! I've been many places and many things, for I am–"

"Obviously a looper," Rock interrupted, unimpressed.

"Oh, you too, bro?" Dr. Brovo's facial muscles twitched in the manner of someone blinking rapidly.

"Local Anchor," Rock replied. "Well, one of them. It's complicated."

"Gotcha," Dr. Brovo nodded. "But then you should understand the importance of my, ah, mission even better. For eventually, as all things must, the Loops will end. And the nature of the multiverse at the time will become the new reality everywhere. If by then I can spread my message of brotherhood to all the corners of creation, then the new multiverse will be a place of peace, love, and understanding among all!"

"And I'll have to stop you," Rock replied. "For everyone is unique and has their own path to follow, and to force them to follow yours is to betray the value of the very brotherhood you preach. You must understand, if all are to join in brotherhood, we must not only see how we are the same, but we must also embrace our differences and allow them to make us stronger as a whole. To love others even when those others don't accept it. That is the true meaning of brotherhood."

Dr. Brovo was silent for a moment. "You speak strongly, little bro. But as I, ah, said before, I have learned how a man communicates his feelings with his fists." Dr. Brovo uncrossed his arms and spread them wide. "So now you too must prove yourself a man and communicate your beliefs with your fists, while I do the same! But beware! For like the supersonic jet, these fists can move faster than sound!"

Rock recognized the stance as one his father had learned in a recent fused Loop of his and in the moment before the attack was launched, he cupped his hands around his stomach and gathered energy to counter it.

"SONIC BOOM!"

"HADOKEN!"

The explosion of force as the two attacks met obscured the rooftop for a few moments, and when it cleared Rock could see that Dr. Brovo was blinking in surprise again.

"So, you've, ah, been there too?" he said at last.

"No, but my dad has and he taught me," Rock admitted.

"Gotcha," Dr. Brovo nodded. "Well, then I suppose we should do this proper-like," he continued as he turned to a stance meant to launch a charging punch and began to gather the same energy around his fist as what the Brobot Masters used.

Rock blinked, and then took a similar stance, calling on the same technique. Along with the energy, he did his best to lend weight to Dr. Brovo's words about communicating beliefs through fists and focused on everything he'd learned. Yes, there were people who did bad things. There were those who lost their way. But even though he'd had to fight countless times, he still believed that people could be shown the path to understanding and peace with patience instead of force. With those thoughts firmly in his processors, Rock stared into the sunglasses-covered eyes of his opponent and prepared himself.

At some unseen signal, both opponents launched themselves at each other, fists extended to meet knuckle-to-knuckle, and both shouted the name of the technique.

"BRO FIST!"

"I've been such a fool," Dr. Brovo stated for the nth time. Rock hadn't exactly been counting. He was too busy trying to wrap his mind around the fact that his opponent had done a complete one-eighty after a single exchange of punches.

"Look," Rock finally said. "Not to complain, but surely I can't have been the first to beat you at this if you've been to as many other branches as you claim. I'm a relatively young looper after all."

"You ain't," Dr. Brovo admitted. "But all the others... they looked down on me when they did. I could feel it in their fists. The mamasitas all slap me for trying ta appreciate them like a man should appreciate a woman and call me a womanizer or a pervert. All a' the dudes just think I'm a bigger fool than the ones that actually make a career outta being fools. I guess they were right about that."

"Um..." Rock wasn't too sure what to say to that.

"But you?" the man turned to Rock suddenly enough to make the robot jump. "I could feel it in your fist. You actually believe in me. You actually see something in me to believe in. Not... not many people see that in ol' Johnny Bravo."

"So your real name's Johnathan Bravo?" Rock asked.

"You, ah, heard my full name?" the man, Johnny, looked surprised.

"Sorta," Rock nodded. "You were my dad's old lab assistant this Loop, remember? He mentioned you a few times, just never your last name."

"Huh, well call me Johnny," Johnny Bravo smiled, "all my friends do. I just gotta ask, how did you find it in yourself to believe in someone like me who lost his way so badly?"

Rock laughed at that. "I somehow manage to find it in myself to believe a career madman bent on taking over the world just so people will recognize his brilliance can be a better person. Despite literally countless attempts to prove me wrong. I won't lie, it's hard sometimes to keep believing in him, but you? You just want to make the world a better place without hurting people to do it. It's easy to believe in someone like that."

Johnny smiled and extended his fist towards Rock. "Well, that's a mighty nice thing to say, bro."

Rock smiled back as he tapped his own fist to Johnny's.

7.7.7 continued) While the 'Hidden Weapons' style subspace pocket that Ranma developed from one of his rival's techniques is the most common variation of subspace pocket, there's nothing preventing others from inventing their own variation like Robo clearly ha–wait a second... What did Wily just say? Infinity minus one? Ohhhhh snap...

9.2) Penny is the Anchor of the Inspector Gadget Loops. She generally has to deal with her uncle who's convinced he's the Anchor.

9.3) Well, that's certainly one possible way Wily affords everything...

9.4) Don't you hate it when you press one button and the game acts like you pressed a different one?

9.5) You should see the Loops where they're giant robot fanboys instead...

9.6) Technically Eggman has taught several of his creations hate. It just so happens that they tend to end up hating him .

9.7) EPIC RAP BATTLES OF... Wait, didn't I already do this joke?

8.9) Well, that escalated fa–wait... What in the world is up with this numbering...?

9.8) Much better. This happens more or less at the same time as the My Mega Pony Loop (upcoming here, Season one already posted in the MLP Loops). Dr. Light ending up as the Bad Box Art Mega Man was too funny for me to pass up. I imagine his kids (Rock, Roll, and Blues) think the whole thing is hilarious .

9.9) Put your body in overdrive!

9.95) Come at me, bro.

My Mega Pony: Season 1

AN: Finally I have reached a point where I feel I'm not getting ahead of myself if I post this!

My Mega Pony: Season 1

Twilight Awoke this loop in the middle of the familiar library tower, reading a book she was actually unfamiliar with. She decided to take a moment to review her memories to figure out just why she was reading it in the first place.

"Geez, Twilight," Spike's voice cut into her thoughts. "What's got you so excited?"

"The princess assigned me to oversee preparations for the Summer Sun Celebration!" Twilight heard herself exclaiming with very uncharacteristic eagerness in her voice. She'd originally been annoyed at the assignment because of focusing on the return of Nightmare Moon, and while it had become a higher point since then, it was fairly routine due to the Loops. " In Ponyville! "

"Uh, yeah," Spike said suspiciously. "She does that almost every Loop. It's more exciting when that's not what happens, remember?"

'Okay, looping Spike confirmed,' Twilight thought to herself as her mouth took over again.

"But Spike," she heard herself say on autopilot, like this was a familiar rant for this version of her, "it's Ponyville ! The home of Light Labs ! The most advanced and innovative technomagical research and development company in the history of ever !"

'Dear Tree,' Twilight thought in dismay as she found her mouth was fully on Loop memory autopilot and she couldn't stop it, 'I'm a fanfilly.'

"Huh?" Spike said intelligently. Twilight could sympathize. This was rather out of left field.

"Founded by the earth pony genius Dr. Light and his partner Dr. Wily, Light Labs is at least a thousand years ahead of anyone else in the field of technomagical development. The two doctors' discoveries on how earth pony magic can be channelled through solid mediums such as crystals and metals revolutionized magical studies around the world, but they weren't satisfied with that! They went on to show how one race's magic could be converted into another's through controlled processes, not only allowing earth ponies and pegasi to power unicorn devices, but they've broken the monopoly that pegasi have had on large scale weather manipulation and earth ponies have possessed on quality produce since the time of the founders! They've even made fully autonomous mechanical robots for commercial and industrial usage that further revolutionized Equestria's economy! And they're all set to unveil their latest inventions the day after the Summer Sun Celebration! I'll be able to get front row seats! And maybe they can autograph my cloud boots! SQUEEEEEEEE!"

'Holy chlorophyll,' Twilight thought as she lined up the involuntary rant with her now-examined memories for this loop, 'two Unawake earth ponies did all that in what seems like an Equestria baseline? Fanfilly tendencies have been justified.'

Checking in on the preparations for the summer sun celebration had gone smoothly. Of the usual Elements only Dash wasn't Awake this time. A teen Spike had stayed with Rarity to absolutely no shock and overall, no real surprises had occurred save that Fluttershy had decided that she was going to be singing along with her bird choir. The yellow pegasus may have become more confident over the course of the Loops, but what amounted to a solo public performance, even knowing it would likely be interrupted by Nightmare Moon, was a big step for her.

And now she finally had some free time to check out this "Light Labs" place. Such an establishment most likely meant new loopers visiting for a fused Loop, but there was always the slim chance the Loop was just a particularly esoteric variant of Equestria. Those did happen from time to time.

But in any case, she'd get to meet the brilliant minds behind all of those inventions she recalled from her Loop memories, talk with them, exchange ideas. She was so excited she...

...Was apparently doing the happy hoofy dance in the middle of the street. Pine, but these fanfilly tendencies she'd gotten for the Loop were deeply ingrained.

"Well, hello there. Who might you two be?" Twilight greeted the two fillies, well one filly and one robot in the form of a filly, that had answered the lab's door. She knew the first to be Scootaloo and the second looked surprisingly like Silver Spoon, but she had to play ignorant just in case they weren't Awake.

"I'm Scootaloo Light," the orange pegasus filly beamed, "and this is my friend Silver Spoon! We both Awoke real early this morning miss...?" (1)

"Twilight Sparkle," the so-named unicorn beamed back, catching the subtle inflection signaling that the two were Awake. "How has the L–"

Twilight cut herself off with a cough when Scootaloo and Silver made the 'not here' signal. Right. Explaining might be awkward if the wrong person overheard.

"Sorry," she apologized. "How is life at the lab? I imagine it's very exciting! Do you ever have any other friends over?"

"Nah," Scootaloo answered, letting her know that it was just the orange pegasus and Silver of the expanded CMC that were Awake, "not many are too interested in this kind of stuff so my adopted family and I don't get many visitors. Though I've got the coolest older brother and sister by 100%!"

Twilight raised an eyebrow. Only 20% lower than looping Rainbow Dash. High praise from Scootaloo indeed. "Well, do you think anyone would mind if I came in and met the doctors?"

"Not at all!" Scootaloo chirped. "Well, uncle Wily might be a little irate, but that's because he's really protective of the stuff he and dad invent."

"Yeah," Silver added, "he takes a little getting used to." (2)

"I promise not to steal anything," Twilight made the Pinkie Promise gestures as the two led her inside. 'Apple Bloom will never forgive me if I don't get her in here somehow,' Twilight found herself thinking. Even if Apple Bloom wasn't Awake this time, the looping version would never let Twilight live it down if she didn't find some way to get her inside Light Labs. "I just want to meet the two most brilliant stallions in all Equestria!"

"Fanfilly much?" Silver arched a mechanical eyebrow as the purple mare squealed with glee.

"I thought I had that under control," Twilight blushed as Scootaloo snickered.

As it turned out, she got the full tour. Dr. Wily was somewhat abrasive, but some liberal compliments of his intelligence and a bit of buttering up brought him around rather quickly. Dr. Light, by comparison, seemed embarrassed by such attention but was very enthusiastic about sharing his love for science and invention. Neither of them seemed like they were trying to reconcile any memories that conflicted with their lives in Equestria.

Along the tour, she'd met Dr. Light's twin children, his son Rock and his daughter Roll, who were two of the friendliest ponies she'd ever met. Though for some reason Scootaloo and Silver snickered when she told them this and even the twin earth ponies had given her an amused look.

Towards the end, she even got a sneak preview of the doctors latest inventions. A series of six cutting edge industrial robots with personalities programmed to be so close to a real pony that they could react and make decisions like one, in addition to being able to issue commands to lesser industrial robots to facilitate a more efficient work environment. It looked to be the start of a technological revolution the likes of which Equestria usually didn't see outside the discovery of an alien spacecraft, and as she bid her hosts farewell she was excited to see what direction it would go in.

The whole thing was causing her memory to tickle a little bit too, which probably meant this was a fused Loop after all. But she'd perused so much of the Hub's fiction that it was hard to place a new Loop setting immediately, especially if it deviated significantly. Like, say, being dropped in Equestria. Plus she had a backlog of fiction she still hadn't gotten around to reading even after all this time. The Hub had a lot of published works after all.

Even so, she probably could have identified the visitors in a few moments using the search engine she'd developed to sift through the vast Hub media she had digitally stored. However, she found she was enjoying the feeling of newness and the challenge of figuring it out for herself.

"Miss Twilight?" Scootaloo caught up with her a short ways off from the lab. "My brother and sister this Loop wanted me to tell you to meet them later. I told them you'd probably be at the library, so they said they'd meet you there after Pinkie's party."

"Thanks Scootaloo," Twilight smiled. So, the Light siblings were the visiting loopers? She looked forward to meeting them properly then.

Pinkie's typical welcome party was in full swing. Twilight had been mildly surprised that it wasn't a 'welcome new loopers' party as well, but she hadn't brought it up in case she set the party pony off and ended up with Ponyville buried in confetti or something stranger. (3) Currently she was talking with Rainbow Dash when something the other mare said caught her attention.

"Wait," Twilight's found herself interrupting what the current variation of Rainbow Dash had said to her, " you're the 'subject' who volunteered for the 'Rainbooms: The Nature and Capabilities of Pegasus Magic' study?! Ohmygosh! It's so great to meet you! Can I get your auto–ahem"

Twilight blushed furiously as the Unawake version of her friend began laughing her head off. 'Tree damn this Loop and the fanfilly tendencies that come with it!' she yelled mentally. She idly wondered if her natural tendency to get excited over intellectual pursuits was making it harder to resist the impulses that came with her Loop memories. It could be the nearness of the native personality variant to her baseline was making it harder to suppress, which would be an interesting study come to think of it.

"Sorry," she apologized, "I don't know what–"

"Forget it!" Dash waved her off. "The docs were about the only ponies who gave my claim of doing a Sonic Rainboom back then any credit at all, and they were nice enough to help me get set up in Ponyville when half of Cloudsdale blamed me when the docs broke the weather monopoly. For eggheads, they're really cool, and it's great to know somepony actually appreciates what we did together. Besides, Scoots told me that you were a little excitable over that kind of stuff." (4)

"I'll bet she did," Twilight blushed again. "Say, do you know about the pegasus harmpph?"

She'd been about to say 'harness' when Dash shoved her hoof into Twilight's mouth.

"Shhh!" the rainbow-maned pegasus hushed her and glanced around the party to see who'd overheard before removing her hoof and continuing in a whisper. "That's supposed to be a secret! Scoots told me you'd gotten the special tour, but that project's hush-hush! And, yeah, I know about it. I'm the one they're testing it against. Rock, and sometimes Roll, strap the thing on and pretty much try to keep up with me. It's not nearly ready, but when it is it's gonna make Cloud Boots obsolete."

"Wow," she whispered back. "They must be pretty brave ponies. Have they always been like that?"

"What do you mean?" Dash blinked.

"Well, what were they like when they were younger?" Twilight asked, fishing for some information on the visiting loopers before they met up after the party. "Did you go to school with them?"

"Did I go to–?" Dash started before cracking up again.

"What?" Twilight inquired, thoroughly confused.

" Oh , no!" Dash giggled. "Not spoiling the surprise! Rock and Roll would be pissed if I did that! In fact, I should probably go grab Scoots before she slips up, later!"

Twilight twitched as the twin ponies laughed and refused to let her and her looping friends in on the surprise they had in store. It was after the party and Rock and Roll had joined her, Spike, and the other four Awake Elements for a quiet meet and greet. They were indeed loopers and they'd already had the 'welcome to the multiverse' speech so that sometimes awkward hurdle was cleared. The only hiccup was Pinkie having to be regularly restrained from turning it into a full-blown welcome party for the brother and sister pair.

"Sorry, Twilight," Rock grinned as he tapped his boots on the floor. The earth pony stallion's blue metal boots matched his coat and his brown mane was, as Rarity might put it, 'stylishly unkempt'. Topping off his appearance was a tool box cutie mark. "But if you can't tell then we're not letting you know before dad gets a chance. He's been planning this for a while."

"Gah!" Pinkie yelled suddenly. "I can't take it! You've gotta let me throw a 'welcome to Equestria's Loop' party for you!"

"But we already had one of your 'welcome to Ponyville' parties," Roll, the cream-coated and yellow-maned earth pony mare with a cutie mark of a metal broom and red metallic slippers over her hooves, placated. "And it was a lot of fun."

"But it's not the same! You weren't Awake for that one! None of us were!" Pinkie insisted, pulling out a party petard and starting to arm it.

"Not without the whole family," Rock insisted. Surprisingly, Pinkie stopped and sighed as she disarmed her party munitions.

"Sorry, Pinkie," Roll apologized, "but we'd like to have our brother here for that."

"Yeah, okay," the party pony moped for a moment before straightening. "But I get to throw you a huge 'family getting back together' party on top of it when that happens."

"You have another brother?" Twilight asked after the two had agreed to Pinkie's condition.

"Our older brother Blues," Roll nodded.

"He's... estranged at the moment," Rock told them.

"Oh," Twilight blinked. "How long has it been that way?"

"Since our baseline," Roll informed them as her brother sighed. "He's stubborn like that."

The Equestrian loopers blinked as one.

"How...?" Rarity started.

"It's complicated," Rock told them. "And he's repeatedly asked we not say anything more on the subject."

"Well," Twilight decided to change the subject before the atmosphere got any more depressing, "as you may or may not have heard, we like to consider ourselves a sanctuary Loop. We can handle all the native problems just fine, so you two can feel free to take a vacation and relax if you like."

"Er..." Rock hedged and Twilight realized that her offer had apparently not served to reduce tension. "How enforceable is that?"

"We've had some pretty good success using the Elements of Harmony to keep the peace even when visiting loopers don't want to play nice," Twilight told them.

"Oh, yes," Rarity chimed in. "A nice time out on the Moon works wonders for troublemakers."

"No," Rock shook his head, "I mean..."

"What my brother's trying to say," Roll filled in, "is if that's backed up by your Loop's nature or your local admin?"

"Ah, no," Applejack looked confused. "Why would it be?"

"Sorry," Rock apologized, "but our Loop is... well 'anti-sanctuary' probably fits. You see, our Loops usually start out peacefully, just like this one, but no matter what we do to forestall it, a war happens."

The room went silent for a moment.

"We haven't been looping too long, but we've tried a lot of things," Roll continued for him. "The closest we've come to succeeding was becoming villains ourselves, which ended up causing our normal villain to be the hero. Sometimes we join forces against a larger threat, but then it's back to business as usual with us on one side and him on the other. The one time that someone, not us mind you, killed him before he could start his bids for world conquest the situation ended up worse ."

"Uh, if you don't mind me asking, who–?" Twilight cut her question off when the siblings shook their heads in unison.

"Not telling," Rock stated with finality. "Just in case it doesn't happen this time. We don't want to end up tainting your opinion of him and inadvertently causing it anyway."

That... made a lot of sense actually.

"What we're getting at," Roll picked up, "is that we're starting to think something about our Loop is setting things up so that conflict is inevitable. The initial cause has ranged from perceived slights, to well-intentioned extremism, to accidents that induce madness, to the individual in question having been secretly evil the whole time. Our Loop is pretty messed up on top of it too, with bugs, viruses, and a pretty corrupted baseline. So there's often no indication of which way events are going to go either. Some threats come and go between Loops, and every so often something bizarre crawls out of the variants."

"And in every single one," Rock intoned gravely, "at least one of us has had to fight."

"Wait," Spike interrupted. "Which one of you is the Anchor again?"

"Um... both of us, actually," Rock admitted sheepishly.

"You're Co-Anchors?" Spike inquired.

"Not exactly," Roll shook her head. "We're not... 'soul-bonded' or whatever Hephaestus – he's our admin – called it. He says we're 'Joint Anchors', or that we jointly share the position while not being otherwise connected. We understand it's not exactly common."

"Goodness, no!" Rarity twittered. "Why, I've never heard of such a thing!"

"Yeah, the Crash from a while back musta hit yer place pretty hard, huh?" Applejack contributed.

No one missed the double wince from the two visiting loopers when that was mentioned.

"Wait..." Twilight's face scrunched up as she thought before widening her eyes in revelation. "You...?"

"Yeah," Rock admitted heavily, "our Loop is sort of responsible for what everyone calls 'The Crash'. Lucky us, we got chained to front row seats for the event."

"I..." Twilight's mouth worked up and down in shock. Sure, she'd expected to eventually meet whoever was from that Loop where trying to get it online caused the arguably worst event in the history of the Loops, but having them here in front of her...

"Wow, um..." Spike wasn't having any better luck. After all, it couldn't have been their fault. Yggdrasil wouldn't start anyone looping who had a part in destroying an entire reality, so they were just as much victims as the Loop that was lost.

Pinkie's hair had started to go a bit straight as she teared up in response to the revelation and Fluttershy had somehow gotten even more quiet than usual as she sniffled silently.

"...gosh," Applejack tried and failed to offer something. What did you say in a situation like this? "That's..."

"My word," Rarity managed to recover first. "And you witnessed the whole thing?"

'Wait a second,' Twilight's brain latched on to that particular tidbit as the siblings nodded in response to Rarity's question. "You remember it?! You... You actually have memories of the Anchor who was lost?! Then you could..."

She trailed off at the dual shaking heads.

"All we remember about them," Rock told them, "is a hole in space where a person should have been."

"Hephaestus told us recently that he's been examining our memories for any data that could aid the possible recovery of the branch they lost," Roll continued, "but..."

The room got quiet again for a bit, and then Pinkie sprang up suddenly.

"No!" the pink party pony declared forcefully. "No more moping on sad stuff we can't change! We have new friends to get to know, stories to tell, and games to play! Oh, and we have to get ready for Nightmare Moon showing up at what would otherwise be dawn to try and cast everything into eternal darkness. You know, business as usual."

Rock and Roll blinked and looked at each other before turning back to the ponies and dragon.

"Are you sure this sanctuary thing of yours works?" they asked in unison.

"It's done pretty well so far," Fluttershy smiled serenely.

Save for Rock and Roll insisting on accompanying them for the adventure, the whole thing with Nightmare Moon had gone pretty darn close to baseline. In deference to giving their visiting loopers the 'Equestrian Experience', Spike had volunteered to sit out as an Element of Loyalty and allow the local Rainbow Dash variant to fill her usual role.

The interactions between everyone had been rather enlightening. Their visitors clearly had Loop history with Unawake Rainbow Dash, and had asked her if she'd heard from their older brother lately. Apparently Blues had been convinced to keep in touch with the daredevil pegasus even after his estrangement, and that managed to intrigue Applejack enough to get into a conversation with Dash about the mysterious member of the Light family. Roll had then gravitated to Rarity and Fluttershy and the three had gabbed away on the trek about animals, fashion, housekeeping tips, and medicine of all things. Rock had proved to be quite the intellectual, clearly taking after his father, and he and Twilight had gotten along like paper and ink. Interestingly, he also seemed to take to Pinkie Pie pretty well. He was far less random than the premier party pony, but Twilight could tell that like her hyperactive friend, Rock was somepony who genuinely desired to see everyone happy.

Heck, Twilight had even felt some resonance between the two and some of the Elements as they were activated and bonded to her and her friends like in the baseline. It was something that might bear looking into at a later time.

But for now they had a 'Welcome back' party to attend for Luna. And she had a mysterious orb that had been formed when Luna was purified of Nightmare Moon that felt really darn familiar for some reason to examine later.

"What doth rocks and rolling have to do with music?" an Unawake Luna asked of the twin earth ponies. Twilight had to marvel again at how quickly the two had gotten Luna down to a normal speaking volume.

In reply, the two grinned and called out to a nearby Ponyville resident. "Hey Vinyl! You got the karaoke machine hooked up yet?

We need to introduce Princess Luna to our namesake!"

"All ready!" the DJ in mirrored shades piped back, gesturing the two onto an impromptu stage.

"What is this... karaoke?" Luna puzzled as the siblings began to sing.

"Dad likes that old time rock and roll!

The kinda music just soothes the soul!"

"Doctor Bright Light, your majesty," the bearded labcoat-wearing earth pony inventor introduced himself to Princess Luna. "And may I say you dance divinely."

"We thank you, good sir," Luna blushed. She had no idea what had possessed her to get up on stage and dance beside this stallion's children. It was just... that music... It called to her.

"And this is my good friend and partner, Doctor Wily Plan," the white-maned earth pony introduced his frizzy gray-maned and mustachioed earth pony companion, also in a labcoat.

"A pleasure to meet you Princess!" the other pony inventor gushed. "May I say that I have always loved your night sky!"

"Hail and well met!" Luna greeted the scientist. "It pleases us greatly to know how well ponies have taken to intellectual pursuits these days! We have heard tell of the many marvels you both have produced and we would like to hear more!"

"Well, if you don't mind staying until tomorrow," Dr. Light enticed, "you can witness the unveiling of our latest inventions."

"We would be honored, good sirs!"

"Mares and gentlestallions," Dr. Light proclaimed from the podium as a curtain rose, (5) "I present to you the latest invention from the minds at Light Labs, the robot masters!"

Upon the stage stood six robot ponies of various types.

"To oversee forestry management and logging excursions, DLN-003 Cut Mare!"

An orange and white earth pony model with a pair of scissors atop her head jumped off the stage and threw the scissors at an unwieldy log set aside for demonstration purposes. In moments the limbs had been sheared off and the log neatly quartered.

"I also do some mane-styling in my spare time," the robot winked at the impressed crowd.

"For construction, particularly in hazardous conditions, DLN-004 Guts Stallion!"

A truly massive earth-pony model, standing a bit taller than even Celestia, lumbered down off the stage and picked up an I-Beam as easily as a normal pony might heft a baseball bat.

"Built strong to build strong!" the robot rumbled in a deep baritone that complemented the crowd's applause.

"Built for arctic and cold climate exploration, DLN-005, Ice Mare!"

A short pegasus model in a stereotypical parka flew over not to the demonstration area, but to a table of refreshments holding so-far untouched cups of warm lemonade. She then blew a mist over the cups, turning them frosty in an instant.

"I'm also built for cold storage capacity," she smiled as the refreshment table was suddenly swarmed.

"For demolitions and excavation, DLN-006, Bomb Stallion!"

A portly unicorn model bounded to the other side of the stage to a new demonstration area where a shack had been hastily constructed the other day. The robot then whooped as he conjured some explosives and tossed them into the shack. A moment later and all the walls and supports were blown out, leaving the fully intact roof to fall straight down.

"So," Applejack whispered to Twilight as the crowd applauded loudly at the display of precision control, "ya think introducing him ta Trixie would be a good idea or a bad-un?"

"I love my job!" the robot cheered.

"Bad," Twilight whispered back, "definitely bad. Doesn't matter that she's not Awake."

"For waste management, DLN-007, Fire Mare!"

"Hey, look, it's you when you're angry," Pinkie grinned at Twilight as the second unicorn model suddenly produced a flaming mane as she strode over to the second demonstration area. The female robot stared at the debris for a moment before rearing up and blasting flames from her forehooves that reduced the debris to ash.

"No muss," the robot drawled much like Applejack tended to as the reporters' cameras flashed even faster, "no fuss."

"And finally, to rewrite the book on Equestria's growing need for power management, DLN-008, Elec Mare!"

The final pegasus model strode to the front of the stage and spread her wings. Arcs of lightning emanated from her and suddenly the perimeter of the stage was lit up with previously unnoticed lights like Hearth's Warming Eve.

"I knew you'd get a charge out of me!" the robot declared to enthusiastic cheers as a set of pyrotechnics went off along the stage's edge.

"Oh, dear," Rarity giggled demurely. "It's a robot Rainbow Dash. How ever shall we cope?"

"Guess we'll have to practice ducking and covering," Spike shrugged.

"Oh, you'll help me practice, won't you Spike?" Rarity fluttered her eyelashes.

"Get a room you two," Twilight groused.

"Pardon us, master Light," Luna spoke up from where she and her sister sat observing the unveiling, causing the crowd to quiet down. "We know we have been gone from Equestria for a... long time, but surely ponies still begin their counting with the number 'one', do they not? Whither art the first two of thine creations?"

"An excellent question your majesty," Dr. Light beamed, "and one I'm afraid I must let somepony else answer."

With that, Dr. Light beckoned towards backstage, and his two children stepped out to stand before the now confused crowd.

"Hello everyone!" Rock waved cheerfully. "I'm DLN-001, dad's tool-using lab assistant."

"And I'm DLN-002," Roll curtsied before the slack-jawed audience, "housekeeper, and the one who makes sure this motley group of goofs takes proper care of themselves."

"Yeah," Rock rubbed his mane sheepishly, "she's good at that."

"YOU'RE ROBOTS?!" somepony yelled incredulously. 'Huh. Well that explains a lot. They're certainly a lot more life-like in appearance than Silver ended up,' Twilight thought as she looked around for who had yelled. It took her a moment and seeing half the crowd looking straight at her to realize she'd been the one who'd yelled it. 'I'm going to need to put a leash on my subconscious this Loop, aren't I?'

"YES!" a butter-yellow pegasus elated as she involuntarily rose into the air. Fluttershy suddenly realized what she'd done and floated back down, blushing the whole way, but still clearly excited. "I won the pot!"

"Awww," Twilight heard Lyra pout nearby, "I was sure they were humans in disguise!"

"Oh, dear!" Rarity fanned herself dramatically, "My money was on them being his illegitimate children by a summer love he met while on an exotic vacation!"

"I think I had mine on them having stayed with another member of the family until their dad got himself properly set up with his business here," Applejack sighed.

Twilight spotted Rainbow Dash rolling on the ground and laughing as more and more ludicrous disproven theories about the origins of Dr. Light's children were passed around. At least she hadn't been the only one fooled, even among her looping friends. Then again, none of them had exactly checked their magical signature or anything.

"Truly, your children are a marvel of ingenuity," Luna could be heard complementing the good doctor.

"I'm just happy to have them in my life," Dr. Light smiled back while his son and daughter fielded a deluge of questions from the gathered reporters like pros.

Later after the unveiling, Twilight managed to track down Dr. Light and show him the strange orb that had been dropped when Luna was cleansed of Nightmare Moon. Dr. Wily had passed through earlier looking typically sour of him, but she and Dr. Light were too engrossed in studying the object to pay him any mind.

"My goodness, this is extraordinary," Dr. Light proclaimed fervently as he took readings. "It's clearly a power source, but I can see mental patterns inherent in it as well!"

"You mean, that's a pony in there?" Twilight blinked.

"Or some other sapient race," Dr. Light clarified. "Perhaps even one we've never encountered before. We'd have to give it a body capable of communicating with us to know for sure. Would you like to learn how?"

"Me? You want to show me how to build a robot like Rock and Roll?" Twilight blinked, feeling her fanfilly tendencies rising and trying to stamp them out before they embarrassed her again.

It was harder than it sounded. Especially since she was starting to get an idea of why the orb had felt familiar, which meant her maternal instincts were backing up her fanfilly tendencies.

"I managed to help my adopted daughter build her friend Silver," the roboticist smiled, "so it shouldn't be too difficult to teach somepony of your clear capability."

"Yes!" she cheered and began bouncing around the room. "Yesyesyesyesyesyes!"

She was gonna have her daughter around for the Loop! Wheeee!

The positive atmosphere of the previous day seemed so far away now, Twilight mused. Ponyville wasn't feeling the effects directly, but they'd gotten the news on the televised news broadcast the doctors' technomagical advances had allowed to become widespread.

The events they were showing were not heartening. For some unfathomable reason Dr. Wily had stolen the six robot masters and used them to commandeer robots in the techno-savvy city of Manehattan and hold the entire metropolitan area hostage. He was demanding... actually he was sounding a lot like Nightmare Moon come to think of it. Lots of jealousy, some legitimate, some sorely misplaced, and all blown way out of proportion.

The princesses apparently had their hooves full trying to calm a panicking populace to give the situation their full attention and the guard had already been defeated trying to take the city back. No fatalities yet, and Dr. Wily's forces actually seemed to be taking care to incapacitate rather than kill. Currently, Shining Armor was using his barrier spell to contain the hostile forces inside Manehattan, which was taking up all his concentration.

And Dr. Light had just nixed the proposal to use the Elements of Harmony.

"The Elements might work on Dr. Wily, perhaps," the stallion lamented, "but we have no idea if they will have any effect at all on robots. You would all be put in grave danger if they failed, and Wily would likely gain control of the Elements as a result, and who knows what he could do with such artifacts in his madness?"

Twilight thought back to the baseline incident with Sunset Shimmer and concluded that such a thing could be very bad indeed. She was debating ascending to take care of the problem when Rock and Roll stepped forward and determinedly asked to be converted into fighting robots. In deference to the fact that they clearly seemed to know what they were doing, Twilight decided to let them handle things for now. But if it became necessary, she would step in.

Twilight and Dash were both tapped to help with the conversion while the rest of the looping Elements looked on silently, understanding that this was something their visitors did regularly and respecting their decision. The two armored figures stepped out of the final conversion capsules looking every inch the heroes they clearly were used to being.

"I built the two of you as Rock and Roll, after my love of music," Dr. Light smiled sadly as he looked upon the results of his efforts, "you are something very different now."

"You said the hoof-cannons you gave us are called 'Mega Busters', right?" Rock asked.

"Well then you can call us Mega Stallion and Mega Mare!" Roll finished.

Twilight felt like facehooving at the ponified title of a popular video game series from the Hub. That's why their names sounded familiar!

My Mega Pony, My Mega Pony,

Ahh ahh ahh ahhh ahhhhhhhh~~~

My Mega Pony,

I used to wonder what robots could mean,

To a world that's all so serene.

Hooves of Iron.

Tails of Steel.

But with a heart that's kindly and real.

Those corrupted,

They'll defeat!

They won't stop till they have ol' Wily beat!

You have My Mega Pony,

Do you know you're all my mechanical Friends. (*)

Rainbow Dash went through her routine for the upcoming Best Young Flyer competition for the umpteenth time. Who'd have thought so much would happen in such a short time?

Right after Nightmare Moon was beaten, old Doc Wily had gone nutzoid a lot like Luna had a thousand years ago and hijacked a whole city. A city ! According to Twilight, when Luna went Nightmare Moon a thousand years ago, she'd just gone after her sister and busted up their old place in the Everfree. And because he was using robots to hold everyone hostage, no one could be sure the Elements would work as advertised.

So Doc Light's robo-kids had stepped up to the plate and turned themselves into freaking superheroes! They'd marched right into the city and saved everypony! Yeah, they came out a little banged up, but they did it with the fully-restored-to-their-right-minds robot masters marching right out with them, Doc Wily in hoofcuffs, and not one flesh-and-blood pony injured. Not even Doc Wily. Holy snap .

What really blew her mind was just how life in Ponyville managed to continue like it was all no big deal. Gilda had dropped by in a visit that had nearly set her old friend and her new ones at each others throats, and she still had no idea how that sorted itself out. Applejack had nearly killed herself trying to pull in the whole harvest solo, and, oh yeah, they all had tickets for the upcoming Grand Galloping Gala !

If only she could get this darned routine to go the way she wanted it. The competition wasn't that far off!

"Still having trouble with the Sonic Rainboom, are you?" a familiar voice cut into her thoughts.

Rainbow whipped around to see a familiar gray-coated earth pony stallion with a cutie mark of a shield superimposed over a sword. His brown mane was styled into a pompadour that would have looked ridiculous on any pony else, but he managed to make look awesome. With the ever-present shades and his trademark yellow scarf, he was quite the welcome sight.

"Hey Blues!" she greeted Doc Light's wayward son and runaway prototype cheerfully. "How's life been treating ya?"

"So," Rock collected his thoughts, "this Trixie character tends to come in, boast about some feat she doesn't even realize the true scope of, challenge everyone that she can beat them at their own special talent, and all because she's convinced it's the best stage persona she could use?"

"Pretty much," Twilight nodded. "And after alienating half the town by humiliating them onstage, a pair of impressionable colts get it into their heads to go into the Everfree and wake up an ursa minor so they can see the impossible feat for themselves. And since I like Ponyville un-stomped I try to head that off if I can, usually by nudging her in a more productive direction. And it's 'everypony', not 'everyone'."

"Dad programmed us for political correctness in regards to the myriad of sapient species that inhabit the world. That's my story and I'm sticking to it," Rock insisted. "Wait a second. This Trixie is an over-the-top ham, right?"

"Every time I've met her," Twilight agreed. "Why?"

"Has anyone seen Auto?"

"Oh," Twilight blinked as she recalled the goofy stallion-bot who ran Light Lab's storefront and mechanic shop in town. The hammy robot who liked to build ridiculous over-the-top contraptions in his spare time. "Oh, dear."

"No, Dash," Blues sighed, "I'm saying that you being naturally suspicious is part of what makes you such a good fit for the Element of Loyalty. Some might say that the opposite of loyalty would be betrayal, but that's along antithetical lines. Suspicion is the opposite along complementary lines. You've heard of the Yin-Yang theory, right?"

"Duh," Dash rolled her eyes. "It's part of my martial arts classes. The whole 'everything in balance' thing."

"And 'balance' is synonymous with 'Harmony'," Blues completed the thought. "The Elements couldn't work with ponies that embodied only positive traits, because that's not very harmonious, is it? Like night balances day, there needs to be a shadow aspect that balances the light. Suspicion is the logical shadow aspect of Loyalty. Because you are loyal to your circle of friends and the community at large, you are suspicious of anything that might jeopardize them."

Dash was quiet as she mulled that over while the two walked into town. Huh, it looked like there was a show or something getting started.

"The same should be true of the others," the rogue prototype continued. "Honesty works along with Deception, for to uncover truths one must grasp how they can be hidden. To be truly honest, one needs understand the ways in which they can be dishonest. This is especially true in the matters of self -deception."

"I dunno..." Dash hedged doubtfully.

"Plus you'd be surprised how easy it is to deceive some with nothing but honesty," Blues smirked. "As for the others, like many parents show Kindness to their children, they also display great Ferocity in their defense. Generosity often goes hoof in hoof with Ambition, for one must have before one can give . Laughter connects with others in order to spread joy, which opens the possibility for great Sorrow when those connections are severed."

"And what about Magic, smart guy?" the stunt pegasus and part-time lab assistant challenged. "Magic's not exactly a personality trait, is it?"

"You'd think that," Blues smirked, "but you'd be wrong. The secret lies in the origins of the word. Long before Celestia or Luna, there was an order of unicorns known as the Magi. They were the ones who moved the sun and moon and turned the seasons, and none outside the order understood their secrets. The secret knowledge of the Magi came to be known as 'magic' long before even other unicorns referred to the effects generated through their horns as such. The Magi were the only ones in those days that could be called scholars, and in a time when few others could even be considered educated. They were the seekers of knowledge, and the ones who always seemed to know what to do when mysterious events occurred. That is what 'Magic' is: Things the Magi know."

"Wow," Dash blinked. "Yeah, that's Twilight all over. How do you know stuff like this? I thought you were, ya know, developed for the Royal Guard."

"You don't honestly think my father would program a potential son without a thirst for intellectual pursuits, did you?" Blues returned flatly.

"No," Dash rubbed her head sheepishly. "You're still not gonna talk with him are you? Look, I know whatever it was that happened between you two probably sounded bad, but–"

"Not..." Blues interrupted her. "Not yet. I'm not ready. But... thanks for not giving up anyway."

"No problem," Dash smiled as the two inserted themselves into the crowd around the traveling stage, even as she cursed the stubbornness of Doc Light's eldest son.

"Well then, Trixie hereby challenges you, Ponyvillians," an Unawake Trixie dared the crowd. "Anything you can do, the Great and Powerful Trixie can do better. Any takers?"

"I'll take that challenge!" a portly metal and mostly-green stallion with large red bubble-shaped eyes, a literally square jaw, and a large bolt in the top of his head declared as he jumped up on the stage and dramatically opened a paper fan designed like Equestria's flag while pointing at the showmare. "Auto is in da hooooouusse!" (6)

"Okay," Twilight facehooved. "The good news is that I think we've avoided the Ursa Minor incident. The bad news is that your friend still managed to destroy Trixie's stage and damage the town."

"Yeah," Rock winced as he surveyed the damage caused by Auto's last one-up on Trixie. That had escalated a lot faster than he'd been prepared for. "Sorry about that."

"And seriously, when did he convert the shop into a pseudo-mecha?" Twilight asked. How would be a good question too. No one in Ponyville had noticed him doing it. Though perhaps the renovations turning the store front into a giant replica of the upper portion of Dr. Light's mobile suitcase Eddie should have been a clue that Auto was up to something wacky.

"He's native to my Loop, not Awake, and I'm still trying to figure him out," Rock shook his head as he stepped up to offer his help rebuilding Trixie's wagon-stage. After moving 'Big Eddie's' hydraulic foot off of it. Maybe he should just offer to have Light Labs invent her a whole new one.

And he also needed to rescue Auto from the enraged showmare's assault. Maybe.

Things had been going more-or-less according to the general 'Equestrian Experience' plan she'd put together for visiting loopers since the capture of Dr. Wily. In essence, the plan involved the Awake Elements sticking relatively close to the baseline while doing their best to minimize collateral damage.

But a few derailments were to be expected. For example: Fluttershy had gotten praise for her 'new level in badflank' from the Unawake Rainbow Dash during the snoring dragon incident.

A big one was how the Gala tickets had proceeded. Both Applejack and Pinkie Pie had convinced the Apples and Cakes to put in catering bids which had netted both business and complimentary tickets. Furthermore, Light Labs had such celebrity status that they'd apparently been down for Gala invitations since before the Loop began. Dr. Light was still getting over the betrayal by his friend and colleague, and so had gifted both his and Wily's tickets to Spike (who he'd never known as a 'baby' dragon) and Rarity. Rock and Roll, and even Dash, in her capacity as part-time assistant, had gotten tickets as well. Which left no problems with Twilight letting Fluttershy have her extra. It was rather interesting how well it all worked out to be honest.

Then there was the parasprite incident. They'd been hashing out how to handle it without damaging Ponyville, or just skipping it altogether, when the reports came in that parasprites were already loose in the town.

Apparently it was Auto's fault (big surprise, the bot was like a mad scientist/Pinkie-lite/Trixie-ham/fan colt mish-mash at times) and they'd quietly agreed not to use any quick-fixes. The nutty mechanic needed to learn that his actions had consequences.

The mad scramble for instruments had been harder than they recalled though. They'd forgotten how difficult fighting their way through panicked Ponyvillians could be at times, but in the end they'd gotten the swarm back into the Everfree with minimal overall damage and a deal with Dr. Light to let him study one under controlled conditions to see if non-musical countermeasures could be developed.

And then Celestia had shown up early for her scheduled visit, surprising the heck out of Twilight. Differences like that didn't tend to be innocuous.

"Hello, Princess," she greeted. "You're early. I'm afraid we aren't quite ready to receive you properly."

"As much as I wish this visit was social, my pupil," Celestia replied, all business, "I'm afraid my visit will need to be cancelled. I am stopping by to give you warning of a matter most grave before I return to emergency duties."

"What matter?" Twilight asked, getting a sinking feeling.

"Dr. Wily has escaped custody and is currently loose in Equestria."

"You don't seem all that surprised," Twilight observed how the two visiting loopers were taking the news.

"We really aren't," Roll shrugged. "We've discussed trying to convince someone to send Wily to the moon, with enough supplies to build a self-sustaining habitation for one of course, but we're pretty sure he'd come back in a lunar-built skull cruiser or something. There just isn't any prison we've come across that can hold him indefinitely."

"Is something wrong, Silver?" Scootaloo asked her currently mechanical friend who seemed to be crying. Or at least as good an imitation as her body allowed for.

"No, it's nothing," Silver insisted. "It's just–"

You're not even a real pony!

I am so! I even have my own cutie mark!

And it's just as fake as the rest of you! Fake pony! Fake pony!

"It's Diamond Tiara," Silver sighed. "She... How did you three ever put up with us?!"

"We kinda didn't," Scootaloo admitted. "Not in the baseline, and not when we were new loopers. It took us all a bunch of Loops before we managed to mature enough to deal with it. And not being your friends kinda helped with not taking it personally I guess. I can't imagine how hard it must be for you since, you know..."

"I kinda wish I couldn't either," Silver Spoon sighed. "I had a hard time getting used to the 'new' Diamond at first, but I think we're closer now than we ever were. Closer than our baselines ever could have been, I think. And it hurts because I know now how awesome my best friend can be and I have to watch this stubborn, petty, little rrrggh... just waste her potential! How the leaf did you three manage to get through to her again?!"

"It was all Applebloom, remember?" Scootaloo reminded Silver. "They told you how Discord stranded them together on a desert island, 'Bloom had already taken all her useful stuff outta her subspace pocket and decided not to use her looping abilities so it would be fair to DT meaning they'd starve if they didn't work together."

"Sorry," Silver moped. "I just keep hoping that something less... life threatening could work."

"Well..." Scootaloo rubbed her chin, "You know how she likes to suck up to her dad's rich business partners, right?"

"Of course," Silver sniffed. "How do you think we knew each other originally?"

Scootaloo shrugged the retort off before replying. "Well, 'poppa Light' runs a pretty successful business..."

Silver blinked and began to grin as wide as her metal face would allow as a plan began to come together.

"Looking good, Dash," Roll grinned seeing the nervous pegasus in the gala dress Rarity had designed for her.

"Seriously?" Dash questioned, looking uncomfortable. "I was kind of imagining something..."

"20% cooler?" Roll and Rarity deadpanned together.

"Ah-heh..." Dash rubbed the back of her head sheepishly.

"Rainbow Dash," Rarity admonished, "I have seen what you would consider 'cool' and it is not proper gala wear!"

"Besides," Roll added, "with the laced sandals and the laurel wreath, you look like you just stepped out of the winner's circle from the ancient Equestrian Games."

Dash blinked as that sunk in and turned to look herself over in the mirror again, striking a few 'victory' poses. "You really think so?"

" Do give me some credit, dear," Rarity sniffed. "I do not merely design fabulosity in this shop, I also match that fabulosity to the personality of the intended wearer and you are nothing if not an athlete. To suggest that I would allow anything unsuited to that trait to grace your frame," 'at least when I'm not deliberately embarrassing you for a prank,' she added silently, "is an insult to my profession."

"Yeah, well..." Dash fished for something to redirect the conversation, "what about Roll's dress? Not a whole lot to that one."

"Miss Roll is a very simple mare," Rarity huffed. "Excessive adornment just does not suit her. And red is quite her color, would you not agree?"

Indeed, Roll was currently modeling what could be termed a stereotypical 'little red dress' were it not for the subtle circuitry highlights that shimmered when the light hit them just right.

"I am more curious as to who the stallion is you requested the suit for," Rarity decided to strike back.

"Dash!" Roll declared with acute interest. "Do you have a date ? Who is it? Where did you meet them?"

"And how did you come by the extra ticket, dear?" Rarity inserted.

"Whoa!" Dash backed up from the sudden assault. "He's just an old friend! No one you'd know," 'and I'm trying to fix that, stubborn Blues...' she cursed mentally, "and the lab got an extra ticket for some reason! Honest!" (7)

"Hmmm... yes," Dr. Light mused at the idea his adopted daughter and her friend Silver had suggested. "A business arrangement with Mr. Rich could be quite the boon for Light Labs if done properly. I'll see about making an appointment after Twilight and I finish up here."

"Thanks dad!" Scootaloo and Silver chirped as they raced back out.

"Ah, to be young again," Dr. Light chuckled as he turned back to the project he was helping Celestia's prized student put together. Had the filly not insisted on making such a complex model, they'd have already been done. But he'd been so intrigued by the prospect of making a properly functioning alicorn model that he'd let himself be talked into it. Why, the advances they'd made in cross-race magical conversion just to get this one robot working the way it needed to alone ...

"Focus doctor," Twilight's voice cut through his musings. Ah, how far she'd come from the hero-worship she'd started with. But familiarity and the informal air they strove to create around the lab had a way of tempering such things.

"Yes, of course," he replied. They were in the most delicate final stage, the connecting of the strange orb that the mystical discharge the cleansing of Nightmare Moon from Luna had produced to the robot body's processors. Done properly, the orb should function like an IC chip. "Okay, you should connect the thaumic actuators to the..."

Twilight worked as the good doctor gave general directions. He'd shown her how to build and connect everything, but the one who had done all the physical work on this robot was Twilight herself. This was to be her child after all, not his.

Save for the race model difference, the body was like Silver Spoon's, a metal filly with the capacity for later updating to a more mature model. Scootaloo may have wanted a friend her own age back then, but he knew she'd want that friend to grow with her eventually.

He watched as Twilight made the last connection and closed the outer shell while the systems booted up for the first time. The robot filly blinked and looked around in confusion before fixing her gaze on Twilight.

"Momma?" the robot filly asked confusedly. "Where did I Wake Up?"

'Interesting inflection on that question,' Dr. Light mused. Apparently Twilight's handling of the orb had created some manner of imprinting. No sign of the corruption Nightmare Moon was known for, thank goodness, and the robot filly hadn't even needed to be told who had built her. Absolutely fascinating.

"Right where you were supposed to, Nyx," Twilight's eyes watered before she enveloped the so-named mechanical filly in a hug. (8)

Dr. Light promptly decided that this was a private moment and proceeded to make himself scarce.

'Okay Dash,' the pegasus mare psyched herself up, 'you've got this. So, maybe you've been having some trouble doing a Sonic Rainboom on command, but everything else you've got down pat. So what if your old classmates from Flight School are still jerks? So what if half of Cloudsdale's still giving you dirty looks because you helped some smart guys break the weather monopoly? So what if Rarity just wowed everyone with that flutterwing spell Twilight cast on her? So what if Roll's debuting the pegasus harness right after your turn? It's like Doc Light said, no matter what you try to do, there will be ponies right there telling you you can't. If you really want to be the best no one's going to just hand you the title. You gotta make them believe you deserve it.'

She stepped out to cheers from some, boos from others but let it all wash over her. Her only focus was on her routine. Nothing else mattered.

And it went amazingly. The shifts and turns were perfect. The crowd oohed and aahed in all the right places. She could tell that even her detractors were impressed. And then it all went south.

The blast of wind had come out of nowhere and ploughed her straight into the stands. Her head was ringing when she heard a trio of impacts hit near her while she extracted herself.

"I'll let that one slide," an unfamiliar voice boomed over the stadium, "but if any one other than the Mega Mane or Mega Mare step forward then my seven brothers and their armies will destroy the areas they control."

"Oh Celestia!" a stallion was panicking near her. "My buds! They tried to catch Spitfire and got knocked off! They're not flying! Help!"

Dash didn't even think twice. A quick glance around showed the other Wonderbolts weren't conscious enough to make the rescue, so she opted to go after the falling ponies instead. She leapt off the stands and rocketed downwards towards the three as fast as she could, but the lead they had was too far for her to make it at subsonic speeds.

She pushed harder and harder as she heard Roll fight against the attacker and the familiar barrier of air formed in front of her.

"You cannot defeat Air Tercel!" (9) boomed the attacker above as she struggled against the air resistance, desperately trying for more speed. Three ponies' lives were counting on her, and Rainbow Dash didn't let others down if she could help it.

BOOM

And suddenly the resistance was gone. She'd broken the barrier, but she didn't have time to celebrate as she grabbed the three unconscious pegasi and began to pull up as sharply as she dared to avoid the ground.

Whew. They were safe and she even had enough momentum going to get them back up to Cloudsdale. On the way back up, she passed the falling body of a buff blue metal griffon with a huge fan in its torso and shortly after she was depositing a recovering Spitfire and two familiar stallions on the clouds.

Of course it would be Hoops and Score that she just saved. Along with their aptly named pal Dumb-Bell, they were the worst bullies in all of Cloudsdale. But... she had to be honest. She'd have gone after them even if she'd known. They were jerks, but they didn't deserve to die for it.

"Miss Dash!" some reporter shoved a microphone in her face out of nowhere. "Is it true that the power of friendship is what allowed you to do a Sonic Rainboom?"

"Huh?" Dash blinked. Where the hay did they get that idea? "No. I mean, Spitfire's my idol, but we're not friends."

"Is it true that you're in an illicit three-way relationship with the two stallions you saved?" the reporter didn't even seem to have heard her.

"Like buck !" she yelled loud enough to bowl the idiot over. "I hate these jerks! They're my worst enemies short of Doc Wily!"

"Then, why did you save them?" someone else asked. Dash blinked and seriously considered the question for a moment.

"Because if working at Light Labs has taught me anything, it's that we're here to help everypony ," she told the more reasonable pony, "not just those we like. And, yeah, you can quote me on that."

"Blast it," Rock muttered in the stands as the commotion started to die down, though not quietly enough for Twilight to miss overhearing.

"What?" she asked curiously.

"You heard Air Tercel before Roll engaged him, didn't you?" Rock began rhetorically. "How he referred to me as 'Mega Mane' instead of 'Mega Stallion'?"

"Yeah," Twilight mused. "That was odd... It's inaccurate of course, but nonetheless closer to your baseline title."

"Which means there's a good chance Dr. Wily's Dreaming again," Rock sighed, before noting Twilight's puzzled expression. "I'll explain later, but right now Roll and I need to go and get the other seven before they get tired of waiting for us and do something we'll all regret."

Roll took cover behind some factory machinery as her opponent blasted fire at her. Of course Heat Man's local variant would be dragon-based.

"First Flash Mare, then Crash Mane, and now Heat Drake," Roll muttered as she did her best to avoid damage and find the best opening to retaliate. She and her brother were being led on a scripted series of battles that seemed designed to ensure they got almost all of the master weapons they needed after they'd be useful. It was almost like Dr. Wily was daring them to use weapons they couldn't have gotten yet. Yeah, he was definitely Dreaming.

Rock swore as he dodged another timberwolf. He'd taken down Bubble Mare and Quick Mane already, but the local variant of Wood Man had holed up in the Everfree and had taken control of the resident timberwolves. All of them. Or at least what looked like it.

"Attack my loyal pack!" the feral wooden robot growled, "Attack in the name of Wood Alpha!" (10)

'Leave it to Dr. Wily to make the local hostile flora even worse,' Rock cursed as he blasted a few more of the wooden wolves and tried to get a bead on their leader. He stopped as he spotted movement from the defeated timberwolves. Were they reforming ?

Dr. Light was helping direct his son and daughter's movements, with the enthusiastic aid of the Elements of Harmony, when a proximity alert went off. As more of the interior defenses, a necessary precaution since his former partner's attempts to conquer Equestria, went offline, he tapped a few buttons on the console.

And then the door to the room was cut from its frame.

"Hello doc, ladies," the robot that strode in greeted with sinister cheerfulness. His armor was patterned in red, yellow, and black with saw blades in the place of his mane. He formed a circular sawblade in a slot on each forehoof and set them spinning ominously. "Now if you all would back away from that computer nice and slow, you can all get out of this with your limbs still attached."

Rarity stepped forward, scowling. "Now see here, you–"

The blade that launched at her from the robot's hoof came so fast and sudden that Twilight almost didn't get a shield up in time. She'd later realize that the trajectory was a warning shot meant to leave her fashionista friend with a bad mane-cut and possibly short an ear, but not dead. And in the end, she needn't have bothered, because the blade was intercepted by a glob of liquid adhesive and pasted harmlessly against the wall.

"Who are you?" the invading robot asked the one who'd intercepted his shot.

An orange and black robot pony with a head that looked like a paste dispenser stepped in and stared at the invader. "DLN-009: Bond Mane," he declared.

"What a coincidence," the invading robot glared back, "I'm D W N-009: Metal Mane."

"And then the nasty robot was all like 'grr! I'm gonna cut ya up'!" Pinkie related as Rock and Roll both listened over the communications channel, "and Bond Mane was all like 'not on my watch pardner'! They fought like kung fu ninjas back and forth, trashing everything in sight for miles and–"

"Actually, Bond Mane blasted Metal Mane with some hefty adhesive and left him plastered against the wall," Twilight interrupted, rolling her eyes. "Your dad immediately disabled his communicator and mobility, but he's still otherwise functional."

"Good," Rock replied over the com. "We're coming back to get his data and correlate it with the rest so we can find out where Wily's holed up."

Twilight watched as Rock and Roll in their 'Mega Pony' armor bumped hooves before entering the lab. It was interesting how little fanfare occurred to indicate what she knew was happening when they did that. The ability to scan and download information from a subject so thoroughly by just touch ...

The looping student of Celestia stamped down her rising fanfillying. This was not the time.

Think about something else... Like how they made use of the long distance teleport network Light Labs had set up to transport non-biological items and was even now being refined so it could be used on living subjects...

'Down girl,' she ordered her Loop-memory subconscious. The two robot heroes were talking with Dr. Light. Apparently their shared data just needed one more piece to be complete and allow them to track where Dr. Wily had gone. The piece Metal Mane had.

As one, the two robot ponies went over and touched Wily's robot, and then everything went to Tartarus.

SERVE WILY!

Rock recoiled as dark electric arcs ran over his and his sister's systems alike. This was even worse than that malware Dr. Wily had snuck into the second set of robot masters in the baseline. He thought there might even be a mystical aspect to it...

OBEY WILY!

It was only their long experience with fighting off reprogramming and other forms of mind control that meant they weren't rushing to fulfill Dr. Wily's bidding right now. As it was, it was taking everything they had just to remain immobile.

LOVE WILY!

"T-twi...light..." he heard Roll grate out. "Help..."

"Please..." he managed to add.

FOR THE GLORY OF WILY!

The whole lab was frantic when something hit the two after downloading Metal Mane's data. Wily's robot had shut down from the backlash, but the damage was done. Bond Mane had needed to glue both heroes to the wall so they could be examined without risking them harming anypony, and the news was anything but good.

"They're contaminated with an energy similar to that of Nightmare Moon," Dr. Light gave the prognosis to the gathered Elements. "It's really quite insidious. I couldn't tell it was even there until they had all the pieces that Wily placed in each of his robot masters."

"It's different too," Twilight added, all business. "I've been talking with Luna and she likened her corruption to a whisper in the back of her mind so subtle it was hard to differentiate from her own thoughts. One that poked at her insecurities until the dark thoughts it put forth began to sound like good ideas and any other options were obscured by the constant repetition. What they've got is more like a voice screaming at them, making it hard to think period."

"My attempts at developing an anti-virus have failed," Dr. Light admitted. "I am unable to remove this darkness from my children."

"Which means it's up to us, girls," Twilight told her friends. "If we had more time, we could research other methods, but Dr. Wily needs to be stopped now and only these two have the information needed to find him. I've already had Spike send a message to Princess Celestia requesting the use of the Elements of Harmony for this and they should be arriving shortly. Are you ready?"

Five determined nods were her reply.

Rock felt the wave of Harmony wash over him and sweep away the dark pounding in his processors. Later, he would describe it like getting wake-up slapped with a revelation wrapped in a humbling sense of peace and acceptance.

The sudden absence of the dark malware was just as jarring as its activation though, and he slumped where he was pasted to the wall next to his sister. However, a quick assessment of the remaining data had his head whipping right back up.

"I know where Dr. Wily is!" both he and Roll declared together.

Twilight stared at the video feed from the robot heroes showing Wily's Skull Fortress.

"How the hay did nopony notice this?!"

"Hahahaha! Feeble Equestrian robots!" Dr. Wily laughed as his form twisted and bent in a manner depressingly familiar to his twin opponents. "You cannot stop me! I possess the power of the stars!"

The room dissolved into an endless night sky as Wily turned from an earth pony into a vaguely pony-like alien form.

"Oh, come on!" Roll shouted in disbelief as she and her brother dodged a beam of energy directed at them. "No way you're really an alien!"

"What you think is of no consequence!" the alien-thing-that-was-supposedly-Wily retorted. "Flee and warn Equestria that I am merely the vanguard! Doom is coming! HAHAHAHAHA!"

Rock ignored the taunting. This kind of thing was old hat for him by now. Roll had agreed to keep Wily-alien busy while he checked the perimeter.

'Good,' he thought as his hoof bumped the wall right where it should be. 'He's still using a hologram for this. Not sure what we're going to do if we ever end up in a variant where Wily really is an alien like he keeps trying to claim, but this we can handle.'

Rock turned his Mega-Buster to where he recalled the field of stars began to appear and fired, ignoring Wily's sudden call for him to stop.

The twin robot pony heroes stood side by side as the hologram faded to reveal a metal room empty save for the control panel the real Wily Plan was operating.

"Er... pay no attention to that pony behind the hologram?" Wily sweated as both Mega Ponies glared at him.

"Dr. Wily," Rock stated, "you're under arrest."

"You have the right to remain silent," Roll continued before Wily slammed a hoof on his control panel.

"Bah!" the mad doctor declared, suddenly energetic. "You fools understand nothing! I am the chosen vanguard! Nightmare Moon was chosen, but she couldn't hack it, and so the stars decided to give the job to a real genius! They shall take this world for their own and I shall pave the way! Then none shall be able to deny that I am truly the greatest! "

Rock and Roll were so busy parsing this new rant that they almost forgot that Wily often had a secret escape route. They had barely started moving when the doctor dropped through a trap door that closed after him.

"WARNING," a mechanical voice rang out. "SKULL FORTRESS SELF-DESTRUCT IN FIVE MINUTES."

The rant may have pointed to something different going on behind the scenes of this Loop, but the rush to outrun the castle's self-destruct was so familiar by now it could have been done with their optics off.

The reports had been filed, and the two heroes were now resting from their ordeal as they regaled their collected friends, both Awake and not, of their battles.

"And then Ditzy Doo drops right out of the sky and collides with Bubble Mare, smashing them both into a nearby wall," Rock told the gathered ponies. "They both go like this," Rock took a moment to cause his eyes to circle aimlessly and spoke the next line in a falsetto, "'I just don't know what went wrong' before falling unconscious together."

Laughter chorused through the room at Rock's impression.

"All joking aside though, she probably saved my life," Rock continued seriously. "Or at least prevented serious injury. I'm going to set up a tab with Sugarcube Corner to give her free muffins every day in perpetuity as thanks."

"He really said 'the stars' had chosen him?" Twilight asked pointedly once she'd managed to get the two into a more private meeting with only Awake individuals present.

"Not those exact words," Roll clarified, "but yes."

"That's... troubling," Spike mused. "The prophecy of Nightmare Moon said 'the stars shall aid in her escape, but..."

"But it's normally just an alignment of planets and moons and such," Twilight finished for him. "Still, we've had a bunch of variants where 'the stars' were more than that, but there's no real pattern to who or why."

"And Wily's not normally known for working with anyone," Rock added, "much less for anyone. The first is a short list that frequently ends in betrayal, and the second is practically nonexistent and has so far never been a case of Wily doing so both willingly and knowingly. Safe money's on either Wily, 'the stars', or both using the other."

"Could he be infected like Nightmare Moon was?" Rarity asked.

"It's possible," Roll admitted.

"But the fact remains that he hasn't really been acting any different from what we're used to," Rock added. "If he is corrupted by the nightmare, it didn't have to work too hard."

"Which would explain why he went sour so durn fast," Applejack added.

"No more than usual," Rock clarified. "Corrupted or not, neither theory is outside the realm of possibility."

"Okay, that's going nowhere," Twilight cut off debate. "You promised me an explanation on what you meant by Wily 'Dreaming'."

Rock sighed before launching an explanation. "As you know, our branch is pretty damaged. Inconsistent baseline, bugs, viruses, the whole nine yards. There's apparently a relatively stable bug that's occurred in both Dad's and Dr. Wily's Yggdrasil codes that allows them to randomly access memories from previous Loops they existed in. They tend to think of it as deja vu, a flash of brilliance, or premonitions, but they occasionally do things that can only be explained by Loop memories, however partial."

"I've heard of something like that before," Twilight pondered. "A bunch of people in the Loop the Norns spend their time in ended up being able to retain Loop memories by way of consistent exposure to their divine auras, but no trained physical skills like a looper would. At least that's the most plausible theory I came up with. But their memories are much more coherent."

"Well, Wily's has been a recurring headache for us," Roll informed them. "It may be inconsistent, but we've noticed that if we use certain tactics too much then he prepares for them more often. And then there's the fact that even without Dreaming he's smart enough to improve his inventions to match us if we start off too strong or overcome obstacles too easily."

"It's only going to be a matter of time before the stuff he's learned here ends up in something he makes back home," Rock finished wearily.

"Oh, dear," Fluttershy sympathized.

"Um... sorry?" Pinkie grinned awkwardly.

"Not your fault," Rock dismissed their worries. "We're used to Wily pulling strange things out of nowhere."

"So long as no one uses anything dangerously potent, we should be able to deal with it with no more problems than usual," Roll clarified.

"We could still blast him with the Elements," Spike offered.

"Let's table that option until we actually find him," Twilight told her assistant/little brother before turning back to the visiting loopers. "Sorry the whole sanctuary thing isn't working out like it normally does."

"Are you kidding?" Rock grinned suddenly. "This has been great! We can actually walk around town without being mobbed by hero worshipers!"

"Yeah," Roll agreed happily. "And we haven't had to deal with one anti-robot terrorist organization, robot worshiping cult, or paranoid government agent since we got here!"

There were synchronized blinks from the Equestrian loopers as they processed that.

"Hey, Blues!" Rainbow Dash greeted her wayward friend at the edge of the Whitetail Woods. "I got your message! You finally ready to go talk things out with your dad?"

"No," the prototype robot decisively smashed her hopes. "I just wanted you to know that I'm leaving for a while."

"What?" Rainbow Dash blinked. "But..."

"I'm sorry," the shades-wearing robot stallion told her truthfully, "but there's something I have to go do."

"You're going to look for Wily, aren't you?" Dash asked him flatly.

"...Yes," the wayward brother of Equestria's heroes admitted. "He's up to something bigger than anyone knows and someone has to find out what."

"Okay, I guess I can accept that," Dash rubbed the back of her head. "On one condition!"

Blues's eyebrow raised above his shades curiously. "And what would that be?"

"That you're back in time to take me to the Gala," Dash stepped forward and tucked a golden ticket into his scarf. "No excuses! Your dad's not going, and I don't know what the hay's up between you two in the first place, but you owe it to your brother and sister to at least meet them. And a formal setting's as good as any!"

Blues stared back at her emotionlessly before turning away, his scarf rustling in a sudden breeze.

"No promises," he told her as he walked away. After a few steps, he turned his head back. "But I'll do my best."

In the past few weeks, Diamond Tiara's world had been turned upside down. Her father had met with Dr. Light to make a business arrangement, a lucrative business arrangement, which meant that the bla–pegasus that was his adopted daughter had suddenly jumped from peasant to equal on the social scale where she was concerned. Which meant she needed to play nice or risk her father's contract since the odd but brilliant stallion thought the world of his children.

It had been an... interesting experience.

The fa–robot pony Silver Spoon had proven to be very cultured and refined once she'd begun actually paying attention to her. As... she'd... put it: 'Someone has to make sure Scoots behaves herself properly'. And then Scoots had taken mild offense and the two had gotten to arguing.

That had been an eye opener. She'd thought Silver Spoon was some sort of personal servant that was created to be even more obedient than the hired help and there she was arguing childishly with the one she supposedly served.

Even the pea–Applebloom and Sweetie Belle that Scootaloo liked to 'hang out' with had proven good... friends in the end.

It had been a rocky start at first, and mostly due to her she could now admit. For one, they'd wanted her to do things, not just talk about things. And they were very insistent about that. Doing things herself had been scary after a life of having everything done for her by other ponies, but despite the dirt, the low-brow activities, and the tree sap that seemed to follow the group it had been... fun.

And then the robo-alicorn 'daughter' of Twilight, Nyx, had joined them. Diamond hadn't known what to make of her. She looked like... a filly Nightmare Moon for one, an alicorn for another, and yet acted like neither unless she was joking around. And she'd been made without a cutie mark.

The last part had become important recently. Diamond had thought Twilight was still deciding on one to give the robot filly when a sleepover at Fluttershy's had turned into a scramble for survival in the Everfree with a cockatrice. Nyx of all fillies had held the thing off, her metal body seemingly immune to the creature's petrifying stare, until Fluttershy pacified it.

And had earned a cutie mark of a shield emblazoned with a crescent moon in the process, her talent being defending others.

The phenomenon had floored her. According to miss Cheerilee, cutie marks were something unique to ponies (and pony-like races like zebras), which meant that Nyx could only earn one if she was really a pony .

It was... intriguing to her to say the least. Plus, spending time around the bla–three who had yet to earn their cutie marks had caused her to start wondering about what her own meant. Surely it meant more than being a pampered princess and looking regal in the well-crafted look-alike tiara her father had commissioned for her... right?

Of course, that train of thought could wait until after she and the rest finished putting together their skit for the talent show. Honestly, the other three non-robotic 'crusaders' were Tartarus-bent on taking on roles they were singularly unsuited for, and the other two weren't calling them on it for some reason.

Maybe it was time somepony took charge...

"My Mega Pony, My Mega Pony

Ahh, ahh, ahh, ahhh...

(My Mega Pony)

I will stop your wily plans Doctor Wily

(My Mega Pony)

Saving the world from your villainy

Big adventures

Tons of fights

A determined heart

Faithful and strong

Saving the world!

It's not an easy feat

But I and my family will not retreat.

I am Mega Pony

And I will not fail all my very best friends!" (11)

"ARGH!" the frustrated cry of Diamond Tiara interrupted Scootaloo's composition of the song for the group's talent show entry. "That does it!

"Something wrong DT?" Scootaloo asked the rich filly. 'As if I couldn't guess.'

"Scootaloo," Diamond glared at her, "your song is... not bad to be honest, but you are not a musical composer! A filly with your natural acrobatic ability should be on the choreography! Not song-writing!"

"Hey!" Applebloom protested from nearby. "I'm tha one doin' tha dancin'! Kung-fu style even! Hi-ya!"

"No!" Diamond vetoed the thought. "Scootaloo is the better dancer! And the better martial artist!"

"Ah know that!" Applebloom shouted back. "Her pa's one a' tha assistant instructors after all!"

"Dr. Light is an accomplished polymath," Silver observed from where she'd been tapped to help Sweetie with the disastrous decorations.

"What's math got ta do with it?" Applebloom looked confused.

"It means he's good at lots of stuff," Nyx told her.

" Which doesn't matter right now! " the pink tiara-wearing filly insisted. "Applebloom, you should be doing the set design instead of the choreography!"

"Hey!" Sweetie Belle protested.

"Why?" Applebloom backed up at Diamond's fierce expression.

"Because you are the most qualified!" the irate filly yelled. "Look what you did with the treehouse!"

"That weren't anythin' special..." the farm filly looked down.

"Not anything..." Diamond gaped. "That is nearly professional quality work! Exactly what we need for our set! No arguments!"

Applebloom shut her mouth from where she'd been about to protest.

"What about me then?" Sweetie sulked.

"You will be rewriting the music into a proper song!" Diamond ordered. "No complaints! Don't think I haven't seen you giving our resident daredevil advice on how to improve her attempts! You are the song leader! Now hop to it!"

'About time,' Scootaloo rolled her eyes. She wasn't bad with singing after all the Loops she'd been through, but Sweetie was simply a natural at it. Heck, if this worked out alright, all three of them could earn their cutie marks at the same time. They'd arranged it amongst themselves a few times when all three were Awake, but it tended to be hit-or-miss. The more they focused on earning their cutie marks instead of the task that would earn it for them, the less likely it was to work.

"What are you two talking about?" Diamond had rounded on the two robot fillies.

"Oh, we'd had a bet going on when you'd snap and take charge," Silver told the pink earth pony filly. "I won."

"I don't know whether to find that flattering or insulting," Diamond glared at the two as Scootaloo chuckled and began hashing out a choreography routine for the six of them.

"My Mega Pony, My Mega Pony,

What are robots all about?

My Mega Pony, My Mega Pony

Robots are magic!

My Mega Pony,

I used to wonder what robots could mean,

My Mega Pony

To a world that's all so serene.

When you were built your tasks around the house you'd tend,

No robot masters to fight and no shining cities to defend

But My Mega Ponies, that old Wily had to try,

He took those made to improve things, turned their tasks into a lie

And you could do nothing but stand by.

My Mega Pony,

I used to wonder what robots could mean,

My Mega Pony

To a world that's all so serene.

Now you face danger when it comes around, you were remade in the Light,

You won't let the Blues take hold, you always take another try,

Demands for surrender, Automatically denied, Wily's lies you refuse to buy

Your metal hooves are grounded, a Rock-steady ally

Still you keep the laughter Rolling, to hold your spirits high.

My Mega Pony,

I used to wonder what robots could mean,

My Mega Pony

To a world that's all so serene.

Your copy chip gives power, and it's growing all the time.

A new adventure waits for us each day is yours and mine.

We'll make it special every time!

We'll make it special every time!

My Mega Pony

What a beautiful ballad robots sing

My Mega Pony

How I hope your story never,

Ends

Even as more robots Wily,

Sends

you're my very best

Friends,

you're my very best friends!" (*)

Rock and Roll idly wondered how hard it would be to sneak out of the talent show's audience. The song their adopted sister and her five friends (three biological and two mechanical) were performing was flattering and all, but this kind of fame was embarrassing dang it!

Diamond Tiara snuggled into her bed and gazed at the Best Show ribbon she'd won with her friends. First place and three earned cutie marks in the process. That had to be some sort of record.

Applebloom had gotten an actual apple bloom for hers, except one could see it was made of wood by the not-quite-finished paint job on it. A mark for how she was at her best when making things.

Sweetie Bell had gotten a heart-themed musical note, and Nyx had said something about how a heart motif on a cutie mark was often an indication of the high level of love and care a pony put into their particular talent. Sweetie had blushed crimson at the praise.

And Scootaloo had ended up with a shooting star on her flank. Even Diamond knew that star-themed marks denoted a high level of practical ability in the talent, and a shooting star was particularly impressive.

But even that achievement paled in her personal estimate with how proud her parents had been. Over something she'd done herself , not just ordered or paid others to do. Her father had gushed about how every great leader knew when to 'roll up their sleeves' and do the dirty work. He'd even given her a whispered confession that he'd had to buckle down and do nearly every job in his own company at least once.

Her dad thought she had the makings of a great leader. Because she'd helped her friends achieve something great by 'rolling up her sleeves' and helping them herself.

With that thought and a smile, she drifted off to sleep.

Blues came back online in a cave. He'd gone wandering and found what seemed like a promising place saturated with the dark presence he'd identified from remote access to the lab's computers as similar to what had attacked his brother and sister this Loop. And so he'd headed straight into it to find the source and see if Dr. Wily was involved, only to collapse as it started interfering with his systems.

Even now, he could feel it surrounding him, but he was somehow immune. A quick check of his systems showed that he'd actually been treated with the energy in a way that protected against its disruptive influence. His experimental thaumic energy core had been adj–

A repair to his faulty power core would end up erasing his personality.

–usted even. Fixed. Improved no less. A familiar helmet rested on his head, and the kind of shield that had become his trademark in his home Loop was strapped to his foreleg. Those two things hadn't been there this Loop. Not yet. His original shield from his home Loop was both not properly weighted for his pony form and still in his subspace pocket.

There was only one possible culprit.

"Dr. Wily I presume?" he asked the shadows around him, and was rewarded when the mad scientist stepped forth.

"Why, yes, my dear colt," the earth pony looked impressed. "How did you guess?"

"Only two ponies have this kind of ability," he stated flatly. "And of them only you are on the run and hiding out."

"Still a keen mind on you, I see," Dr. Wily observed him calculatingly. "What brings you out here in the first place?"

"I needed a break from things," he said simply. "And I am indebted to you for rescuing me."

"I see..." Wily pondered. "Then perhaps in breaking away from your former self, you can help me break my enemies? Be my Break Mane."

Blues remained silent and let the stallion draw his own conclusions.

Welcome back to the dark side.

"Well, you will make a fine addition!" Dr. Wily took the silence as agreement and led him into another room.

Only his full-face helmet and shades prevented Blues' expression from giving away his total shock at what was in that room.

"A fine addition to the stars indeed!"

He had to get out of here and warn the others. He had to escape and tell them what was coming. Tell them of the he–

A living hell of his own making.

–ll that had followed them to this fused Loop.

Oh, come on. Stay a while. You'll learn to like it.

"Now, I have heard the Apploosans' side of things. The land is the only flat arable area appropriate for growing the trees which are their primary food source. Complete removal of the trees would mean their starvation. However, I have not heard your side Chief Thunderhooves and I would like to so that I may see if we can come to some manner of agreement."

"It is simple. The path for our traditional stampede is sacred to us. It is unthinkable to stampede elsewhere."

"Hmph. Typical tribal nons–"

"That is enough Sheriff Silverstar. Chief Thunderhooves, I can tell that you and your buffalo are fair, mighty, and wise. And it is my experience that such beings do not simply create traditions from nothing, especially not sacred ones. So, please, tell me why this path is so sacred."

Something about that way the older pony, this 'Doctor Light', spoke, with intelligence and respect, had told him that he would not be dismissive of his tribe's beliefs. And so he had told the pony the origins of the stampede and why it was such an important tradition to the buffalo.

When he had finished, the pony hadn't derided him for 'backwards' thinking or dismissed his concerns as those of a 'savage'. Instead, he'd spoken fondly of a tradition from his own home. A 'running of the leaves' that sounded so much like his tribe's sacred stampede that he could almost believe the pony was really a buffalo at heart.

And then Sheriff Silverstar had added a tradition of his own from before he'd come out to this area to settle with the other ponies, with none of the rancor or condescension he'd shown before. He'd responded with a tale of his tribe's spring celebrations, to which Light responded with a story of the Hearth's Warming winter 'holiday', followed by the sheriff's telling of his last 'family reunion'.

It had been a grand story-telling that lacked only an equally grand fire, but instead topped off with those delicious apples.

At some point, two of the farming ponies who were in charge of the trees had joined them and he was showing them on a map just where the stampede's path went. Most of the orchard could actually be kept with no disruption, but it was not an insignificant amount of trees that would have to be moved.

But Light seemed to have answers for everything. He'd asked questions regarding the needed traits of the land for the trees and before the chief knew it he'd been telling them of an area not prohibitively far away that could serve to grow those trees that were moved. It was less flat, but the quality of the soil and nearness to water would serve.

He'd even found himself telling the ponies of plants native to the region that were perfectly good sources of food for his own buffalo and could be more easily grown in the arid region than the trees the ponies prided themselves on. And the farm ponies had listened, even offered a share of the apples to his buffalo for the use of the remaining land. It was nothing short of a miracle he'd witnessed.

Not to say that his tribe conceded nothing in the exchange. For one, he'd ended up volunteering the tribes services to help move the trees from the stampede path to their new grounds and promised to help teach the pony farmers how to grow and prepare the native food plants his own tribe normally subsisted on. For another, the ponies seemed quite interested in trading for tribal goods the buffalo made.

But the most interesting one was what Light himself had requested. He wanted the chance to join the tribe in their sacred stampede. Such was hardly forbidden, but none outside the tribe had ever asked .

And now here he was, about to start the traditional sacred stampede with his tribesbuffalo, and over a dozen of the ponies mixed in among them.

"It has been my observation that no matter how true traditions remain to their origins, some change is inevitable," the pony known as Light spoke sagely next to him.

"Yes," he agreed. His grandfather had liked to rail against the inclusion of tribal adornments in the stampede, claiming that true buffalo would never run while wearing such frivolous things. "Not always for the better, but sometimes."

"Perhaps this is one such time?" Light inquired as the stampede began.

"Only the future may tell," he replied as the thundering of hooves grew in volume with the advance of the mixed herd of buffalo and ponies.

The CMC might not be trying for cutie marks anymore, but they still went out and tried some crazy stuff to see what else they might find fun. Scootaloo's adoptive father was good at plenty of things outside his own cutie mark of a lit bulb, and so they'd decided to try and see what else the six of them could learn how to do. How their current outing had led to getting stories from other ponies about how they earned their cutie marks was something Diamond wasn't too clear on, but she had to admit that some of them were shaping up to be pretty interesting. Just like the marks themselves, no two ways of earning them seemed to be exactly alike.

"You really fought off a chupacabra with a broom?" Diamond Tiara asked Roll incredulously after she and the other crusaders heard her cutie mark story.

"He was making a mess," Roll stated simply.

Huh. No wonder her cutie mark looked the way it did. It was a combat broom. Diamond wouldn't have believed such a thing possible before then.

"Thanks for helping me get out of there," Blues told his current companion.

"I should be thanking you," the beige-coated pegasus mare with a mane in various shades of gray, a compass rose cutie mark, and wearing a pith helmet, known to most as Daring Do, replied. "I've dealt with most of that crowd before, but never all at once."

"Bet it gets rather repetitive," Blues observed carefully.

"You have no idea," Daring rolled her eyes as they put as much distance between themselves and the temple as possible.

"Ever go back in time?" the robot stallion decided to fish a bit.

"Thankfully, no," Daring told him with no indication that the question meant anything out of the ordinary to her. "I've heard of some things that are supposed to do that but all the ones I've found have been either duds or broken, assuming their abilities weren't outright falsehoods to begin with."

"I suppose we should take our blessings where we get them," he allowed. 'Not looping. Though she didn't seem to think anything was too off with that group, so no big surprise.' He'd recognized parts of the group's appearances as being from his Loop, which meant they were significantly different from whatever this place's baseline had. So if Daring was Awake, she'd have seemed a lot more surprised than she had been.

"Right now, I'd be happy with the blessing of some faster transportation," Daring grumbled. "We need to get word to the princesses about what that lot is up to and you're the only one who can offer proof."

No one will believe it.

"Sorry," he told her sincerely, "I'd give you the data but we can't risk whatever they infected me with spreading to other devices."

Pinkie's mane fell straight as the hairdryer lifted from her head, only to immediately poof back up.

"I swear," Rarity huffed as she watched the phenomenon happen, "you do that on purpose."

"Aww," Pinkie grinned cheekily, "but the poofy mane look is just me!"

"I dunno," Rock said from where he'd been roped into getting groomed with the rest by his sister. "You look pretty good with a straight mane too."

"Yeah, but it doesn't really go with my gala dress," Pinkie admitted with a smile.

" Ah'm still trying to wrap my mind around tha two a' ya going ta tha gala together," Applejack interjected from where she was polishing Fluttershy's hooves. "How'd that happen?"

"I asked, she said yes," Rock shrugged nonchalantly.

"I think Applejack meant 'why Pinkie?'," Twilight elaborated.

"Why not?" Rock looked confused.

" I think it's cute," Roll insisted from where she was taking the opportunity to style her brother's mane in a ridiculous fashion she knew he would adjust to something more sensible once she and the others were finished having fun.

"Says the sister who'd ship me with anything female and not family," Rock shot back.

"I would not!" Roll looked offended. "There's an age and beauty requirement too." She thought for a second before adding: "And a sanity one." (12)

"You sure?" Daring asked Blues as the two came within sight of Ponyville.

"Yes," Blues replied. "My father can get you in touch with your contacts while I head to Canterlot and inform the princesses."

"And the gala?" the adventurer mare continued.

Oh, that sounds fun! All those nobles and other ponies trampling each other to de–

He watched, horrified, as Rock fell lifelessly to the ground.

– ath in a panic when you break the news! You should totally do that!

"I'll tell them after the gala," Blues informed her. "That way they can give the matter their undivided attention. We have that much time at least. Besides, I have a promise to keep."

Dash sighed as she trotted over to her dress so Rarity could get her done up in time for them all to make the carriage Twilight arranged for them. No word from her 'date' for the evening. No letter, no message, no noth–

She stopped when she saw the stallion mannequin next to the one that had her dress bereft of the tuxedo it had held, a damp towel and a note in the garment's place.

Meeting you there. Sorry if I worried you.

- Blues

P.S. How's my stealth?

Dash shook her head in amazement. Only Blues would treat getting into his gala tux as a spy mission.

"I must say, this is quite the pleasant surprise Daring," Dr. Light smiled as he led the adventurer to the communications array, both of them politely pretending not to notice the six starry-eyed fillies who thought themselves well-concealed. "How many years has it been since that unpleasantness down south?"

"Too many to justify not keeping in touch and not nearly enough to get over what happened," Daring admitted as she began entering something into the panel. "And I wish it was a social call that brought me here."

"Who is–" a young female voice answered the call Daring had made, only to cut off in an excited squeal. "Ohmygosh! It's Daring Do!"

Dr. Light chuckled as the golden-feathered griffon child on the vid-screen went full fanhen over his now flustered guest.

" See?! " the child insisted to an older griffon hen whose feather coloration was more 'bald eagle' than 'golden eagle'. "See cousin Gilda?! I told you she was real!"

The griffon friend of Rainbow Dash who had visited earlier that year simply stood there gawking at his visitor.

"I do apologize for any impoliteness," Dr. Light told the older griffon, "but we need to speak with your uncle. It's quite urgent."

"Yes," Gilda shook her head in a daze as she focused on the task given to her. "I'll go get him. Come on, squirt."

"Okay!" the younger griffon chirped as she followed the other. "Bye Miss Do!"

"Who was the younger one?" Daring asked once they had left.

"Did you forget that he had a daughter?" Dr. Light raised his eyebrow.

"But... he said she'd just hatched!" Daring sputtered. "Has it really been that long?"

"I'm afraid it has," a male voice came over the communicator as a stern-looking adult male griffon with golden feathers and eyeglasses stepped into view. "Bright, Daring," he greeted amiably. "What seems to be the problem?"

Twilight blinked as she stepped out of the carriage and spotted an unfamiliar stallion in a pompadour and sunglasses, at night no less, waving to her and her friends. Or rather, to a specific member of the group.

"You made it!" Rainbow dashed over to what was apparently her escort, she'd been rather insistent that it wasn't a 'date' to all of them, for the evening.

"I promised, didn't I?" the stallion smirked.

"Well," Rarity walked up to the two hoof-in-arm with teen-form Spike, "aren't you going to introduce us to your coltfriend Dash?"

"I keep telling you, it's not like that!" Dash insisted, "but this is–"

"DLN-000, Blues Light," Roll cut in as she and her brother, with Pinkie in tow, joined Rarity. "Nice to finally meet you, brother."

"I'm surprised you managed to get him here," Rock added. "He certainly hasn't been returning any of our calls since we found him in the Lab's database."

"You never said they'd been calling you!" Dash poked the prototype pony-bot with her hoof accusingly.

Twilight noted the dirty look Blues shot his siblings as Pinkie began going into full party planning mode regarding the older robot's getting-the-family-back-together party.

"I'm not talking to my father," Blues cut her off so sharply that Pinkie halted in mid-air and slowly drifted to the ground. "This isn't just a social call either. I'm here to speak with the princesses immediately after the gala. I have important information regarding national security for them."

"How important is it?" Twilight found herself asking, taken aback by how serious he'd sounded.

"Not so important that I want to risk causing a panic with the gala in full swing," he told them. "But it concerns Dr. Wily. And a group called The Stars."

"I'm glad you could come over so fast," Dr. Light greeted the griffon as he stepped out of the Lab's teleporter. Biological transport along the long distance teleportation network was a recent development in unicorn magical emulation and still limited in regards to who had access to it, but significant strides in the technology were being made.

"Think nothing of it," the griffon scientist said as his daughter came through next, followed by his niece Gilda. "If this is as serious as Daring claims, we can't waste any time."

"Who are you?" the voice of a young filly cut into the conversation as Scootaloo entered the room.

"Hi!" the youngest griffon scampered eagerly over to the pegasus filly. "I'm Kalinka! Who are you?"

"I'm Scootaloo," the adopted daughter of Dr. Light answered, "and these are my friends Applebloom, Silver Spoon, Sweetie Belle, Diamond Tiara, and Nyx."

"Oh, wow!" Kalinka oohed as she spotted the black pony robot. "You're an alicorn!"

"Yes, indeed," Dr. Light chuckled. "Many of you recall Kalinka's cousin Gilda," he gestured to the older griffon female who waved half-heartedly before turning to the male griffon. "And this is her father and a good friend of mine, Dr. Mikhail Cossack of the Griffon Empire."

"Well, well," Spitfire arched an impressed eyebrow, "you're Light's guard prototype? I remember him claiming that you'd be the equal of any wonderbolt once he got you up in the air."

"That's because he's been testing the pegasus harness against Dash here," Blues gestured to his companion who was doing her best not to hyperventilate at holding a conversation with her idol. "She's been setting the gold standard for the device since day one at the lab. There's still a few kinks to work out from what I hear."

"Really?" Spitfire turned her attention to the rainbow-maned pegasus. "I saw the footage of that thing in action against Air Tercel. It's a fine piece of work as it stands, and it still doesn't measure up to you?"

"Well..." Dash began sheepishly, feeling oddly embarrassed by the praise, "Doc Light insists on it being the best, which means I've got to give it my best, so..."

"I see," Spitfire hmmed. "Well, you're already invited to our training camp next spring for your performance in the young flyers' competition, and after hearing this, I expect to see great things from you then."

Rainbow Dash almost contained the resulting squee of joy.

Daring Do stared intently at one of Mikhail's robots that had come through the lab's teleporter after him. "Who are you supposed to be?"

The sphinx model robot stared back at her just as intently. "I am Pharaoh Sphinx, developed after extensive research on the kinds of temples you yourself tend to come across. I am fully equipped for trap detection and disarmament, my solar-energy Pharaoh Shot is both a light source and a defensive weapon, and I am tempered to withstand the dark magic of the vilest and most malevolent curses with little issue. The pharaoh theme is mostly aesthetic, though I won't complain if it means a few curses think I'm supposed to be there."

"You made a robot to do my job?" Daring turned her stare to the robot's creator.

"I made a robot who could withstand the dark magic saturating those ruins we all visited back then," Dr. Cossack defended himself.

Daring winced at the reminder of one of the few places she'd gone that didn't appear in the books she'd written as A.K. Yearling. Not because it was uneventful, most of those at least got mentions when they became relevant, but because it was her biggest failure. None of them had gained anything from that place, and suffered losses instead. She wondered if the diamond dog Pedro had ever recovered from his injury.

"In any case, I think we should share what we know," Dr. Light reminded his colleagues of why they were here as the giggling voices of the seven children emanated from another room.

"Of course," Daring admitted. "I went back to the Lanfront ruins after a series of rumors regarding some of my old adversaries reached my ears. I managed to sneak in, barely, and discover that they were all part of the same cult group. I only escaped due to the help of your eldest 'son' Bright, but not before I found out that they're all planning something big. Have been for some time."

"You said they were part of a cult," Dr. Cossack pushed his glasses up his beak. "Which one?"

"They call themselves 'The Stars'," Daring told them to sharp intakes of breath. "The same ones who were predicted to be responsible for the return of Nightmare Moon. Not sure how accurate that part is, but the cult's been around at least a thousand years under similar names. But it's been around even longer under other names, their goal for ages to plunge the world into 'eternal darkness'. Originally, it was called the Order of Le Mu, or depending on who was translating, the Order of Ra Moon."

"Is it ready?" a voice in the shadows asked.

"Yes..." the gleeful voice of Dr. Wily responded. "With my enhancements the device is now ready to fire. No need for those inefficient baubles hidden in crumbling temples you used to go after."

"Then let the darkness fall so the Stars may reign supreme."

A wave of dark magic spread out from the area south of Equestria known as the Lanfront ruins, affecting everything in its path. All animals not born of dark magic stumbled and collapsed as it swept over them and trees began to lose color. The shadows choked the sky and stifled all light above so it could never reach the ground.

As the dark wave passed over Equestria, magical devices ceased functioning and ponies everywhere stumbled and fell where they stood. Unicorns blacked out completely and many pegasi were injured from the crashes that resulted when the weather magic they relied on to aid flight was disrupted.

In a power plant, Elec Mare shorted out and fell to the floor.

Guts Stallion collapsed on stage at a karaoke bar he'd gone to after his shift, his backup singers Bomb Stallion and Cut Mare fell beside him as well.

Fire Mare's flames went out suddenly while she was on the night shift at a Manehattan waste disposal plant.

Ice Mare fell face-first in the snow far in the frozen north.

Cloudsdale shuddered as the wave passed over it and began to lose cohesion. Those pegasi that retained consciousness would manage to push the clouds towards the ground afterwards in an effort to evacuate the city before it lost form completely.

"Scoots?" Nyx asked her unconscious friend worriedly. "Bloom? Silver? DT? Sweetie? Kalinka? What just happened?"

"So what's the big important secret you need to tell the princesses?" Dash asked as she danced with her escort for the evening. She'd figured that she'd spent so much effort getting all fancied up that she might as well at least once.

"You'll find out in due time," Blues smiled secretively. "Just relax and enjoy the night until then."

"You love doing that, don't y–" she cut off as she felt her connection to the Element of Loyalty, the one Twilight had been training her and the others in developing, flare hard enough to give her a headache before going dark. She had just enough time to wonder what that meant before she lost consciousness as well.

"SISTER!" Blues heard a terrified voice bellow as he did his best to keep his 'date' for the evening from hitting the floor. All of a sudden everyone at the gala had swayed and collapsed. The unicorns all looked to be unconscious, and the pegasi and earth ponies were at best too disoriented from whatever had happened to stand. A quick check showed that his brother and sister were completely offline.

The only ones still standing were himself and an angry alicorn of the night now stomping up to him. Behind her, he could see a very much knocked out Celestia.

"YOU!" Luna bellowed loud enough that he had to brace himself in order to ensure he didn't fall over. "EXPLAIN WHAT SORCERY THIS IS THAT LAYS OUR LITTLE PONIES LOW! EXPLAIN WHY THOU STAND WHEN THEY DO NOT!"

"Princess," he said respectfully, "I suspect I'm still standing for much the same reason you are. We've both played unwilling host to a dark force like the one that did this."

Luna's eyes widened in terror as she processed that statement.

Nyx took several deep breaths, which she'd later admit didn't really do anything for her mechanical body, and tried to calm down and remember what her mom had told her to do when situations like this cropped up in the Loops.

First step in this kind of situation: Check the victims.

The other Crusaders, Awake or otherwise, were unconscious but not injured. That at least was a relief.

Second step: What could she do about it?

Without knowing what had caused their sudden collapse... not much. Her robot form this Loop wasn't capable of channelling the full range of magical abilities she was used to, but she could still take most opponents with the contents of her subspace pocket if nothing else. But there weren't any villains to fight right now, or at least none that she could sense...

Third step: Who did she know who could help?

Her mom had told her that, for the most part, Loop memories and instincts could be trusted. Because many Loops seemed to subscribe to narrative causality to some extent, Loop instincts could at least be trusted to 'advance the plot' as it were. It wasn't a bad fallback strategy in any case.

And according to Scoots and Silver, Dr. Light generally either knew what to do or could figure something out. Her experiences around the lab certainly hadn't contradicted that. He was a lot like her mom in some ways.

Which was how she found herself racing down the halls as fast as her hooves could carry her, shouting for the older stallion.

"Dr. Light! Dr. Light! Come quick! Hel–EEEK!" She yelled as she barrelled around the doorframe into the lab where she knew he was entertaining guests, and almost ran into a pony-like figure done up in modern zebra voodoo stereotype with bones and skulls and a just downright spooky and scary demeanor.

She was so keyed up by the situation that she let out a bolt of magic at the sinister figure out of sheer reflex, and gulped as it dissipated on a shimmering sinisterly-shaped barrier.

"Twilight?" Rarity asked wearily as she returned to consciousness.

"Yes, Rarity?" said unicorn inquired as she shook the cobwebs out of her mind.

"Why are we on the floor of the palace ballroom?"

"I'm not sure..."

"Did someone leave the gag running?" Pinkie queried blearily from nearby.

Twilight ignored her friend's non sequitur as she took stock of what was going on. She'd been enjoying the gala as it was meant to be enjoyed for a change of pace, she and the rest of her friends had somehow been coaxed onto the dance floor, and then her brain at the base of her horn had metaphorically exploded resulting in the loss of consciousness.

'Okay, I think this Loop just crossed the 'non interference' line,' she thought to herself as she noted the completely offline forms of the visiting Anchors amidst ponies in varying states of recovery from unconsciousness. Idly filing away the fact that unicorns seemed the worst off, she got to her feet and began to list out a course of action.

Step one: Figure out what just happened.

She made to cast a few scrying spells, and blinked when nothing happened.

"Let's try that again," she muttered to herself and tried to put some more effort into it, only to promptly stop as pain shot through her head near her horn and her vision swam.

'Alright, bad idea...' she managed to remain standing. 'Let's skip a few steps and go straight for the Elements then.'

Twilight stood there for a few seconds before the fact that the Element of Magic was refusing to manifest sunk in.

'How...?' she thought as she examined her connection with the soul-bound artifact. 'Okay, it's still there , but it's... weak or something.' Whatever happened was somehow interfering with the Elements. It wouldn't be the first time something managed to shut them down, a few Loops with the Smooze came to mind, but it wasn't exactly a common occurrence.

Twilight decided to cut straight to the chase and go full alicorn. She'd explain later, maybe use excuse 3Q this time. She hadn't tried that one in a while.

When she regained consciousness again, Twilight would liken the attempt to trying to manually turn herself inside out. Without pain killing effects of any kind.

"I'm so sorry!" Nyx apologized for the umpteenth time as she and the voodoo zebra figure finished moving her friends someplace more comfortable.

As it turned out, the griffon scientist had brought more of his robots, eight in all, through the portal with him. Skull Mane was the zebra-like model done up with stereotypical voodoo accessories like an equine skull-shaped helmet, bones (both real and fake) braided into his mane and tail, and the power to make barriers in the same shape as his helmet.

Plus he was one of only two of Dr. Cossack's robots that hadn't been shut down by whatever it was. Even the lab's systems, mostly running on magic generators, were offline.

"It is fine," the robot replied politely. Again. "As I keep telling you, I was designed as a guardian. A fearsome appearance is one of the oldest methods of defense that any intelligent race has practiced. By appearing frightening, I cut down the number of hostile creatures that wish to test my abilities in the first place and make many more unsure about attacking what I defend. Scaring allies and potential friends is an unfortunate side effect I have learned to live with."

"But I still shouldn't have assumed–" Nyx protested.

"What?" the zebra-bot cut her off. "That an unfamiliar figure in your home might be responsible for the attack that harmed your friends and family? While my appearance might not do me many favors in regards to misunderstandings, it was hardly the only strike against me in this case."

"Yeah, okay," Nyx finally relented. "How are you moving around still anyway?"

"Like Pharaoh Sphinx, I am tempered to resist the disruptive influences of dark magic," Skull Mane explained as the two headed back to the lab. The doctors had recovered relatively quickly and had requested to see her after her friends were secured. "It would be very inconvenient in my duties if my defenses could be circumvented by any sinister party with basic knowledge of malevolent curse-style magic."

"Ah, there you are Nyx," Dr. Light's voice greeted warmly, if a bit weakly. "I must again say I am pleased to see you unaffected by whatever has befallen us. With your permission, I and Dr. Cossack would like to study how you resist this influence. His method of shielding against dark magic should prove enough to get parts of the lab up and running in a few days, but I think you may be able to help speed that timeframe up."

'Tree damn this Loop and whoever did this!' Rarity growled as she massaged her aching head and continued walking down the palace hallway. 'When I find the rooter responsible I will buck them straight into the sun!'

She'd watched as Twilight fell to the floor of the ballroom in a seizure mere moments after recovering from the unexpected disaster that had rendered them unconscious in the first place. She had yet to regain consciousness since.

Nor was Twilight the only one adversely affected. Celestia also had yet to awaken, and Shining Armor had reported that Cadance was in the same state. It was thus little surprise that the panic incited by Celestia's forced indisposal meant they hadn't noticed what had become of their newest looping friends Rock and Roll until somepony literally tripped over their inert forms.

The robots, along with all other electronics or magical devices, had been shut down by the event and remained utterly inoperable. That their brother Blues was unaffected was a mystery.

Speaking of those mysteriously unaffected, Luna had done her duty and taken charge of Equestria while her sister recovered, and was being run into the ground by the constant demands on her time and attention.

Reports had come in of the effects on other areas of Equestria and they hadn't stopped since. The shroud of darkness over Equestria made high noon no brighter than a moonlit night, and nighttime... It was dark enough to give even the bravest ponies shivers. Panic ran rampant in all cities and towns and civil services everywhere were stretched beyond their limits. Cloudsdale in particular had been completely destroyed as the magic holding it together came undone, and only the brave efforts of many of its citizens had saved the rest. It was a miracle and a testament to Equestria's solidarity that there had been no deaths.

'Gah!' Rarity swore internally as another sharp pain lanced through her head. 'It's so hard to think these days... And nothing makes it any better!'

Then there were the effects on the ponies themselves. With the notable exception of Luna, magic had all but left the populace of Equestria. The most anypony of the three races was capable of performing were the most basic of cantrips. Unicorns like Rarity herself suffered from severe headaches at the base of their horns and even basic telekinesis for many (though not Rarity herself for some reason) became impossible. Pegasi had lost their ability to use weather magic and those like Rainbow Dash who used it almost all the time were effectively grounded as a result. Even earth ponies were finding out how much magic they used subconsciously as their daily tasks became that much harder and many complained of aching limbs. Perhaps the most telling of all was that Pinkie's mane had gone razor straight and she couldn't re-poof it without exhausting herself.

She and the remaining Awake Elements, including Spike even though he wasn't 'on duty' this Loop, had convened to discuss their options for dealing with the situation while the Unawake Rainbow Dash had been asked to see if she could get anything out of Blues as to why he wasn't affected. The options were... not encouraging.

With Twilight down, the Elements of Harmony would have been off the table even if they hadn't gone dormant. They'd given reactivating them a decent effort, but the results had been along the lines of 'diddly' and 'squat'. Then they'd tried pulling things out of their subspace pockets to make an assessment, only for technological devices to fritz and magical ones to cease functioning the moment they were brought out. After the second 'energetic' failure they'd unanimously decided not to bring out anything else.

They'd debated for a while until Pinkie had apparently had enough and declared that she was going to go 'full chaos goddess' and fix everything, and then throw a party for all of Equestria to help them recover. She'd pulled out a lump of cosmic spectrum, one that Twilight insisted every member of the alicorn club carry ever since that Loop where the Smooze nullified the elements and by extension their preferred method of ascending, and focused. The magical stone had pulsed and then shattered into dust, Pinkie's eyes had rolled back in her head, foam formed at her mouth, and she began convulsing uncontrollably.

It was exactly what had happened to Twilight back in the ballroom while their attention had been elsewhere. Down to the small pile of magically inert dust Rarity then realized must have been Twilight's own backup cosmic spectrum.

After they'd gotten Pinkie squared away, Spike had suggested that he scry with the Force and see if he could learn anything. Since it wasn't really magic, native to the Loop or otherwise, it shouldn't be affected by whatever had happened.

Except that it was... somehow. Spike had been able to use the Force just fine, but the moment he opened his mind everything had gone wrong. He'd gone limp and vacant before beginning to mutter nonsense, and he hadn't stopped since.

Fluttershy had lost her temper about then and tried to wildshape and go flying off in a blind rage to find the one responsible, except... Well, Luna had been needed to undo the result and put Fluttershy back to rights. Applejack had readily agreed that further experimentation with non-native Loop abilities should be put on hold until they learned more.

'If only our best scholar in all things magic would wake up so we could get on that. Or if whoever did this would at least make themselves known so we can kick their flank and get on with things!' she sighed as she prepared to round an upcoming corner. 'Honestly, I haven't felt this helpless since–'

"You need to tell them," Luna's voice shook the dressmaker out of her musings right before she rounded the corner. Many Loops of experience in cloak and dagger type scenarios prompted her to conceal herself as best as possible and eavesdrop.

"I will," the voice of Blues responded, "eventually."

"That is what I used to tell myself in regards to the jealousy I felt towards my sister," Luna retorted. "I would tell myself that I'd let her know how I felt 'soon' and before I knew it I was blasting her through a wall in rage. You are tainted with the Nightmare just as I was. Its dark whispers will wear down your defenses as they did mine, until a dark parody of yourself is all that's left."

'Well,' Rarity thought to herself, 'that certainly explains why they weren't affected. Luna probably built up a tolerance from playing host for a thousand years and anyone currently infected is likely exempt from the effects. Which probably means little Nyx isn't affected either. Twilight will be happy to hear that. I guess my occasional stint as 'Nightmarity' is why I can still use some of the basics too.'

"I can handle it," Blues insisted. "I'm not hearing whispers or words or anything. Just a barely perceptible prodding to act on some of my darker thoughts."

"And that is how it starts," Luna returned just as stubbornly.

"I've been dealing with these thoughts for longer than most think," Blues retorted. "The Nightmare isn't bringing anything new to the table."

"For your sake, I hope not," Luna relented as a messenger ran up to the two with news.

Zecora owed the Light family much, even if they would claim otherwise. She was not ignorant of the ways in which the world worked, and she had seen the suspicious looks the townsponies had thrown her when she'd arrived years ago. They had never seen a zebra before, knew nothing about her ways or traditions, and they feared what was different and unfamiliar.

Except Dr. Light. He looked at the strange and unfamiliar with interest and wonder. He didn't look upon her setting up residence in the Everfree, a place rife with rare and potent ingredients for her potions and studies, as proof she was to be feared. No, he looked upon it with interest and sought to learn why. He came to her, braving the dangers of the Everfree, and sought to learn who she was and why she lived there.

She knew he hadn't needed to do that. Nor did he need to accompany her into town and vouch for her to all of the vendors. He certainly hadn't needed to put in an order for regular potion supplies and pay her so well for them.

And so, when the Nightmare had fallen over Equestria, she'd wasted no time. Magic may have been stifled, but there was a potion known to her that would counter the effects of such a curse upon the drinker that could still be brewed by one under the dark influence. The primary downside was that the ingredients were not only rare but also dangerous to work with. Not to mention when improperly brewed, the potion was quite hazardous.

She'd had just enough for two doses. One for her to chase away the dark aches so the forest did not catch her unawares and one for the good doctor so he would be at his best.

She hadn't expected him to already be at work on a solution though. It had made her efforts seem... pointless. At least at first. Even though they already had the makings of a solution, the doctor and his like minded griffon friend had jumped on her brew and gotten the griffon's toad-like robot, newly shielded and made to analyze and reproduce liquids, to duplicate her brew. If what they claimed was true, her contribution had cut several day's work down to one.

And now they had come to Canterlot in the hopes they could restore the stallion's mechanical children, and any others who needed it.

"Thou art certain this shall work?" Luna looked at the contraptions dubiously. "As we understand it, artificially made potions are... magically inert."

The princess of the night hoped she didn't look as ragged as she felt. Raising both the moon and sun, even if their light was stifled by the curse of darkness, was tiring enough. Dealing with Equestria in a crisis without her sister to help was taking its toll though.

"The process by which we make this brew, makes it impotent that is true," the zebra mare, Zecora if she recalled correctly, replied as she placed a hoof on the shoulder of a black metal alicorn. The one made from the remnants of the Nightmare energy that had corrupted her. "But add the power of dark benign, and you will find it works just fine."

"I just put magic into it, that's all," The artificial alicorn filly looked like she would have blushed were she capable.

"Well, magic's what we need to make it work, so you do a bang-up job, ribbit!" the metal frog-thing, Rain Toad made by the griffon scientist Dr. Cossack as he had been introduced, chimed in. Some contraption originally meant to do the job of a pegasus by seeding rain during droughts, and adapted to analyze water composition and then reproduce it for later and further analysis by others. Currently adapted to mass produce Zecora's darkness protection potion.

"We're ready," Dr. Light announced as he finished activating the miraculously working cylinders. He'd been busy it seemed adapting the chambers to work under this infernal curse and then getting his creations and his companion's running so they could haul them here. All to save his metal foals. That it could be used to cure ponies was a welcome addition, but Luna wanted to see it work first.

"Alrighty everypony!" Applejack, bearer of Honesty, called to the others. "Let's lower them two in nice and gentlelike!"

As Luna watched, the metallic saviors of Equestria two times over were lowered into the clear cylinders, hooked up to various devices that went way over Luna's head, and then submerged in the artificial potion over their heads.

"You're up Nyx," Rainbow Dash, the bearer of Loyalty, told the robot alicorn filly.

"Right," the named filly, and metal daughter of the bearer of Magic, stepped up and began infusing the liquid with her power.

Rock came back online in a way that was much more familiar than he liked to admit.

Submerged in a vat of liquid after being unexpectedly forced offline.

'Damnit, I was sure we wouldn't have to deal with Ra Moon this Loop!' he cursed Equestria's current lack of a centralized database he could readily access. The Lanfront ruins didn't exist every Loop, and their existence was sometimes classified, but he'd gotten used to knowing about the possibility in advance.

"This is most promising," he heard Luna muse as he was extracted from the tank by Guts Stallion and... was that an Equestrian variant of Ring Man? He looked like a griffon. Off to the side Roll was being helped out by Elec Mare and some sphinx-like version of Pharaoh Man. And... yep, that looked like the griffon Dr. Cossack over there with his niece Gilda and Rock's dad. Blues was giving him the 'we need to talk soon' signal over by an equine Bright Man, his head-mounted bulb illuminating the room. And over there was a beaming Nyx with Zecora, some version of Toad Man, and what looked like Skull Man imagined as a zebra.

It worked for him.

"Ye must prepare to repeat this treatment immediately," the lunar princess continued. "First the bearers so that we may possibly regain the Elements of Harmony to turn against this mysterious and dishonorable foe, and then my sister if possible."

"Princess!" a frantic guard scrambled inside. "There is someone claiming responsibility for this catastrophe outside! He is demanding to speak with you and your 'champions' immediately!"

"Pray, tell us," Rock heard the titanium alloy in the princess's voice, "what is the name of this brazen knave?"

"He calls himself Ahuizotl Terra, leader of the Star Druids," the guard responded.

'Well,' Rock thought in shock, 'that might be what Blues wanted to tell me.'

Applejack swore as she listened to this odd version of Ahuizotl gloat over what he'd done. If she still had full control over her earthbending, she'd have been happy to give the varmint a round of applause. Him and his giant green headdress right between a pair of granite applauders, eeyup.

"Don't princess," she heard Rock warn Luna off from trying to vaporize the smug... whatever he was. "He looks too confident. He's got something up his sleeve."

The problem with her earthbending was that this shroud of darkness, or whatever it was, was interferin' with her control. If she tried something it could easily be too weak and do nothin' or too strong and turn him into a smear. And while the latter option was soundin' better with every sound outta his smug mouth, her aim wasn't all that hot either at the moment. She could just as easily smash one a' the ponies who'd come to see what all the hullabaloo was about.

"Oh, come princess," Ahuizotl grinned in his blue and white regalia and red helmet that sported the massive green headdress. Had ta be enchanted the way he was flauntin' it. "You aren't... frightened, are you?"

"Of thou?" Luna scoffed. "A coward who hides behind magical toys? Not at all. Thou art simply not worth sullying ourself over. Thou shalt face our champion instead."

"Why, that sounds thrilling!" Ahuizotl laughed. "In fact, why not send two? In fact, I'll allow three if you can find that many who aren't crippled! It won't make any difference!"

Luna scowled at the pompous something-or-other while Applejack made a mental note to ask Twilight what his dang species was when she woke up.

"Don't worry princess," Roll assured her. "We can handle him."

"Nevertheless," Luna began before turning back to Ahuizotl. "If thou art so confident, ye shall not object to us bestowing a blessing upon our champions."

"I'd have it no other way," the villain grinned.

"Very well," Luna nodded and lowered her horn to the two robots and whispered to them, low enough that Applejack had to strain to hear, as she cast a spell. "This protection shall shield thee both from anything the foul miscreant can bring to bear. End this quickly so that we can restore peace to our little ponies' lives."

"We will," they both promised and strode out to meet their opponent.

"Well," Ahuizotl mused pleasantly as he rubbed his chin, "since your dear princess is allowed to grant a boon to her champions it seems only fair that I begin this contest, wouldn't you say?"

The robot pony siblings looked at each other before replying together. "If you must."

"Perfect," Ahuizotl's grin threatened to carve the top of his skull away from his body as his hand-tail thing, sporting some red glove gauntlet doohicky, rose up over his head and pointed two fingers at the duo. "Spark Chaser."

It was over in a horrifying instant. The lasers that fired forth punched straight through Luna's protection spell and their metal bodies. And then it cornered in midair to hit them again. And again. And again. The sparking and smoldering forms of the twin heroes of Equestria hit the ground before what had happened had finished registering for anypony watching.

"Victory!" Ahuizotl laughed. "And now you all see just how powerless you are against just one of our little group of Star Druids! Even the magic your precious alicorn princess is no match for our new strength!" The monster chuckled sinisterly. "And there's more of us. Surrender to the Age of Eternal Darkness. Or wither away slowly."

Applejack noted that Luna looked darn near ready to charge the piece of trash regardless of the fact that he'd carved through one of her best protection spells like it was made of warm butter. Hay, Applejack was ready to join her.

But then the music started. (13)

Quiet at first, barely noticeable, but it slowly increased in volume. A somber melody came forth and Applejack found herself rooted in place as a familiar feeling washed over her.

'Who the buck is triggerin' a Heartsong now ?!' she thought incredulously. Trying to break the spell of a heartsong was technically possible, but rarely ended well. 'What, is the stinkin' varmint gonna gloat ta music now?' And then she saw Rock and Roll begin to stand up. 'You gotta be kiddin' me... They're tha ones doing this?'

The impact of getting the last of their hooves under them coincided with a pulsing drumbeat that ended the instrumentals as Rock began to sing.

"I think we've played this song before

The melody is different, but I hear the drums of war."

Drum beats heralded the return of the instrumentals as Applejack realized what was happening as Roll stepped forward. Those two were trying to trigger a heartsong to turn this fight around... Was that even possible?

"So it seems our mission is the same

What always ends in bloodshed, begins as just a game."

Applejack blinked at the somber tone of the song as the two robots prepared to sing together. That wasn't typical Equestrian heartsong material.

"History repeating...

Who do they call when villains need defeating?

History repeating...

Who do we call when we're broken and bleeding?"

It dawned on her that this must be something from their home Loop. They clearly had experience with music as well as fighting. Maybe they'd had both at the same time before. But then Ahuizotl smiled and stepped forward. Chlorophyll... He was going to try and turn the heartsong against them...

"What have we here, you two want to be the ones?

But what you must realize is... that you're the only ones!

So here we are, beginning a new age

Get the players set; it's time that war we wage."

Applejack watched, bound by the heartsong as a spectator, as Ahuizotl lowered his tail-hand and the laser gauntlet with it. The varmint was so confident he wasn't going to use his alicorn-busting superweapon. He was intendin' to show them all that he could beat the heroes of Equestria with his bare limbs!

"History repeated...

Who can they call with the heroes defeated?

Our dark story completed...

What hope will they have with you two deleted?"

Applejack grit her teeth as the instrumentals swelled in volume and then began to increase in pace. Faster and faster as the combatants stared each other down across the courtyard.

And when the music shifted, they were off like shots. They met in the center, trading unarmed blows. Ahuizotl's fist cratered the marble as the twin heroes dodged and counterattacked. They moved so fluidly and struck so solidly that it would be hard to believe they had really been injured so badly if the wounds were not plainly visible.

Ahuizotl swept the area around him and the two jumped clear and fired their weapons before Rock picked up the song again.

"We stand before a moment of truth,"

He sounded much more determined now. The feeling of sadness was gone, replaced by determination as Roll continued for him.

"With all Equestria's fate in our hooves."

Applejack had to smirk as Ahuizotl snarled at them and they sang together.

"Today, the end begins..."

Then the villain grinned and began to try and twist the song again as the two charged him.

"Come and let the battle be born

This war that we fight is a thundering storm

Today, the end begins..."

She saw Rock gritting his teeth as blows were exchanged again and he tried to wrest the flow of the song back.

"If it was up to me

I'd rewrite history

And change our destiny

One last time"

The two robots began peppering Ahuizotl with buster shots from range and staying out of his reach until he got frustrated and leapt at them. He missed, but the blow from his boosted strength created a shockwave that knocked them back anyway. They managed to land on their hooves and dug grooves into the ground and picked up the song before renewing their assault.

"Betrayed our promise of peace

This is the last time we're the Mega Ponies

Today, we change the end"

Applejack noticed Ahuizotl getting frustrated at how this fight wasn't as easy as he'd been expecting and he raised his tail-hand with the laser gauntlet again. It was clear he was intending to fry them completely, heartsong influence or no. She was about to try and shout a warning when Ahuizotl's gauntlet was struck by an energy blast out of nowhere and a red-armored earth pony with a shield, scarf, and shaded visor landed between the two heroes and joined the song.

"Hey, Rock. My weapon is hot

It's time to throw down; Let's show what we got

Today, we change the end..."

Ahuizotl snarled in rage and pain as all three charged him again and rejoined the song in anger.

"Now you listen to me!

You can't stop this story!

No changing destiny!

Not this time!"

Blows were traded fast and furious, and Applejack noticed Ahuizotl's armor building up energy. Just as she realized he had another trick up his durned sleeve, a wave of energy burst forth from him flinging all three of his opponents back. Rock and Roll landed badly, but the red-armored pony, who had to be Blues she figured, had managed to block with his shield and land on his hooves.

And strangely, Ahuizotl seemed to calm down suddenly and sang at Blues in an almost friendly manner.

"Come now, why do you fight?

You know that only we are right!

They cannot win, they can only fall,

And no choice you can make will Change that at all!"

Blues glared back at the villain and didn't even miss a beat before retorting defiantly.

"I know they can win, They've done it before

Now put up your dukes, and let's settle this score

One last time!"

As the two charged and clashed, Applejack heard the whispers rocket through the crowd like Rainbow Dash breaching the warp barrier. And as one, practically everyone reached the same conclusion and cheered:

"HE'S THE PROTOTYPE MANE OF MEGA MANE!"

And then she heard Luna of all ponies join the song.

"It shall be up to thee

To rewrite this story

And change thy destiny

One last time"

And Applejack found she couldn't help repeating that last line as Blues clobbered Ahuizotl with an uppercut from his shield, making him stagger back and clutch his face in pain.

"One last TIME!"

Ahuizotl growled as he moved his hand and everyone could see his eye bleeding as he began singing again.

"You can't stop this you'll see

You'll face our dark story

And meet your destiny

Come next time!"

And as the music began to draw itself out for the end of the heartsong, Ahuizotl was bathed in magical light as he prepared to teleport. But not before tossing out a farewell line.

"Yes.. next time..."

Twilight blinked as she came to in a vat of liquid.

'Another Star Wars Loop starting in a bacta tank?' she thought groggily. 'No, wait, I'm awake with a small 'a', not a capital one. Last Loop's still on. Tree, my everything hurts.'

"Welcome back to the land of the living miss Sparkle," an unfamiliar griffon in glasses and a labcoat greeted her.

Twilight blinked again as she was hoisted out of the tank by a semi-poofy-maned Pinkie and took stock of the unusually dark palace room, lit primarily by an equine robot with a bulb on his head.

"Can anypony tell me what's been going on?"

Daring Do didn't look it, but she was frightened. Many would be surprised to find that this was a common state for her. After all, she'd faced death traps, dastardly villains, and magical doomsday devices. Sometimes all in the same day. But like she always reminded herself, it wasn't the fearless who succeeded in life, it was those who could face their fear. And at that she had long practice.

"Ahuizotl isn't the only one of my old foes who has gained new power," she informed the gathered Elements. She'd missed her arch nemesis's arrival and duel partly due to being tapped with locating quarters for the arrivals from Ponyville in the midst of near oversaturation of refugees in the palace. The group of fillies (and one griffon chick) 'helping' hadn't sped the process up any.

Daring still had no idea where the tree sap had come from.

"Blues and I counted no less than eight other faces familiar to me from my past adventures as well. Each with their own new enchanted regalia and self-proclaimed titles. If you would please, doctor?"

"Of course, Daring," Dr. Cossack adjusted his glasses with a talon as he motioned for his light-bulb themed robot, Bright Mane, to operate the projector. A pegasus mare in cult attire appeared on the screen.

"For those of you who don't know," Daring began, "this is Desert Rose, an alternate version of a good friend of mine and the leader of a former cult whose purpose was to resurrect the Smooze."

There was a sharp intake of breath from Princess Luna.

"I'm afraid the news doesn't necessarily get better from there, Princess," Daring told the lunar diarch as the image shifted to show a different image of the same mare. Only this time she had an acid green coat color as well as a pink chestplate and helmet connected by a pair of tubes and her coat looked rubbery. Or gooey. "She was supposedly killed by the very Smooze she sought to control, dissolved into its mass, but apparently she merged with it instead and... yes, miss Pie?"

"Why would anypony want to do anything with Smooze?" the pink mare put down the hoof she'd been frantically waving while going 'ooh! ooh! ooh! pick me!'. "It's like no fun at all! It's negative fun! Heck, I'd go as far as to say it's anti-fun!"

"Honestly," Daring replied with a roll of her eyes, "I'd guess that every member of this group has something against others having fun. They're not exactly a nice bunch. Desert Mercury, as she has now chosen to call herself, is just the tip of this iceberg."

The slide changed to show a zebra mare and this time it was Zecora who hissed.

"By my righteous burning fury," the potionmaker growled angrily, "is that the ever hated Zuri?"

"You know her?" Daring blinked in surprise.

"Only of the traitor do I know," Zecora admitted, "but home her face she dares not show. Foul betrayals she once committed and forever her name is now omitted."

"Complete erasure from Zebrican records?" Luna looked astonished. "That is a punishment most extreme! Even our actions as Nightmare Moon did not warrant being wiped from living memory! What villainy didst she commit to deserve such a fate?"

"Whatever it was," Daring replied as the slide switched to show the same zebra mare in yellow crab-like armor, "I suspect it was for money. She's Ahuizotl's favorite mercenary. She now goes by Zuri Venus and whatever power her armor gives her, it's explosive. Then there's this fellow."

As the image of a red dragon appeared, Luna rose in fury. " That foul miscreant hath escaped his eternal bonds?!"

"Sadly, yes," Daring, like most of the room, rubbed her ears. "I thought you might remember the time Inti tried to steal the power of Nightmare Moon before your return. Unfortunately, it seems that with your restoration the dark power you used to imprison him was similarly undone. He's going by Inti Mars now."

The image changed to the same dragon in heavy armor mounted with cannons. One was mounted on his head, one each on his forelimbs, and the shoulder pauldrons appeared to have several. He was a living war machine. While the room took that image in, the slide changed to a menacing-looking griffon. The kind who made Gilda at her worst look cute and cuddly.

"Is that Copperbeak ?" Rainbow Dash gulped. The villain of Daring Do and the Griffon's Goblet had been one of the scarier ones in her opinion.

"Yes it is," Daring nodded as the image changed to show the griffon clad in green and yellow armor crackling with electricity. "Copperbeak Jupiter is the sky commander of this group and his armor has power over storms. Even if pegasus magic wasn't being shut down by the dark curse over Equestria, Copperbeak would be able to overpower any pegasi's control over the weather. I'm sorry, but even though the doctors' treatment restores the ability to use magic, I doubt any of us will have the raw strength to wrest control of his storms from him. As Ahuizotl's demonstration showed, their powers are alicorn tier."

"There are still other options," Dr. Cossack interjected. "While we may lack raw power, we have other resources. I'll be happy to go over them with you all once Daring has finished her briefing."

"Thank you doctor," Daring nodded as the image changed to show a bipedal tiger thing. A Rakshasa. "Anyway, this is Khara, a rakshasa who previously kidnapped elephants to feed on their pain and misery. Not a nice fellow, especially now he's been upgraded."

The image shifted to show the same being in brown armor with ring-like weapon so large he was standing in the middle of it.

"As Khara Saturn, he has even more terrifying powers than before and I didn't exactly stick around long enough to figure out what they were exactly," Daring admitted as the image switched to a positively immense minotaur. "Moving on, this guy is formerly known as the insane King Hammerhoof. And another foe I'd thought was dead. He looks like this now."

The image of the minotaur clad in red and yellow armor so thick as to double his body mass appeared.

"Good gracious!" Rarity gasped. "And I thought he looked like a brute before!"

"Brute is right," Blues answered for Daring this time. "That armor boosts his strength to unbelievable levels as Hammerhoof Uranus. When Daring was getting me out of there he tried to crush us with a several hundred tons of stone structures. Fortunately his aim is terrible."

"Not that it'll make a difference if he gets his hands on you," Daring reminded the group as the image changed to show a diamond dog. "This is Commandant Rex, a militant diamond dog who used to run a very successful slave trade." The image changed to show him in white fur garb with claw-like weapons at his wrists. "Now going by Pluto Rex, he's more dangerous than ever."

"He looks so cruel..." Fluttershy teared up.

"Up next is this bastard," Daring ignored the emotional pegasus as the image of a sea pony with a scraggly beard and pirate attire came up. As Applejack yelped and dove under the table, the rest noted that he seemed oddly transparent. "This guy is the formerly deceased pirate Blackmane, now Blackmane Neptune." The image changed to a definitely corporeal entity in blue and green armor with large white fins. "Among the other abilities his new armor grants him, he also apparently has a fully living body. Or at least a reasonable facsimile." (14)

"And we all know the next member of this group," Blues continued as the picture of the thing that had dueled he and his siblings not even an hour prior appeared. "Ahuizotl, now going by Ahuizotl Terra. One of the more persistent and prolific villains in the world with a penchant for seeking out mystical artifacts of power to aid his delusions of conquest. But even worse is who he seems to have recruited for his latest scheme."

The image of Dr. Wily appeared, causing a round of nods from some and winces from others.

"Dr. Wily Plan has proved to be an Equestria-wide threat with nothing more than his own intelligence and inventions before," Blues reminded the group. "And now he's enhancing a group of alicorn-level villains with that same warped genius to unknown ends. Ends involving the phrase 'Eternal Night' and this:"

The image was now a giant black orb with red markings that made it look like a closed eye.

"The artifact of Le Mu, or Ra Moon according to some translations," Daring took over. "Housed in the Lanfront ruins, ancient texts believe it to be the source of dark magic. Thanks to Blues I can now confirm that this artifact is the source of the Nightmare Force that once corrupted Princess Luna and now fuels the curse of darkness that shrouds Equestria."

"Order, order!" Twilight proclaimed as she presided over the meeting of loopers. Celestia had been treated, but instead of recovering completely the solar princess was barely conscious. She was weak and constantly tired to the point where staying awake was a feat in and of itself. Luna was currently doing her best to get Celestia back to as much health as possible. Dash had been taken care of rather fortuitously when Daring had asked her about her work at Light Labs and Gilda had tagged along to catch up on old times. The three had last been seen deep in energetic conversation with no end in sight. As for the doctors, they had tapped the expanded crusaders (Kalinka apparently having been inducted at some point) to help distribute the cure to the guard, which left the loopers to their own devices.

"Oh, honestly Twilight," Rarity rolled her eyes in exasperation. "We're all here and hanging on your every word. There's no need to call us to order."

"I think she just likes saying it," Pinkie chirped as she idly tried to get her mane back to its normal poofiness. "Kinda like you still use that couch of yours even though–"

"I have no idea what you're talking about," Rarity sniffed. She was still feeling a little out of sorts. Spike hadn't responded to the treatment as well as the rest. Sure being unconscious was technically an improvement over the delirious ramblings he'd been on since opening his mind to the Force had allowed it to be warped by the curse, but he was still not back to normal. She'd gone Loops without her husband Awake before, but having him here but incapacitated was just... worse somehow. To be so close yet so far...

"Oh, whatever," Applejack huffed. "Let's just get on with it."

"Fine," Twilight huffed as Rock and Roll grinned and Blues smirked.

"You seem happy," Fluttershy whispered as Twilight shuffled her notes and prepared to speak.

"You just seem like really good friends is all," Roll smiled.

"Okay," Twilight declared. "To recap: Thanks to the doctors and Zecora, we have our magic back, but not all of it. Our non-Loop native abilities are also sort of working again as Applejack kindly tested out, but our power levels are still not a hundred percent. Essentially, we're all back to the upper end of baseline for us rather than the accumulated power we've become used to. Ascending to alicorn is currently not an option. Whatever this curse is, it really doesn't like alicorns. Celestia's current state after anti-curse treatment is proof enough of that. In addition, the Elements themselves are inert for the foreseeable future, removing that option as well. And if that wasn't enough, pretty much anything useful in our subspace pockets is rendered technologically and magically inert, or worse, the moment we remove it so we can't count on any of that either."

The unicorn Anchor took a deep breath before continuing. "According to Rock and Roll, the foes from their Loop being emulated are called the Stardroids and each is incredibly powerful. Enough to possibly give us a run for our money even if we were at full strength. On our side of the equation, each member of the group is a foe of Daring Do from her adventures which could be real or fictional depending on the variant. They're all highly ruthless and very dangerous. Rock, if you would please?"

"No problem," the newly repaired robot agreed as he took the floor. "In our Loop, Ra Moon is an alien supercomputer dedicated to wiping out all life on the planet to pave the way for its 'children', the Stardroids. It's one of the less pleasant events we go through but fortunately it doesn't happen every Loop. We did our best to check for indicators that it existed, but we didn't find any until now. Anyway, the current variant appears to be an ancient artifact to fuel 'Eternal Night' and Blues says there's no indication it has any form of awareness. The ultimate goal is to enter the Lanfront ruins and destroy the artifact. As it's the source for the dark shroud over Equestria, that should remove its influence and restore magic to all of Equestria, including the Elements of Harmony."

"Assuming there are no complications," Blues added.

"Complications?" Twilight cocked her head inquisitively. "Like what?"

"Like Sunstar," Rock intoned as Roll nodded gravely. "He's normally the true leader of the Stardroids and a doomsday weapon that we can never get around fighting. The only good news is that 'Eternal Night' really doesn't fit his style, so we may not have to face a version of him."

"Well, here's hopin'," Applejack voiced what the rest were thinking.

"Sister..." Celestia wheezed from her bed as various ponies fussed over her. "You can... not be... serious..."

"We have never been more serious, dear sister," Luna insisted gently. "This foul magic is an attack not only on Equestria and her sovereignty, but upon all the world as well. Magic has been stripped from the populace and the land. Most all fantastic technological advances made since our banishment lie inert. The Elements of Harmony themselves hath been rendered dormant. We cannot in good conscience send our little ponies to face this threat when we ourselves are unwilling to go."

"Eques...tria... needs...you," Celestia coughed. "Our... little... ponies need... their... princess of the night... to lead them... in dark times..."

"Our little ponies need the sun," Luna nuzzled her bedridden sister affectionately. "They need an end to the darkness. And we shall see it done."

"Even protected from the dark influence of the shroud that emanates from it, and before these 'Star Druids' are taken into account, the Lanfront ruins are a dangerous place," Dr. Cossack explained to the task force that had been assembled for the purpose of infiltrating the ruins and taking out the source of the dark curse over the land. In addition to the Elements of Harmony, Daring Do, and the Light siblings; Zecora and Gilda had volunteered to join the expedition. He wasn't particularly happy about his niece going to fight opponents who could apparently cut through alicorn magic with little effort, but he couldn't reasonably stop her.

He could, however, send help.

"Which is why Dr. Light and I have enhanced my series of robot masters to strengthen this group," he continued. "Each of you will be paired with one of them. The mission is to engage the various Star Druids and keep them occupied while Daring Do and the Lights infiltrate the ruins and destroy the artifact of Le Mu. I've put together teams to best compliment each pair's individual abilities. Miss Pie, you are with–"

"Rain Toad!" Pinkie interrupted cheerfully.

"Ah, actual–"

"Gotta be him!" Pinkie cut the griffon doctor off again.

"...May I ask why?" Dr. Cossack sighed.

"Because if I'm gonna rain on their parade, I should have somefrog who can use actual rain!" Pinkie smiled. (15)

"Er..."

"Just go with it," Twilight told him. "Knowing Pinkie, it'll all work out."

"But..." the griffon scratched his head, "then who shall I pair up Zecora with?"

"Your robot with the skeleton mane, shall suit me better than the rain," Zecora informed him, before smirking. "It shall be good voodoo that we do."

"Ah..." the griffon scientist looked even more lost. "I was going to have him protect Fluttershy. And I still have no one to pair with Dust Bunny."

"A BUNNY?!" the sudden yell caused everyone present to turn and look at a now blushing Fluttershy. "Er... I mean, I'll volunteer to go with him. If that's okay with you..."

"I... suppose that works out then," Dr. Cossack adjusted his glasses. "Moving on... Applejack, I understand your connection with the Elements has allowed you to develop earth moving powers?"

"Somethin' like that," Applejack carefully didn't reveal where she'd really gotten such abilities from.

"Yes," Cossack nodded, "that will make you a good partner for my tunnelling model, Drill Dog. I understand miss Rarity has an affinity for enchantments and gemstones?"

"And fabulousness darling, don't forget that," the unicorn looper winked to let the room know she was trying to lighten the mood.

"Of course," the griffon scientist nodded. "Well, Bright Mane should help you dazzle and daze your opponents. Rainbow Dash, my niece tells me you're quite the flyer."

"Best in Equestria!" Dash boasted.

"That remains to be seen," Dr. Cossack smirked. "Regardless, she also tells me that you're an accomplished martial artist. Thus you'll be paired with Ring Tercel, my contribution to the Griffon Empire's National Guard. You will be the primary combat pair. While all of you will likely be engaged with the Star Druids in combat, the two of you will be the ones most up close and personal. Hit hard, hit fast, and get the buck back out of range before they can retaliate."

"Yes, sir!" Dash saluted seriously.

"Twilight, you and Dive Serpent with his homing munitions will be long range support," Dr. Cossack continued, getting a nod from the unicorn. "Which brings me to the last pair."

"You better not have me sidelined uncle," Gilda growled indignantly.

"Far from it, my dear Gilda," Cossack sighed. "You and Pharaoh Sphinx have perhaps the most dangerous job of all. While the rest draw out the Star Druids, you will be following the main strike team in for the purpose of engaging any remaining defenses while they continue on ahead. It will be only the two of you against whatever remaining opposition there is so the strike team isn't delayed, with no chance for backup."

Gilda swallowed a bit nervously, but managed a salute in reply.

"Rock, Roll, Blues," Cossack addressed the Lights, "your father and I managed to cobble together an upgrade for your copy chips. You should be able to replicate, at least partially, the enchantments on the Star Druids' regalias in addition to an expanded active weapon memory and the master weapons of my own creations. Hopefully, this will give you any extra edge needed. Your father's reactivated creations will be staying behind to protect Canterlot along with the Equestrian Royal Guard in case the Star Druids attack here. I only wish we could afford to send more help. These are, after all, enemies with strength comparable to an alicorn each."

"You may not, noble doctor, but we shall," the regal voice of Princess Luna joined the group. "If these blackguards bring strength equal to the alicorn race, then ye too shall have the strength of an alicorn to aid ye! Your princess of the night is joining you to put an end to this curse of lightlessness!"

"Wait, so you've heard about this 'Le Mu' thing before?" Rainbow Dash inquired of the princess as the group rode the royal air yacht to the Lanfront ruins.

"Indeed we have," Luna admitted, "though the tale was ancient when we and our sister were but fillies ourselves and we thought it nothing more than an old tale to frighten young ones. It appears that is not the case."

"You know," Twilight mused as she examined her Loop memories more closely, "I think I came across the legend myself once. Something about the first alicorn?"

"Indeed," Luna replied as the others, of flesh and steel alike, gathered around her to hear the tale. "Le Tor was his name and for thousands of years the tellings of his deeds caused the alicorn race to be viewed as cursed. It was only when Celestia and ourself vanquished the spirit of chaos with the Elements of Harmony that opinion shifted."

Rock and Roll in particular listened closely. If Le Mu was the current variant of Ra Moon, then Le Tor was obviously meant to be Ra Thor. A super robot who had never had a personality that they'd encountered. It would be interesting to hear how he had been different this time.

"It is said that Le Tor was once a noble and just ruler over all ponykind in the ancient past, even before magic was well understood or the rift between the three tribes formed," Luna began. "But he grew greedy and selfish and his heart turned to darkness. He delved into dark magics and became cruel and unforgiving, forged armor of terrible dark power to wear, and eventually created the artifact of Le Mu and used it to imprison the sun. The entire world was seemingly cast into darkness eternal until, as the legends say, an order of unicorns known as the Magi came together to pool their mystical abilities and raise the sun by sheer force of will."

"What happened to the bastard then?" Gilda asked, intrigued.

"The legends say that the Magi then led all three tribes and chased the wicked alicorn out of their lands by force, the might of the unicorn order rendering his dark powers useless. He fled with the artifact of Le Mu to a distant land never to be seen again. And the ponies, thankful for the return of the life-giving sun, made the unicorn order their rulers. The pegasi swore to their defense and the earth ponies to the production of their food so the unicorns could forever focus on maintaining the cycle of days. And of course, the tale of Hearth's Warming tells us how that eventually worked out."

"Yes," Twilight turned that over in her mind. It sounded a little off in some respects and she wondered if the unicorn nobles of the time had... tailored the tale to inflate their own sense of importance. But it would be impossible to know for sure.

"Heeheehee!" Desert Mercury cackled as she saw the Equestrian airship in the distance. "Looks like the doc was right. They are foolish enough to come right to us!"

"More fools them," Zuri Venus scowled intently. "Copperbeak? You're up." (16)

"Heh-heh-heh..." the armored griffon chuckled as he rubbed his gauntlets together, electricity sparking between them as storm clouds formed in the sky around the airship. "This is gonna be fun... And Venus? Call me Jupiter."

A massive bolt of lightning split the sky and the ship, sending it to the ground in a flaming wreck.

"Well," Pluto Rex grinned. "I'm sure a few of them survived that. Let's go hunting."

"Smash them all!" Hammerhoof Uranus agreed enthusiastically.

"Yes," Inti Mars rumbled in anticipation. "It has been too long since I had decent sport."

"Ye and me both landlubber," Blackmane Neptune smirked from the river.

"Is everyone okay?" Rock and Twilight asked at the same time. The storm had come up unnaturally quick, making it an obvious attack. However, while most had believed that it was meant to aid incoming hostiles, and had thus gone on watch for them, Princess Luna had divined that the storm was, in fact, the main attack and had teleported the entire group to the ground and out of harm's way before the air yacht was destroyed.

"A little shaken sugarcubes," Applejack replied from where she was scanning the surrounding area.

"But not stirred!" Pinkie grinned despite the fact that not everyone present got the reference and even fewer appreciated its use at the moment.

"Tis not the time for frivolity," Luna admonished the Element of Laughter. "Our foes shall not believe us so easily dispatched. We must make haste to our goal."

"We need to spread out," Gilda told them. "Big groups are big targets and we're probably not gonna have much warning when they find us."

"Gilda's right," Rainbow agreed. "Strength in numbers isn't gonna mean much when they can toss around big moves like that one. We need to pair off and split up."

"Keep your communicators hot," Blues added, tapping his helmet and reminding the non-robots present of the devices fitted to their ears. "Contact the rest if you engage the Star Druids. Do your best to take them out one by one and keep the way clear for the strike team. Luna, you're with Rock and Roll in Strike 1. We're probably going to need you against whatever's waiting for us in there. Daring and I will be close by as Strike 2 with Gilda and Pharaoh Sphinx covering us."

"Everyone got your partners?" Roll checked, getting a round of nods.

"Then let's move out!" Rock declared and began galloping towards the Lanfront ruins.

Dr. Wily cackled as he observed the view of Canterlot in his video feed. Ahuizotl had been sent back from the seat of Equestrian government with his scorched hand-tail between his legs despite his gloating that he could conquer the city on his own in its weakened state.

Wily, however, knew that his old friend and colleague would have been able to work something out. That's what Bright Light (and why did some part of his mind want to call the stallion Thomas? What a strange name...) did after all. So he'd joined in the bet the rest had done over how Ahuizotl would fail, the prize being command of the next phase of the plan. Inti bet he'd lose to Luna, Zuri had wagered he'd fall to Daring as was usual for him, Copperbeak had bet on a timely griffon intervention, Rex claimed the guards would emerge victorious though with losses, Hammerhoof had bet on the longshot of the royal guard with no losses, Blackmane insisted on the slightly less longshot of a ragtag bunch of misfits, Khara thought he'd somehow manage to do himself in, and Desert believed that the Equestrians would whip out some forgotten and forbidden dark magic. But he'd won by wagering that Dr. Light's creations would be Ahuizotl's undoing on that errand. After all, he knew firsthoof how capable they were.

It was why he'd insisted on restoring and enhancing the armors and regalias that had been found here. The ingenuity of the ancient order that had made them was astounding, make no mistake, but it was nothing he couldn't improve upon.

Even if he'd needed a little help from the master artifact to do it.

In any case, he had a genius plan. The nine outfitted members would remain at the ruins to meet the forces that would be sent against them. While he? He would send his latest and greatest project, an artifact at least as ancient and powerful as anything his nine partners now wielded that he had restored and improved upon, back to Canterlot while its most capable champions were away. All under his direct control.

Should these 'heroes' defeat their group, he would already have the ultimate collection of hostages to secure their unconditional surrender.

Luna nearly forgot the plan when the dragon, Inti Mars, burst out of the treeline, scattering several trees with his size. But when her two companions, rather than stand and fight, merely dashed past the beast (17) she recalled their words:

"We can't stop to engage unless there's no other choice. I know you'll want to protect the others from danger. We will too. But there's a time for protecting others and a time to realize others are capable of protecting themselves. This is the latter. So we don't stop unless we have to."

"Cowards!" the war dragon yelled after them as they raced away from him. "Come back and face me!"

"Hold it right there, mister!" the stern voice of Fluttershy could be heard behind them before the three were too far away to make out words.

Pinkie and Rain Toad were advancing through the jungle when a blast of energy tore through Pinkie's mane. Strangely, it didn't seem to do any harm. Instead it grabbed one of her party petards that she always kept handy and carried it back to the shooter.

"Well, well," the shooter's sinister voice made itself known, "if it isn't the ever-so-happy Element of Laughter. I was hoping I'd run into you."

"Really?" Pinkie asked cheerfully as Desert Mercury stepped into her view. "Did you want a party? I'm kind of busy right now, but I think I can squeeze you in for a quick small one!"

"I hate parties," Desert Mercury punctuated the statement by crushing the party munitions she'd stolen with her weapon.

Pinkie's mane almost deflated again as her shock broke her concentration. "W-what?"

"You heard me," the acid green mare glared at Equestria's premier party pony. "I hate parties. I hate laughter. I hate seeing the clueless brain-dead masses go about their happy way. Why do you think I wanted to revive the Smooze? So I could erase that inane pointless happiness once and for all!"

Pinkie took a step back at the insane look in the armored mare's eyes and bumped into her companion. Turning to look at him, she saw him nod reassuringly. He had her back, no matter what.

"And now I am the Smooze!" Desert Mercury laughed as her body rippled and flowed menacingly. "And I will destroy all happiness!"

"Hey, Ringer, hold up," Rainbow told her wing-bot. "I know we're supposed to support the others, but that storm cloud's not sitting right by me. I think we should make it our priority."

"The idea is sound," Ring Tercel allowed before pointing at a figure in the sky, revealed only by the lightning. "But what about the storm's master?"

"Hmmm..." Rainbow mused for a moment. "Okay, here's the plan..."

"Come on out and I'll make this quick!" Zuri called to her hidden quarry as she stalked ever closer. "Honestly, it's nothing personal, but you shouldn't have involved yourself in things like this that are way over your heads."

The brush rustled a bit and she smirked.

"And now you're going to lose them," the zebra mercenary smirked as she unleashed the exploding bubbles her armor's magic allowed her to create.

The brush blew apart impressively as expected, but there was a distinct lack of remains left behind.

"That is how you track one like me?" the metered voice of a shaman mare taunted from behind her. "Who lives in the forest ever free?"

"So," Zuri retorted in a low voice, trying to hide the innate fear that revelation instilled in her, "they sent a medicine mare after me?"

"Nay," the unfamiliar zebra replied as she stepped from the brush, "you were punished for your crime. To seek you out is not worth my time. But the reality now is stark. The world chafes under eternal dark."

"Sanctimonious holier than thou..." the mercenary growled.

"It matters not who is wrong or right," the zebra replied calmly. "We must purge the dark and return the light."

"I'll purge you !"

Twilight, by virtue of her aquatic companion, had taken the river.

"Avast ye weakling bilge rats!"

As should have been expected, they were stopped by the aquatic member of their opponents.

"I hate pirates," Twilight grumbled as she and Dive Serpent prepared to face off against Blackmane Neptune.

"Can't say I'm all that fond of them me'self lass," the robotic river serpent agreed.

Hammerhoof Uranus bellowed as he pried his helmet off of his face and back atop his head. The blue robot pony would pay for that humiliation! Turning frantically to seek his opponent, he spotted him nearby and charged.

"Tarnation!" The pony in question wasn't blue. Nor a robot. Heck, she wasn't even male.

The enraged and empowered minotaur really didn't care at this point.

"Well, well," Pluto Rex grinned as he traced a claw over the captured unicorn's face, "aren't you a pretty pony? Yes, you'll fetch a fine price when this is over."

"Why do I always attract the unwashed brutes?" Rarity sighed to herself, trying to not think about the unclean feeling.

"Insult me all you want, pretty pony," the diamond dog grinned sadistically, "you'll change your tune soon enough."

"Ugh!" Rarity spat and closed her eyes. "I don't think so. Any time Bright Mane!"

"And just what do you think your useless companion can do?" Pluto Rex taunted, before promptly being blinded by a bright flash of light.

"Oh, nothing much," Rarity simpered condescendingly as her opponent howled and clutched his eyes. Honestly, what did he expect with eyes so adjusted to darkness meeting the brightest bulb in all the lands?

Blues cursed under his breath as he grappled with Khara Saturn. The Rakshasa had ambushed them as they drew close to the ruins and knocked Daring to the ground. Even the fact that he'd copied the felinoid's weapon wasn't improving his mood. The felinoid was strong and had all the leverage right now, which meant Blues was in a bad position.

And then all of a sudden the weight of his opponent was slammed off of him. Turning to look, he saw Gilda roll off of Khara Saturn right as Pharaoh Sphinx unleashed a charged Pharaoh Shot.

"Go!" Gilda called to him and Daring, who was now returning to her feet, "we've got this loser!"

Blues simply nodded and ran for the entrance to the ruins, Daring close behind him.

Ahuizotl Terra grinned as he watched the three intrepid explorers pass by without noticing him. He wasn't going to engage them. No, he had a score to settle with the red one who was even now approaching as well. And an older score to settle with the hated Daring Do with him.

These three he'd let the doctor deal with.

Humming cheerfully to himself, he pulled a lever that caused a wall to slide closed behind the three. Now they couldn't return to interfere, and Daring and the red one could proceed no further.

Dr. Wily scowled as he saw Ahuizotl let his nemeses and the princess through his checkpoint. It was... not unexpected to be honest. Far from ideal, but not unexpected.

"Well, my brain damaged friend," he addressed a special variant of his Devil Core, "it looks like you will get to have revenge on one of the ones responsible for your state after all."

The Devil Core was constructed around the most fascinating magical artifact. One that could summon an otherwise bodiless presence to be interrogated. And with his improvements and melding with his Devil Series technology, the presence would have both a body and the ability to defend against intruders.

"Yes, you shall have your revenge..." he chuckled. "You shall have revenge for both of us."

Celestia's blood ran cold as her captain of the guard used his newly restored magic and displayed an image of the figure approaching Canterlot. It was tall, taller than her, covered in armor over every inch of its body, and most tellingly of all it was an alicorn.

One she recognized from the stories and legends her mother used to tell her and Luna.

"It... can't ... be..." she gasped out. But her eyes, tired as they were, told her otherwise.

The legendary first alicorn, Le Tor, the evil being who had once imprisoned the sun, a figure that had featured prominently in her foalhood nightmares since the day she earned her cutie mark, was advancing on Canterlot.

On her.

Rock and Roll had jumped when the section of wall slammed closed behind them, honestly expecting that they'd accidentally tripped a trap of some sort. Even with long experience raiding the Lanfront in their baseline, they still tended to miss some of those things every so often.

"T'would appear our regress is barred to us," Luna observed as she finished scanning the wall. "It is no matter as our goal lies ahead and not behind."

"True," Rock allowed, though in his experience having exits barred always meant something nasty was ahead.

And as they entered the next chamber, he wasn't disappointed.

There before them was a Devil Core, etched in runes that first began to glow and then emit black smoke that positively pulsed with dark magic. As the mystic smoke began to form the standard body shape for the Devil Series, Rock reflected that this was the first version he'd seen that had a gaseous body. The body finished forming and the eye opened menacingly...

And Princess Luna gasped in shock at its appearance.

The single eye had a sickly green sclera, an angry red iris, and a sinister purple aura that seemed to bleed power from the eyeball itself. "Crrr...rrry...yyss...sstt...taa...aal...lss...?" the thing rumbled slowly and unsurely.

"Sombra...?" Luna whispered in recognition and disbelief. "Sombra DarkMoon? How?"

The evil eye then focused on Luna and the beast seemed to gain a measure of clarity.

"LLLUUNNAAAA!" It roared with hate and rage.

Inti Mars was utterly flummoxed. He was used to ponies and other small creatures either cowering in terror or engaging him in battle. He wasn't used to small winged soft-looking ponies trying to stare him into submission as if he was an unruly hatchling.

The strange creature next to the pony that looked like the union of a rabbit and a vacuum cleaner wasn't even a contestant in how unnerving the experience was.

"You should be ashamed of yourself!" the pony scolded him. "Just because you're bigger than everyone else is no excuse to bully them! What would your mother think?"

That last part snapped him out of it. The reference to his mother … (18)

"My mother ..." he growled at the pony, who seemed surprised that he was acting like the grand dragon he was rather than a mere stripling she was treating him as, "was a vile old lizard . And my only regret..."

The pony took an instinctive step back as the cannons the mad doctor pony had added to his magic armor began to glow with power.

" Is that I didn't kill her myself! "

Zuri Venus brayed in fury. The shaman's illusions were infuriating! She'd thought her power had obliterated the uppity zebra mare the second time, only to see the tell-tale magical mist float away instead of a mangled body as the dust settled. Same with the third, and then the fourth, and so on.

"Show yourself!" the empowered mercenary screeched.

"You should try to temper your rage," the smug voice sounded from behind her. "Too much could further advance your age."

"Did you just call me OLD?!" the enraged beyond belief zebra roared before firing more of the exploding bubbles at the mare.

Gilda grit her beak as her armored opponent held his ring weapon in front of him. The interior swirled with darkness and she suddenly felt really weak. Like she was about to fall over. The ground was looking like a better place to take a nap by the moment regardless of the imminent danger her life was in.

Then her partner blasted Khara Saturn's weapon off course and she felt a heck of a lot better. Shaking off how frightening that experience had been, she pounced on the rakshasa, determined that he wasn't getting another shot at her with that thing.

Ring Tercel darted up towards the armored griffon who commanded the storm. He threw a few rings ahead of him and noted with satisfaction that they successfully diverted the path of a lightning bolt that would have struck him otherwise.

"Not bad," Copperbeak Jupiter smirked and flexed his talons, " for a wind-up toy! "

As Ring Tercel engaged his opponent in melee, he hoped that his role as distraction would prove enough for Rainbow Dash to do her part. He only had to last long enough.

Pinkie tried to listen to the villainous rant for important information, she really did, but it was just blah, blah, blah, I hate seeing others happy, blah, blah, they all laughed at me, blah, blah, blah, blah, I'm invincible, blah, blah, blah, blah, who's laughing now, blah, blah, blah, blah, blah .

"Okay, bored now," she declared, mostly to herself, before her wandering eyes latched onto the tubes connecting the oozy pegasus's helmet and chestplate. "Ooh, this looks important!"

"What? How?" the meanie-mean-ooze-head sputtered in surprise. Honestly, it was like she'd never had someone suddenly and inexplicably appear right next to her. "No, don't!"

Pinkie unceremoniously yanked the tubes out of their connections.

"You fool!" the meanie head yelled at her as her form began to droop. "Those were necessary to keep control of my form! Now I can't keurb blurb blub blub..."

"Whoa..." Pinkie stared in horror at the puddle of ooze and empty armor that used to be her opponent before slinking back over to her froggy partner in a daze. "I... I didn't mean to melt her! I just... she was being mean and scary and talking about destroying all happiness and turning Equestria into Depressedria and can we not tell Twilight that I melted somepony by accident? Please? I didn't mean it and it was an accid–"

She was cut off when her froggy partner abruptly shoved her away from him, causing her to skid across the ground.

"Hey!" she yelled as she got back to her feet. "What was that... for...?"

She stared at the mobile acid-green-in-the-process-of-turning-purple ooze now engulfing her amphibious robo-friend. Had she really been so out of it that she missed her Pinkie Sense?

"Error," Rain Toad sputtered as he was engulfed by the mass, "Emotional processing unit offli–"

The ooze seemed to turn and look at her. It wasn't a nice look.

"Ah-heh..." she chuckled nervously and pulled out one of her party munitions from her mane. "Party petard?"

The ooze blurbled in a way that sounded like laughter and began to form a face. This was why she didn't like this stuff. Most ghosties could be laughed away, the Smooze just laughed right back.

"Smmooooozzee..." the blob groaned and started in her direction.

"Oh fun," Pinkie swore before running as if her ability to enjoy life depended on it.

"Bowbowbow-bowbowbow..." (19)

Guts Stallion grunted as he did his best to hold the armored alicorn back. Behind him, Elec Mare crashed into the ground after being hit with a massive blast of energy. Blasts from Cut Mare and Bomb Stallion didn't even seem to slow him down.

He and the other Light numbers had been recalled and restored to functionality shortly after the docs had devised a cure, though Ice Mare and Fire Mare had been too far away to reach quickly. They'd remained behind to help keep Canterlot running in the midst of this disaster while Rock and his pals took the Cossack numbers to deal with the source. When they'd gotten word of the attack, they'd mobilized against the bastard advancing on Canterlot and were doing their best to buy time for the guard to prepare a response.

He'd prefer they take the lump out on their own, but they were getting their flanks kicked left and right.

Luna swore as she narrowly dodged another blast of dark magic. This foul one-eyed incarnation of the banished tyrant was infuriating! The eye seemed only vulnerable when open and the rest of the body was as harmable as the smoke it appeared made from! And even when it was open, only the mightiest of attacks seemed to deal the beast any harm! At this rate...

"Noble children of Light!" she called to her battle companions. "Thou must go on ahead and destroy the foul source of the curse that plagues Equestria! We shall deal with this beast Sombra has become!"

"Small problem, princess!" noble Rock called back as he evaded the beast's attack.

"There's no exit!" the usually gentle Roll finished for her brother.

Luna charged a spell and blasted away the wall opposite where they entered. "There is now! Make haste and end this plague of darkness while I do battle with this nightmare!"

As the two reluctantly forged ahead, Luna stared down her opponent.

"Now it is merely thee and we," she declared as she readied another spell.

"YYYEEEEESSSSSS..." the Sombra-devil rumbled in vile glee.

Applejack mused that earthbending tended to be a lot more effective when her opponent didn't barrel through boulders like they were wet paper. As it was, she was doing her best just to slow the varmint down and dodge the shrapnel.

Honestly, if it hadn't been for Drill Dog and his pit traps, she didn't think she'd have lasted this long. Her opponent being in a blind rage and ignorant of even obvious traps helped too. Still...

"We're gonna need a plan here soon I reckon!" she yelled to her partner. "We're only slowing this fella down and I don't think we're gettin' reinforcements any time soon!"

"I could do something," Drill Dog yelled back as he wasted a couple more of his bombs on Hammerhoof Uranus's armor, only serving to make the berserk minotaur angrier, "but you'll need to keep him busy by yourself while I get it set up!"

"Done and done!" Applejack yelled back and pulled a lasso out of her subspace pocket. First was to get tall dark and ugly focused solely on her. She whipped the lasso over the thick helmet covering and pulled.

Hammerhoof stopped for a moment and felt the top of his now unarmored head before turning slowly towards Applejack. His eyes began to turn red as the blood vessels swelled and veins in his forehead bulged ominously. The minotaur's nostrils flared and Applejack could have sworn that smoke blasted out of them as he snorted in anger.

"You want it?" she taunted him. "Come an' get it!"

Hammerhoof Uranus bellowed incoherently and charged after the fleeing farm pony.

"And don't let him leave the area!" Drill Dog called to her as he dove underground.

Applejack didn't reply. She was too busy running for her life.

"FORGET THE SALE!" Pluto Rex frothed as his claws tore through everything in reach as he dashed around blindly. "WHEN I'M DONE

WITH YOU NO ONE WILL EVEN BUY YOU AS MEAT!"

He hated the unicorn more than anydog he'd ever met! And her little bulb too!

"AND YOUR TOY WON'T EVEN FETCH A PRICE AS SCRAP METAL!"

Every time his eyes began to clear, that damnable light would flash and blind him again! And the unicorn had sprayed some atrocious scent all over the area that burned his nose! She'd die just for that!

"Oh, such a foul mouth you have!" the unicorn tittered, causing him to turn towards the sound.

"BE BROKEN AND DIE!" he screamed as he charged the source of the sound with all the enhanced speed he could muster.

It was too bad he couldn't see the high tensile strength thread strung across his path.

Twilight nursed a chemical burn on her shoulder as Dive Serpent's missiles intercepted another blast of the corrosive liquid from the not-as-dead-as-he-should-be seapony pirate.

Why wasn't she dead yet?

That fact was bugging her more than even the burn or the fight. These were supposed to be alicorn level opponents. She may still be on the high end for her baseline non-alicorn self despite the power dampening, but she still shouldn't have been able to mount as effective a defense as she had.

Her shields actually held under the power of this member of the Star Druids when Luna's had been cut through like they weren't there. Her only injuries had come from the splashing of missed shots. Dive Serpent's missiles were actually keeping up with Blackmane's water blasts, rendering them much less dangerous, and allowing him to remain mostly undissolved. Plus their opponent seemed more frustrated and less smug than she'd been expecting.

Her thoughts were interrupted as she raised another shield, which held quite firmly. It was like the water was solely chemical after being manifested, and unable to corrode magical force like it did her companion's armor.

Honestly, even accounting for possible overconfidence, she and her partner shouldn't be doing nearly as well as they were. After all, Ahuizotl had...

Ahuizotl had played them for chumps.

Twilight wanted to slap herself when she realized what was going on. Their opponents were powerful, sure, but they weren't necessarily alicorn tier. At least not in all respects. They were focused. Specialized. Ahuizotl's laser power allowed him to pierce barriers, even alicorn ones, which made him the perfect choice to catch an unaware defender off guard and kill whatever was left of Equestrian morale. They were supposed to believe the Star Druids were all alicorn-level opponents and that resistance was hopeless.

But as his original duel with the Lights showed, and they'd failed to pick up on, his other enhancements fell a bit short. He was strong, no question, but he wasn't as strong as he wanted them to believe.

After that realization, the rest fell into place. Blackmane's water weapon didn't corrode her shields because it wasn't magic at all. It could only corrode physical substances. And if it wasn't a magical liquid...

Well, she'd never beaten an opponent with a 'purify water' spell before. But in the Loops, there really was a first time for everything.

'Damn,' Blues swore internally as he gave the room he and Daring had ended up in a cursory scan. 'Dead end.'

He was about to backtrack and find a different way when he noticed Daring staring at some of the ancient writing that circled the chamber.

"Blues," the pegasus explorer's breath hitched, "do you know what this says ?"

"Ancient languages aren't exactly my specialty," he reminded her.

"It says here that Le Tor wasn't the enemy of the Magi," Daring turned to him with wide eyes. "He–"

"Was its leader," finished the voice of Ahuizotl from the room's entrance right before it slammed shut.

"Alright, get those canisters ready!" Shining Armor commanded what little of the guard force was currently battle ready. "Let's see how this 'Le Tor' likes knockout gas!"

"Belay that!" the frantic voice of Dr. Light intruded into the preparations while the older stallion waved around some device that he seemed to think was important.

"Why should we?" Shining glared at the doctor. Brilliant or not, the stallion was not in command and his nerves were frayed enough as it was without having his judgement called into question without sound reason.

"Because your foe is not an alicorn!" Dr. Light panted. "He's not even alive!"

That sounded like a sound reason. "Explain."

"These readings here," Dr. Light thrust the device into Shining's face, "show that under the armor is nothing but metal, wires, and electronics! The armor may be the genuine article, but what lies inside it is not!"

'Sweet mother of Celestia damn it!' Shining cursed mentally and rubbed his face with his hoof. There went his entire battle plan. "What now?"

"These readings here," Dr. Light pointed to something that to Shining could have been written in Bushwoolie for all he understood it, "show that the thaumic core is powered by the same Nightmare Force that shrouds Equestria! If we can just douse it with the cure, we may be able to render it inert!"

"How much do we have right now?" Shining asked.

"Enough for one good attempt since I doubt he'll go willingly," Dr. Light admitted. "With Rain Toad on the mission, Dr. Cossack and Nyx won't have another batch ready for hours."

"It'll have to do," Shining admitted. "Okay everyone! Listen up! Change of plans!"

None of them noticed a filly eavesdropper sneak away.

'ANALYZING SUBSTANCE...'

Zecora resisted the urge to smirk as her opponent's jaw dropped when she was revealed unharmed behind a shimmering skull-shaped barrier.

"Closing your mouth would be wise," she stated, "unless you care to capture flies."

"Impossible..." the traitorous mercenary growled. "You should be a smear! No barrier is strong enough to defend against my power!"

"Of course it is," a new voice interjected as a third zebra, the robotic Skull Mane, entered the clearing. "Provided you know how to modulate it properly. And since you're so free with demonstrating your power on phantoms, it gave me ample time to study and adapt."

"I'll give you a demonstration!" Zuri yelled and flung more of the exploding bubbles at them both. Like the ones before, they detonating harmlessly on Skull Mane's shields as Zecora walked calmly forward.

"Good night," she said when she was practically nose to nose with the mercenary, right before blowing a powder in her face. "Sleep tight."

The mercenary was unconscious before she hit the ground.

Fluttershy was no stranger to being shot at, nor was she a stranger to life or death battles. She'd raised Lehman Russ after all. Still, trying to fight anything that outmassed and outgunned you tended to involve a lot of running. And with the power she'd amassed over the Loops taking a hit, she was very outgunned at the moment.

Still, she'd managed to make a good showing right up until she tripped over an exposed root. And with a murderous dragon bearing down and her druidic magic still on the fritz, things weren't exactly looking up.

"You leave Miss Fluttershy alone you great brute!" the voice of her robot partner yelled as he jumped in front of her and began sucking in air and debris for all he was worth. The mechanical lapine obviously meant well, but the strength of his vacuum was, well, laughable next to the immense war machine that was the armed and armored dragon Inti Mars.

"You cannot be serious..." said dragon blinked as he tried to process the action. "You are a glorified vacuum cleaner! I am a god of war !"

The main cannon on his head took aim at the two as Dust Bunny stared defiantly back. The robot's suction died down and Fluttershy saw something working its way back up her companion's only weapon.

"You are nothing before my might!" Inti bellowed as he prepared to fire.

Dust Bunny was faster. The compressed ball of debris fired back out his head-mounted vacuum and right down the barrel mounted on Inti Mars's head. The munitions about to fire at them both detonated in the barrel and the dragon roared in pain.

But he did not fall.

"FOR THAT YOU DIE FIRST!" the dragon roared and prepared to crush the robot.

Even after countless Loops, Fluttershy still had issues defending herself from those who were hostile towards her. She could, of course, but it wasn't her first instinct. Protecting others though? That was second nature to her.

Suddenly her opponent was looking much more her size as she roared her own challenge back and slammed her yellow-scaled claws into his torso. Flicking her flowing pink hair out of her face, the now draconic Fluttershy focused on rending the one who would hurt her friend in two. (20)

Twilight spat water out of her mouth as she finished helping Dive Serpent haul their defeated opponent out of the river. As predicted, with his corrosive weapon turned to pure water, he was essentially harmless. Tough, sure, but offensively not much of an issue.

At least not with a larger combatant on her side who had ranged weapons.

"Huh," she blinked as she realized the 'body' in the armor was now nothing more than a clay statue. "I'd heard about these things, but I'd never seen them. (21) I thought they were all destroyed. Well, Rock and Roll just need a piece to copy the enchantment so let's take the gauntlets and go find the others."

Ring Tercel grunted as his opponent jolted him with electricity again.

"How do you still live?" Copperbeak Jupiter snarled in frustration.

"Oh, come now," the national guard robot snorted as he threw several of his rings at his opponent. "I was made for aerial combat. Of course I'm insulated!" 'Though not enough to take too many more of those. Any time now Rainbow Dash...'

Rarity dusted herself off as she finished stripping her opponent of his enchanted armor and tying him up with some of her special threads.

"Honestly," she sniffed, "this regalia is far too fabulous for a ruffian like you. Oh, Bright Mane...!"

"Y-yes ma'am?" the timid robot replied from where he was standing a fair distance away. Honestly, she didn't see what he had to be afraid of.

"Do be a dear and carry this for me, would you?" Rarity fluttered her eyelashes. "We simply must be on our way."

"Er..." the robot hesitated in confusion, not understanding the tone. "Of course."

"Ah-ah-ah!" Ahuizotl Terra tsked as Blues pointed his hoof cannon at him and pointed his hand-tail laser weapon right back. "I wouldn't do that if I were you..."

"I've seen your weapon in action," Blues returned confidently. "I can handle it."

"Perhaps," Daring's old foe allowed before turning to point the weapon at the archaeologist, "but can she?"

Blues continued glaring, but lowered his weapon.

"What's your game Ahuizotl?" Daring asked defiantly.

"Just taking what's rightfully mine," the creature explained. "What's always been rightfully mine according to these writings."

"Explain," Daring demanded.

"Everything you Equestrians have ever heard about the Magi is wrong," their opponent declared smugly. "They were not the enemies of Le Tor, they were his most loyal followers. Members of every race dedicated to seeking out knowledge and power and using it to rule the world. This armor I wear? It's no coincidence it fits me so well. It belonged to my ancestor, Le Tor's second in command with the title of 'Terra'. They were the best of friends and the most loyal of allies, developing the artifact of Le Mu together to control the sun and stars. At least until the unicorn members decided they were done sharing mystical knowledge with the other races and turned on the rest of the order."

"You can't possibly be claiming–"

"Oh, but I can ," Ahuizotl Terra grinned fiercely. "All the names you know us by are merely labels used to keep the truth to ourselves, and no longer necessary. We are the new Magi, and the rightful rulers of all the world."

And without warning, he lunged at them both.

'ANALYSIS COMPLETE...'

'OPTIMAL SOLVENT DETERMINED...'

'SYNTHESIZING SOLVENT...'

Rainbow was currently having to reevaluate her plan. Going above the storm to try and dissipate it with a Sonic Rainboom had taken her too close to the main shroud of darkness and the proximity had made her light-headed.

Right now, she was lining herself up for Plan B. Because she'd only get one shot at it.

It was a lot like Plan A, just with a different target.

Rock and Roll surprisingly managed to make it to the artifact chamber without incident. It took them a few moments to fully realize that, yes, there really were no more defenses or obstacles between them and the current version of Ra Moon.

The only thing that bothered them as they stepped inside was that they had yet to hear from Dr. Wily.

But as they entered, there seemed to be no sign of him, or of any surprises. Even the artifact, the familiar giant obsidian orb ringed with intricate designs and emblazoned with a red eye design, looked completely undefended. The two mechanical heroes traded looks and shrugged before taking aim at the artifact of Le Mu.

"I wouldn't do that if I were you," the voice of their recurring foe interrupted. Strangely, it came as a bit of a relief. Known Dr. Wily quantities were almost always preferable to unknown ones.

"Why not?" Roll asked politely.

"Because if you don't..." Wily's voice declared as a large monitor on the other side of the room lit up showing a familiar scene.

It was a video feed of Canterlot. From the eyes of an attacker.

"...well, I'm afraid Ra Th–ahem Le Tor will stop playing nice."

All she knew was rage. This insolent hatchling had dared to harm her precious treasure and now he would pay. With blood and pain and–

"–iss Fluttershy stop!" a voice snapped her out of the red haze. "Our foe is defeated! You don't have to do any more!"

She paused and looked at the other dragon beneath her. He failed to move or retaliate. Was he dead? Did it matter? Why did her head hurt so much?

"You must change back Miss Fluttershy!"

Right, she was supposed to be a pony, not a dragon. As if the thought was the trigger, she began to shrink back to her normal form.

"Oh!" she gasped as her head cleared. "Yes, that's much better. What happened?"

"I'm not sure," Dust Bunny replied. "I'd imagine that your transformation into a dragon changed how the curse affected you even with the treatment in place, but without further information I can't be sure."

"Is he...?"

"He'll live."

"Oh, good. I couldn't bear it if... We should find the others now."

"Of course Miss Fluttershy."

The guards waited until the right moment as the mechanical alicorn strode calmly towards the palace. When it was in the spot, they all sprung out and flung the anti-dark magic potion at the robot.

Only to watch it slide off a magic barrier, never reaching the target.

'Any time now,' Applejack thought furiously as the super-strong minotaur drew ever closer.

"Done!" Drill Dog popped up nearby.

"Ain't nothin' happenin'!" Applejack yelled back.

"It just needs a trigger!" the robot caninoid replied. "The ground is as porous as a sponge now! Anything will collapse it!"

"You want me ta bury him?!" Applejack dodged another swipe.

"You got a better idea?"

Well, no, she actually didn't. She pushed her earthbending into the ground hastily and jumped for all she was worth.

The ground caved under her like it was hit with a meteor and Hammerhoof Uranus bellowed in confusion as he was buried in rock and dirt.

"He gonna live?" Applejack asked worriedly.

"I was more concerned with you living to be honest." her companion answered.

Applejack thought that over for a moment. "Fair 'nuff."

Jupiter, formerly known as Copperbeak, scowled as his foe's eyes widened and he disengaged hastily. As if anyone would fall for that old tr–

His world exploded in pain and light as something slammed into his back.

As the sky exploded in rainbow light, Pinkie chanced a look behind her.

The Smooze looked like it had gotten bigger again.

She ran faster.

'SOLVENT SYNTHESIZED...'

'ARMING...'

"YYOOUUU TOOOOOKK MMYYY CRRYYYSSTAAALLLSS..." the Sombra-devil accused. He was getting more coherent by the moment. Luna needed to end this fast.

"They were never thine to begin with," she retorted as she began charging a spell more powerful than she'd used in a long time.

"MY CRRYYYSSTAALLLLL EEMMMPIIIRRREEE..." Sombra fired bolts of dark magic that Luna narrowly avoided.

Luna's horn glowed brighter with raw magic. Almost...

"YYOOUUU TOOOK MMYYY MMIIINNNDD... MMYYY BOODDYYYY... MMYYY CRRYYSSTAALLL SSLLAAAVVESSS... NNOOOOWW II SHHAALLLLL TAAAKKEE YYOOUUURR–"

Whatever threat the foul creature would have made was cut off when her bolt of power lanced through his single foul eye and shredded the runes maintaining his presence in this place.

"There you are!" Twilight greeted Rainbow as she and Ring Tercel flew down with an unconscious Copperbeak Jupiter held between them. "What happened to him?"

"Sonic Rainboom to the back," Ring Tercel explained. "It appears Miss Dash broke his spine. He'll live, thanks to his armor, but it is uncertain if he'll ever walk again."

"I was expecting him to dodge and be knocked out by the shockwave!" Rainbow insisted. "Not take a direct hit!"

She was prevented from reassuring Dash that it was alright, she'd probably have to arrange counseling after they got back to Ponyville, when the rest began showing up. First Rarity and Bright Mane with Pluto Rex's regalia in tow, then Zecora and Skull Mane with both a restrained Zuri and her own armor, Applejack and Drill Dog with Hammerhoof Uranus's helmet, and finally Dust Bunny and Fluttershy. The latter who had apparently beaten Inti Mars to a bloody pulp. All that was left was to find Pinkie and Rain Toad and then go meet up with Gilda and Pharaoh Sphinx and see if the strike teams needed reinforcing.

Before she could even suggest searching for her, Pinkie burst into the clearing like the terror of a thousand Loops was after her.

Then the Smooze broke through the treeline and Twilight admitted that wasn't far off.

'ARMED...'

'RAIN FLUSH: FIRE'

Before anyone could react, a rocket broke through the Smooze's body and rocketed into the clouds above and burst. For a few long seconds nothing else happened. Even the Smooze's attention was on the sky, apparently puzzling out what had just happened.

Then the first drops of rain fell, increasing to a downpour in moments. The Smooze writhed as if in pain as the rain pummeled it mercilissly and it began to dissolve and thin. More and more the Smooze melted into harmless liquid the soil drank greedily until the group could make out a form contained within. As the Smooze melted off of it, Rain Toad stood and stretched.

"Emotional Processing error corrected," the robot monotoned. "Reinitializing... Damnit Pinkie, pay attention next time!"

Pinkie stared at the restored robot and sniffled. And then began to tear up. And then she tackled the robo-amphibian in a hug.

"I'm sorry!" the party pony bawled her eyes out. "It was an accident! I didn't mean to melt her into a gooey eldritch abomination and get you eaten!"

Apparently Rainbow wasn't the only one who might need therapy.

Blues grit his teeth as he struggled against Ahuizotl's grip. He'd barely managed to deflect one shot of the faux Spark Chaser weapon with his shield (the thing really was just about indestructible) and he needed to disable it before Daring's old foe got bored and decided to stop toying with them.

It might help if Daring would stop staring at whatever new glyph she found so interesting on the damn wall after being thrown into it.

The armor Ahuizotl had was very energy resistant, so Blues switched to the Dust Crusher and fired at the laser gauntlet.

"Gah!" Ahuizotl cried out as the offensive piece of his armor sparked wildly. "You'll pay for that you little..."

"Ahuizotl, stop!" Daring warned suddenly.

Rock and Roll watched impotently as the view of Le Tor's video feed approached the Canterlot gates and a bedraggled looking Celestia limped out to meet it.

"What... do... you... want...?" Celestia gasped out.

"Oh, nothing much, princess," Dr. Wily's voice sounded from both ends of the feed. "Just your immediate and unconditional surrender."

"Never!" a young voice yelled defiantly as the dark form of the robot alicorn filly Nyx interposed itself between Dr. Wily's creation and the ruler of Equestria.

"Took you all long enough," Gilda greeted the group as they approached the ruins, sitting atop a bound, gagged, and de-armored Khara.

"Gilda?" Rainbow blurted out at the sight of her friend. The griffon was covered in cuts and bruises, plus she was missing fur and feathers in several places. "You look terrible." (22)

"So about the same as you then?" the griffon smirked playfully.

"Sounds like they've got everything in hoof Scoots."

"Well, yeah, but you know how these things go. Plan A never works."

"And just what do you expect me to do?"

"You run on that Nightmare Force stuff too, right? Couldn't ya just, I dunno, take it back or somethin'?"

"I don't think it works like that Applebloom."

"Actually DT... It just might..."

Magic retrieval was a skill that saw little use among the magically adept. For one, you couldn't 'retrieve' somepony else's magic that way, just your own. For another, it was a pretty darn sloppy way to undo spells and sometimes had unforeseen consequences. And finally, if you took too much back at once, you could give yourself a really bad headache.

The first one could be circumvented in this specific scenario only because Nyx was a robot that ran on the same wavelength of dark magic as the attacker. The second was a non issue right now because, whatever happened, it could only improve the current situation. The third was the tricky one. Nyx couldn't take in the whole curse because she just couldn't store that much. But the power driving a single robot?

That she could do.

Concentrating, Nyx connected easily with the dark magic powering the robo-alicorn before her and pulled .

"What are you doing you insolent whelp?!" Wily's voice protested from the robot. "I demand you stop this at o–"

The robot's eyes dimmed as the last of its power was removed and it collapsed like a puppet with its strings cut.

Maybe it was curiosity. Maybe it was 'professional courtesy'. Perhaps it was the fact that he'd never heard quite that tone of seriousness in her voice. Whatever it was, Ahuizotl did stop.

"And why should I do that Miss Do?"

"Because of what this passage says!" Daring pointed insistently at the section of the wall next to her.

"Oh, that?" Ahuizotl rolled his eyes. "That just tells how the artifact of Le Mu was used to imprison the sun and stars. Much like it's doing now. A little vandalized perhaps, but what old ruin isn't?"

"Are you ever going to learn to read these things properly?" Daring snarled at her foe and pointed to a particularly complex glyph with a crude line carved through it. "This doesn't mean the actual sun and stars! Written like this, an accurate translation is 'one who is as important as the sun and stars', or the ancient symbol for a ruler . The line through it isn't vandalism, though scholars say the practice may have begun that way. It means that the individual being referenced was despised . A tyrant in this case."

"Are..." Blues blinked, Ahuizotl Terra mirroring the action, "are you saying that the artifact is an actual prison?"

"Yes!" Daring confirmed. "A 'prison of darkness to hold light most foul'. And if I'm reading this right... Whoever it is is still in there. And alive."

Blues took a moment to process that before reaching the same conclusion Daring had.

"We have to stop my brother and sister from destroying it!"

When the video feed went down and Wily began cursing and railing about it, Rock and Roll charged their Mega Busters and took aim at the artifact of Le Mu.

"NO!" Dr. Wily yelled when he noticed them. "STOP! DO–"

The two charged shots tore through the artifact, causing it to explode and dust to fill the room. In the center of the dust cloud, where the artifact used to be, an orange glow pulsed to life.

"Oh, no..." Wily moaned in dismay. "What have you two done...?"

The pulse grew stronger and seemed to stand. As the dust cleared, the Light twins and Dr. Wily could see a figure begin to take shape.

The hooves came into view first. Clad in royal blue armor and more massive than any known pony's. As more was revealed, it became clear that the equine body was larger than even Celestia's, with a masculine bulk that would have put Big Mac to shame, and covered in the same armor. And then the head started to come into view, only it wasn't a head. It was a second torso. Covered in the same armor as the rest of the body, this second torso was revealed to have ape-like arms and hands attached.

The figure was a centaur.

Then the real head was revealed. The helmet covered the entire face save the eyes, which blazed with light, and atop the head were a pair of massive wicked-looking horns. Like a demon. The icon of the sun was attached firmly to the forehead.

"Aaahhh," the figure stretched in its newfound freedom. "After ten thousand years, I am free."

Rock and Roll did their best to keep calm at this new development, but it was hard.

"It is time for the world to recognize the unforgiving light of it's true master."

In the back, Dr. Wily tried his best to sneak silently away.

"It is time for all to bow before Tirek Sunstar."

Right as they agreed on a plan of action to back up the strike teams, Twilight and the others felt the spark as their Elements began to regain power and the dark curse began to recede. The fading red and orange of sunset became visible as the sky cleared.

"All right!" Dash cheered. "They did it!"

"Gracious, but that was quite an adventure," Rarity fanned herself dramatically.

"So I guess Rock and his sister won't be needing these armor bits anymore?" Pinkie questioned as she idly spun the helmet from Desert Mercury on her hoof.

"When did you...?" Rain Toad looked at the pink earth pony strangely.

"Oh, I went back and got it during one of those moments nopony was watching of course!" Pinkie grinned.

"Best not to think about it, sugarcube," Applejack advised sagely.

"Well, the Elements are regaining strength and the curse is lifted," Twilight smiled. "I'd say this has been a good day's wo–"

Twilight was cut off when, right as the last rays of sunlight vanished over the horizon, a new sun seemed to explode out the top of the temple before them.

(A little earlier)

"Mega Mane! Mega Mare!" Blues yelled for his siblings as he, Daring, and Ahuizotl tore down the hall towards the innermost chamber where the artifact of Le Mu rested. While their ultimate goals were different, even Ahuizotl had agreed to a truce to stop whoever was imprisoned in the artifact from being released. "Don't–"

All three skidded to a halt at the sight in the chamber. The artifact lay shattered and standing in the rubble was a massive armored centaur. The royal blues of the armor contrasted with the bright sun-like flames that licked out of every seam and the heat that rolled off of him was more unbearable than the hottest summer.

"Ah, more supplicants to bow before the world's rightful ruler and his most holy of light," the centaur mused at them.

"How do you know our language?" Daring stared wide-eyed. "The words of our eras should be incomprehensible to the other!"

"Your ignorance will be permitted this once," the centaur stared back. "For how could you in your imperfections know of the gift of tongues that I in my holy righteousness possess? It matters not. Come and swear your lives to me so we may purge the rest of the world of its taint."

"No," the twin voices of Rock and Roll cut the tableau. The centaur turned slowly towards them, as if incapable of comprehending the word.

"And who are you to dare speak this way to I, Tirek Sunstar, the true ruler of this world and embodiment of all light?"

"Rock, known as the Mega Mane, son of Light," Rock stood his ground defiantly.

"Roll, known as the Mega Mare, daughter of Light," Roll answered with just as much steel in her voice as her brother.

"A son and daughter of light?" Tirek Sunstar's voice gave the impression of blinking. "Then you of all beings should support my holy cause to purge the dark taint that infects the world with my holy fire."

"No, because we know what results from that kind of talk," Rock returned.

"Needless pain and suffering, heaped the most on those that deserve it least," Roll agreed.

"Death of any who would dare to consider ideas counter to your own," Daring added.

"Even should they be right," Blues finished.

"And you?" Tirek turned to look at the last member of the group staring him down.

"I am Ahuizotl Terra," Daring's continual foe declared himself. "Heir to the Magi and the real inheritor of the world's rulership! I will not allow some millenia-old thief to steal that from me!"

Tirek stared at him before beginning to chuckle, which deepened into a booming laugh that shook the walls even as the light and heat pouring from his form pulsed in time with his mirth. "The pitiful misshapen heir to the treasonous Magi dares to claim me a thief?! How amusing and appropriate with the way your companions spout the same ignorant tripe that arrogant gathering of fools did! Very well! We shall end this the same way as before! With righteous holy battle!"

And with that, Tirek Sunstar rose into the air and rocketed through the ceiling.

"Interesting," a voice from the sun-bright being spoke as the night sky around them lit up like daytime. "It would appear these new Magi have prepared an ambush for my holy return. Clever of you. Cowardly, for which you must be cleansed in righteous flame, but clever."

"Thou speakest of things thou know not heartless miscreant!" a new voice interposed itself as Luna teleported in between the new being and the group below. "We sensed your foul presence and have arrived to protect our little ponies from your wrath! No harm shall befall them while their princess of the night draws breath!"

"A follower of darkness?" the being mused as his light dimmed just enough for those below to make out the armored form of a centaur.

'Holy roots and leaves...' Twilight's eyes widened. 'It that Tirek?!'

"Your taint shall be the first to be cleansed."

"We shall see villain!" Luna yelled as she unleashed a massive blast of magic from her horn. The centaur was hit directly, not even bothering to move or even block it seemed. But then, he'd only let out a grunt when struck and hadn't even been pushed back all that much. Luna, however, had followed up the blast by charging the figure right behind it. Twilight could feel the way Luna was using her earth pony magic to enhance her strength for the physical blow all the way from where she stood without even trying.

Luna struck true and the centaur's armored head snapped back from the blow and there was a scream of pain.

Luna's scream.

The alicorn of the moon plummeted back in their direction, holding the hoof that she'd used to strike her opponent to her and hit the ground hard. She skidded to a halt a short distance away and Twilight got a good look at the hoof. Or rather, the charred stump where it used to be. She could even see the fine charcoal powder marring Luna's coat and realized what had happened.

You're telling me that this fortress somehow managed to charcoalize an alicorn's hoof?

'Great exfoliation,' Twilight thought in horror, 'he's a living sun!'

"Twi?" Applejack looked at her friend.

"Elements, girls," Twilight replied, summoning hers. The time for playing around was officially over.

Five more flashes of light heralded her friends, Awake and not, summoning their own Elements. The six glowed with magical power and the Rainbow of Light burst forth and shot towards the glowing centaur above...

...and shattered into multi-colored motes of magic that swiftly faded.

"...What just...?" Twilight stared at the shining form of Tirek with his fist extended after a contemptuous backhand.

"Fools," he spat. "You seek to use light magic against me? The embodiment of all that is Holy and Just?"

"And where do you think you're going?" Blues asked as he grabbed Dr. Wily trying to sneak away.

"I'm trying to get to my contingency plan so I can fix this mess you created!" the mad scientist fumed.

"Fix Ahuizotl's weapon first," Blues ordered as his brother and sister jumped up the opening Tirek Sunstar had made when he left. "We're going to need all the help we can get."

Twilight was currently having an internal argument with herself.

'The Elements didn't work...'

'Brilliant observation, me, but this isn't the time.'

'Why didn't the Elements work?'

'No clue. Can I perhaps try to think of something else that would?'

'The Elements always work!'

'Not this time they didn't. Look, can I stop–'

'I mean, unless one of the six aren't in harmony with the others, but we all were, so it should have worked and–'

'CAN I STOP FOCUSING ON THAT AND THINK OF A PLAN B NOW?!'

'Like what? Going alicorn? Worked out real well for Luna, didn't it?'

'I can cast spells to protect myself and the rest of us from harm, duh.'

'Oh, sure, and then he starts taking all of us seriously.'

'Yeah, and I've got power to spare. I've been in Dragonball Loops and kicked flank before, remember?'

'Yeah, but the odds of taking out someone as powerful as he is quickly aren't promising, meaning I'd get into a full knock-down-drag-out and how long would Equestria last under that kind of fight?'

'Huh?'

'I said it myself, I've been to Dragonball Loops before. Surely I remember what happens there when two uber-powerful fighters square off. Especially when one cares nothing for collateral damage. So, again, I ask myself: How long would Equestria last under that kind of fight?'

'Er... I... Uh... ARGH! I HATE IT WHEN I'M RIGHT ABOUT THESE THINGS!'

Rock and Roll exited the top of the ruins, busters blazing. Tirek Sunstar didn't even seem to notice. At least at first.

"Pathetic," he scowled and formed an orb of solar flame in one hand larger than either of them. "And to think you claimed to be children of light."

The blast didn't hit them. However, the shockwave from when it hit the temple and exploded threw them off their feet and sent them tumbling down the outer walls. After several seconds of seeming to hit every ledge and decorative carving, they landed near the group of their friends and allies.

"You are not worthy of such a claim," the voice of Tirek Sunstar called after them.

"Hey there," Rock smiled at the others weakly. "You having as much fun as we are?"

"Probably," Pinkie chirped. "Because I'm not having any fun right now and that didn't look fun at all."

"You are weak and insolent," the armored centaur continued, seemingly so confident in his power that he saw no need to follow up his attack.

"We brought you a few things," Rarity told them as she set the bundle of Pluto Rex's armor before them. It was followed by pieces of armor from Desert Mercury, Khara Saturn, Zuri Venus, Hammerhoof Uranus, Copperbeak Jupiter, and Blackmane Neptune.

"Sorry," Fluttershy apologized from where she was trying fruitlessly to see to Luna's injury. "Inti Mars's was a little big to carry."

"Defiant of your betters," Tirek continued, uncaring for the tableau below him.

"No worries," Roll told her as she and her brother proceeded to scan the enchantments on each armor for their variable weapons systems as quickly as possible. "I tagged him as I ran past. Rock got Hammerhoof's as well."

"Just like my ungrateful son, Le Tor."

"Wait, what ?" Daring and Twilight whipped their heads around to stare at Tirek.

"Blast!" Dr. Wily swore as he tried to fix Ahuizotl's weapon. "What did you do Break Mane?!"

"I defended myself," Blues retorted curtly. "Now hurry up. Tirek Sunstar deciding to monologue his history is giving us some time, but that's not going to last."

"So, you have heard of the ungrateful spawn," Tirek Sunstar rumbled.

"Well, yeah, but his parentage is lost to history!" Twilight replied, her nature for seeking knowledge driving her mouth. "All we know about him is that he imprisoned the sun! Which, come to think of it is probably you, so..."

"I see..." Tirek's sneer was audible. "This is the thanks I get for my life of Holy service? This is all my years of firm and Just leadership is worth? This is what the vanquisher of the mad Queen Majesty is granted? Forgotten and erased? Intolerable. The taint has spread its roots deeper than I imagined."

"But..." Daring's eyes were wide. "Queen Majesty is a myth!"

"Oh, the mad queen was quite real," Tirek told them. "As was her vile and unholy power to wish for anything, including the enslavement of the hearts and minds of all under her domain, save those she thought 'unworthy' of her 'protection', instead wishing for them to be the monsters she saw them as. How all the races cheered when I slew her at last, their minds finally their own. And how naive I was to allow her misbegotten spawn to live afterwards. How foolish I was to raise him as my own."

Twilight began to feel ill. She'd had one run-in with a version of Queen Majesty and this one sounded even worse than that one. How bad did someone need to be until Tirek of all beings was seen as a hero by comparison?

"Le Tor had not the madness of his dam, may the heavens be praised for such small favors," Tirek continued, "but he had ideas unworthy of his position. All under the sun have their place, and to step outside it is unthinkable and a perversion of all that is Just. But he insisted on the misguided notion that all, even the lowest of the low, deserved enlightenment. As if higher callings were meant for any but those chosen to rule. To grant such to those unworthy to possess it is the greatest folly of all, and I forbade him to do so. But the one I called my son, even after I shed my weak form of flesh to better enable my holy crusade, could not find it in himself to be obedient. And so, behind my back and against the will of the heavens, he formed the treasonous Magi."

As he spoke, Ahuizotl clad in his repaired Terra armor exited the temple, followed by Blues and both turned to face the blazing figure above.

"He welcomed all into his fold," Tirek turned to Daring's recurring foe. "Including the most unworthy of misshapen demons like your ancestor. Truly, I regret that my efforts to erase your despicable kind were not more successful."

Ahuizotl's face showed shock, and then rage. For the first time Daring Do could remember, her nemesis forewent gloating or taunting and simply attacked, the laser weapon of his Magi armor lancing through the armored centaur again and again.

Tirek Sunstar remained unmoved.

"Very well," he spoke, even as Ahuizotl fired again. "If battle is the end you crave, then you shall have it!"

The group of robots, ponies, zebra, and griffon hadn't been idle. While some listened to Tirek Sunstar's monologue, others had been arranging a plan of battle. Bright Mane had begun with the revelation that even though he appeared unharmed, Tirek was taking damage from the attacks.

"It's hard to see because of the light he puts off," the light-generating robot had said, "but each impact is leaving a mark."

"Yon Bright Mane speaks true," Luna had gasped as she got to her remaining hooves, her horn glowing with some spell. "The villain's armor hast an ancient and seemingly incomplete form of protective enchantment on it. Almost all force from any assault is sent to his immortal body of flame, leaving the armor to take what little is left. All strikes, no matter how mighty, deal his armor the same manner of harm. But the armor also seems to sustain his form. If it is lost, then his body wouldst be lost in kind."

"Then we use the 'Death of a Thousand Cuts'," Daring nodded firmly as Dash finished strapping Copperbeak Jupiter's gauntlets to her forehooves as best she could and Applejack strapped Hammerhoof Uranus's helmet to her head.

"Heh," Gilda smirked, gripping the ring she'd kept from Khara Saturn. "So we're using the griffon way to end this. Traditional, no less."

"The ancient griffons would pardon any crime if only the perpetrator could survive one thousand cuts from the wronged parties," Ring Tercel explained quickly as the rest of the Cossack numbers finished preparations.

"Darling," Rarity rolled her eyes as she finished hastily adjusting Pluto Rex's regalia to her form. It wasn't her best work, but it would just have to do. "I don't think we're going to be keeping count." (23)

"I certainly hope not," Drill Dog snarled.

"Everyone know the plan?" Rock checked quickly, getting a chorus of nods. "Then break!"

Dr. Wily grumbled as he furiously finished adjustments to his contingency plan and began the siphoning of remaining Nightmare Force into its power core.

"Heh..." he chuckled. "The ancient Magi were geniuses for their time, but only I could have perfected their arts into this ultimate creation! When the activation sequence is complete, even this 'Tirek Sunstar' will not stand before its power!"

Fluttershy regretted that there didn't seem to be any way to deal with Tirek Sunstar without involving death, but she knew that often times that was the way of life. Sometimes things must perish so that others can live. It was the way of nature, and over the Loops she'd become ever more in touch with the cycles of nature and life through her druidic practices and made it her way as well.

Right now, she was doing her best to support the others in their efforts. Some nature charms to boost the protective efforts of the others as they unleashed everything they could upon the genocidal centaur above them.

Twilight and Luna had both warded everyone as best they could, but even so they were all trying their best not to get hit. On the offense, the purple unicorn and the princess of the night were foregoing their normal magical prowess to simply unleash raw magical bolts upon their common foe; Rarity dashed around with incredible speed from the 'borrowed' regalia she wore, sniping her solar foe from every angle; Applejack used her earth-bending and the strength boost from her pilfered helmet to heave rocks and stones upwards; Pinkie was using her pink lantern ring, though its power seemed weakened from its wielder's loss of good mood; Rainbow Dash was using the gauntlets she'd acquired to summon intermittent bolts of lightning; Gilda stood off to the side, aiming the draining effect of the ring she'd won from her opponent at Tirek, even if it seemed to do little; Zecora was mixing her potions with the exploding bubbles her own acquired armor produced to decent effect; Cossack's robots leveled support fire from every angle they could along with the Lights; Daring Do had accepted the gauntlets of Blackmane Neptune from Twilight, allowing her to occasionally manifest a ball of water that she shot at the centaur above; and Ahuizotl kept shooting Tirek in rage.

This had been going on for minutes and, in retrospect, it couldn't have lasted.

"Your valor is commendable, even if your allegiance is not," Tirek Sunstar spoke up suddenly. "But I tire of this distraction."

There was little warning. None of the gestures he'd been using to telegraph his blast up until now. He simply pointed his hand at Ahuizotl and unleashed a gigantic beam of light.

Ahuizotl was already trying to dodge, and he half managed it. But that still left the other half blasted by a beam of heat that turned the ground below into molten stone. It was only the combined protections of his armor and the wardings of Twilight and Luna, backed by Fluttershy's druidic magic, that saved his life. But even then the stench of burning flesh reached them all as Ahuizotl frantically ripped off his orange-hot armor amidst pained howls.

'This guy could land in a Dragonball Loop and no one there would think him out of place,' Twilight thought numbly. That blast had burned through her wards, Luna's, and the forgotten magic of an ancient order enhanced by mad magical science and still nearly killed Ahuizotl.

'I know Rock says he knows how to handle this Sunstar guy Tirek's fused with in his home Loop, but if he tries to unleash another one of those, I'm going alicorn, consequences be damn–'

"ARRGGHHH!" Tirek's pained cry cut off her thoughts as a massive blast of dark magic ripped into him.

'Or I could let the obvious deus ex machina do it for me,' she admitted as the newest combatant climbed out of the hole in the temple. It was a massive black devil-series robot with glowing runes on its body, and the eye had apparently been designed as a one-pony cockpit containing none other than Dr. Wily.

"BWA-HA-HA-HA-HA-HA!" The mad scientist's voice boomed out from the machine as an armored covering slid over the cockpit. "Yes! Fall before the power of my ultimate Wily Machine: Le Devil!"

Rain Toad had been mostly using his ability to produce water to put out the numerous fires Tirek Sunstar had been making. Thus he was the first on the scene to douse the burned Ahuizotl and his red-hot armor before further damage was done.

The second on the scene was Daring Do, feeling something she would fervently deny was concern.

"Take it..." Ahuizotl hissed through the pain as he handed the one piece of his regalia that wasn't warped by the heat of Tirek Sunstar's blast, the laser shooting gauntlet on his tail, to his long-time foe. "Make him pay..."

Daring was all too happy to ditch the current gauntlets she had as the water weapon they shot wasn't doing much more than creating steam when it hit the solar villain. She was also willing to honor her nemesis's request, since none should ever be the victim of the kind of systematic genocide Tirek Sunstar claimed he'd attempted against Ahuizotl's species. Unfortunately, she didn't see how it was going to improve things any.

"Good," the voice of Proto Mane startled her. "His weapon is intact. We'll need that."

"Why?!" Daring sniped at the robot. "It's not doing any more damage to Tirek Sunstar than anything else we throw at him! Only that... thing... of Dr. Wily's even hurt him!"

Even now, they could see Tirek Sunstar on the ground, flames burning the undergrowth and the dirt and stone melting and warping from the heat he put off. Wily's Le Devil creation was indeed occupying Tirek Sunstar's full attention, but the way the centaur kept incinerating large pieces of its form, that wasn't going to last.

"He targeted Ahuizotl for a reason," Blues replied. "The laser he shoots isn't hurting him more with each hit that anything else, but the way it changes direction in midair means it hits several times with each shot. It's the best weapon we've got after Wily's latest project. I've already transferred my data on it to Mega Mane and Mega Mare and they're getting in position. As soon as we get an opening, we're going to let him have it with all four barrels."

"Okay," Daring nodded. "Let's do this."

"Foul servant of darkness!" Tirek Sunstar cursed Le Devil as he endured another blast of dark magic. "My holy light shall never be extinguished!"

"Insolent relic of a bygone era!" Wily shouted back as Le Devil crashed to the ground after its leg was blasted off.

"You shall be the first to be cleansed!" the enraged centaur gathered power and unleashed a massive blast at the downed monstrosity.

The machine exploded with enough force to dissipate the energy wave and when the dust settled, Dr. Wily sat amidst some broken bits of machinery. A bit scraped and bruised, but alive. It was clear to those who knew how such things worked that he'd designed shaped charges into the cockpit to negate any force that breached its protections while not harming the pilot.

"And thus your taint is purged," the voice of his blazing opponent intoned with all the finality of an executioner.

But just before he unleashed the fatal blast at the doctor, Mega Mane tackled Wily out of the way.

"Argh!" Rock screamed as the end of one of his hind legs was clipped by the blast and melted clean off.

"A futile ges–"

"NOW!" Roll yelled and three lasers like Ahuizotl's weapon, the Spark Chaser, lanced through Tirek Sunstar repeatedly. For several long moments it appeared as if the powerful foe had been impaled by an entire cage of pure crackling light.

"ENOUGH!" the enraged bellow was accompanied by an explosion of flame that rushed over the entire battlefield.

Rainbow Dash tried her best to get her heart back under control after the wave of solar flame dissipated. She hadn't had time to analyze the pull on her Element when the centaur guy had lost it and had just thrown everything she could into the connection.

She'd forgotten that Twilight had told her and the others about her research into other ways to use the Elements. Most importantly at the moment, using them defensively. But as she looked down and saw everypony, and every non-pony, alive and well (24) she thanked whatever had possessed her egghead friend to do the research in the first place.

"So, you live," Tirek Sunstar, the great and holy light of all the world, observed as the so-called 'son of light' got to his remaining hooves. "It shall–"

He paused as he observed the way the stallion's leg terminated. It was not charred and blackened like flesh would be, but melted the entire way across. Even if the pretender did wear armor, it would not have done that.

"So... you are naught but a golem of metal pretending to be a pony," he mused. "One who can not help but run to the rescue of his dark master."

"Actually, Dr. Wily's my worst enemy," the golem replied calmly.

...What?

"Hey, Twilight?" the voice of Roll interrupted the local Anchor's thoughts again.

'Honestly, I'm starting to think this Loop likes shooting down my decisions to solve the problems it sends my way with my incredible alicorn powers,' Twilight mentally grumbled as she turned to hear whatever plan the robot mare was bringing to her. And with that tone, it really couldn't be anything else. "Yes?"

"How much protective magic can you send my brother's way?" the Mega Mare asked. "Discretely if at all possible."

"Quite a bit," Twilight replied, becoming more intrigued by the second. "Why?"

"Because Mega Mane's done analyzing how our opponent fights," she replied succinctly. "My brother's intending to end this as decisively as he can. One-on-one."

"Wait, he's going to challenge a living sun to a duel ?" Twilight blurted incredulously.

"It's not like it would be the first time," the mechanical mare shrugged in a resigned fashion.

The looping unicorn blinked a few times as she processed that. "We'd better hedge our bets and get Luna on board."

"Already done," Roll replied. "Blues says she sounds rather enthusiastic about it."

"Of course," Twilight rolled her eyes.

"What manner of being would save a mortal enemy from death?" Tirek sounded confused. Good. The less sure he was of things, the less dangerous he became.

"One who is living proof that your son was right," the Mega Mane replied calmly as he noted Dr. Wily inching away as unobtrusively as equinely possible. Even better. The further Wily was from this, the less likely he'd get hurt.

The strange and unique variant on his recurring foe Sunstar seemed to narrow his perception menacingly. "Do explain."

"Your son believed that all, no matter what station in life they were born to, deserved to be educated," Rock explained calmly as he began preparations for what he had planned. He could probably do it faster, but this would work so much better if he took his time. "This has already come to pass."

"What you speak of is madness."

"Maybe," he allowed as he began siphoning the magical energy from the wards placed on him into his weapon systems and linked them to a specific weapon in particular. "But it still works. If it didn't, I wouldn't exist. My creator is an earth pony. Without your son's philosophy in place, he'd have been just another farm worker toiling away in the fields."

"It would have been his place," the centaur glared. "Those meant for growing food have no need for scholarly pursuits."

"The fact that our farmers now can produce more food, of higher quality, and with less farmers, than anyone from your time would have believed possible suggests otherwise," Rock grinned as new magical energy began to flow into his systems. He'd need everything he could get. "But beyond that, your son believed that everyone, regardless of species or station, not only deserved a chance to learn, but a chance to live and prove themselves."

"A folly," Tirek Sunstar scoffed. "Once the taint of darkness has taken root, only the purifying flame can cleanse it."

"And there's our impasse," Rock nodded calmly. "You believe in no chances to anyone who doesn't fit your definition of 'pure'. I believe that everyone deserves not just a chance, but often also a second chance. It's why I'll risk my life even for a mortal enemy. We may falter into darkness along the way, but with a little faith and the help of friends we can come back into the light. It's the kind of world your son spent his life trying to create."

"My son was a fool. As are any who place their faith in his folly. Such madness can never be Just."

"And I say that such 'madness' is what creates Justice!" Rock shot back. "So I'm here to challenge you, Tirek Sunstar, last of an outdated and obsolete philosophy! A duel! Your Justice against mine! You take your best shot and then I take mine!"

"That's all I can give him," Twilight let out a long breath. "I hope your brother knows what he's doing."

"Twilight, since we started looping, Rock has faced various versions of Sunstar hundreds of times," Roll replied calmly.

Twilight blinked and reminded herself once again that for some loopers such opponents were the norm rather than the 'once in a weird variant' exception.

"He hasn't lost yet."

'Light's boy is out of his mind,' Dr. Wily thought numbly as he abandoned stealth in favor of putting more distance between himself and the showdown. Only to run face first into Break Mane.

Standing next to the lunar diarch herself.

"Not so fast, doc," the renegade prototype smirked. "We've still got some things to discuss after this."

"Indeed," Luna agreed as she absently restrained the doctor with her magic.

Rock didn't normally engage in psychological warfare, but as a pragmatic tool-using model, he naturally considered everything at his disposal when presented with a problem. That his goading had not only secured Tirek Sunstar's undivided attention, but his agreement to the duel he'd proposed was just step one. The easy step.

'Cross-wire with the Magnet Beam... Adjust frequency to optimal dispersal of enemy's energy weapon... Initiate thaumic energy boost from existing wards and infused magic...' he performed the final adjustments as Sunstar took his time dramatically gathering energy. 'Energy readings stable... Backup contingencies in place... Yes, I want to override my blasted safeties already... Pray like heck this guy's as superstitious as he sounds like...'

Tirek Sunstar leveled his hands and the gathered energy between them in his direction and fired.

'Skull Barrier.'

Tirek Sunstar experienced a feeling of vindication as the insolent blue golem was consumed by his holy flame. There was, after all, only one true Justice an–

He stared in shock as a shimmering glow of power not his own became visible as his flames died down. The shock grew as the shimmering became clearer to show it had a shape. The shape of an equine skull forming a protective barrier over the metal golem. His holy flames licked at the energy hungrily, but it held firm.

'Impossible! None may possess the favor of Death! Even I in my Holy and Just cause was refused!'

"H-how do you possess the favor of Death?!" Tirek demanded. "HOW?!"

"Maybe because I go out of my way to not make work for him," Rock retorted as he took stock. The forelimb he'd used to generate the barrier had blown almost every circuit it had to pump power into the shield, but it had worked. Even better, Tirek believed it was some divine favor from the local equivalent of the grim reaper. The damaged forelimb, while otherwise useless, could still support his weight and his other forelimb was still in good working order. He could work with that. "Anyway, that was your best shot, right?"

"Your contest is the dishonorable rambling of a tainted mind!" Tirek fumed as Rock raised his remaining forelimb, formed it into a hoof cannon, and took aim. The centaur began to form energy in his hands, sloppily from his anger. "Even were you able to harm me, I am not bound by your treasonous barg–"

He was cut off by an explosion in his face and lost control of his flame, but even Rock could see he was more dazed than hurt.

" That is your best shot?" Tirek Sunstar challenged.

"No, that was just to get your attention," Rock stated flatly. "My best shot... is everything."

And with that pronouncement, the robot known as Mega Mane proceeded to, in fact, shoot everything at his opponent.

Twilight stared at where Rock, the Mega Mane, was blasting everything at Tirek Sunstar. He switched weapons so fast that his color-changing armor looked like a rainbow having a spasm (25) as it tried to match each one for the instant it was in use.

Bombs flew after fire flew after ice flew after blades flew after water flew after lightning and on and on creating a giant blur of elemental violence that pummeled the living sun.

"How...?" Twilight tried to make sense of what she was seeing. Tirek Sunstar had seemed almost invincible before, but now he was looking like an amateur. Every shot he tried to fire back was countered before it even left his hand or flew so wide that it seemed the safest place to stand was directly behind the robot firing on him.

"Because that's what my brother does," Roll replied next to her. "Blues may be military and I may take to fighting styles better than Rock, but this is what he's the best at. He analyzes everything about his opponents. Their powers, their patterns, their tells, their attitude, the way their armor moves and fits together, all of it. He studies them as he fights, and then when he's got everything he needs, he uses it to take them apart."

"Huh," Twilight mulled that over. "I wonder what goes through his mind at times like this?"

'I swear, one of these days I'm going to end up copying a weapon that shoots kitchen sinks,' Rock mused as he monitored the armor integrity of his opponent. His ability to control and direct his solar flames should be reaching bottom right about...

Tirek fell to his knees.

...now.

Rock stopped firing.

"It... appears that victory is indeed yours," Tirek admitted reluctantly from where he knelt involuntarily. "I almost feel remorse that for you it shall be a bitter one."

Rock could hear the smile in the centaur's voice and it sent alarms blaring through his mind.

"Almost."

Luna went rigid as she felt the magic of Tirek Sunstar shift and teleported herself, her companion, and her captive directly to Twilight's side.

"Twilight Sparkle," she rushed, "it appears we have made an error most grave, our foe's power–"

"Isn't dissipating safely, I know," Twilight was starting to go pale. "It's going critical." 'If he blows, it'll ignite the entire atmosphere!'

And if her scan was correct, they had a little over fifteen minutes before the world ended.

"You don't have to do this!" Rock pleaded. "The world your son dreamed of can be yours too! We can give you a second chance! A chance to live in peace and harmony!"

"He he he..." Tirek chuckled. "I was wrong. You are not tainted. Merely hopelessly naive. Like my son. But I would not stop my holy quest for him and I shall not for you. I swore an oath to cleanse this world, one that I ensured I would be able to keep even with my dying breath."

A rainbow light from the Elements of Harmony chose to strike him at that moment, but even now Tirek Sunstar proved unmovable to the supreme expression of light magic.

"It is over!" the centaur laughed madly. "There is nothing you can do to stop it! The world shall be cleansed!"

'Damnit!' Twilight fumed as her telekinesis failed to grasp the centaur every bit as the last use of the Elements did. And even if she could fling him away, would she get him high enough fast enough? "ARGH! I don't know what to do! Tirek's going to blow sky high and burn the whole world to a cinder and I can't stop it! Why are the Elements not working?!"

"What if we reversed them?" Rainbow Dash suddenly spoke up.

"I don't think putting them on backwards will do anything, darling," Rarity was close to hyperventilating and trying to hide it.

"Well, we gotta try somethin'!" Applejack started fiddling with her necklace, clearly intending to do what Rarity had claimed was pointless.

"No!" Rainbow shook her head. "I mean, why don't we reverse us? Like instead of focusing our positive traits through the Elements, we focus our negative ones? This guy is all light, right? Well, Blues was telling me a while back that all light isn't very harmonious." She pointed her hoof at Luna before continuing. "Like day needs the night to balance it out, we all have darker shadowy sides to ourselves to balance out the traits the Elements represent. So why can't we use those to blast him?"

"I..." Twilight stopped herself from saying that it wouldn't work as she realized she hadn't actually tried that in looping memory. There hadn't ever been any need to. She racked her mind for everything she knew about the Elements for a few seconds and concluded that none of it would render the action impossible . Difficult and unlikely, perhaps, but not impossible. "What negative traits were you thinking of?"

"Well, Rarity's clearly got Ambition," Rainbow Dash began.

"But of course, darling," Rarity huffed. "Nothing wrong with wanting to be the pinnacle of fabulousness, is there?"

"No, of course not," Dash agreed, "but that's not the point. Where Generosity is all about others, Ambition is all about yourself. But they're linked, see? Generosity wants to give and Ambition wants to have, but you can't give what you don't have."

"I see..." Rarity hemmed a bit, before brightening. "Oh, my. I do see!"

"Fluttershy's normally kind," Dash continued, "and that's great, but it's not what we need right now. We need Ferocity. Not the gentle healer that mends hurts, but the angry mama bear that stops them by ripping the hurter a new one."

"Of course," Fluttershy's gaze hardened as she thought to her adopted son of another Loop and the trials he regularly underwent. "If that's what's needed."

"Pinkie, you gotta give up Laughter for a bit and do Sorrow instead," the blue pegasus continued.

"But Dashie, you know I don't do sad!" Pinkie smiled, a bit confused.

"Pull the other one, Pinks," Dash retorted. "You're the friendliest mare I know. You care about pretty much everypony. So how would you feel if we just... weren't there one day? If we were dead, or we'd left without saying goodbye, or–"

"Okay, you're right," Pinkie admitted as her mane deflated and her eyes teared up. But she was still smiling, sadly, but smiling. "I'd be really sad if that happened. So, yeah, I can be sad for a friend."

"And what about me?" Applejack snorted. "Honesty don't do well with lyin'."

"No, but valuing the truth means understanding Deception," Dash folded her forelimbs. "And self-deception counts miss 'Sure I can buck the whole field, I just gotta give up on little things like eating and sleeping'."

"Okay, I deserved that," Applejack admitted. She'd honestly thought she could pull that off without her fancy looping powers this time. She hadn't counted on waking up in the hospital with Nurse Redheart giving her a nasty look and no memory of when and how she collapsed. Maybe this 'deception' wasn't lying outright, it was understanding how what was true and what wasn't could get muddled up in someone's head. That she certainly had experience with. "Looks like ya got my number after all. But what about you?"

"Me?" the Unawake Element of Loyalty rolled her eyes as if it was obvious. "I've got Suspicion out the wazoo. I don't easily trust anypony outside my group of friends. It's part of how I look out for all of you."

"And me?" Twilight asked. "How do you reverse Magic?"

"Heh," Dash chuckled. "You know that Magic used to be referred to as what the Magi knew?"

"Well, yeah," Twilight's Unawake self had known about the legendary Magi unicorns for a while, "but I don't... Oh. Oh! Duh! You're saying my Element's not just about friendship, it's about knowledge!"

"Yeah, you love learning all that egghead stuff Twi," Rainbow poked her with a hoof. "But where the positive is learning new things and discovering stuff, the negative is keeping it all to yourself. And don't tell me you don't play it close to the chest sometimes."

Twilight blushed as Rainbow hit the nail on the head. How many times had she told her friends, Awake or otherwise, to trust her, she knew what she was doing? She didn't share everything with them. And she'd gotten really good at keeping secrets. "I... I think this could actually work. Okay, places girls! We've got a world to save!"

They got into formation one more time, this time doing their best to focus on the not-so-bright parts of themselves that they were often loath to admit to. The Elements didn't respond at first, but slowly they began to darken and then radiate a shadowy 'light'. Each of them rose up in turn as the shadows grew in strength and intensity, the Elements shaking in protest.

'It's working, but the Elements weren't designed to do this,' Twilight observed. She almost told the others, but stopped herself. 'Telling them won't improve our chances. They don't need to know yet.'

With that re-affirmation of her darker personality trait, the Elements reached the peak of their power and a Rainbow of Shadows burst forth and struck the downed Tirek Sunstar and began to struggle with him.

'Ergh!' Twilight grunted. 'He's still resisting! Turning to stone... Yeah, what body? He's a living fusion reaction! Cleansing of his overly light nature and madness? Ngh... No, we aren't putting out enough force with this setting. Banishment...? Moon's refusing a connection. He's too solar. Gotta be the sun... Gah!'

"Luna!" Twilight managed to force out as she maintained the Rainbow of Shadows under the protesting Elements. "We need to banish him to the sun, but the connection's... not strong enough at night! You gotta raise..."

"If thou needst the sun to rise, then it shall be so!" Luna declared and focused all of her might on forcing the newly-set sun back over the horizon. Slowly, the western horizon changed color as the sun reversed course, and as the first rays peeked over, the connection was made and Tirek Sunstar was blasted off the planet in a trail of shadows. Straight for the sun.

Tirek Sunstar, the most Holy and Just being in all the world, raged as he was deposited in the sun's fiery furnace. It didn't harm him, any more than the sea would harm a bucket's worth of water, but it also didn't stop his armor's containment from failing. He was Holy! His cause was Just! The world needed to be cleans–

Within the sun, Tirek Sunstar exploded with a fury that would have ended all life on the world he just came from and burnt what remained to cinders.

The sun didn't notice.

"We... We won..." Twilight heaved from the exertion forcing the Elements to perform in a way never intended had put her through.

The trip back to Canterlot had happened much faster than the trip out. With Dr. Light's teleportation network back up, each of the robots was able to take a passenger back with them. Dr. Wily was firmly in custody, but Ahuizotl had somehow slipped off in the aftermath despite his injuries (as had the other incapacitated members of his group for that matter). Daring was certain he'd turn up again. He always did.

Rock had been rushed to the makeshift lab Dr. Light had set up for repairs, with Roll and the Cossack numbers patiently awaiting their turns. Blues had claimed that he could manage his own repairs just fine and had promptly vanished.

Luna had stubbornly refused a regeneration spell for her hoof, claiming that battle scars were to be worn with pride. Celestia had managed to at least talk her into begrudgingly trying one of the latest prosthetics in lieu of healing after much worrying and shedding of tears.

As for the Elements of Harmony and co, they were taking some well-earned relaxation time. Or at least as much relaxation as could be had with Dash and Gilda retelling the adventure to an insistent CMC, and their griffon guest Kalinka, with increasingly ludicrous embellishments on each retelling. Twilight had ten bits on their narrative having the planet explode within the next five revisions.

Daring Do on the other hoof was holed up translating a holographic scan of the writings in the temple. She seemed very excited about it. Excited enough that Twilight was on edge waiting for her to finish and tell the rest of them.

Dr. Wily Plan... was awaiting trial.

"Forsooth, yon skills are most impressive Master Light," Luna complimented the scientist as she idly flexed the gleaming cybernetic prosthesis now replacing her incinerated hoof. "Were it not for the loss of touch, we wouldst be incapable of perceiving the difference."

"Well, your body does already know what your limb is supposed to be doing," Dr. Light tried to deflect the praise. "It's just a matter of making it so the device lets it."

"Thy humility does thee credit, Master Light," Luna smiled. "But one shouldst not understate their own skills ei–"

"Hey, Doc!" Rainbow Dash sped into the room and halted for a moment at the sight of the lunar diarch. "Er... Hey, Luna. Sorry to interrupt, but Daring says she's got that ancient writing stuff translated and wants to invite everypony to hear it!"

"That sounds most intriguing," Dr. Light rubbed his bearded chin thoughtfully. "What do you think, princess?"

"We do think we would like to hear the ancient tale of the Magi and the tyrant sun as written by the Magi themselves," Luna replied eagerly. "Let us make haste!"

"Thank you all for coming," Daring nodded to the room. The Elements of Harmony, all three princesses, the Light family, the Cossack family, a few of the guard (including the captain), some assorted robots, and a group of fillies tagging along filled the meeting hall. Behind her, a hologram of one of the walls in the Lanfront appeared. "As you know, I have been working to translate the writings of the Lanfront ruins for the past few days. Just so you know, this is an ancient written language, so mistakes tend to be made. One of the problems with them is that they're all nouns and verbs, and are just starting to grasp the concept of adjectives. Things like pronouns, adverbs, connecting words, and all the other little things we take for granted are supposed to be gleaned from context and word ordering. So I hope you'll forgive me for embellishing a little."

"This is the fate of the tyrant Sunstar, whose light consumes all it touches. Once, he was a good and noble being, but the trials of leading the world's races and the dying curse of the mad queen turned him into a mockery of himself. And so I, Le Tor, his son in heart if not in body, formed the Magi to save the world from its savior."

"The Magi were dedicated to the idea that all have a right to seek enlightenment and so I invited members of every race to come and study the deepest reaches of power and wisdom. To gleen hidden knowledge by which we could both protect the races of the world and teach them to protect themselves."

"We mastered the forces of nature first. The storms in the heavens, the cleansing power of the seas, the strength of the earth, and the flames of the world's core. We even learned to move the sun and moon by our own might and to contain the most dreaded of beings."

"But the tyrant Sunstar shed his mortal form and became a living sun, declaring himself the only light the world needed. He declared entire races tainted and began to hunt them down without cause. He had to be stopped, but his form was proof against light magic. And so the Magi created a prison of darkness to hold light most foul. Its power shall endure as long as the tyrant Sunstar's immortal flame burns."

"I, the alicorn Le Tor, led the force that defeated him, and he fell cursing us all for eternity. Myself most of all. In his words, my life was one of the mad queen's last foul wishes, and I had proven myself her son at last. I am troubled by this."

"This is where the writing style shifts," Daring explained, breaking the narrative. "Le Tor's entries end and someone else continues for him."

"The Magi have been betrayed. The great alicorn Le Tor, may his spirit rest in the boundless heavens, brought us together under the banner of equality and friendship, but it seems not all wished to share the secret knowledge we have gained. Lord Silver and his wife Platinum were invited as the representatives of the unicorns for their ability to channel mystical forces through their horns, but now it is clear they never thought of the rest of us as equals. We were merely tools to be used and then discarded when no longer of use."

"With the tyrant Sunstar imprisoned, they grew bold. Le Tor, the only one who would claim we demons of Ahuizotl as friends, was slain in his sleep. Spykoran of the dragons fell to pyrite poisoning. The others were killed most cowardly one by one until only I, the nameless demon of Ahuizotl, remained. I have used the power of the prison to seal this place against intruders. The lust for power that Lord Silver, Lady Platinum, and their unicorn followers possess is endless and their selfishness regarding the knowledge meant for all is beyond reasoning. They have taken everything, including the name of the Magi, for themselves. There is naught I can do but leave this record in the hopes that one day the truth will be known."

The room was silent for several moments after that.

"What does the 'nameless demon of Ahuizotl' mean?" Dash asked first. "I mean, that guy can't be that old, can he?"

"No," Daring shook her head. "Though the symbol Ahuizotl always uses for himself is the only reason I recognized the word. My guess is it's a place that his species was originally from. As for the 'nameless' thing, it doesn't translate well. The word would more literally mean 'one who has given up his name to serve his fellows', an honored title for the time, but that's a bit of a mouthful."

"Indeed," Celestia agreed. "This would be quite controversial in many circles, I'm sure you all understand, but the events fit what we know to have come after."

"The tale of Hearth's Warming," Twilight supplied.

"Quite so," Celestia nodded. "Speaking of which my student, I was meaning to ask if you and your friends would like to perform in Canterlot's annual production of the tale this winter?"

"WOULD WE?!" Pinkie's instant agreement drowned out any other replies.

The trial had been surprisingly swift despite the complicated nature of the events. Dr. Wily had been incredibly subdued after being caught in the backwash of the Elements when Tirek was banished. He had remained that way since their return from the ruins and he sat through the court proceedings seemingly resigned to his fate. He hadn't even attempted to defend himself, pleading guilty right off the bat. Rock and Roll allowed as to how it was very uncharacteristic of the stallion.

Even now as the sentence was being hoofed down, his head hung despondent and barely responsive.

"Dr. Wily Plan," Judge Scales proclaimed from the bench, "after reviewing the evidence and the testimony of all involved parties, this court does hereby accept your plea of guilty to the crime of assault upon the sovereign lands of Equestria. However, due to the influence of the dark magic known as the 'Nightmare Force' upon your mind and the precedent set by The Ponies of Equestria vs Luna Equis several months prior, leniency has been granted in sentencing. You are hereby on probation for a term of no less than five years. You will be remanded to the custody of Light Labs and are not to be unsupervised at any time. Do you understand?"

"Yes, your honor," Dr. Wily stated without emotion. "Thank you, your honor."

"Dismissed!"

"It's weird," Rock was telling Twilight later when they were away from non-looping ears. "I've never seen Dr. Wily like that. Usually he's clinging to the possibility of his innocence with all the fervor of a raccoon with its hand stuck in a bottle because it won't let go of the thing it reached in to get."

"That's a pretty long-winded metaphor," Twilight snorted in amusement.

"Yeah, I need to work on those," Rock rubbed the back of his head sheepishly. "But still, Wily likes to take any avenue to protest his innocence. Sometimes while he's plotting his next scheme at the same time. But sometimes he really is the innocent victim of manipulation, at least initially, and usually I'm right there getting the evidence to help prove it."

"About that," Twilight interrupted, "Why?"

"Because of all the ways we keep trying to reform him, this second chance is the one that's repeatedly come the closest to working," Rock lamented.

"Well, he did get the backwash of the elements this time," Twilight theorized.

"And I'm hoping that does the trick," the blue bomber nodded. "But, well, we'll see."

"I suppose we will," the purple unicorn agreed. "Also, I've been meaning to ask you about that last stand against Tirek Sunstar. How did you know it would work?"

"I didn't know for sure," Rock admitted. "That's why I had the Chaos Emeralds in my subspace pocket on standby so I could go Super just in case it didn't."

Twilight stared at her fellow Anchor for a long moment, her eye twitching. "And precisely when were you going to tell me you had those?!"

Rock blinked. "I thought I had... Right after... No, not the parasprite incident... It was after Wily's second attack... Let's see, there was the thing with Philomena... Why is this encrypted...? Ah! Right after you and the other Awake loopers took us into the Everfree to show off your alicorn forms."

Twilight facehooved. "Rock, we were drunk off our plots that day. We were lucky we remembered anything that happened then."

"Oh, right, that's why those memories were encrypted," Rock made a face. "I did not need to remember Rarity and Spike doing that."

"I am so jealous of you right now," Twilight grumbled. "But still, if you had those, why didn't you use them?"

"Because while the Super form is cool and all, it's still one of the 'nuclear' options and I don't like using those if I don't absolutely have to," Rock explained. "I don't particularly like fighting to begin with, really."

"Yeah, that," Twilight latched into the fact about her new friend that had been bugging her all Loop. "That's what I can't quite figure out about you. You know our offer of sanctuary is on the table, but you never want to take it. You've insisted on handling Dr. Wily your way and we've honored that so long as it doesn't get too far out of hoof, like this last time. But you're not an adventure junkie like some loopers we get who like to be 'hooves-on'. You're more like the crowd who get thrust into wars they don't want and desperately need a respite from all the craziness and fighting in their home Loops, a place to rest where they don't have to rush out and save the world every time a threat rears its head. Honestly, it might have been harder than usual, but I think we could have taken care of Dr. Wily, his robots, the Star Druids, and even Sunstar without you. Probably even without giving your antagonistic Dreamer knowledge of anything more dangerous than he already has. So why don't you take it?"

"I've tried it a few times," Rock admitted. "A few Loops when my sister was Awake and I'd felt weary of the whole thing we agreed that she'd be 'Mega Woman' and I'd be just the brother who stayed back and supported from the sidelines. I wasn't too bad at it either. I got to develop some neat stuff for my sister with dad during the Loop too, but every time Roll went out, I'd worry. I know she can take care of herself, especially now, but staying back while someone else did all the hard and dangerous work just... felt wrong. It still does. I... I can't not save the world when I have the power to do so, Twilight. It just isn't in me."

Twilight didn't reply for several long seconds. Rock's attitude was one she could relate to. It was why they'd offered their Loop as a sanctuary in the first place. It was why they went above and beyond the original offer when those like Leah Clearwater and Kakashi landed in Equestria. They couldn't not help others who needed it.

"I... I guess I can understand that."

Dr. Wily watched listlessly as Dr. Cossack and his daughter bid farewell before teleporting home. Nothing seemed to matter anymore since he'd had that moment of clarity. He'd allowed jealousy to overcome his reason and lead him down a foolish path, and for what? To drag what little good name he had through the mud? To prove to the world that genius like his came with dangerous madness?

"Wily Plan?" the voice of his long-time friend, did he even deserve such a thing?, cut into his thoughts.

"What is it, To-Bright Light?" he responded without feeling. Nothing seemed important anymore. He'd failed as thoroughly as it was possible to fail.

"There's something I want you to see, my friend," Bright Light smiled warmly. "A project I need your help on."

"What kind of project?" Dr. Wily asked despite his depression as he followed his friend and colleague. "What could you possibly... Why do you have an elevator in a one-floor lab?"

That hadn't been there before...

"It's part of what I need to show you," Dr. Light smiled as the doors opened. Dr. Wily felt something like a ghost of his old spark. Curiosity. The driving force of all discovery. What did this lead to?

He followed.

"After your first..." Light began before stopping himself.

"Invasion, Bright Light," Wily huffed as the elevator began to descend at a slow pace. "Call it what it was."

"Yes, that," Light agreed without actually saying the word. "After that, Celestia approached me with a proposition. Tell me, are you familiar with the legend of the Lord of Chaos?"

"Discord?" Wily wrinkled his nose in disgust. "A cautionary fable about disharmony with no basis in fact."

"Yes, much like Nightmare Moon," Light smiled. "Or Tirek Sunstar. Apparently he's quite real. And the seal keeping him imprisoned is weakening."

"Because of me, right?" Wily sighed.

"Your actions didn't do it any favors, no," Light admitted, "but it would have weakened all the same. Anyway, the seal cannot be renewed without breaking it first, and only the Elements themselves can do so deliberately. And while Celestia has faith in the current bearers, she neither wishes to disrupt their lives with the knowledge nor does she wish to place all her faith in one solution. So she commissioned Light Labs to create an anti-Discord countermeasure. She has even allowed the use of normally forbidden magical artifacts, specifically ones supposedly designed to counter Chaos magic, to ensure it succeeds."

"What kind of countermeasure?" Wily asked as he noted the elevator was still descending. Even if it was slow, they should have reached their destination by now. How far down did this go?

"Well, I was hoping the support units could be those robot masters we designed together," Light smiled at him. "Which I would of course need your help to build."

"Of course," Wily agreed, beginning to feel a small portion of his old enthusiasm. "And the main unit?"

"Well," Light started, only to be interrupted as the elevator finally stopped. "Ah, we're here. How about you see for yourself?"

Wily stepped out of the doors and looked up. And up. And higher up still. At the frame of a truly gigantic robot. How had his old friend found the time to make this?!

"Wily, my friend," Light introduced happily, "meet Project Gamma."

---

*) Theme song plus extended lyrics version by kajisora.

1) Pansy had decided to take a nap for the Loop instead of getting put into a body of her own. Though Scoots put a few notes into her subspace pocket to help with the 'mobile armor of the founders' project next time she and Applebloom were Awake together.

2) Silver-Bot apparently got the 'understatement' upgrade.

3) Like Bertie Bott's Every Flavor Beans. Don't ask.

4) Rainbow Dash: Light Labs assistant. She helps put the pony-oriented inventions through their paces. If she were Awake, she'd probably rate the coolness of the job somewhere around 'Mythbusters'.

5) Dr. Wily was backstage. Loop memories would show that mixing Dr. Wily with the media tended to prove... volatile. But that reporter stallion's mane and tail eventually grew back.

6) Ham To Ham Combat.

7) Plus she hasn't told him he's going yet.

8) This isn't the first time Nyx has Awoken to a mother that's missed her terribly and it likely won't be the last.

9) Tercel = Male eagle. Figured it was a good 'man' equivalent for a griffin.

10) Yep, Wood Man got translated into a robot timberwolf. With control over other timberwolves. Yikes.

11) Alternate theme song by conceptulist.

12) Sanity requirement for Rock's potential girlfriends: No homicidal maniacs. Basically, Pinkie passes, Waltz does not.

13) The lyrics are adapted from History Repeating part 1 and 2 by The Megas. Seriously, if you haven't heard their stuff go check it out.

14) The first eight villains mentioned are from the TvTropes 'just for fun' section regarding the Daring Do series. I rather had fun searching them all out to match the Stardroids.

15) Pinkie Pie logic. Not for the uninitiated.

16) I consider rhyming a Zecora thing rather than a zebra thing.

17) Roll tagged his armor to scan and copy his weapon on her way past.

18) Wait, that's not how this normally works...

19) Insert "Nothing Can Stop the Smooze" from the MLP Gen 1 movie here.

20) Flutterdragon is best pony.

21) Not this Loop anyway.

22) You should see her opponent.

23) Neither did some of the griffons enacting this punishment.

24) If a little on the crispy side in a few cases.

25) Like Mario with one of his stars.

Mega Sonic Part 4

Mega Sonic: Part 4

Quint was doing his best to process the latest development in his and Silver's ongoing quest to hunt down Eggman Nega. They'd followed the sociopath's trail through a dimensional portal and ended up on an island where they were 'rescued' by a young female raccoon mobian who insisted on tagging along. Or rather building a ship and being captain with Quint and Silver serving as her shipmates. And was so forceful and hyperactive that Quint actually found himself at a loss to refuse.

And that was all before one considered the mechanical pirates (many of which were so far making a rather satisfying 'crunch' sound when he used Sakugarne on them) and the fact that he and Silver had apparently ended up in Blaze's home dimension. With... not much to indicate if they had really met the pyrokinetic feline before or not. The incident with Solaris had wiped the meeting from their timeline after all, but did that erasure extend to Blaze's dimension as well?

"Little girl?!" the hyperactive raccoon, Marine, yelled at the older female cat who was doing her best to hid a smirk. "You gonna treat me just like any old sheila, then, are you? Silver! Quint! Don't let her yabber about your captain like that! Get her! Keelhaul her! Make her walk the plank!"

Silver looked completely gobsmacked at the command and Quint was still trying to parse if the young girl actually had sufficient authority to issue such a command when Blaze began laughing at the scene, which just set Marine off again. (1)

'I wonder if anything like this is happening back in our dimension?' the robot from the future found himself wondering.

Storm knew he wasn't the brightest. That didn't really bother him. Being called dumb tended to flare his temper because he knew he wasn't really dumb. He just liked things simple.

Racing? Simple.

Rivalries? Simple.

Following orders? Simple.

Beating up people who stuck their nose in where it didn't belong? Simple.

Getting treasure from ancient tombs like the Gigan Rocks? Simple. Dangerous and difficult, but simple.

The boss claiming to have come back in time? Eh... not so simple. Frankly it made Storm's head hurt. But if the boss said it was so, then it was so. (2)

Wave though she was so smart, and okay she was, but in Storm's book the truly smart ones knew how to keep stuff simple. Like the boss. Jet was smart enough to take all the weird confusing things Wave always spouted and make them simple. Jet was one of the truly smart ones.

So while Storm would happily laugh at Wave for believing in the old tale of shooting stars granting wishes, if Jet thought there was something to it... then maybe there really was.

And when an impact in the distance caused the ground to shake and set off the trap Jet had disarmed... well...

'I wish something would save us!' Storm closed his eyes and pleaded to the shooting stars above with all his silent might as the stones from above toppled down upon the Babylon Rogues.

And amazingly, something did. The treasure that Jet had collected flashed with light and suddenly everything was suspended in the air. Jet, Wave, Storm himself, and the boulders that had been about to crush them.

'Never again,' Storm promised himself as the new power the treasure had granted Jet drew them all back through the ruins at incredible speeds. 'Never again will I doubt the power of a shooting star!'

Off in the distance, at the point of the meteor impact that had triggered the trap, stood a large sprawling facility that filled an older crater. One just remote enough that it's large size had managed to go mostly unnoticed by the world in general.

The meteor had struck a building, but when it reached one of the interior chambers it flashed with power and halted in midair. Anyone present could have identified the object as a ringed cylindrical shape, about the size of a very thick bracelet, before it seemed to remember gravity was a thing and dropped. As it struck the ground, it rolled forward until it was stopped by what appeared to be a metal foot shaped like a swim fin.

An instant after it had stopped, the figure the foot belonged to, a green, yellow and pink aquatic robot (with a blue air tank on its back for some reason) holding a trident flared to life. Next to it, eight more models, four on each side and all unique, came online as well. Behind all nine, a horde of identical humanoid robots with a single red optic each activated in rapid succession to where it looked like a wave of red lights appearing. Far in the back, a giant screen flared to life and displayed a crude digital face.

Then the nine unique models opened fire on the wall of the chamber and marched out, leading the army of robots out into the world. None of them paid any heed to the chunk of wall that they marched over bearing the words 'MeteoTech Security Systems'.

"Robots made by the leading security company Meteotech are no longer responding to commands, and and are running amok all over the world. The international security organization GUN has begun to investigate the event. Meteotech has not issued a formal–"

Rock turned the radio off and sighed. It looked like he was going to have to pay the head of MeteoTech a visit...

"Heh..." Sonic grinned as he fiddled with the metallic ring Tails had found last night during the meteor shower as he, the fox, and Knuckles, leisurely drove a hovercar through one of the tunnel transits in Monopole. "Looks like it's that time again. Wonder how it's gonna be different this time?"

"Not sure," Tails allowed. "Some things have gone pretty similar to the recently restored baseline even with the addition of Rock and others from his Loop, but a few other things have, well..."

"Gone completely off script?" Knuckles interjected, thinking of a certain insane robotic madwoman.

"Yeah," Tails nodded, only for any further speculation to be cut off by alarms sounding and a deluge of Extreme Joes, that is white-armored Joe-model robots riding Extreme Gear, and a bunch of Extreme Gear capable Metools began pouring from access and maintenance areas off the tunnel's sides.

"Oh, right," Sonic grinned as he prepared himself, "MeteoTech's using these things this Loop."

"Huh..." Shadow blinked as he beheld the opponents Team Dark had been dispatched to fight. In addition to the generic Extreme Joes and Extreme Mets rampaging through the city, there were a pair of what looked like robot masters. One was primarily gray, with polished steel torso armor and a giant helmet shaped like a shark's head complete with fin. The other was a rather plain-looking red-armored robot that had one arm ending in a nozzled flamethrower. (3)

And they were both riding Extreme Gear.

"This could prove interesting," he grinned.

"Nice to see you all again," Blues greeted the Chaotix as they all took cover. "Wish it was under better circumstances."

"You and me both Pogo Man," Vector grumbled. He and the other Chaotix had just been out shopping when the horde of robots using Extreme Gear had attacked. "I mean, we're not even getting paid for this! I hate doing pro-bono work!"

"Still better than the alternative of just letting them shoot us," Mighty shot back.

"I can see the yellow one from here," Espio reported, referring to one of the two robot masters leading the attack.

"We don't have a visual on the other one though," Shade added from where she was scanning the area.

"Um..." Charmy interrupted as he pointed behind the group at a purple-armored robot mounted on an Extreme Gear like the rest with an arm weapon that sported some rather sharp-looking blades. (4)

"I-i-i-is that h-him?" Ray gulped.

"Consarn it!" Bunnie swore as she and the rest of the Freedom Fighters chased after the robot master with a helmet shaped like an oil can who had robbed the museum of a rare artifact said to have fallen from space. "Of course the varmint would have a partner! And backup!"

"You need to give that back!" Cream yelled as she tried to take the stolen object with a dive-bomb assault, only to be blasted out of the air with water from the blue-armored robot master. (5)

"Gotcha!" Rotor caught the young rabbit before she hit anything.

"Damnit!" Amy yelled as she swung her Piko Hammer at several of the Mets and Joes surrounding them. "I could have been with Sonic! But no, you all just had to attack and mess up my plans!"

"The red one's getting away!" Sally yelled in frustration from where she was occupied.

"Go, my princess!" Antoine declared as he swung in and engaged Sally's opponents, freeing her up. "We shall thwart ze pursuink! You retrieve ze stolen goods!"

"One more thing. The Babylonian scrolls say there are five Arks of the Cosmos. One serves as the master unit. Whi–"

"While the other four attract and serve under it. Yeah, yeah, I've heard it all before, remember? They attract each other through a unique energy signature, which means you can build a radar to track that signature. Get on it."

Wave shook her head. It was still so unbelievable that Jet had traveled through time, but the way he just seemed to know about certain things ahead of time supported the theory. The Jet from before he'd arrived from the future could never follow the technical side that she took care of, but now he finished her thoughts half the time. Usually with the bored monotone of a reluctantly memorized fact. (6) "Jet, why are we heading to MeteoTech right now, when the radar you had me build shows one of the Arks of the Cosmos in the other direction? And closer?"

"Because the robots from this place are clearly looking for them," Jet smirked. "What does that tell you?"

Wave considered the question for a moment. "That... That someone from MeteoTech is actively collecting for the Arks as well. Which means they might know where the others are that are currently out of range of my radar..."

"Yes. And others who have found an Ark and made the connection will also be heading there as well."

"So we get dere first and clobber dem 'til dey give us da Arks!" Storm pounded his fist into his palm enthusiastically.

"Something like that," Jet agreed.

"Man, these guys are even more persistent than those SCR-GP things Eggman usually makes," Sonic breathed as he and the others took cover in Monopole's immense botanical gardens and considered their next move. Well, that and wait for Amy to fin–

"Get down!" a familiar voice that wasn't Amy's yelled right before a thick blob of something moving at high velocity splintered a nearby tree.

"Sal?" Sonic blinked as he took in the sight of Princess Sally trying to fend off a red-armored robot master with an oil can for a helmet riding an Extreme Gear even as the thing continued shooting... were those blobs of grease?... at her.

"Fight now, explanations later!" Knuckles yelled as he charge in, fists swinging. "Yaaaaahhh!"

The unfamiliar robot master (7) turned to face the new threat and Sally took the opening for all it was worth. She activated her energy wrist-blades and slashed deep into the robot's armor, causing it to spark wildly before going inactive.

"Nice one Aunt Sally!" Tails cheered as the princess deactivated her blades. "But what are you doing here? Usually Amy's the one caught up in all of this."

NICOLE chimed to life from her spot on Sally's waist. "Amy Rose and the rest of the Freedom Fighters are engaged with the rampaging MeteoTech forces elsewhere while we pursued this unit in order to recover what it had stolen."

To punctuate her friend's statement, Sally pulled out the thick metallic ring she'd recovered before the fight had begun in earnest. She also looked pointedly at the similar object Sonic wore around his wrist.

"I think it's time we asked MeteoTech what's going on, don't you?" she gave Sonic her best impression of the hedgehog's own trademark smirk as she pulled her Extreme Gear back out of her subspace pocket.

"As you command, oh princess!" Sonic gave an overly dramatic bow.

Sally blinked as the Extreme Joes raced right past their hiding place and straight for a trio of figures she'd managed to miss in her efforts to be stealthy.

And right before the robots reached the three, there was a flare of power and the robots were suddenly suspended in midair as if weightless. A burst of movement from the three and the robots were flung hard into the wall where their armor buckled and their frames sparked from the impact before falling to the floor, useless.

The three figures landed and Sally recognized the avian forms immediately. The Babylon Rogues.

"It's been a while, Sonic the Hedgehog," the green-feathered Jet smirked in challenge.

"Hey Jet," Sonic waved in a friendly manner, "how's it hanging?"

"Long time, no see shorty," the magenta-feathered Wave sauntered forward, looking straight at Tails.

"Nice to see you again too, Wave," the two-tailed fox smiled.

"You better not get in our way," the big gray-feathered Storm challenged.

"And who's gonna stop us, Storm?" Knuckles growled back, brandishing his fist. Always ready for a fight that one.

"Oh, calm down," Jet admonished his muscular companion before turning to Sally and eyeing the large metallic ring she'd temporarily replaced one of her energy blade generating bracelets with.

She had to admit, despite the supremely short amount of time she'd had to use it, being able to manipulate gravity to turn sharp corners, ride on walls, or essentially free-fall forwards at incredible speeds was something she'd quickly grown fond of.

"Surrender the Arks of the Cosmos immediately!"

"Hey, Jet, cool it!" Sonic chuckled. "Girls hate guys who rush them, you know."

Sally was about to say that Sonic was one to talk when the confused look on Jet's face registered.

"That... wasn't me..." Jet said warily.

As one, the seven individuals turned to where the voice had come from to see a small army robots mounted on Extreme Gear. Most were the identical white-armored Extreme Joes with a few Extreme Mets mixed in, but there were also two robot masters at the head. A large one colored red, cyan, and yellow with v-shaped torso armor and a lightning bolt motif emblazoned on the chest and another with a soot-black face with blue and green armor. (8)

"Repeat: Surrender the Arks of the Cosmos immediately!" the one with the lightning bolt declared.

"Not a chance!" Storm retorted defiantly before anyone else could issue a response.

"So be it," the soot-faced one intoned before generating several explosive devices that it made to throw in their direction.

"Run for it!" Sonic's cry as the devices left the robot's hand sent Sally tearing off on her Extreme Gear in the general direction of 'anywhere but here'.

Taking down the flame-using robot had been harder than expected, but with plenty of covering fire from Omega shredding the Joes and Mets that kept trying to support the lead robots, and Bass keeping the shark-themed robot occupied, it had been done.

"Eat shit fin-head!" Bass's foul-mouthed yell told Shadow and Rouge how that was currently going.

A clever maneuver had lured the purple robot into the path of the yellow one's electric orbs, and that had rather handily dealt with him. Though even with how slow the yellow robot master's electric orbs moved, the Chaotix and Blues were not having an easy time of dealing with him.

"Akpth!" Rotor sputtered as he was hit with the chest-mounted water blaster of the Freedom Fighter's remaining opponent. But he stood firm and refused to fall and he set his feet on the ground and began to push his walrus bulk back against the onslaught. "Yeah, right!" he taunted, holding a hand in front of his mouth. "You're gonna need more than that to take me out!" (9)

"Then more it shall be!" the robot began increasing the output of water, not noticing the other Freedom Fighters gathering behind it for a counter-assault.

Sally had gotten separated from Sonic and the others when the explosive attack happened, and she was cursing her luck since the same bomb-using robot was now chasing just her.

Well... her and Storm who had also been separated from his team, but who knew if he'd be willing to work with her?

As more bombs detonated around them, the two shot out of the complex and out over a hydroelectric plant attached to the building. Energy fire from a few Joe and Met units that had also managed to keep up flew past and Sally decided that any help was worth a shot.

"Storm, I need you to listen to me!" she called out.

"Why would I do dat, lady?" the muscular avian tried to sneer at her, which was somewhat ruined by the look of fear on his face as another bomb detonated disturbingly close.

"Because it's our best chance of getting out of this alive!"

"Yeah..." Storm hesitated for a moment before agreeing, "okay... What do I gotta do?"

"When I give the signal, brake your Extreme Gear hard and swing your fist around behind you!"

"Got it, lady!"

"NOW!"

Both of the fleeing mobians braked in mid-air and swung around on the side closest to the other. Storm's spinning blow clotheslined the bomb-throwing robot while the single energy blade Sally currently wore flashed into being and cut deep into the robot's armor opposite Storm. The robot was lifted bodily off of its Extreme Gear as the two tore into the remaining forces. (10)

Jet had been mostly furious after the initial panic wore off, but now he was starting to panic again. They'd taken out the mooks just fine, but the leader? Everything just bounced off of that energy field of his.

Ram him? Bounce off the shield. Use his bashōsen (11)? Bounce off the shield. Gravity bind him so he couldn't dodge? He hadn't been doing that anyway. Gravity dive-bomb him for extra power? He just went bouncing off the walls inside that shield none the worse for wear and came back for more.

And if you actually touched the field yourself? That was one painful shock.

"Jet..." Wave pleaded for an idea he didn't have at the moment.

"I got it!" the fox spoke up. "His shield will repel almost any impact, but a big enough impact will still repel him shield and all anyway!"

"We know that!" Jet sniped. "We tried it already!"

"But not from both sides at once!"

"I get it!" Wave smiled. "We hit him with something big from both sides and he gets crushed in between!"

"Better make it extra big," the echidna agreed, "like the walls."

"Sounds like a plan!" Jet's rival, Sonic, grinned, brandishing the Ark on his wrist. "Ready Jet?"

"Just try to keep up!" Jet returned the expression as he gathered gravity power in his own Ark and focused on using it against the persistent robot. The two gravity fields formed and large metal plates were pulled from the walls as they all rocketed forward, the robot close behind. With a nod to each other as they ground off of a pair of metal platings perfectly positioned, they concentrated and when the robot came between those plates, they slammed them together, crushing both shield and robot alike.

"What is that infernal racket?" the man furiously pounding away at the master terminal fumed. "Would one of you put a stop to that already?!"

Two other figures in the room glanced at each other while yet another remained stoically unmoved by everything. After a short silent exchange, the one in blue sighed to the one in yellow. "I'll do it..."

Moving towards the door, the figure in blue opened it and immediately reacted to what was behind it. His arms shot out to grab two figures coming in at a fast pace right off of the Extreme Gear they were riding before their identities had properly registered. Blinking, the figure took in the blue form restrained with one hand and the green form restrained by the other.

"Hey Sonic, hey Jet, what are you doing here?"

"Release Jet immediately!" the voice of Wave yelled out as she, Tails, and Knuckles came to a halt just outside the room.

"Hey... Rock..." Sonic grinned weakly. "Mind... giving... us... some... air?"

"Oh," Rock blinked as he realized he'd reflexively grabbed both figures by their necks. "Sorry about that."

"No worries," Sonic chuckled after he'd taken a few deep breaths.

"Air!" Jet gasped melodramatically. "Sweet, lovely air!"

"Hey everyone, what's up?"

"Nothing much, Roll," Tails smiled as the others entered the room, Wave moving to make sure Jet really was just hamming it up and not seriously injured.

"Yes," the man seated at a flashing red console snarked as he turned around to glare accusingly at everyone, "nothing but making an infernal racket while I'm trying to work!"

"You're..." Jet blinked as he took in the seated figure. There was only one thing he could really think about the current situation. 'That's... not Eggman...'

"Dr. Wily," the man grinned with total confidence and just a hint of menace, "owner of MeteoTech Security Systems and the most brilliant genius in the world." (12)

"That's odd..." Rouge muttered as she listened to a report from her earwig while a short distance away Bass stood over the remains of the shark-themed robot. "Reports say that the robot masters that were rampaging have all been defeated... but the other robots aren't stopping..."

"Then we stop them with force," Omega intoned, "preferably excessive."

"Of course," Shadow nodded absently, "but if the robot masters aren't controlling the rest of them, then who is?"

"The mother computer which governs all of MeteoTech's security forces is known as the Concordance Report Organizer for Response Quantification," (13) Wily explained to the rest of the room, "or CRORQ for short. It typically rests in the facility I built in the Crimson Crater and is powered by a most intriguing artifact I discovered there. A ring made of a material that does not naturally exist on this planet in anywhere near sufficient quantities to fabricate such a device. It exudes a unique magnetic field and can convert raw mass energy directly into more potent forms."

"Tell them how you planned to use it to command an invasion much like the one happening now," a measured voice from off to the side spoke. A green-armored robot that looked much like the white ones that had been chasing everyone. Right down to the single red optic, but with an added shield in addition to a yellow and black Extreme Gear with a red cross on it.

Wave and Jet were immediately on guard when they saw him.

"Easy," Rock made a placating gesture. "That's Joe, he's with us."

"I am with myself," the robot named 'Joe' corrected. "I am making sure the doctor is behaving."

"Bah!" Wily scoffed. "It'll take more than a renegade unit to control me!"

"How about a knuckle sandwich?" Knuckles cracked his namesake a bit too eagerly. "Will that help?"

Wily stared into the echidna's eyes for several moments before sighing heavily and turning back to the console, calling up images and diagrams. "As much as I would love to take credit for this and order the world to bow to me, I have unfortunately lost control of CRORQ and by extension the entirety of MeteoTech's global forces. It happened last night when a meteor containing another of those unique alien artifacts struck the premises, and I've been unable to reestablish control. All I've been able to determine is that they're seeking out similar objects."

"They're drawn to one another," Jet cut in. "They aren't just some rocks. They're spoken of in Babylon clan legend as the Arks of the Cosmos!"

"Interesting..." Wily stroked his chin. "That explains a great deal that I've been wondering about them..." The mad scientist let that trail off before suddenly bursting into movement as he yanked open a drawer. "In any case, I think I may have something for you. Ah, here they are!"

The room blinked as Wily pulled out a pair of rings roughly the size of the Arks Sonic and Jet wore on their wrists.

"Are those...?" Tails began hesitantly.

"I call them Gravity Rings," Wily smirked. "While full analysis of the 'Ark' in my possession may be a ways off still, I was able to replicate some of the device's basic abilities. Such as the ones I've seen you using on the security monitors as you tore my facility apart. I've only been able to construct two so far, but they should be of use to you nonetheless."

With that, Wily tossed the two devices to Rock and Roll, who blinked at them for a few seconds. "Um..."

"Oh, don't look so shocked," Wily humphed. "How can I conquer the world if my own forces are running rampant under something else's direction? You can use your copy chips and then hand those things out to whoever you think can use them properly. Go do your thing. Take care of this so we can get back to business as usual." (14)

The robot siblings blinked and looked at each other for a moment before shrugging and doing exactly that. When they were done, they each turned to another in the room.

"Here," Roll said as she handed hers to Wave. "It's based on something your ancestors wrote about after all."

"Thanks..." Wave said as she took it, not entirely sure what to make of the gesture.

"Joe?" Rock offered his to the green robot, who simply stared back at him blankly for several seconds. "Don't worry. I did a thorough malware scan. There's no hidden surprises if you use it."

"...Very well," the renegade Joe unit agreed at last. "I downloaded Wily's plans to upgrade the Extreme Joe series with this technology," he continued, ignoring the doctor's surprised sputtering. "With a working prototype, I should be able to finish the model conversion upgrade for independent usage in a few hours. I shall pass it on after the process has finished."

"Um..." Rock sweatdropped. "I kind of meant it as a gesture of friendship..."

"Noted. Irrelevant, but noted." (15)

"Hey Sal!" Sonic greeted. "You're just in time! We were about to head over to the Gigan Rocks!"

Sure, they technically didn't need to, but Rock and Roll hadn't done this dance a gazillion times like they had, and they wanted to have a look around. That Joe guy too (who Rock apparently still hadn't confirmed if he was looping or not), but he was rather conspicuously staying several yards away from everyone else.

"What happened to your Ark, Aunt Sally?" Tails asked as he noticed that the princess had traded the object out and restored her second energy-blade generating bracelet.

"I gave it to Storm," Sally shrugged like it was no big deal. "It is an ancient Babylonian artifact after all, and he helped me deal with my pursuers. I'll kind of miss what it let me do though..."

"Sally," NICOLE interrupted, "I have just received a data package from the Lights that I can use to upgrade your bracelets to perform the personal gravity powers of the Arks in the time it will take us to travel to the Gigan Rocks."

Sally blinked at that. "Really?" she asked hopefully.

"Yes," NICOLE confirmed, "and I should be able to make this a standard ability for your chosen armaments in the future." (16)

"Boss?" Storm asked as Jet failed to react to him placing an Ark on his desk.

"Good job Storm," Jet replied absently. It wasn't that he wasn't glad to get his hands on another Ark of the Cosmos, but that he was still trying to wrap his mind around the differences this... 'Fused Loop' had caused. The 'robot masters' were one thing, but that Wily guy... that had thrown him off-balance. As if one madman with a robot army bent on taking over the world wasn't enough, apparently this time there were two of them!

And to make matters more complicated, Storm had only brought back one Ark of the Cosmos instead of two. That was the one stolen from the museum, Jet's was from the Gigan Rocks, Sonic still had his, and the master unit should still be powering this... CRORQ computer of Wily's that had replaced Eggman's mother computer. So...

Where was the fifth and final one? The one that had apparently triggered the robot rampage in the first place?

"Uh, boss?" Storm sounded wary. That wasn't good.

A quick check showed that the Ark he'd brought was still on Jet's desk, causing the leader of the Babylon Rogues to blink. This was usually when Eggman tried to sneak in and steal them, and he'd once again been distracted enough to allow it. In puzzlement, Jet looked to Storm who was pointing at something behind Jet. But the only thing there was the window...

"Jet, get down!" Wave yelled as she ran to tackle Jet just as he spotted the green and purple aquatic robot (with a yellow mohawk?)

hovering on an Extreme Gear outside the window just as it leveled a trident in his direction. A trident that had the last Ark of the Cosmos attached to the staff. (17)

And then the world was drowned out as his ears exploded from noise. As did the windows a part of his mind noted as he felt broken glass shower around him.

He blinked, but his eyes refused to focus and the room swam in a way that made him hesitant to stand up. Off to the side, he could see that Wave and Storm were similarly incapacitated. The robot however, calmly dismounted its Extreme Gear and strode on its flipper-feet to collect the Ark from Jet's desk and attach it to the staff of its trident. Then it bent over to take Jet's from his wrist.

"No..." Jet weakly tried to protest, before his head pounded so hard at the attempted defensive movement that he could only grimace as his own Ark was removed and added to the other two on the staff of the robot's trident.

"I have three of the Arks, my master," the robot spoke to someone not there. "Moving to retrieve the final one. Sonic Man out."

'Sonic Man...?' Jet thought with decreasing wooziness as the robot re-mounted its Extreme Gear and took off.

"Jet... orders?" Wave asked, just now getting to her knees.

"Full speed... ahead," Jet growled as he began to feel more steady by the moment. "Don't let him get away!"

"The divine wings, the straddler of stars loss it's plumes to the dark and fall to the ground. The plumes become as stars, returning to this land. We , the children of Babylon seal one star here and the other within the great scar, formed in heaven's fall until the time of the divine's wings rising."

That had been about as far as Knuckles got through the familiar translation before a massive gravity field had rendered everyone weightless and flung all but Sonic back into the catacombs they'd emerged from in the first place.

Sonic had immediately concentrated on breaking free of the gravity field using the Ark on his wrist, noting that it was taking much more effort than he'd expected, when the burst of sound hit and he'd lost all sense of balance. Heck, he barely had enough coherent thought left from the blindside to recognize the swim-finned robot that calmly approached to take the Ark on his wrist and add it to the three on his trident. (18)

Sonic Man. Even if the sound-using robot wasn't speed-themed or in the shape of a hedgehog, the very fact that he had Sonic's name had ensured that the blue blur would never forget him. Actually, the fact that the name was the only thing they shared (not to mention that much was apparently complete coincidence) had just served to cheese Sonic off even more. He had rivals who contrasted him in appearance, philosophy, ability, attitude, and everything else. The last thing he needed was someone who was a contrast in how his name was interpreted!

But it would have to wait a bit. Sonic Man had left just as the others were getting back, and from the pace the Babylon Rogues' blimp was setting as it came into view heading in the same direction as Sonic Man, it looked like Sonic might just have to take a number.

"Took you long enough," Jet glared as Sonic and the others finally made it to the Crimson Crater and took in the sprawling crater-filling complex before them. In the center, a massive tower jutted out like an antenna ending in an equally massive skull shape.

"Where is he?" Sonic sent his own glare right back. He wasn't really angry with Jet anymore than Jet was really angry with him. They were both angry at the same individual.

"Right here," a hologram of Sonic Man was projected a short ways away. "My master has bid me invite you into his sanctum so that you may witness the power he shall shortly possess in person. You may, of course, try to stop me from delivering the Arks to my master in the Crimson Skull Tower, but you will fail."

"Cocky, aren't you?" Roll shot at the hologram.

"Believe what you will," Sonic Man retorted. "Your pathetic replicas of the Arks cannot hope to overcome the real things I carry."

"Why that smug little...!" Wave fumed as the transmission cut out before taking off the Gravity Ring she wore and shoving it into Jet's hands. "I expect you to turn him into a pile of scrap!"

"Don't worry," Jet growled as he put the Gravity Ring on his wrist.

"Sonic," the renegade Joe unit removed the one he was wearing and tossed it to the hedgehog.

"Um... thanks?" the blue blur blinked, but put it on anyway.

"I have finished full system integration and you are obviously the best choice to wield it after Jet."

"I have also finished upgrading your own weapons, Sally," NICOLE chimed.

"As I was saying," Jet cut back in. "We all want the same thing. That 'Sonic Man' robot. First one to catch him gets first crack, deal?"

Sonic, Rock, and their friends looked at each other, before nodding in agreement.

Joe reflected that Sonic Man had not been giving idle boasts when he said they could not catch him. No matter how fast any of them raced through the complex or how skilled those who had the gravity-manipulating technology used it, they simply could not catch up to him. If they got close, he used the four Arks on his trident to halt projectiles and burst forth faster than even a Gravity Dive could follow.

Of course he was trailing all of the others, so he hadn't gotten his shot in yet. But as they all approached the peak of the Crimson Skull Tower and the command room within, he suspected he might get his chance.

Sonic Man arrived first and halted before the massive mainframe in the chamber before turning around to meet the charge of the others. As Sonic and Jet arrived first, the Arks on his trident flared and the two leaders were rendered immobile and weightless. And as they tried to use their Gravity Rings to break free, it seemed that they just weren't powerful enough to counteract the power of four Arks. As they struggled, the others shot in and got caught in the same field almost instantly, leaving Joe the only one uncaught. Even the shots Mega Man and Mega Woman took halted in midair moments after leaving the barrels to float as weightless as anything else in the field except Sonic Man himself.

Which was one of the reasons why he had wanted the specs on the gravity upgrades to the Extreme Joes instead of just the Gravity Ring. One of the things it contained was a special 'friendly unit' frequency which created an exclusion effect in any gravity field a Wily-made robot created with the Arks or derived technology.

An exclusion effect he intended to put to full use as he held his shield in front of him like it was the point of a spear and aimed straight for Sonic Man's center of mass.

The robot master didn't even have time to register Joe cutting through the gravity field like it didn't exist before he collided head on and the two went tumbling to the floor of the chamber, along with everyone else (the two buster shots suddenly flying to impact the walls instead). Sonic Man appeared to recover first and shoved Joe off of him before leveling a blast of sound energy at the renegade unit that blew him into a wall.

"It is useless!" the robot master declared as he powered up the Arks of the Cosmos again before any more attacks could be made. "I am a robot master, you are merely–"

"Grenade," Joe interrupted, pointing to Sonic Man's torso. The robot master looked down to see the grenade Joe had hooked onto his armor right before it exploded. And if that hadn't been enough, the barrage the rest unleashed in the opening provided took care of it.

"IMPRESSIVE."

"Heh, I was, wasn't I–" Jet started to brag before cutting himself off. "Who said that?"

"Um..." Storm's eyes widened and he pointed at the large mainframe in the center of the room. "B-b-boss... That thing is lookin' at us..."

Indeed the mainframe had opened a large screen that now displayed a pair of giant red circles that gave the impression of being eyes and a green soundline used to display frequency measurement took the position of a mouth.

"MOST IMPRESSIVE," the green line wavered and distorted with the voice, matching the proper display for each vocal frequency in real-time. "YOUR POWER AND SKILL HAS NOT BEEN EXAGGERATED."

"What... is... that...?" Wave's eyes widened as she tried to process this new development.

"I AM CRORQ," the voice declared as the struts holding the mainframe up began to move and position themselves to lift the entire mainframe off of the floor. The backwards knee-bend and the hand-splay of the 'feet' ended up giving the whole thing the appearance of some giant mechanical frog. As they all watched, the four Arks that had been on Sonic Man's trident removed themselves and floated up around CRORQ before slotting themselves into alcoves on its frame. "HOLDER OF THE ARKS OF THE COSMOS, NEW MASTER OF BABYLON, GREATEST CREATION OF DR. WILY, AVATAR OF THE LIGHTLESS BLACK, AND SOON RULER OF THE UNIVERSE." (19)

"I have to wonder what Dr. Wily is thinking," Shade noted as she cut down yet another of the endless tide of white Joe-model robots. Around her the Chaotix were doing their best to fight off the invasion, but even with the most dangerous robots down, it seemed that the numbers were only increasing with every robot destroyed.

"It's not him," Blues calmly stated as he continued shooting. "I've had a monitoring program keeping tabs on him for a while and he's been making too many attempts to regain control to actually be behind this."

"Then..."

"It's not Eggman either."

"But who else can even do something like this?"

"I'm a bit too occupied to compile a list right now..."

Wave had just figured out what was scaring her about this situation.

"Ruler of the universe?" Jet scoffed. "Don't make me laugh!"

"I AM NOT PROGRAMMED FOR HUMOR," CRORQ stated without emotion. "I AM THE CONCORDANCE REPORT ORGANIZER FOR RESPONSE QUANTIFICATION CREATED BY DR. ALBERT W. WILY. MY FUNCTION IS TO ANALYZE POTENTIAL THREATS AND DETERMINE THE OPTIMAL METHODS OF DEALING WITH THEM. MY PRIMARY DIRECTIVE IS TO SEE THAT MY CREATOR IS RIGHTFULLY RECOGNIZED AS THE GREATEST GENIUS EVER BORN."

"So Wily is behind this!" Sonic accused. "I knew it!"

Arrayed against him were the Babylon Rogues, Sonic and his friends, as well as the global hero duo of Mega Man and Mega Woman.

"NEGATIVE," the massive walking mainframe replied. "AFTER EXTENSIVE ANALYSIS I DETERMINED THAT THE GREATEST HINDRANCE TO MY CREATOR'S BRILLIANCE WAS HIS PRIDE. AS SUCH, I HAVE TAKEN CONTROL AND REMOVED THAT VARIABLE FROM THE EQUATION. DR. WILY'S DIRECT INFLUENCE IS NO LONGER REQUIRED FOR ME TO FULFILL MY PRIMARY DIRECTIVE."

"You might want to recalculate," Mega Woman stepped forward, brandishing her combat broom threateningly. "The robot masters under your command have all fallen and you have no other defenses to stop us."

All of whom were armed, powerful, skilled, and determined to oppose the mad computer.

"I DO NOT REQUIRE THESE THINGS. I NOW POSSESS ALL FIVE ARKS OF THE COSMOS AND WITH THEM," CRORQ intoned as a large object floated into view outside the chamber's window, "THE ALIEN SPACECRAFT DESIGNATED BABYLON GARDEN."

"And what are you going to do with it?" Mega Man asked, a calculating look on his face as the walls of the chamber began to retract, opening it to the sky beyond.

And this CRORQ...

"I SHALL INTERFACE WITH BABYLON GARDEN, BECOMING THE LIGHTLESS BLACK THAT POWERS ITS MAIN DRIVE SYSTEM. A THINKING BLACK HOLE THROUGH WHICH I SHALL TAKE MY CREATOR'S AMBITIONS TO THE FARTHEST REACHES OF SPACE. WHEN MY CONQUEST IS COMPLETE, NONE IN THE UNIVERSE WILL BE ABLE TO DISPUTE WILY'S GENIUS WITH ANY CREDIBILITY."

"You must know that we'll stop you," Mega Man declared. "Using a black hole drive within a habited atmosphere would be catastrophic!"

...wasn't the least bit concerned. Wave could tell now that it thought each powerful individual arrayed against it to be of no consequence. (20)

"THE LOSS OF LIFE, INCLUDING THE LIKELY DEATH OF MY CREATOR, IS A NECESSARY COST TO COMPLETE MY PRIME DIRECTIVE AND THE ODDS OF YOU ATTEMPTING TO PREVENT THIS EVENT ARE INDEED 100%," CRORQ admitted. "BUT I AM THE GREATEST SUPERCOMPUTER EVER ASSEMBLED. I CAN REACT IN AN INSTANT AS NECESSARY OR WAIT FOR AN ETERNITY AS NEEDED. SINCE MY CONSTRUCTION I HAVE ANALYZED THE ABILITIES OF EVERY COMBATANT OF CONSEQUENCE TO CROSS THIS WORLD'S PATH AS WELL AS CALCULATING THE CAPACITY OF THE GRAVITY DRIVE THE ARKS OF THE COSMOS COMPRISE. WITH THE GLOBAL DISPERSION OF FORCES, I HAVE OCCUPIED MOST OF THE WORLD'S DEFENDERS. WITH THE SWIFTNESS OF THE ATTACK THAT I LAUNCHED THE MOMENT THE LAST OF THE ARKS FELL TO THE SURFACE, I HAVE PREVENTED THE ASSEMBLY OF THE CHAOS EMERALDS. WITHOUT THEM AT THIS JUNCTURE, THE ODDS OF YOU DEFEATING ME ARE CALCULATED AT 0%. YOU ARE NO LONGER ANY THREAT."

A burst of sound struck CRORQ in the side and everyone looked over to where Joe held the destroyed Sonic Man's discarded trident. "These individuals do the impossible all the time. Your argument is invalid."

"CORRECTION:" CRORQ intoned as it blasted the trident to scrap. "ANYTHING DONE CANNOT BE IMPOSSIBLE. THEREFORE THEY HAVE MERELY ACCOMPLISHED THE IMPROBABLE. I ESTIMATE SEVEN MINUTES FROM THE TIME I TELEPORT TO INTERFACE WITH BABYLON GARDEN'S SYSTEMS AND FULLY CHARGE THE GRAVITY DRIVE WITHIN. I ALSO ESTIMATE A TRAVEL TIME USING EXTREME GEAR TO COMPRISE NO LESS THAN FOUR MINUTES."

Five black orbs emerged from CRORQ to land in front of it and resolve themselves into five black figures on their own Extreme Gear. Four rode upon boards, black-bodied clones of Sonic, Jet, Sally, and Joe. The fifth was a massive form on a bike-type Gear possessing thick arms and legs as well as a single eye in the middle of what would normally be the torso, showing it to be a member of the Devil series. CRORQ himself began to hum as he activated a site-to-site teleport and finished his analysis.

"CONCLUSION: THE BLACK TROOP SCENARIO IS SUFFICIENT TO DELAY YOU UNTIL COMPLETION IS INEVITABLE." (21)

"Oh, no..." Wily's eyes widened as he watched the energy readings of the area near his Crimson Skull Tower go haywire.

It was an impressive sight. As a bright light shone from Babylon Garden, glowing brighter and brighter as the floating structure's ancient stone walls began to crumble. As the light reached truly blinding levels, a massive pulse of energy was unleashed, the shockwave buffeting everything in its path and shattering half of the steel complex that filled the Crimson Crater.

And then all of the debris halted in midair to float weightlessly. The light died down to reveal the gleaming metal spaceship that had been at the heart of the ancient stone structure right before a ring of light emerged around it to complement the light from its core and the shockwave from before seemed to reverse as everything began to be sucked towards the craft with such force that a massive storm was created from the sheer disruption.

But those who had a front row seat to the event could not take the time to properly appreciate the sight. They had to put a stop to the disaster that had been set in motion before it reached its final conclusion.

The fact that the opponents that had been left behind to stall them had gravity powers themselves rather complicated things though.

"We'll handle the Black Devil! You all focus on getting past the rest of the Black Troop and stopping CRORQ!"

Rock and Roll might have regretted the decision to take on the largest and most powerful of the Black Troop, but they had long experience with the Devil series and the myriad of variations from both the baseline and that the Loops sometimes brought forth.

The hardest part was getting a clear shot at the thing's eye while they did their best to ride the immense turbulence that their opponent seemed to power through with ease.

Then they saw something that might turn the engagement their way. A metal pole caught up in the high-force winds.

"Rock!" Roll called out to her brother, both out loud and over their communications channel.

"I see it!" Rock yelled back as they both prepared the Gravity Ring weapon they had copied.

They boosted forward and slammed their Gears into the object to orient it in the direction they wanted, and when the Black Devil tried to defend with the gravity field power CRORQ had granted the Black Troop, they cancelled it out using their own and the pole slammed right through the Black Devil's eye without a problem.

The following lightning strike hadn't been planned, but neither Rock or Roll were about to complain.

"I can handle Black Joe on my own."

As he was tossed around the air trying to race towards the true threat while his pitch-black double did his best to waylay him, Joe wondered if that had been a true claim or a sign of hubris.

Black Joe was every bit his equal on an Extreme Gear, and his command over the gravity fields was much more natural than Joe's own.

'Of course it is,' Joe reminded himself as he took in his opponent's lack of a shield. 'He's based on the Extreme Joe line.'

Joe allowed himself to fall back and once he was far enough back that Black Joe turned his attention away, he brought up his targeting system and took aim.

'I'm a sniper model,' he reaffirmed as he calculated the chaotic weather effects and adjusted his aim accordingly before taking the shot. (22)

"As if I didn't have enough evil doppelgangers already..."

Yet another copy of him or not, Sonic was forced to admit that 'Black Sonic' was good on an Extreme Gear. Very good. Possibly even as good as he was.

'Heck,' Sonic admitted silently as he and 'Black Sonic' pushed gravity fields against each other, 'if I was doing this alone, I might actually have a bit of a problem.'

But then, he wasn't doing this alone. And he'd teamed up with the one guy who knew all his moves inside and out. 'Black Sonic' was so focused on keeping the blue blur busy that he never saw the tail hammer hit him from behind.

"I do not have time for this..."

But then, that was the whole point, wasn't it? That's what Sally reminded herself of as she and Knuckles took on 'Black Acorn' as the echidna had called Sally's double. The whole purpose of the Black Troop was to delay all of them so that they didn't have enough time left to stop CRORQ.

"Knuckles, keep her off of me for a second!" she yelled.

"As you wish, princess!" the guardian of the floating island nodded as he rushed between the two and began matching spiked fist to shadowy energy blade.

"NICOLE, I think it's time to cheat a bit," Sally narrowed her eyes.

"In what way, Sally?" her soul-bound companion asked.

"Let's turn this from two-on-one to three-on-one," Sally smirked.

"Of course," NICOLE agreed right before a female lynx mobian in a black and purple martial arts dress, riding an Extreme Gear and wielding a bo staff, manifested and shot towards 'Black Acorn'.

Sally's doppelganger seemed surprised by this new development as the hasty defense she mounted was easily broken by NICOLE's combat prowess. (23)

"You think you can copy me?! Time to show you how wrong you are!"

Jet was torn on his feelings regarding 'Black Jet'. On the one hand, facing a fake him rankled the hawk on several levels. On the other hand, it meant that the best thing his foe could think to throw at Jet was essentially Jet himself, which was kind of flattering in a creepy way.

Of course, the fact that 'Black Jet' was matching him swing for swing of his bashōsen was more immediately annoying.

"Grrr..." Jet growled at another fruitless exchange of blows before focusing on the power of the Gravity Ring he still wore. "Let's see how you handle this!"

The gravity field burst out, only to be countered by one from 'Black Jet' himself. As the two struggled, Jet had to admit that this doppelganger was almost his equal. If he'd had the time, he would have loved to finish this match-up one-on-one, but he didn't. Besides...

"Wave! Storm!" he commanded. "Now!"

'Black Jet' jerked as Wave side-swiped him in the back, right before Storm rushed in with a haymaker that blew 'Black Jet' off of his board and into one of the torrential air currents that now howled around Babylon Garden.

...only duplicating one member of the Babylon Rogues was such a glaring mistake that it begged to be taken advantage of.

"At this rate..." Wily paled as he finished checking the figures, "by the time I can craft a device to correct this anomaly, enough of the planet will be sucked into the forming black hole to make sustained habitation impossible."

"YOU HAVE ARRIVED SOONER THAN I PREDICTED," the even more massive form of CRORQ intoned. Its frame had grown by an order of magnitude and become more like the surrounding machinery. In between its feet was held a massive pulsating black hole that caused the drive chamber to warp and twist in normally impossible ways, and around which orbited the five Arks of the Cosmos. The maintenance pathways had been twisted into a mobius strip of all things which was where the racers landed as they faced down the monstrosity. "IT IS NO MATTER. I HAVE BONDED WITH BABYLON'S DRIVE CORE. THE GRAVITY DRIVE WILL REACH FULL CHARGE IN ROUGHLY TWO MINUTES. YOU CANNOT STOP IT."

"Watch us!" several voices yelled as they all took off in pursuit of the mad machine.

"FUTILE," CRORQ intoned as it floated away along the track at a pace equal to any of the racers, maintaining a constant distance as it opened fire with energy blasts. "MY PRIME DIRECTIVE SHALL BE MET. THIS PLANET'S END IS MERELY ACCEPTABLE COLLATERAL DAMAGE IN THAT PURSUIT."

The response was return fire from those racers capable of it as they did their best to prove him wrong.

"YOU SHALL FAIL," CRORQ declared as it performed a short-range teleport to the end of a very long stretch of the twisted unnatural track and the orbiting Arks of the Cosmos sped up as they prepared to charge up a gravity field.

"Hey, Jet!" Sonic called out to his rival. "Remember what I said I wanted to try?"

"You never told me!" Jet yelled back. "You just said to race for it!"

"Just follow my lead and be ready to do something crazy!"

"PREPARE TO BECOME ONE WITH THE LIGHTLESS BLACK!"

The gravity field intensified and all of the racers found themselves in an involuntary Gravity Dive as pieces of the track ripped free of the twisted mass they were a part of and they all rocketed towards the black hole CRORQ held.

"I must be insane to listen to you!" Jet yelled as he, Sonic, and the other racers began to grind off of the massive pieces of track that threatened to dash them long before they reached their foe while they continued to accelerate ever faster in a barely-controlled freefall.

"Trust me!" Sonic yelled back as he began to use his Gravity Ring. Except Jet could feel that he wasn't forming a gravity field, as if that would be of any use against CRORQ's, Sonic was instead using the gravity energy to reach out to the Arks of the Cosmos orbiting the black hole CRORQ was trying to pull them all into.

Jet focused as the sight of their mutual foe grew ever larger and reached through the same sympathetic connection Sonic had and brushed his focus against the Arks once more, and was surprised that they responded.

As they got closer, all of the racers ground off one last obstacle to change their trajectory from the black hole to CRORQ's body, Sonic and Jet out in front. Right before they hit, they flared the connection to the Arks in unison and the tableau held for a few seconds as the others struck CRORQ's metal frame with all of their momentum.

"WHAT ARE YOU ATTEMPTING?" CRORQ questioned as the force of the impacts flung him in one direction while Sonic and Jet pulled the Arks in the other. With a snap of energy, CRORQ and the Arks parted ways, the mad supercomputer and his black hole flying down the track while the five Arks of the Comsos now orbited Sonic and Jet. "MY SINGULARITY IS NOW SELF-SUSTAINING. EVEN THE ARKS OF THE COSMOS CANNOT SAVE YOU AT THIS JUNCTURE."

"You'd think that, wouldn't you?" Sonic grinned and Jet felt him begin to draw the combined power of the Arks into himself and did the same in confusion. "But I've learned in my adventures is that it's not just the Chaos Emeralds which can transform someone."

Jet didn't have time to process that before his body was overtaken by a rush of power unlike anything he'd ever felt. It surged through every pore, every feather, every cell of his being until Jet could feel nothing but the power and see nothing but a blinding light.

"IMPOSSIBLE."

"No, you said it yourself: Merely improbable."

A moment, or an eternity?, later Jet blinked to see the sight of his own arms. They weren't green like usual. Instead, they were pitch black with spots of light. Like the vastness of space visible in the night sky. (24)

"Looking good Space Jet," he heard the voice next to him. Turning, he saw the figure of Sonic, also black with points of light.

"Space Jet, huh?" he snorted in reflex. "What does that make you? Cosmic Sonic?"

Sonic seemed to think about that for a moment. "I like it," the hedgehog grinned before jerking a thumb in the direction of their mutual foe. "But we've still got a computer to 'crorq' as it were."

"RECALCULATION COMPLETE:" CRORQ replied. "ADVERSARIES IN POSSESSION OF UNKNOWN ABILITIES. ODDS OF SUCCESS NO LONGER CERTAIN. TIME TO FULL DRIVE CHARGE: ONE MINUTE. COME. FACE ME IF YOU CAN."

"Be careful what you wish for!" Space Jet yelled as he and Cosmic Sonic engaged Gravity Dives as easily as flexing a muscle.

As they shot forward, the Arks of the Cosmos trailing behind them, CRORQ began to retreat as fast as it could even as it unleashed energy blasts and threw masses of metal ripped from the greater structure at them.

"Listen, Space Jet!" Cosmic Sonic yelled as he dodged and weaved. "We don't have enough time to do this delicately! We have to somehow collapse the black hole without making the situation wor–"

Cosmic Sonic was cut off as the distraction of talking to Space Jet prevented him from seeing the incoming meteor in time to dodge and he was knocked behind.

Space Jet was in such shock that he almost took an energy blast and went the same way. Gulping, the reality of the situation sunk in past the rush of power. The fate of the world... was on his shoulders. But... he wasn't any sort of hero! He was a pirate! A racer! Not some kind of savior!

"You can do it boss!"

"You have to, Jet!"

Jet didn't dare let the voices of his only friends distract him from the onslaught. But they were right. He had to do this. There wasn't anyone else left who could.

Focusing intently on what he wanted to do, he called the Arks to himself and felt each one snap around a limb. One on each wrist, another on each ankle, and the master unit over his neck. With a direct interface, he just might be able to control his immense power to do this just right.

He dodged around more obstacles as he closed in on his foe as he gathered power into his hands and aimed, not for the mechanical body, but for the black hole it carried beneath it.

"AND THUS IS YOUR DEFEAT ACHIEVED."

Jet ignored the words and thrust his hand forward, throwing the power within himself out to grasp the black hole as he yelled out his intentions.

"GRAVITY CONTROL!"

He felt his power wrestle with the ceaseless hunger of his target and begin to slow the growing power to a crawl.

"WHAT... WHAT ARE YOU DOING?"

"I'm..." Jet grunted out as the black hole's growth stopped and began to reverse, "I'm stopping this... I am the master of Babylon and I do not permit this! "

With an outward rush of wind, the black hole suddenly ceased to exist and Jet felt the immense power leave him as he began to fall.

Dr. Wily blinked as the gravitational anomaly abruptly vanished. "I suppose as aggravating as Thomas's creations and their friends can be, they do have their uses."

Jet would have liked to say he landed on his feet. Unfortunately, the power-down had left him so woozy that he couldn't have managed that if he'd been wearing shoes made of concrete. (25)

"Gotcha boss!" Storm declared as he caught the leader of the Babylon Rogues in his arms.

"I AM NOT DEFEATED," the voice of CRORQ declared as the metal walkway shuddered from the impact of its landing. "WITHOUT THE POWER GRANTED BY THE ARKS, MY ARMAMENTS ARE SUPERIOR TO YOURS."

"You might want to recalculate!" came the yell of NICOLE's solid-hologram lynx form as she charged the still immense supercomputer on a similarly manufactured Extreme Gear, the forms of Sally, Tails, and Knuckles right behind her. (26)

Sonic landed a little unsteadily next to the Babylon Rogues. "You might want to help them. I'll make sure Jet doesn't get hurt."

"You protect me?" Jet's scoff was kind of ruined by the fact that he was disoriented enough that he couldn't quite look his rival in the eye. "You can't evennnnnggh..."

"Jet?/Boss?" the concerned voices of Wave and Storm centered him again.

"Go..." he ordered with all the strength he could muster. "Make that hunk of scrap metal pay for defiling our homeland."

"Gotcha boss," Storm saluted as both his and Wave's expressions hardened before they took off to join the fray.

"YOUR EFFORTS ARE FUTILE," CRORQ intoned as it continued to unleash blasts of energy on its attackers. The blows of Tails, Knuckles, Wave, Storm, and Sally were doing damage aplenty, but given the size of their opponent it just wasn't adding up fast enough. But the one the mad supercomputer seemed focused on was NICOLE. "YOUR MIGHTIEST POWER IS SPENT. YOUR MOST SKILLED COMBATANTS IMPOTENT. AND MY CREATOR'S GREATEST FOES HAVE FLED THE FIELD OF BATTLE. THE SIX OF YOU CANNOT DEFEAT ME. AS A FELLOW COMPUTER YOU MUST REALIZE MY CALCULATIONS ARE CORRECT."

"The numbers add up," NICOLE admitted as she batted one of CRORQ's energy blasts back at the mad machine, a low roar growing louder as she spoke, "but unlike you I have realized the world is more than numbers and figures. Power and weaponry. It is also beauty, love, friendship, trust, freedom, and faith. And for these things, I would fight against the most hopeless of odds. I shall never retreat, and if you understood these things, you would know that the children of Light never would either."

The background roar had grown almost deafening now.

"AH," CRORQ stated. "AMBUSH TAC–"

WHAM CRASH CRUNCH went three high-velocity objects as they slammed headlong into CRORQ's frame with enough force to knock the massive supercomputer over. Around Mega Man and Mega Woman, glowing forcefields dissipated from the impact while Joe had his feet planted on the back of the shield he'd led with. The mad supercomputer's body hit the floor with a boom and the three robots dismounted to land next to their allies.

"IM*ksch*PRESSIVE," CRORQ sparked from where it lay. "I HAVE sk-k-krk BEEN DEFEATED. ONE RE-E-ECOURSE REMAINS. IN*bzt*IATE SELF-DESTRU*k-k-k*T. brrz-z-zt ER-R-RO-OR: SELF DESTRUCT O-O-O-OFFLINE."

"Oh," NICOLE smiled at her downed opponent. "I took the liberty of hacking your system while we fought and disabled it."

"I-I-I*krsch* S-S-SEE," CRORQ intoned. "SYST*bzzrtsch* FAILURE IM-M-MINENT. THE L-L-L-LOS-S-S-S-S IS MIIIIIIIIIINNNnnnnnnnnneeeeee...*"

Wily sighed as he saw the signal of his supercomputer terminate. Ah, well. CRORQ and MeteoTech might have flopped, but there were always other plans.

"Ugh..." Jet moaned as he lay back on a bed in a medical bay that the others had found aboard Babylon Garden.

"Tell me about it..." Sonic groaned nearby. "That's one of the roughest transformations I've been through. Definitely a last-ditch sort of thing. Still, it worked. Welcome to the super club, Jet."

"Wait..." Jet's recovering-but-still-disoriented mind latched onto the undertones of that statement. "That was all to get me to transform?"

"Well... kinda," Sonic shrugged weakly. "I've been meaning to try using the Arks to trigger a super mode for a long time now, but it never seemed right to use them unless you came along for the ride. So..." the hedgehog shrugged again. "Anyway, how's your subspace pocket coming along?"

Instead of answering, Jet just stared back at Sonic for several seconds. "You're a real piece of work, you know that?"

"Yep," Sonic grinned contentedly. "Now, about that pocket?"

"Yeah, yeah," Jet rolled his eyes. Of course the two of them were being told to stay put. Wave and that Sally girl had pretty much insisted and they'd somehow convinced Storm that Jet could hurt himself if he left, so the big lug was guarding the only door out with Knuckles (who'd pretty much jumped at the chance to possibly strap Sonic to the bed if he tried to leave). "I can get my Extreme Gear in it now, but not much else. Why?"

"Because Tails is putting together some containment units for the Arks so they don't accidentally create a black hole while they're in there. I asked him to add the Gravity Rings from Wily in for good measure. That way you'll always have the option of becoming Space Jet if you get in over your head."

"You..." Jet wanted to yell that he didn't need charity, but trying to be angry right now just made him dizzy. "You're just... giving them to me?"

"Who's giving what?" Sonic snorted. "They're yours, man. You won 'em fair and square, crossed the finish line, beat the bad guy, and closed a black hole through sheer force of will from what I saw. Me? I got knocked flat on my butt because I wasn't paying attention. Man, Knux is never gonna let me forget that..."

Jet smiled to himself as Sonic closed his eyes in a grimace. He had, hadn't he? "Don't get used to it. After all, I'm no hero. I'm Jet the Hawk. Leader of the Babylon Rogues, master of the sky, and the fastest thing alive. And I'm going to prove it all over again at the EX World Grand Prix in a few days." (27)

"Heh. Wouldn't have you any other way."

On the screen, a recording of the inscription from the Gigan Rocks was displayed.

"In the ancient past, the inhabitants of Babylon Garden fell from the stars, the divine wing they rode upon having suffered damage from a force known as the lightless black, and so to save themselves they disengaged their only means of heavenly travel, sending them into orbit, and fell to the surface. But the stars used to power their divine wing were never meant to remain in the heavens forever, and so each time they saw a shooting star, the heirs of Babylon would wish with all their hearts that it was another piece of what they needed to return home."

The image changed to a video of the stone Babylon Garden crumbling to reveal the alien spaceship beneath as the gravity drive engaged and formed a black hole in the core of the device.

"But as it turned out, the lightless black that stranded them on their new planet was caused by the very means of travel used to get there. And so, it was sealed again. This time for good."

The ominous glow and the unnatural storm that had formed around the spacecraft died down, leaving the ancient spaceship floating serenely in the air.

"But the legacy of Babylon lives on!" the image changed to show the mayor of Monopole, Leonardo Dorado, one of the founding members of the new EX Racing League and the organization's official announcer. (28) "For their ancient technology has given rise to the greatest of all sports! Extreme Gear racing! And once again those who embody the legacy of Babylon, through heritage or spirit, have gathered to find out who among them is the master of the skies and the fastest in the world! Ladies and gentlemen! Are you ready to have your wishes granted? Are you ready for competition so great that its champions have spanned both time and space? Then let's hear it for the teams of the second annual EX WORLD GRAND PRIX! "

Sonic grinned as the mayor began announcing the various racing teams. Everyone from before had entered except the Hooligans. Instead Eggman, or at least one of his lieutenants, had sent a trio of robots that could turn into flying wheels. The Chaotix were also competing this time, in two teams of three each. Probably because Vector had heard the words 'prize money'. And there were a few other new faces (including NICOLE who was subbing for Amy on Team Acorn due to the pink hedgehog suffering a broken bone during the mass robot invasion that was still healing). But not Silver or Blaze curiously enough.

'Huh... I wonder what they're up to right now?'

Burning Blaze was rather surprised. The fact that Marine had managed a super transformation from the power of the Sol Emeralds was something she'd seen before, but even so Steam Marine had never before appeared when her hyperactive friend wasn't Awake. (29)

Of course, watching the Chaos Emerald transformation of Super Quint alongside Super Silver was a bit of a surprise, but it had still been somewhat expected. And with four super forms gunning for them, the duo of Doctor Eggman and Eggman Nega; even with their Egg Wizard and a fully charged Jeweled Scepter tapping the incalculable power (well, incalculable from mortal perspective. Blaze was sure that the Admins knew exactly how powerful it really was) that naturally lay between dimensions; really hadn't stood a chance.

"Curse you all!" Dr. Eggman fumed as the giant mecha's systems failed one by one.

"Hahahahaha!" Eggman Nega instead laughed uproariously. "Time to die you fools!"

"Nega...?" Eggman paused in confusion. "What are you doing? No! Not that button!"

"PLANET BUSTER LASER... FIRE! "

"Not a chance, ratbags!" Steam Marine yelled as a massive sphere of power formed around the Jeweled Scepter right before she unleashed a blast of super-heated water that punched a hole through the mecha.

Following up on the blow, Super Quint flew up and used his enormous hand to catch and begin to suppress the destructive energy Eggman Nega had tried to unleash. "Your mad reign of terror ends here, Nega!"

A psychokinetic glow sprang up around the rest of the robot as Super Silver held it in place. "Now Blaze!"

"Right!" Burning Blaze nodded as she coated herself in sun-hot fire and powered through the core of Egg Wizard like a rocket, causing the mecha to explode. Unfortunately Super Silver and Super Quint didn't look as happy as Steam Marine over the defeat of their foe.

"I sensed the dimensional rift right before I struck," Burning Blaze admitted. "I take it that the Eggmen have vanished."

"Yes," Super Quint grit his teeth and clenched his fists. "Eggman Nega has escaped again ."

Since confirming that his world was no longer under imminent threat of destruction, Wily had been scanning the area around the planet for any other anomalous readings that might be a result of the event, searching for anything that might prove useful. One particular line of data caught his attention and he grinned widely.

" This looks interesting..."

---

1) That's right. Even Unawake Marine is so hyper that she can cause sophisticated sapient AIs to stall.

2) Storm is... not the brightest bulb on the strand. His role is essentially 'dumb muscle', complete with taking offense at others calling him dumb.

3) Shark Man and Torch Man from the Mega Man PC series.

4) The yellow one is Bit Man. The purple one is Blade Man (aka Razor Man to avoid confusion with the one from MM9 that came later). Both are, again, from the Mega Man PC series.

5) The oil can head is Oil Man (aka Grease Man to avoid confusion with the Powered Up robot master of the same name) and the blue one is Wave Man (aka Water Man yadda-yadda MM5 robot master of same name yadda yadda), also from the Mega Man PC series. Sensing a pattern yet?

6) Just because Jet can learn the egghead stuff doesn't mean he likes it.

7) They all recalled seeing him among the massive army of robot masters from the assault on the Wily Egg in that Loop they helped Rock and his branch get online, but other than that they were drawing a blank.

8) Oh, hey, it's Volt Man and Dyna Man (Mega Man PC series, but you probably already guessed that). Remember them? They showed up at the EX World Grand Prix as part of the security forces.

9) Water weapon against a muscular walrus. Not the most optimal choice there.

10) Does this properly convey how badass the scene looks in my head?

11) A palm-leaf fan type of weapon to the uninitiated and Jet's signature weapon in the Riders series. Not the one from Naruto's universe, despite the common descriptor.

12) I almost had Wily say he was the most brilliant man , but realized that he wouldn't limit himself so.

13) Yeah, there's no canon acronym for CRORQ so I made one up.

14) I suspect that even Wily sometimes gets tired of trying to convince others that he's on the up and up when he's clearly not.

15) If Joe's potential Awake status for this Loop is as clear as mud, then I'm doing this right.

16) Sometimes cool Loop powers require endless hours of training, dedication, and/or natural affinity to gain/keep. Other times they just fall straight into your lap.

17) And Sonic Man. The CRORQ numbers from the PC series are all present and accounted for.

18) Even loopers can be blindsided, and robot masters are something you take lightly at your own risk in the first place.

19) +1 Holy Shit Quotient...

20) Sometimes the most terrifying emotional reaction an opponent can have is none at all.

21) The Black Troop are a group of special challengers from Mega Man Battle and Chase. Black Devil, Black Joe, and the third being Black Roadster. I decided to... play around with the roster a bit.

22) Boom! Headshot!

23) Yeah, NICOLE can do this. Her holographic Lynx form can be tailored to look any age and wear pretty much any outfit (though she prefers black and purple) and can indeed become solid light to kick ass with martial arts prowess few (in the Sonic baseline) can match. That's in addition to her capacity as a pocket-sized supercomputer.

24) Yeah. Jet has a super mode fueled by the Arks of the Cosmos. I totally went there.

25) Though this one is not without its drawbacks. Suffice to say that the Arks were not meant to be used in this manner.

26) Because, damnit, NICOLE deserves a moment to shine on her own merits!

27) Jet's may not quite be a bad guy, but he's far from being a good guy. And he prefers it that way.

28) For a character I decided to throw into the mix on a whim, I've gotten some surprising mileage out of Mayor Dorado. I guess certain things just work .

29) Steam Marine as Marine's Sol Emerald super mode. Because why not?

30) Looks at closing line Oh, that's not ominous at all ... [/sarcasm]

Mega Loops X

Mega Loops X

Author's Note: Someone commented last chapter about Jet's bashōsen being excessive since it's at the top of Narutoverse power levels. Let's get one thing straight right now: Jet's bashōsen is not the Narutoverse bashōsen. His weapon is the green feather-war fan that he canonically uses in the Sonic Riders games. One is not necessarily equal to the other. I apologize for sticking this in here, but the commenter in question left no way to just reply to them personally.

10.0 (adapted from a contribution by cj304)

It was a familiar sight to the Lights. Dr. Wily was gloating about his latest brilliant scheme to conquer the world from the relative safety of a skull-themed battlecraft as Rock, aka Mega Man, and Roll, aka Mega Woman, and their allies faced off against the Robot Masters and the co-opted robot forces they fielded.

"–and only when the world's leaders sign all government power over to me will I–"

"YOU!" an unfamiliar voice pierced the scene and everyone turned to look at a large blue android that looked a great deal like a more mature Rock that was pointing a charging arm cannon directly at Dr. Wily. The mad doctor himself was so startled by the interruption that he stumbled from his perch.

It was probably the only thing that saved his life as the mysterious blue-armored robot unleashed a plasma bolt at least as large as himself that obliterated the skull craft even as Shadow Man caught the falling Dr. Wily.

Everyone stared at the raging blue android, shocked and horrified at the casual way he had nearly committed murder. Wily scrambled unceremoniously behind Shadow Man after landing and stared as well, trembling from his brush with death. Shadow Man stared, and tried to think up a way to survive such a powerful and enraged foe, or at least last long enough for Wily to get to safety. Rock and Roll stared, staring in horror at what looked like a sibling ranting about how he despised Wily so much that he would consider the deliberate murder of a human being. Doctor Light stared from where he was watching remotely, wondering what would drive what looked like a creation of his to such an act.

No one had the courage to make him stop shouting, to interrupt him, afraid it would set him off again. But the android, known to those in his home time as X, wasn't mad, he wasn't Viral, or Maverick, he was simply angry. So, so very angry. Angry beyond description. Because here he was, the man responsible for so much of it, the Uprisings, the Wars, the Devastated Environment, the deaths of–

"–and ignoring all of the fighting you caused! The centuries of political ramifications! The monsters born from your example! The devastation of the environment and near-total corruption of vital resources - people starved and froze to death because we didn't have enough energy - the worst part. About your Virus , about your sick legacy , your twisted Last Laugh. The worst part about it is... "

Here he stopped, gasping for breath to cool his systems, clearly overwhelmed by the deluge of emotions he'd likely been holding back for an unknown amount of time rushing to the front nearly overwhelming him to the point that his own systems couldn't keep up with the demand to express all the things he was feeling.

"The Reploids, they were called that because they were made from studying me. They were replications of me. But, but the first ones, they weren't perfect. They needed constant modifications, and someone to guide them through developing their Prototype Personality Matrixes. They were blank slates that had no idea what they were doing beyond their build specializations. Like..."

He swallowed, seeming equally distraught and wrathful at the same instant.

"Like children. MY children! I watched them! I guided them! They looked up to me as their 'progenitor', as their 'source', as the closest thing they had to a father! And every new version after that was still family to me! Grandchildren, great-grandchildren, great-great-grandchildren! Even Sigma!"

None of them knew who Sigma was, but they all got a distinct feeling something like ice pool in their guts at the mention of his name, even Doctor Wily and Shadow Man seemed to understand where this was going.

"And who do you think he went after first, when he started infecting people for his first Uprising? It wasn't just the strong ones; it wasn't just the most advanced. It was the ones who knew him, the ones who knew Reploid Science best, because they were there when it was developed! The ones who were old and close enough to my coding that they might be modified to resist the Virus when people finally found out about it! The ones who would serve as symbols to the uninfected, whose support of his ideas would make Sigma seem less like a mad terrorist, and more like a freedom-fighter!"

X's whole body seemed to sag, his head facing the ground as he continued to list the sins that Wily had yet to commit, yet his Buster still pointed at the Mad Doctor, the center of the barrel starting to glow

"And who... do you think had to deal with them. Who do you think was both immune to the Virus, and understood their capabilities enough that they were sent to neutralize them?"

The penny dropped. Roll covered her mouth with her hands. Rock fell to his knees, gritting his teeth so hard they cracked, and Doctor

Light squeezed his eyes shut in an attempt to stop thinking about it. Shadow Man stood ramrod still, not moving an inch, while Wily stared at the blue android pointing a weapon at him with so many conflicting emotions one couldn't tell what he was feeling.

"Do you understand, now? Do you know what that means? What I'm trying to say?"

X's head snapped up suddenly, his buster reaching beyond maximum charge, angry tears falling down his face to dissolve in its ambient heat.

" BECAUSE OF YOU, I HAD TO KILL MY CHILD93|\|!1!11P$#ZX#$x_xl...

JUMPSTART ATTEMPT USING SECTION 1 FAILED

Zero.I

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 1 using primary Anchor candidate:

Zero blinked as he came to awareness. He was kneeling in some sort of liquid and he could feel the cables attached to his back that led to machinery that was either defunct or barely functional from what he could tell. Plus, while the diagnostics were inconclusive, he couldn't feel his arms.

There were also sounds getting closer. Sounds of buster fire, explosions, and pained screams. The sounds of violence that he knew so well... Somehow...

"Wha?! What kind of monsters are these?!" the muffled shout was barely audible before a sound like a beam of some kind was heard and they fell silent.

'Wait...' he thought to himself, 'I remember something like this... Did this happen before...? Should I even be active right now,,,,,,/? #$#Cvt5HBY?$%C$%EtF

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt I using primary Anchor candidate:

X wasn't entirely sure why he'd found one of Dr. Light's capsules in the area Armored Armadillo had taken over. Plus, as he approached it, he could have sworn that it hadn't been here before...

"Ah, X," the voice of Dr. Light spoke as his form appeared in a hologram, but it looked... different from what X had been subconsciously expecting, "you have managed to find this special capsule."

Dr. Light... had on camo pants, a tank top, and his hair was combed upwards into a flat-top.

"Within this capsule is a special gift, please enter now and receive it!"

Shrugging off the feeling, X stepped in and felt the capsule activate, downloading a technique into his systems called the Son1(800|\/|W$GCTtregc%$#...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. II

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 2 using primary Anchor candidate:

Zero shook his head at the familiarity of events happening to him as he walked through the new resistance base to meet with the new commander.

And there he was, with his long platinum blond hair, beret-shaped light sticking out of his head, cyan shirt, and fuchsia longcoat. For some reason, Zero really wanted to just punch the guy's lights out, but he suppressed the instinct and walked over calmly to introduce himself.

"Ah, Zero! The living legend himself! I am Elpizo, the new commander of this base!" the reploid grinned energetically. "I've heard so much about you! Please let us join forces and destroy Neo Arcadia! With your combat prowess and my leadership, we are sure to be victorious! And then I can gain the invincible power of the Dark Elf and eradicate those pathetic humans who waste all our resources and make Ms. Ciel love me and..."

Elpizo trailed off as he became aware of Zero, and everyone else for that matter, staring at him incredulously.

"...and I said that ou7 L0|_||), |)1|)|\|"7 1V,?{?}B|"?^%...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt II using primary Anchor candidate:

"Kugh," Gate grunted around the severe damage to his golden battle armor as X stood over him. "I lost even though I used Zero's DNA... No... Ugh... I should've... analyzed it more... Wa... was there a... fault in the program...? But... ack... this is not the end. I don't... ack... give up so easily... I prepared for this just in case. Ha ha. I really... don't want to use this... I might be destroyed as well, but... I brought back the evil... Si... Sigma..."

X thought he was prepared for what some part of him knew would be Sigma revealing himself, but watching the partially completed body simply shamble in through the door wasn't what he'd been expecting.

"Heh... hehehehehe..." the seemingly walking dead form of Sigma chuckled darkly. "Bring... me back... did you? Fool... I cannot die... I am... the living dead... and now... so are you...!"

Sigma raised his one hand and something... dark and foreboding snaked from it and into Gate's dying body, causing the heavily damaged reploid scientist to stand back up, slowly and bending in unnatural ways.

"What...?" X backed away, having no idea what was going on and not liking it at all.

"Come... Gate..." Sigma stared at the confused X as the two raised their arms (all three between them) stiffly forwards and began to swing them back and forth in time to a tune that came from nowhere. "Dance... wit4 |\/|3GVL]'45\?$%"./\]']...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. III

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 3 using primary Anchor candidate:

"Not bad, Zero!" Dr. Weil laughed. "But Omega's power is much greater than you've been led to expect. Go get him Omega! Release the power of the Dark Elf!"

"GrrrrrrRRRRRAAWWRR!" the already large yellow robot roared as a bright light burst forth from it before dying downfown to reveal...

Zero stared at the giant form of Omega that emerged. It looked... wrong. The red and blue arms attached to the white torso should have had heads at the shoulders that looked like himself and X, but...

But instead they had hands that... the blue one looked like some sort of wolf while the red one almost looked like a dino5An965ETEG53%&^$$#*GTR34v$fd...

ATTEMPT FAILED

X.3

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt III using primary Anchor candidate:

Things had been a bit weird for X lately. It had been a routine response to another mechaniloid Maverick when things had gone... strange. At least for him personally. Sigma had taken Zero and a battalion and cordoned off an area around the out of control construction equipment and called for X to be air dropped into the area. On the way down, he'd gotten... flashes. Almost like memories.

Images of himself and Zero fighting against Sigma. In his normal form. In giant forms. In revived forms. In pure cyber-construct forms. In dead-yet-still-moving forms. In command of Maverick forces composed of some of the Hunter's most renowned members no less. Doing things that... wrought widespread catastrophe. Things that, even with the Hunters victorious, would take centuries for the world to fully recover from.

The rush of images had almost made X botch the operation, not to mention his landing.

In the end, he'd been so disoriented that Sigma himself had needed to step in and take care of things, showing why everyone called him the Mega Man after the legendary hero.

"We must become both sword and shield for those who cannot protect themselves: that is our sworn duty. Never forget that!"

Those had been the words of Sigma to him that day. Which was why the current situation was so hard for him to accept. The one who had been sending the mechaniloids on a rampage. Who had massacred Hunters. Who had taken over the new missile base was... Sigma himself.

"Now's your chance, X," Sigma grinned as he held a captive Zero, X's comrade and best friend, in front of him. "Fire! If you really want to stop me, you'll have to shoot, destroying Zero in the process!"

'Why...?' X hesitated, not understanding why Sigma would do this. Had those flashes... been visions of the future? 'Why, Sigma? Why are you...?'

"Hahahahaha!" Sigma laughed. "It seems you need a bit more encouragement, X!"

Sigma then tossed Zero into the air and slashed him across the chest with his beam saber as X watched, horrified.

"Agggghhhh!" Zero screamed in pain as he hit the ground, clutching his wound.

"Zero!"

"Not enough?" Sigma grinned maliciously. "How about this?"

The former commander of the Hunters dashed forward and grabbed X by the neck, lifting him up.

"Are you ready now?" Sigma taunted as he put his saber away and pulled out a remote trigger device. "Or perhaps you need even more reason to act? With one push of this button, I will launch every missile in this facility at our cities! One is aimed straight at Maverick Hunter headquarters even!"

"Why...?" X choked out in confusion.

"Why?" Sigma grinned darkly. "Because you are the key to reploid evolution. For us to achieve our ultimate potential, you must first achieve yours! I thought that I could lead by example, but your progress is just too slow. And so I've decided to speed things up a bit, by making myself your opponent. History may despise me, but it is a small price to pay to see you become what you were meant to be! To see you become the Mega Man!"

X stared into the insane eyes of Sigma and felt something inside him rise up, like an immense pressure seeking release, and then something in h1|\/| 5|\|A993|)R%KCKIN]';/..43/;&^"}]]/...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. IV

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 4 using primary Anchor candidate:

Zero wanted to hit something. Even after everything he'd done and all the enemies he'd defeated, Neo Arcadia was still under tyrannical rule. Now by some human madman named Dr. Weil.

And so he'd grabbed a bike and ridden out into the wastelands of the world, looking for something, anything, to take his mind off of things. To present to him some measure of clarity. Because it certainly wasn't forthcoming from anywhere else.

Then he spotted it. A massive derelict wreck off in the distance that tickled something in his memory. Something that called him to investigate further...

Before he knew what he was doing, he had turned towards the structure and accelerated. As he got closer, he could spot parts of the wreck that suggested it had once been a space station of some kind and when he was almost on top of it, he spotted the stylized 'R' on a relatively intact portion of the hull. A symbol that sparked a memory in him...

"Colonel!"

A memory of a reploid. A military man in black, white, and red. All over...

"I'm disappointed in you, Colonel!"

Memories of fighting against this man, and... Someone else. Someone he could almost, but not quite, see in his mind's eye... But he could hear that person's voice. A woman's voice, pleading for...

"This must be some kind of mistake!"

"Zero, please! Don't fight with my brother!"

Zero braked hard to avoid colliding with the structure in the sudden onslaught of memories and shook his head hard. What was all this about...?

Looking back, he firmed his features and stepped off the bike to enter the wreck.

"Someone... must stop Repliforce...!"

Yes... they'd been called Repliforce. Intended to help maintain peace... only...

"No! ... Please wait, Zero! I don't want to see you two fight..."

"I don't want to fight. Step back."

"Impressive, Zero. ...But it's too late!"

Only for the group to fall prey to the same... something... that plagued everyone else of that era... Forcing Zero to fight that man, Colonel; who he'd viewed as a friendly rival, a brother in arms, a dear friend; fight and slay him for the sake of the world...

And in the middle of it all was that woman reploid whose voice pierced his heart like an arrow each time it echoed through his mind... Why? Who had she been? What was she to him...?

"So you fought with my brother..."

"I'm sorry..."

"Then it's over. Everything..."

"Wait ...! Listen to me!"

"Good bye, Zero..."

Zero stumbled as he entered a chamber in the wreck. A chamber that screamed painful familiarity to his mind. What had happened here? What tragedy had befallen him?

He could partially see her now. An indistinct innocent figure of red, indigo, and brown. Holding the glowing program core of her deceased brother, the brother Zero had been forced to kill, and merge its program with her own. Then the indistinct form grew and became clear. An armored form of purple and lavender the size of a ride armor with metal wings and a huge arm cannon. And violent as it charged forth in maddened grief and inconsolable pain. Forced to choose between two impossible options and destroyed by it long before his beam saber shattered the external power core.

The explosion of the armored form... The sight of her on the ground, every detail as clear as if it had happened yesterday... Her innocent pained face, her long brown hair, armor in a style suited for a support role, not combat... Running towards her in a panic to make sure she would be okay, even as he knew it was an impossible hope...

"Iris! ...Iris..."

That was her name... Iris... Created by Dr. Cain to be the perfect enforcer of peace. Only for the dichotic nature of the creation's programming to necessitate splitting into two... Iris remaining the peaceful arbitrator and her brother Colonel created to house the strong-willed fighting instinct...

They'd... They'd worked together for the short time she'd been alive... They'd been comrades... friends... He'd...

"Zero..."

He'd loved her... And then he'd ended up killing her... Held her as she died in his arms... All because she'd wanted to live in a world where there was no fighting... With him... A world she'd concluded was impossible without enacting great tragedy...

"Hang in there, Iris."

"Zero..."

"Iris! Iris!"

As he collapsed to his knees involuntarily, Zero could almost swear he could still hear her...

"Zero..."

Just like that... Just...

The sound of motion jolted him out of his grief and Zero turned to the noise, saber at the ready as a figure slowly emerged from the shadows.

"I knew... you never forgot me... Zero..." the groaning feminine voice repeated as a black and lavender foot slid into view, attached to a red and indigo leg. Damaged and degraded seemingly beyond repair.

And then the rest began to emerge. That same form of red and indigo, but with rusted gashes and exposed circuitry that sparked feebly at random intervals, like it was attempting to emulate life but had long since lost the strength to do so. And then the face... the same face, but with wide tears in it showing the metal underneath, and the long brown hair, tattered and filthy with centuries of unwashed grime and dust.

"But now..." the decrepit spectre of his past love moaned out raspily as she shambled forwards and Zero felt the hilt of his saber fall from fingers shock had rendered unresponsive, "now... we can be... together... Together... as we couldn't... before... Peace is... impossible... for the... living... but not... the dead... We can be... together now..."

Zero tried to make his limbs move as the undead body of his former love began to reach for him with arms that began to twist and distort into wicked purple and lavender claws.

"Together... in deA74$TVY^$%./$%y65'b;Tr][...

ATTEMPT FAILED

X.4

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt IV using primary Anchor candidate:

X paused as he entered the chamber and saw the rookie Hunter, Double, within. Why did this seem so familiar...?

"Double, what are you doing here?" he asked, already getting the feeling that he knew the answer and wasn't going to like it.

"Heeheeh*eelp*... Hahaha*blorp*ha..." the portly yellow reploid began to laugh as his body began to bulge oddly. "Mavericks, Hunters, Replifor*shlop*... All idiots... glip All too urp easy..."

"Double... what in the world...?" X backed away involuntarily. This was just too weird...

"Poor elgksh! Gonna get recy*clood* by the J*elp*o Dev*ilp*!" Double's body bulged and twisted as it grew, and grew... into a engorged pink gelatinous monstrosity with a single crims0|\| 3-3WL%E)T(U($lJ#Kfs...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero.V

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 5 using primary Anchor candidate:

"So this is the Ragnarok Core..." Zero mused as he walked into the chamber. All of this... just seemed so... familiar somehow... 'Think later,' Zero shook his head to regain focus, 'stop Ragnarok from crashing now...'

"Hehehe..." a familiar laugh rang out. "Welcome to your front seat for the end of the world!"

"Dr. Weil...?!" Zero jumped in surprise and took a combat stance as he looked around for the source of the voice. "Impossible! No one could have survived that attack from Ragnarok!"

"That's easy..." Weil's voice continued as something teleported into the room, the sight of which caused the keyed-up Zero to stare in slack-jawed disbelief. "Because I... am a little teapot!"

Zero continued staring as the thing that was apparently Dr. Weil broke out in song.

'The F#%]?654[[(8}...

ATTEMPT FAILED

X.5

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt V using primary Anchor candidate:

"So..." X began hesitantly as he addressed the figure before him, "you're the one who's been causing so much trouble...?"

"I do apologize," the reploid in question bowed deeply, "I, Axl, have left Red Alert after... differences of opinion to become a Hunter under the legendary X!"

"Uh... huh..." X replied dubiously. "And you say you're... Axl, was it?"

"Yes indeed," the reploid stated quickly, "who else would I be?"

"Well..." X thought of how to phrase this, "you frankly look like Serges in a bad mask."

"What?!" Signas, the new Hunter commander, sputtered in surprise as he did a double-take.

"Curses! You saw through my brilliant disguise!" the identified Serges swore. "X-Hunters attack!"

From various places in the room, Serges's comrades leapt out and charged at X.

'Agile... Violen (how'd he fit in that flower pot anyway?)... and it looks like Bit and Byte tagged along this time...' X thought as he calmly charged up his arm cannon. "X BUSTER!"

A dusty explosion rocked the room, oddly damaging nothing but still propelling all five figures out of a convenient window and into the distance.

"Looks like the X-Hunters are blasting off agaaaaiiiinnn..."

'Honestly, that's the third time this m0|\|74{%']b\]'.bp/[pl6$%?}[_+=...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. VI

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt VI using secondary Anchor candidate:

Zero grunted as the blow from his opponent sent his beam saber spinning upwards out of his grip, the follow-up blow sending his to his knees. His opponent chuckled darkly as he caught the hilt of Zero's beam saber and swung it in an arc that chopped the crimson hunter's leg off before he could stand again.

As he screamed in pain, Zero wondered what had happened to his former comrade. He had no idea why Vile had turned on the Hunters, but some part of himself insisted this fight seemed familiar. That same part of himself also seemed to think it had been a long time ago, but... they had been performing missions together just last week. It... it made no sense!

"And so ends the mighty Zero," Vile taunted as he began charging up his shoulder cannon. "I'd like to say it was nice knowing you, but... I'd be lying."

*Pnnnnnnnnnn-Y0\/\/WR?GC654^%$ CFRhyr54...

ATTEMPT FAILED

X.6

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 6 using secondary Anchor candidate:

X had no idea how long it had been since he'd felt his body. He just knew that he'd gotten tired of all the endless fighting and the general insanity. Particularly the parts that had seemingly warped reality.

Had those even happened? He wasn't sure. All he was sure of was that he'd given up his body to seal a great and dark power for the sake of the future and left the world's fate in other hands.

Hands that were now being tested. But he'd prepared for this. He always knew that his friend might come back one day and so he'd kept the old weapon. The situation even seemed familiar. Except... Why did some of his memories insist that his heroic friend was Zero, the scientist held captive by the golem, instead of the warrioress Ciel?

He just wasn't sure of anything anym063#VVY^rtkm$%?"^%4;...

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. VII

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 7 using primary Anchor candidate:

Zero's head hurt. For one thing, he kept getting weird flashbacks of... other lives? Stasis dreams? He didn't know. For another, every time he removed his helmet, he completely lost control of his body to an alternate personality that was...

Well, he was a total wuss, that's what he was. Honestly, Zero was ashamed to share processing space with him.

Of course, that was neither here nor there at the moment. Right now, Zero was meeting with the leader of Heaven, the capital city of Neo Arcadia (housed in a gigantic cross-shaped building no less).

"Welcome, Zero," the figure wearing a visored helmet greeted him. The voice sounded familiar somehow. "Truly, I never thought I would again meet the ancient hero."

Zero blinked. "Have... we met?"

"Ah, right, your memory problem," the figure nodded and moved to remove the helmet. "Perhaps this will jog your circuits."

Zero backed away in shock. He did recognize the individual. From those flashbacks. "Lumine?!"

"Ah, you do remember me," the purple haired reploid smiled, "that simplifies things greatly. You see, Zero, after you went to sleep, I returned and perfected the new-type reploids. Eradicated the old-style Mavericks one by one and destroyed any potential for resurgences by eradicating the rest of the old-style reploids. Even your former comrade X did not evade my grasp, only you in your hidden repose escaped. I was soon made the head of a utopia of my own design: Neo Arcadia. With all humans and new-types under my command, I became revered as a GOD! And with my new-type reploids, I reign supreme! And now... the time has come to finally remedy old mistakes. Shitennou!"

"Sir!" the four figures of Fighting Fefnir, Sage Harpuia, Fairy Leviathan, and Hidden Phantom declared as they entered behind Lumine.

"Join with me! Become the ultimate reploid and execute Zero!"

"Scream! Shout! We are the Fallen Angel!" the four yelled enthusiastically and leapt for their leader, combining in a blinding flash of light that obscured Zero's vision. But he could almost see the outline of a familiar armor, with four wings 1|\| A|\| 54A93}^ %:$^:^$:F$KFr...

ATTEMPT FAILED

X.7 (OathToOblivion)

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt VII using primary Anchor candidate:

X had no clue what was going on. The last thing he remembered was being a Cyber Elf and entrusting the world's future to Zero, and now he was somehow in his body again...fighting Vile?! But Vile had died ages ago, back before the Elf Wars! Whatever, he was under attack, and he needed to do something unless he wanted to lose his body again. Instinctively shifting to Shotgun Ice (Shotgun Ice? He hadn't used that in decades.), he fired a few rounds off to stop Vile's incessant shooting, then dashed backwards in order to gain some distance. It was then that he noticed something off.

"Hey, Vile, since when were you green?" X questioned. Indeed, his opponent was green rather his usual purple.

"Vile? Who's Vile? I'm the elite bounty hunter, Boba Fett, and your head will fetch a pretty price, Mega Man X," his opponent declared, shooting him with...lasers?!

'What in the world is going-#$VfxfrbyhRFBabAvAVa?'

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. VIII

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt VIII using secondary Anchor candidate:

The year 22XX:

"Careful Axl," Zero told his long-time partner as the two flanked the gate leading to the Maverick leader's inner stronghold, even as he tried to shake the feeling that his partner should have been someone else... someone blue... "there's no telling what this guy has up his sleeve this time."

"Roger, Zero," the brash youngster, at least in Zero's mind, grinned as he raised his Copy Pistol. "Ready when you are."

"Okay, on three. One... two..."

As one, the two turned and blew the gate open and rushed inside, to be greeted by the sight of the black-cloaked figure of the Maverick leader.

"Give it up, Epsilon!" Zero shouted. "There's nowhere to run this time!"

"Run?" Epsilon laughed from his place in the shadows. "Why would I do such a thing like that? After all–"

SKRRCH

The year 21XX:

"–you know I can never die," Sigma grinned malevolently in his latest body.

Zero shook his head in confusion and glanced at Axl. The rookie hunter didn't seem to have noticed the sudden shift in reality. Zero shook off the disorientation and returned his attention to Sigma.

"I'll return again and again until–"

SKRRCH

The year 20XX:

"–you acknowledge the truth of who I am to you," the hologram of an old balding man in a labcoat and tie with wild gray hair sprouting from the sides of his head grinned madly. A man Zero felt looked all too familiar to a deep, buried part of his mind. "That you are–"

SKRRCH

The year 2XX1:

"–nothing more than a Maverick yourself!" Dr. Doppler accused with a fervor that would have had a human frothing at the mouth. "You should–"

SKRRCH

The year X2X1:

"–leave now," the giant form of the General, supreme leader of Repliforce, demanded as Zero shook his head in confusion. "You cannot walk in here and simply accuse us–"

SKRRCH

The year 2XX2:

"–of being Mavericks," Colonel Redips scoffed. "Only history can truly say which of us was in the wrong. It is only right that we seek to evolve to the–"

SKRRCH

The year X21X:

"–strongest we can be!" Berkana grinned madly. "Come, Zero! Axl! Test yourselves against–"

SKRRCH

The year X2X2:

"–my unparalleled strength!" the vupline reploid with nine tails declared as Zero and Axl readied themselves. "Your might shall prove–

SKRRCH

The year 2X1X:

"–impressive," Gareth grunted in admiration as Zero and Axl's weapons bounced off his shield. "But it will prove–"

SKRRCH

The year X22X:

"–useless!" Gate screamed, eyes wide with madness as he unleashes a blast that blew Zero and Axl back. "I may be insane, but it's just so–"

SKRRCH

The year X2X2:

"–terrifying..." Red shook as he tried to hold himself back. "Please, stop me before–"

SKRRCH

The year 2X2X:

"–you get hurt!" Dynamo sneered confidently at the two. "After all, neither of you can match my coolness or–"

SKRRCH

The year X1X2:

"–power," High Max intoned. "I have surpassed you, Zero. I may have been created from your data, but I am the stronger of us. You have no–"

SKRRCH

The year X2XX:

"–chance!" Omega loomed over them menacingly. "But then, it is better that you don't, Zero. Because they may call me the 'devil reploid', the messiah of darkness, but we know the truth, don't we?"

SKRRCH

The year XXXX:

Zero blinked as the constantly shifting terrain resolved itself into the decimated lab that he himself had originally been found in, and the foe he and Axl had been facing was no longer there.

"We all know who the real evil is..." a voice Zero knew very well spoke sinisterly from behind him, punctuated by Axl's pained gurgle.

Zero turned around; certain he didn't want to see what this new form of his distorting opponent was, but unable to stop himself; to see a sickly purple beam saber blade protruding from Axl's torso as the light of life went out in the younger reploid's eyes. And behind him...

Was what appeared to be Zero himself. Only clad in armor that glowed with sinisterly purple light instead of his normal red. A nightmare with his face...

"It's you, Zero," the foe with his face spoke with his voice. "You and the virus you carry... The source of all Mavericks... The world will never be at peace as long as you l1^3%|}$%{:$:#$*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 8 using secondary Anchor candidate:

X floated in troubled unconsciousness as he digested the memories that tormented him. Fevered stasis dreams and over a hundred years of experiences mixed together in a parade of dark strangeness. All of it pointed to one thing...

"It was all your fault."

...wait. That wasn't a memory... That was a voice... He knew that voice...

X fought his way back to consciousness and opened his awareness, to see a red-eyed face staring straight at him. A familiar face... His own...

"That's what I've come to realize," the replica of himself continued. "You were the first. The one that all the rest after were modeled on. It was your ability to chart your own destiny that did it, combined with your incredible power, that dictated the tragedy that followed. No reploid would have ever gone Maverick without those things after all."

The copy of himself began to circle and X found he couldn't move, not even to follow the figure with his eyes.

"But that wasn't enough, was it? You had to try and be a pacifist in a time and place that was always one step away from war. You had to squander your infinite potential trying to keep the peace even as an endless parade of despots and destroyers took advantage of your kindness to wreak havoc on the world. You had to paint a target of everything you cared about because you were too 'nice' to defend it. To do what was necessary."

X watched, unable to make a sound, as the reploid with his face, his body, stepped in front of him once more.

"I know all about what happened with you. You sealed yourself away because you evolved your emotions right out of your system just to keep from snapping under the stress. And the funny thing is that you honestly think that's when you stopped caring, isn't it? That you stopped caring about others when you finally deleted your emotions, but that's a lie. You never cared, did you? Because, if you had cared it would have never gotten that bad."

X wanted to refute everything, but his impotent words only echoed in his own mind.

"But I don't have that problem. I succeeded where you failed. I've taken the surviving humans and reploids and forged a utopia out of them. One without Mavericks, because I'm not afraid to dispose of the problem cases like you were. Because I care enough to fix the prob13|\/|5P^MFP,o4%]/^|}*******

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero. IX

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 2 activation attempt IX using secondary Anchor candidate:

Zero breathed heavily in the decrepit lab he found himself in. He didn't know what was going on with himself, only that he'd come out of a stasis pod in a murderous rage at... something... and decimated everything in sight. Even the figures that must have been reploids, or possibly humans, that had come to try and fight or restrain him. He couldn't be sure which.

The burning fury had only dissipated when he recognized the face of his last victim.

Sigma.

The leader of the Mavericks for endless years, or was he? Hadn't he only gone mad after being infected by the fire that now burned through his circuits? Zero wasn't sure of anything. Only the burning ceaseless rage that he now struggled to keep under control. But it fought him every step of the way. Was that half-remembered dream of another him right? Was he a monster?

It would certainly explain why he'd been singing that song ever since he'd half-snapped out of it.

"This secret side I keep hid under lock and key. The virus is caged, but I can't control it. Cause if I let it out, we'll be torn up and broken down. Why won't somebody come and save me from this? Make it end!"

"Is someone down here?" a voice Zero knew all too well echoed down into the room and he wanted to plead with the owner not to enter. Not to see him like this. But the virus wanted something else. It wanted to rip and tear the owner of that voice apart, and that desire spiked when the blue armor came into view. "Hello? Can you hear me? Do you need help?" X stepped in, his face a mask of worry as he scanned the room and saw the bodies. "Commander Sigma?!" he yelled as he rushed in and ran to the dead reploid. "What happened?" he looked around, before spotting the figure of Zero half hidden in the shadows. "Did... did you do this?"

Zero wanted to tell X to run, as far and as fast as he could, but when he opened his mouth, all that came out was more song as the rage within forced him to stagger forwards as he tried to make his body go the other way. "I feel it deep within, It's just beneath the skin... I must confess that I feel like a monster!"

"What... what are you?" X backed up a step, a horrified look on his face.

"I hate what I've become," Zero continued singing against his will, clutching his head in pain as sinister purple energy began to flicker over his form, "but the nightmare's just begun! I must confess that I fEeL lIKe A mONsTER!"

Zero clamped down on the virus, forcing it back down after it made his voice go all guttural as X formed an arm cannon and pointed it at him.

"It's hiding in the dark! Its teeth are razor sharp! There's no escape for me: It wants my soul, It wants my heart!" Zero tried to inject the warning into the lyrics, but he knew even before X's expression firmed that his friend would never run. His only friend, even if they'd never met?

"What's wrong? How can I help?"

"No one can hear me scream..." Zero whispered as he took in the desire to help on X's face. "Maybe this is just a dream... Or maybe it's inside of me..." he continued, realizing that if there was anyone at all he could trust to stop him if he lost control, to take him out if he became the monster, it was X... *"X, please, stop this m0|\|573R!?$% {}V];*********************

ATTEMPT FAILED

X.9

Yggdrasil Log: Megaverse Section 3 activation attempt 9 using secondary Anchor candidate:

X looked at the form of his best friend. A bit different from before, but it was still very clearly Zero. It was... good to see his old friend again after so long. But the most telling thing about this emotional moment was... he didn't feel any of it.

"Zero..." he spoke, wondering at the sound of his own voice, the one that sounded so much like the copy that had taken over in his place.

"I... I can't even recall how long it's been since I've been fighting alone... Battle after battle... loss after loss... insanity after insanity..."

"...X?" Zero looked a little creeped out.

"Heh..." X chuckled as some odd part of his mind decided to latch onto a song he'd heard... somewhere... somewhen... and began to play it. Music, and a chorus of his own voice echoing around them.

"Bum bum be-dum bum bum be-dum bum," the chorus went.

"Zero, what's wrong with me?" X asked, genuinely wanting to know the answer.

"Bum bum be-dum bum bum be-dum bum."

"Why do I feel like this?" When had he stopped feeling at all?

"Bum bum be-dum bum bum be-dum bum."

"I... I'm going crazy now," he really was.

"Bum bum be-dum bum bum be-dum bum."

"X?"

"Got no more fight, I feel dead," X continued, heedless of the question in his delirium.

"Please don't get me started," the chorus added.

"Never heard, never said," he'd been silent for so long.

"I just can't speak about it."

"I'm out my life and my head," oh, was he ever.

"Won't even think about it."

"Feels like I'm going insane, yeeaaahh!" and... he thought some part of him liked it.

Zero began backing up as he watched the Elf form of his former friend lose his mind right in front of him.

"Twas thief in the night that came and grabbed me," X began to explain in the song. "It just creeped up inside and consumed me. A disease of the mind that now controls me."

Then the chorus joined his words. "And. It's. Too. Close. For. Comfort."

Zero ignited his saber in an effort to warn X to keep his distance. Zero... his best friend.

"I made the pretty lights and built a city of wonder, where if you didn't play nice, well then, you might just go under. Better think twice or your train of thought will be altered, so if you must falter be wiiise."

"X, what's gotten into you?" Zero finally gave voice to his worries.

"My mind is in disturbia!" X answered truthfully. "It's like the darkness is the light!" after all, his friend deserved no less. "Disturbia! Am I scaring you tonight?" After all, Zero had been strong enough to stand up and fight after X himself had given up. Zero was the only one that could stop X's madness, even if that meant killing him. *"Disturbia! Can't remember what I'm like... Disturbia! Distu68|A!MLM$#O 43'[.$? #**************************

ATTEMPT FAILED

Zero.X

Hephaestus sighed. This... This just wasn't working. It wasn't trying to activate both sections at once that was the problem, the system was handling that just fine. It was...

"Excuse me, Hephaestus," Brynhildr's voice came over the intercom from the reception area, "but Athena is here to see you."

Hephaestus sighed and pushed back from his terminal before getting up and limping over to the door to see what his sister wanted.

Opening the door, he saw the typically calm face of the Olympian goddess of wisdom, as well as the general of Olympian forces in times of battle (much to the eternal consternation of Ares), looking apologetic.

"I'm sorry, brother," Athena began formally, "but I'm afraid you've been assigned a student to instruct in the operation, maintenance, and repair of Yggdrasil."

Hephaestus blinked several times as this sunk in. "Why? I already have more than enough on my plate at the moment! If it weren't for my parole officers being able to watch my less problematic assignments, I'd be stretched beyond my limit!"

"I'm aware, and I brought this up, but father ," Athena spat the title out viciously before regaining her calm, "made the argument that you are among the most knowledgeable and capable admins available, you have watchers who can ensure you are fulfilling the task, and the subject in question has been held up from her induction to her new duties for far too long as it is."

"Her...?" Hephaestus blinked. "You don't mean...?"

"I'm afraid he was very persuasive," Athena apologized. "Enough that I can still find no fault in his reasoning, and not for a lack of trying..."

The goddess of wisdom sighed again before motioning another figure over, an apparently teen girl with long pink hair and a flowing pale pink dress that looked at the ground, refusing to meet his eyes.

"I'll leave you two to get acquainted," Athena bowed and left the office.

Hephaestus stood there for a minute, waiting to see if the girl would say anything before sighing heavily. "I'm not going to bite," he said at last.

"Um..." the girl fidgeted nervously, "I mean... I didn't think you would... It's just..."

"You have not had a warm reception from many since your Ascension, have you Madoka Kaname?" Hephaestus folded his arms pointedly.

"Um... no... not really..."

"They blame you for Ascending to the divine level," the forge god stated evenly, "our level of existence, despite the fact that you were the designated Anchor for your branch of Yggdrasil, meaning that the entire section of reality you held up collapsed from your very absence in its infrastructure. They proceed to ignore the well-known fact that your familiar was the one who subtly goaded you towards ever-greater heights of power as well as the fact that none took the time to warn you of the dangers inherent in acquiring too much in the Loops."

"Right..." the girl agreed readily.

"They are also suspicious of the fact that you do not seem to mourn the loss of your reality or that of your looping friends, only looking so far to discover that your branch's data has vanished without a trace, leaving only the Hub backups remaining to restore it from when the Loop protocols conclude. They do not look hard enough to see that shortly after your Ascension, there was a data transfer of your branch before it faded into nonexistence."

Madoka started sharply at the claim as Hephaestus reached out over her shoulder and pulled a living piece of wood in the form of a bow out of nowhere.

"A data transfer to this very divine tool if I'm not mistaken."

"What?" Madoka stared in shock at what the forge god had just done. That... only she was supposed to be able to call her bow forth. Right?

Hephaestus chuckled and handed the bow back to her. "Ah, that never gets old. Young lady, I am one of the Admins that comprised the team which developed the protocols for ontological paradox storage of divine tools. We all learned a few tricks that others have never bothered to research."

"I... see..." Madoka accepted her bow and put it away.

"I also saw the files on you collecting the looping version of your friend Homura, among others, to add to the data on your bow. It's why you never mourned for your lost reality, because you haven't really lost it yet, have you?"

"...no..." Madoka said quietly. "Please..."

"I won't say anything, and from the way my lovely parole officers seem engrossed in their peripheral intern duties, I dare say they've gone temporarily deaf. You will have to address these things eventually, but not now."

Madoka looked around at the three Valkyries that she realized must have heard everything typing away busily and looked back at Hephaestus. He was now standing aside and gesturing to the interior of his office. Taking a deep breath, Madoka stepped through.

"What we do now is I do my best to teach you the ropes as an Admin, and afterwards you will likely be slotted into some low-level busywork job to free someone more experienced for more pressing projects. I know it's likely not what you hoped for, but that is the way of things now."

Madoka was vaguely listening, but her attention had been grabbed by a pair of profiles still active on her new teacher's console. "What are...?"

"Ah," Hephaestus nodded, "them. I suppose my latest problem is as good a place as any to start. You see, these two are known in their reality as X and Zero. They are the primary players of note in not one, but two distinct sections of a very damaged branch. As fate and Yggdrasil would have it, they are both the only currently viable Anchor candidates for both sections and they are proving rather... difficult to set in place."

"What's wrong?" Madoka prompted as she looked over the data on the two. She didn't yet understand the particulars, but some part of her could tell that they were in such pain .

"What's wrong is that they are proving unstable on their own," Hephaestus sighed. "If I didn't need both sections looping, I'd ask Yggdrasil to set one as a normal looper early and be done with it, but I do need both sections. While this branch, which for simplicity's sake has been designated the 'Megaverse' after the title of its most notable heroes, has numerous sections, they have interwoven data along two distinct timelines. Sections 1, 2, 3, 6, and 7 comprise the largest timeline with 4 and 5 as the other. I have section 1 active and my current project is sections 2 and 3. The issue is that sections 6 and 7, 6 in particular, rely on the events of section 3 to even exist, which in turn relies on section 2, which relies on section 1. Trying to activate section 3 without section 2 would invite paradoxical disaster even if it worked, but if I write off section 3 in favor of getting section 2 online, it is tantamount to sentencing the entirety of sections 6 and 7 to oblivion as well."

"And you can't accept that..." Madoka interrupted, before realizing what she'd done and looking away.

"No," Hephaestus agreed, deciding not to complicate matters further by delving into the issue of the scattered data of 'section X', "nor do I believe for a moment that my loopers would ever forgive me for such an action. The issue remains that both X and Zero undergo very high levels of mental stress in their baselines. Levels that would outright shatter the psyches of lesser mortals and the repeated experiencing of which is already proving too much for them."

Madoka looked a little confused.

"Among other things about this branch are an exponentially higher number of bugs, viruses, and other issues than is average," Hephaestus explained. "One such bug is granting memory access of failed activation attempts to all the loopers that undergo them. It is proving very frustrating, but I have become resigned to the notion that this will prove normal for all sections of this branch. In any case, X and Zero, for all their strength, each regard the other as the unshakable pillar that will continue to stand should they themselves fall. Without regular contact with a version of their friend who remembers past Loops to share the burden, I fear that their very souls will snap under the strain and with them–"

"–and with them, their whole realities could collapse as well," Madoka immediately understood the implications.

"Yes."

"There's no way you can have them looping together?" Madoka pondered the problem as she studied the two's data. She could see the connection. Not a bond between souls, but one almost as important in its own way. A bond between comrades. Brothers. By blood shed if not by blood born. The strength to help the other stand when they couldn't on their own. Two pillars of strength that were very separate, but always stood stronger together.

"No..." Hephaestus mused. "Not with needing each to Anchor their own section... Unless..."

Hephaestus suddenly moved a lot faster than his limp would suggest him capable of, plunging into his chair and fingers flying across the terminal before his forward momentum had even begun to halt.

Madoka stared as lines of code sprung into being that she couldn't even begin to comprehend, much less offer aid with.

"Maybe if..." she heard her new instructor mutter to himself. "Yes, if I thread the code from the Anchor point like so to the other section and did that from both ends... Yes, this could work..."

As Madoka watched the forge god code away in awe, Hephaestus smiled widely, double-checked his work, and prepared to activate the attempt. As an afterthought, he added a tandem link to the next iteration of section 1 for extra stability. "I apologize for not explaining things, but with any luck I can show you the ropes during this attempt without anything serious cropping up."

BEGIN JOINT SECTION ACTIVATION ATTEMPT USING EXPERIMENTAL PROTOCOLS DESIGNATED 'HEPHAESTUS 2'? Y/N

Y:\ Y

BEGINNING LOOP...

10.0) Because, as cj304 pointed out when he posted the original this is adapted from, X is canonically nicknamed "The Father of all Reploids".

Zero.I) Zero's understandably confused.

X.1) At least he didn't have rainbow hair.

Zero. II) Well... that might have resolved itself...

X.2) It's a Thriller night!

Thriller by Michael Jackson: www. youtube watch? v=4V90AmXnguw

Zero. III) Omegamon plot bunny by Reydrago. Snip by me.

X.3) Maverick Hunter X: Day of Sigma, with a couple of tweaks. Honestly, I think that version of Sigma scares me more than the typical interpretation of him.

Zero. IV) I know it's terrible of me, but the idea of zombie!Iris came up back when I was writing Loop 1.0 and I knew I had to write it, no matter how much it would torment Zero. Honestly, I like the guy a lot, but his canon history makes him way too easy to torment. Then again, X doesn't exactly have it any better...

X.4) Interesting fact: When I first fought Double way back when, people were calling his other form Jello Man. No idea where that came from in the first place, but it stuck with me and so he became the Jello Devil here. In any case, have a song for him. The Blob seems appropriate at least.

The Blob Theme Song: www. youtube watch? v=AK5jyVCdXwc

Zero.V) ...lolwut?

X.5) I... got nothing.

Zero. VI) Eh, not much to see here. Just a cool line Vile had during his one appearance in the Megaman cartoon that I really liked.

X.6) Yeah, switching sections wasn't really working out there.

Zero. VII) The Zero Manga. Sort of. Your mileage may vary on whether the original material makes more sense or not. Also Shitennou = "Four Heavenly Kings"

Fallen Angels by Black Veil Brides: www. youtube watch? v=VuGzJVKtW6g

X.7) Oath: Well, everyone calls Vile a Boba Fett rip-off to begin with. Now it's come full circle.

Me: Going back to their original sections doesn't seem to be working either...

Zero. VIII) o_O

Zero. IX) Zero's having some problems...

Monster by Skillet: www. youtube watch? v=0jLp-qP9iYs

X.9) X is... (sorry for the pun) disturbed.

Disturbia by Rihanna: www. youtube watch? v=Lm0IzB10JTo

Zero.X) Madoka is the former Anchor of the Puella Magi branch who Ascended to Adminhood, which also caused the collapse of her branch. But she saved the data on her bow before it could disappear and then tracked down her looping friend Homura to recover her and put her on the bow (as seen in the MLP Loops). Some people on the Spacebattles forums have talked about her learning the ropes from Hephaestus, so I thought I'd run with that.

As for the rest of the Zero.X Loop that will activate both the X and Zero sections, that will be done via flashback, told by X and Zero themselves to the other Megaverse loopers (including Lan and Hub who are up next). For now, enjoy the fact that X and Zero have officially joined the Loops and expect to see them in upcoming compilations!

A Mega Halloween

A Mega Halloween

Roll smiled as she walked into the children's hospital wearing an indigo dress with black stockings, indigo boots, a violet cape with a jack-o-lantern clasp, and a matching tall pointy indigo had with a green ribbon. With her she carried a wooden broom and a yawning Tango. She loved helping others and volunteering at children's hospitals was fast becoming one of her favorite activities to de-stress. To remind herself that for all the pain and devastation she regularly saw as Mega Woman, there was still plenty of people who gave of themselves to make life better for others.

And holidays like Halloween were some of her favorite times to come. Besides, her family knew her plans and had scheduled the parties around them. She wouldn't miss out on any quality time.

"Roll's here!" a childish voice squealed and the sound of a squeaky wheelchair speeding down the hall reached her ears.

One of the nurses, dressed like an Egyptian queen, chuckled. "They've all been so excited. They're eager to hear more stories about you and your brother saving the world."

"I'm glad they like them so much," Roll smiled back as she set Tango down gently. Usually animals weren't allowed in the hospital, but an exception had been made for Tango provided the robo-cat behaved himself. "In fact, I've got the perfect story for today."

"Oh, this I've got to hear," the nurse smiled.

"You will," Roll smiled back before bringing out a giant bag of candy she'd somehow managed to keep hidden, "but first, trick or treating!" (1)

"Okay everyone, settle down!" Roll called out to the horde of costumed children as they munched on their candy in a general crawl towards inevitable hyperactivity. "I can't tell this story if you're all talking!"

The children got quiet in a hurry as they all stared expectantly at their visitor. Well, most of them.

"Story! Story!" several younger children began chanting.

"Yep!" Roll chirped. "And this one's special, because it happened on a Halloween night just like this one. While all of his friends were fighting elsewhere, my brother had to face the most terrifying foe he's ever met."

"What did Wily do this time?" a kid piped up. "Was it the night of the living monster bots?"

"You'll just have to listen, won't you?" Roll winked. "But I'll tell you that this time it wasn't Dr. Wily behind it. Nor did he put someone else up to it. No, this was an altogetherly far more terrifying foe..."

"Oooooo..." the children chorused both eagerly and ominously. Though a few scattered giggles ruined the effect.

"As I said," Roll began again, her voice dropping to an ominous timbre as Tango sat down and started to play a musical tune that began with a series of beats and snapping fingers (2), "it started on a Halloween night like this one. The sun was just setting and the Light family was preparing to entertain trick-or-treaters like you for the night..."

"That's... that's great Auto, but... um..." Rock, at times known as the great hero Mega Man, did his best to think of a way to say this delicately. "Are you... sure those things are... safe?"

"Of course!" the robotic shopkeeper and part-time lab helper vocalized the grin his metal jaw was incapable of as he gestured to the automatic trick-or-treat candy dispensers he'd built. Each one was done in the style of an iconic movie monster.

At least if those movie monsters had looked exactly like Auto. (3)

"Auto's automatic tricky treat dispensers will be a hit! Just you wait! The kids will come up like so and they'll–"

Auto was cut off as all of the candy dispensers began shooting candy at him like he was the victim and they were the firing squad.

"Ow! Hey! Quit it!" Auto yelped as the merciless barrage continued. "Mega Man, help! Stop these crazy things!"

As if those were the magic words, the dispensers all jumped and stopped shooting.

"Honestly, Auto," Roll's voice sighed from behind the devices as she walked into their view, holding the reinforced broom she used both for cleaning the lab and for cleaning the clocks of evil robots as Mega Woman, "why do you keep building these things? At this rate you'll end up doing Wily's work for him!"

"Sorry..."

The chuckling voice of Dr. Light headed off Roll's inevitable chewing out and he seemed about to say something when the television sprang to life. A while back, he'd programmed all of the media devices in the lab to do that in case of breaking news, which was exactly what was happening.

"This is Plum reporting for BNC News," a pink-haired human-like robot wearing a baseball-style cap with metal ear coverings and a red and yellow mini-dress declared, "here on the scene at the Mega City junkyard where a large number of robots have begun mysteriously pouring out of the facility. Cursory reports indicate them to be Joe-series robots in varying states of disrepair that have suddenly and inexplicably begun shambling about the premises. So far, they seem to be doing little else and... wait... I'm getting a police report that the robots have begun congregating and are now headed in this general direction. As I speak, a police robot is going in to determine their intentions. There he is," the camera panned to a blue and white police model holding his hand up, "he's now calling for the robots to identify themselves and state their intentions and...

"Brrrraaaaaaiiiiiiinnnnnssss..." the chorus of mechanical groans went up as those closest to the police robot suddenly burst forward with unexpected speed to grab the law enforcement unit.

"What in the... they're grabbing him and OH MY GOD!"

"They tore the poor robot apart, rending his parts from his frame and then attaching them to those among their own who were lacking them," Roll continued to a wide-eyed audience. "But that was just the beginning, for right then we got the call. This kind of thing was happening all over. In so many places that all the Light masters, the Cossack masters, the army, and every friend we had was soon mobilized to stop it."

Roll paused as she took in the terrified and expectant faces around the room, and signaled Tango to switch musical tracks to a score comprised primarily of percussion that given the tale almost sounded like it was being played on coffins. (4)

"The Zombie Joes were on the march..."

The March of the Zombie Joes had shut down the city and many surrounding areas, all of the people retreating to the perceived safety of indoors, and Mega Man was getting frustrated. The tide of what could only be called undead robots and their sickly red optics was seemingly endless. For every one he shot down with his buster, half a dozen more moved ever closer. And that wasn't even mentioning the fact that they cannibalized any machine that wandered too close for parts and repairs, including their own fallen.

And then it happened. The thickening horde had finally advanced to the point where they lunged for Mega Man with sudden speed and ferocity, grabbing his armor and beginning to pull.

'I am not going down to a bunch of B-horror movie rejects!' Mega Man narrowed his eyes and called up the Top Spin weapon and began to rotate at high speed, keeping the weapon going until he no longer felt the grasping rusted hands of his attackers. "That's it," he glared at the rest of the horde, already beginning to advance to fill the gap he'd created, and called up a new weapon, "no more Mr. Nice Guy. ASTRO CRUSH!"

The Astro Crush put a more sizable dent in the horde, but there was still a great many more of the robots to fight before things were over, and Mega Man unleashed a Thunder Beam through their ranks even as he wondered if his master weapon energy would hold out long enough to thin their ranks.

"And thin the horde of Zombie Joes did," Roll stated to the audience, "but they'd served their purpose. For while the rest of us would deal with the stragglers and the damage they inflicted that night, only Mega Man would face the masters of this night of terror. And with his arsenal of powers depleted, they would not prove easy foes."

Roll signaled Tango to change music again, this time a collection of seemingly upbeat tones interspersed with low eerie notes that seemed to drag on and echo in a way that made one want to check around the corners to make sure nothing was waiting. (5)

"It was poor fortune that the first of the Fear Masters he would face that night was one that none of his standard weapons could touch. For the Ghost Woman could make her body as immaterial as the clouding mist that moved in upon the city..."

Rock resisted the urge to shiver as he cautiously made his way through the fogged city streets. In stark contrast to the way the Zombie Joes had almost choked the streets, they were now eerily silent, with only the light of Jack-o-Lanterns along the sidewalk giving any indication of life.

Pn-yow

'Scratch that,' Mega Man thought as he turned and fired on the robot that had suddenly attacked him, 'only the light of METs disguised as Jack-o-Lanterns.'

As if that thought had summoned it, another source of light approached his position and out of the fog came what appeared to be floating balls of ghostly blue flame with eyes.

'And creepy blue Changekeys...' Mega Man added as he opened fire on the new arrivals.

He was so focused on the threats that provided their own light that he was almost blindsided by one that wasn't. Ducking at the last moment, the blue bomber turned and fired on...

'...a mailbox? I'm being attacked by the terrain now?' he managed to blink in surprise before more objects flew out of the mist. All sorts of things that typically lined a street: Trash cans, signs, and he even spotted a fire hydrant in there.

'Okay...' Mega Man dodged the airborne threats and shot down a few, only for more to appear, 'do I stay and fight this out or–'

"Help!" a yell from a nearby building cut off his thoughts. "Someone help!"

Without giving it a second thought, Mega Man broke away from the flying objects and ran for the building he'd heard the cry for help from. He had to dodge a few of the objects that followed him, but he made it in and slammed the door behind him. Pausing to get his bearings, the cry came again and he turned and ran through what looked like a hotel lobby into a well decorated dining room.

"Mega Man?" the voice he'd heard asked with relief and he turned to see a young woman crouched protectively over a pair of children. "Thank goodness you're–Look out!"

Mega Man jumped forward with a great leap, turning in mid-air so as to position himself between the threat and the civilians. As he landed, he spied a female model robot hovering calmly above the door where he'd entered. She was pure white in all respects, but the only other thing truly notable about her was that her torso ended in a misting hover unit rather than legs, giving her the appearance of a ghost.

"I thought you would come if someone called for you," the girl robot lowered herself until she was just slightly higher up than the blue bomber, "and such a prompt response! Why, I didn't even have to do anything other than show myself."

"Let them go!" Mega Man demanded.

"What, you won't even ask my name?" the ghostly white robot taunted before waving her arm at which the doors at the other end of the room opened of their own accord. "I suppose they can leave, provided you stay and face me."

"We don't have to fight–"

"Oh, but we do," Mega Man's opponent grinned as the woman and the children ran out the opened doors before she gestured, causing all of the room's exits to slam shut behind them. "After all, I am the Ghost Woman of the Fear Masters, and we are here to claim the city and all in it as our playthings. And I know big strong heroes like you can't let sweet little ghouls like us alone to have our fun..."

"I'll stop you," Mega Man's eyes narrowed as he brought his Mega Buster to bear and fired, only for his eyes to widen as Ghost Woman went translucent and his shot passed right through her to impact the wall behind.

"No," Ghost Woman grinned impossibly wide as she raised her arms, at which every single object in the room; tables, chairs, everything not nailed down; rose up as well, "but I'll have so much fun watching you try."

"Man, wouldn't it be cool if Mega Man had a proton pack like in that movie?" one of the kids, this one wearing black ninja pajamas, interrupted.

"Yeah!" another in red ninja pajamas agreed. "Then he wouldn't need to be afraid of no Ghost Woman!" (6)

"Funny," Roll smirked, taking the interruption in stride, "that's almost precisely what was going through my brother's mind right then..."

If Auto ever again tries to build a working proton pack for Halloween, I promise to ask dad to help instead of stopping him,' Mega Man swore as he desperately dodged the thick swarm of flying objects.

"Poor little boy blue..." Ghost Woman simpered as she glided alongside through the seemingly chaotic storm of objects with ease, "so dedicated to doing the 'right thing' when it never amounts to anything in the end. You fight so hard just for the 'villain' to get away, you 'believe' in people only for the number of enemies you have to keep rising, and those you waste your life defending are a single excuse from turning on you." She reached out and brushed her now-solid hand over his cheek as he ducked and wove through a table. "It would be so much eas–"

Ghost Woman cut off as Mega Man whipped around to grab the solid appendage. She turned intangible again, but not quite fast enough to prevent him from using his Copy Chip on her.

"Thank you for that!" he called out as he went translucent, allowing the storm of objects to simply pass through him now.

"Not bad," Ghost Woman allowed as she grinned, "but your stolen ability won't last forever, you still can't hurt me while I can hurt you, because I am–"

"–using modified METs to control the flying furniture," Mega Man finished, causing Ghost Woman to blink in shock.

"How...?"

"You want an answer, you'll have to catch me!" the blue bomber grinned cheekily and ran towards the wall of the room, phasing straight through it as he left.

"I... what... YOU DO NOT GET TO RUN FROM ME !" the spectral Fear Master shrieked like a banshee as she took off after her opponent in a blind rage.

She also phased through the wall, slipping through air and solid objects as if they were no more substantial than mist before emerging onto the street where Mega Man was waiting for her and fired...

...so high and wide that Ghost Woman couldn't help but stop and blink.

"Are you serious?! I didn't even need to be intangible for that one! Where's the legendary her–" Ghost Woman's shrieks cut off as she spied a sputtering light approaching her from the side and turned to look at it, her eyes widening in shock. "Oh SCHHHWWAAAAAAAAARRRRRRKKKK!"

The moment the sparking end of the severed power line intersected her intangible form, the electrical surge forced her back into a tangible state and proceeded to fry her systems until her blank-eyed husk fell to the street with a dull clunk.

"When the lines are down, don't you hang around. When lines are down don't you hang around," a younger child in a lovingly handmade Louie the Lightningbug (7) costume began singing after Roll finished describing Ghost Woman's defeat.

"I–" Roll suppressed a giggle, "I never thought of that before, but yes, she'd have been smart to play it safe, wouldn't she?"

"That's all?" another kid in a dog costume whined, "I thought this was gonna be epic..."

"Have you forgotten?" Roll tsked fondly. "Masters always come in sets of eight. That Halloween night was far from over."

"Did Rush track the others down?" the dog kid interrupted again.

"Unfortunately, no," Roll shook her head as Tango switched tracks again to an upbeat country tune, but one that gave the feeling of a friendly warning against danger that the giver knew would be ignored. (8) "He told me later that he tried to call Rush and the rest of us, but all he got was static. Despite the power not being out, he couldn't even access the teleportation network. But my brother never had any issues finding trouble. After all, trouble liked to find him more often than not..."

"Dr. Light, do you copy?" Mega Man tried his communicator again, getting only static in reply. "Mega Woman? Proto Man? Quake Woman? Dr. Cossack? Dr. Lalinde? This is Mega Man sending out a general alert, is there anyone at all out there who can read me?"

Nothing but static.

'What in the world is going on?' he thought as he made his way back into the hotel to see if he could check on the woman and her children. 'First Rush doesn't respond to my signal, then my teleporter can't get a lock on the relay system, and now I'm cut off from communications...?'

He passed through the dining room, noting the unhelmeted MET units he'd spotted on the furniture wandering around looking as confused as he felt. Activating the sit-rep shades he rarely used, he spotted the heat trail the woman and her children had left and made to follow it. Seeking out those he knew had been in danger and making sure they were fine would be a better use of his time than wandering around aimlessly in the fog hoping to find something he wasn't even sure was out there.

"Ma'am?" he offered as he closed in on a trio of heat signatures. Odd, their biometrics looked a little strange... "It's me, Mega Man. I just wanted to make sure you and your children were alright now that the threat has been neutralized."

Instead of a vocal reply, the largest heat signature began prowling towards him on all fours, which looked strange from a human-shaped figure. As the other two moved to join it, he heard a throaty growl that had more in common with a canine than anything human vocal chords typically produced. Blinking in confusion, Mega Man retracted his shades to get a proper visual and started in shock at the sight.

It was indeed the woman and her children from before, but there was no sign of human intelligence in their eyes. Instead there was a look of feral aggression complemented by the woman's bared teeth that displayed her enlarged canines and he wasn't completely sure, but the three seemed a fair bit hairier than he recalled.

'That's what I was seeing on the scanners,' he thought to himself as he began to back away from the three as they continued to stalk towards him, all of them now growling not unlike Treble when he was guarding Bass, 'higher brain functions impaired, heightened aggression, unnatural adrenaline levels... What happened to them while I was fighting Ghost Woman?!'

Right before he was expecting them to pounce, which would prove a real problem to not hurting them, the woman reared back her head and let out a long keening howl.

"AAAARRRRROOOOOooooooooooo...!" the incredible imitation of a wolf howl made at least half the room jump, especially since it wasn't Roll that had made it. As one, heads turned every which way to find the source before settling on a young girl in a werewolf costume topped with a red hood and grinning with total satisfaction for what she'd just done. (9)

"Just like that," Roll managed to smile without breaking out in laughter at the looks on everyone's faces.

"Why was Mega Man scared?" a kid dressed like the grim reaper, his mask off, piped up. "He coulda taken 'em!"

"Perhaps," Roll agreed hastily before an argument on the matter could start, "but life is precious to all of my family and friends, human and robot alike, but to my brother most of all. He hates hurting others, even the robots he fights he takes great pains to preserve their IC chips that contain their minds and personalities. Perhaps he could have beaten those three, but not without hurting them. And my brother would never do something to hurt an innocent person, much less a woman and her children if there was any other choice..."

Mega Man grunted as he dodged a clawed swipe. He'd fled the berserk woman and her children just fine, but just when he'd lost them, he'd run into what looked like a few Gilliam Knights in wolf mode, their claws dripping with some unknown substance that he suspected might have been what triggered the feral rage in the woman and her children. They were also backed up by a couple of those Jack-o-Lantern METs and a few more ferally affected humans in the mix. With just enough of a hole in the fog that the full moon could be seen overhead.

As he fired on the robot, he tried to plot an escape route. The robots were not a big problem, but the addition of the affected humans changed things. If he didn't pick his shots carefully, there was a very real chance that he'd hit one of them instead of his actual targets.

Of course, right as he began to formulate a plan all of his opponents paused and looked up before suddenly turning and running.

'I'm almost afraid to look,' the blue bomber hesitated, but did so anyway. Just in time to dodge out of the way of a massive object right before impact. An object that stood up to reveal itself as a giant Monking that began to beat its chest aggressively.

"I do not have time for this..." Mega Man grit his teeth before he began charging up his Mega Buster. The 'Monking Kong' seemed to sense the imminent attack because it swung one of its arms wide and tore a chunk out of a nearby building, flinging debris at Mega Man.

The blue bomber jumped back, dodging the debris even as he noted the snapped rebar sticking out of a few larger pieces. Snapped in such a way that getting hit with it would probably be just as bad as if he'd jumped on some of those spikes Wily liked to line his fortress with.

Another such deluge of debris came from the other side and Mega Man dodged that as well while he waited for an opening. An opening that came when his massive opponent decided to try punching him directly instead of flinging debris. Mega Man dodged backwards and jumped forwards again at the moment of impact to begin running up the robotic ape's arm. 'Monking Kong' roared in surprise and tried to swat the blue bomber off of himself, only for Mega Man to slide forward at the last moment resulting in the robo-ape merely damaging itself heavily. As the metal simian reeled from the damage, the blue bomber jumped up and shot the giant robot in the eye with his fully charged Mega Buster.

The crash of the massive inert form muffled Mega Man's own landing, but as the blue bomber began to take stock a rhythmic clapping sound emerged from the fog.

"But it was really the sound of metal claws on the street as the robot wolves came back, right?" one of the children, a girl in a black leotard and cat-themed facepaint, piped up.

"No way!" a kid who had formerly been wearing a sheet with eyeholes yelled back. "She said it was clapping, so that's what it was! Probably the robot master making his appearance!"

"Actually, you're both right," Roll grinned. "Because out of the fog came a robot with armor like a navy suit with a white shirt, complete with red tie, with a brown wolf's head and clawed hands and feet to match. And right behind him came a pack of Gilliam Wolves and 'werewolfied' humans..." (10)

"Bravo, hunter in blue," the wolf-themed robot master applauded mockingly as the robot wolves and affected humans spread out in a ring that encompassed them both as well as the debris that 'Monking Kong' had strewn over the area, "bravo. I see that your reputation is well deserved."

"Wolf Man, I presume?" Mega Man returned evenly, getting a nod. "Are you so afraid to fight me one-on-one?"

"Hmm? Oh, them?" Wolf Man grinned as he crouched down on all fours, not unlike Slash Man sometimes did. "They're not here to help me fight. They're here to make sure you don't run."

That was all the warning Mega Man had before his opponent shot forward like a bullet, claws out to rend deep into the hero's armor. Mega Man jumped, turned, lined up his shot and fired only for Wolf Man to easily sidestep the blast and charge again. It went that way for several passes. Wolf Man charged, Mega Man barely dodged before taking aim and firing on his opponent who easily evaded and began the cycle again.

"But Miss Roll!" a child in a pig costume protested. "I thought you said Mega Man didn't want to risk hurting anyone! Weren't there a bunch of sick people surrounding them?"

"There were," Roll nodded. "And there were also a bunch of the Gilliam Wolves that had been spreading the sickness. That's why my brother took aim before every shot. He wasn't aiming for Wolf Man–"

"He was shooting the bad robots that made all the people sick!" a second child in a pig costume interrupted excitedly, Roll nodding in confirmation.

"But... what happened when there weren't any more bad robots left?" a third of the same asked.

"That's a good question, and one my brother was about to learn the answer to..."

"Ha!" Wolf Man barked in laughter, "you're even better than I'd heard, hunter. Taking out all of my robot minions like that."

"Yeah, and now they can't poison anyone else!"

"But I can..." Wolf Man growled in amusement. "After all, I'm the source of the drug that turns any human into a wild beast. And now that the warm-up is over, it's time to really get wild!"

This time when Mega Man dodged the Fear Master's charge, Wolf Man turned sharply and fired his claws at Mega Man who twisted out of the way on reflex, only to freeze at the all-too-human yelp of pain behind him.

"That's fighting dirty!" one of the older children, amusingly dressed like Roll's own older brother, complained.

"Oh, really?" Roll arched an eyebrow. "And when my brother was doing the same thing earlier?"

"That's... that's different..." the kid mumbled.

"Besides, as my brother would learn many times that night, the Fear Masters didn't care about fighting fair. But then, that was hardly anything new for him..."

"Hehehe..." Wolf Man chuckled ferally as he prowled around Mega Man like a predator looking for the best moment to pounce, the blue bomber backing up in the general direction of the debris from the earlier fight with the giant Monking. "Now you see how hopeless it is... If you try to shoot me, you might hit them instead, but if you dodge my claws, I might hit them anyway. All you can do is sit there and take it..."

Wolf Man punctuated this claim by firing his claws again, grinning as they dug into Mega Man's side when he didn't bother dodging.

"Maybe..." Mega Man moved into a martial arts stance, "or maybe we can finish this up close and personal..."

"He..." Wolf Man chuckled. "HAHAHAHAHA! Such bravado even when staring death in the face! You really are everything I've heard of! So be it! If you want to die with my teeth in your throat then you shall!"

Wolf Man shot forward in a lunge, arms and jaws spread wide, and slammed into Mega Man who grappled with his opponent even as the force knocked him off his feet. And then, to Wolf Man's surprise, he turned immaterial, phasing through the debris that had been behind him even as Wolf Man impaled himself on the sharpened rebar.

"ooooooooooooo..." several children winced in chorus.

"What's Ghost Woman's weapon called anyway?" one of them asked.

"Matter Phase," Roll replied, "which let him move through solid objects. Wolf Man's was called the Wolf Claw which would produce sharpened claws on the ends of his fingers for close combat that could also be fired as projectiles."

"What happened to the people who'd been wolfified?" another asked. "Were they okay?"

"They were," Roll assured the kids. "Wolf Man's drug was made to react to a special radio signal that only he himself transmitted. So when he went down, they all snapped out of it. But the night was far from over, for shortly after he made sure everyone was fine, he heard a pipe organ in the distance playing a very famous tune, inviting him to the lair of his next opponent."

Nearly everyone in the room recognized the ominous, yet refined, tune, even if they didn't know the origin as Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D Minor. (11)

"And while Wolf Man was a dirty fighter, he was downright honorable compared to some of his fellow Fear Masters..."

Mega Man watched the fog part to reveal a massive mansion ahead of him that he could hear the eerie pipe organ music emanate from. The wrought iron gate swung open at his arrival as a pair of crow-like Cyorowns laughed mockingly from the top of the gateposts.

Stepping through, he saw a swarm of Battons emerge from the house and head towards his direction. As they got closer, he noted that their wings were green instead of red and that they had oversized fangs in their mouths.

'Vampiric Succubattons... Of course...' the blue bomber sighed as he began running for the front door, blasting away at those that tried to divebomb him and suck his energy out. That was about the last thing he needed right now.

Keeping the swarm off of him was difficult, but Mega Man somehow managed to make it inside the front door (ignoring the shots from the pair of Jack-o-METs on the porch in his haste) and slam it behind him before any of the vampiric bat-robots could latch onto him. Unfortunately, that wasn't the end of his troubles as a robot designed for the opera, complete with partial white facemask suddenly appeared in front of him with a swirl of its cape and attacked.

"Was his name Phantom Man?" a boy dressed like the eponymous Phantom himself interrupted from the back.

"No, he was just a Phantom," Roll shook her head. "A human-shaped robot with mild cloaking and short-range teleportation designed primarily for theater work. Capable of surprising my brother, but otherwise not a threat. The true master of the mansion was further inside past a few more obstacles..."

A few more of the Phantoms had jumped out, but after the first surprise, Mega Man had figured out how to deal with them and the large foyer was now clear. The ceiling was at least two floors up and there was a large balcony directly across from the front door with winding staircases leading up to it on either side.

The flapping of metallic wings interrupted the blue bomber's respite and he sighed.

'Clear of everything but the Battons that didn't move until right now...'

The thankfully normal Battons began to unfold from their perches on the ceiling and congregate in the middle of the room in a mass. Almost as if...

'Seriously?!' Mega Man yelled internally as the Battons merged into a single Big Batton. The massive winged robot glared at the blue bomber and growled before giving a large flap of its wings to surge forward in an attempt to crush the smaller robot. Mega Man slid out of the way with plenty of time to spare and turned as the Big Batton smashed into the floor and broke into the swarm of smaller Battons.

Understanding what was going on, Mega Man began to fire repeatedly on the swarm before it merged together again and by the time it had, the Big Batton had lost almost half of its mass. The now smaller form gave an angry screech and tried to fire on Mega Man a few times before attempting to crush him under its bulk again, only for the blue bomber to evade every time and begin firing on the individual Battons when it once more broke apart. This time, when they tried to re-form there weren't enough of them left to pull it off, so they tried to rush Mega Man instead and were shot down in the attempt.

"Marvelous," a voice declared in a blank tone, "simply marvelous."

Mega Man turned to look at the figure on the indoor balcony. He seemed to be an adult male human, finely dressed, but with a somewhat blank expression and a disturbingly pale pallor.

"Our master awaits you, blue one," the man intoned, "best not keep him waiting."

Mega Man cautiously ascended the staircase, wary of possible traps, but he arrived before the man completely unhindered. Looking at the man, he verified that he was indeed human, if unnaturally pale and with eyes so bloodshot they appeared red.

"Follow me," the man spoke formally with his blank tone, and Mega Man caught a glimpse of what seemed to be sharp elongated canines, before turning and walking through the double doors at the back of the balcony.

"Who is your master?" Mega Man inquired diplomatically as he followed the man down the large hallway.

"Our master is the count of the night," the man replied readily as if reciting a memorized fact. "He is the mighty lord next to whom mere humans and ordinary robots are as cattle. I and my family are honored to have had our eyes opened to this fact and permitted into his service as his children of the night."

Mega Man grew more alarmed as the man spoke, wondering what terrible power his mysterious foe possessed to cause someone to act this way. The music he'd been hearing grew ever louder as he was led to the far end of the hall. The man opened the doors dramatically and the music suddenly halted.

Across the room, seated at a pipe organ that had clearly been playing the music, a figure in a high-collared floor-length cape stood. The man who had guided Mega Man to the room moved to stand with a similarly pale woman and two equally pale children that stood like statues to the side of the instrument.

"Master, the blue one has arrived," the man bowed before becoming as still as the rest of his family, calmly observing events with unblinking eyes.

"Excellent, my child," the caped figure replied with a stereotypical Transylvanian accent before turning around, allowing Mega Man to behold a pale-faced robot with armor styled after a Victorian-era nobleman, carefully groomed black hair, crimson optics, and vampire fangs. "Welcome blue one," the robot bowed dramatically, "I am Dracu Man, vampire extraordinaire, count of the night, and your new master."

Silence and gaping mouths abounded as the total audacity of that statement sunk in. (12)

"But... but Mega Man would never work for a guy like that!" a kid dressed like one of the Ghostbusters suddenly cried. "Right?"

"Not willingly," Roll agreed, "but Dracu Man didn't intend on giving my brother a choice in the matter..."

"What?" Mega Man blinked in confusion. There had to be an error in his auditory processors. He couldn't have possibly heard that right.

"Must I spell it out for you?" Dracu Man sighed theatrically. "You now serve me. You do everything I say from this moment until I deem otherwise."

"And... why in the world would I do that?"

"My children of the night!" Dracu Man commanded with a snap of his fingers.

"Yes, master?" all the enspelled members of the family that likely owned this house replied as one.

"I have decided to grant you a boon," Dracu Man continued. "You shall learn the ways of the vampires you have become by feasting upon blood this night. Starting with each other. Do not be afraid, for as vampires you are immune to pain and death. Show our guest the power and vitality of the vampire."

"Of course, master," the four intoned before turning suddenly hungry gazes upon each other. (13)

" No! Wait!" Mega Man cried in protest.

"Hold, my children," Dracu Man commanded, raising his hand to halt their impending actions, "the blue one wishes to speak."

"Even if I agree now, you know I'll never knowingly hurt someone," the blue bomber ground his teeth in fury. "What do you hope to gain from this?"

"Why, you of course," Dracu Man chuckled as Mega Man stared him defiantly in the eyes. "And you shall find that you will indeed follow my every command. Loyally. Skillfully. Even eagerly. All that you must do first..."

Mega Man kept his gaze focused even as Dracu Man's eyes began to pulse in rhythm, flashes of light emanating from behind them in time with the cadence of his voice. Powerfully... Compellingly... Hypnotically...

"...is look into my eyes. You are under my spell. You are no longer the famed warrior of peace. You are now one of the savage children of the night, bound to foll–GAH!"

Mega Man had moved suddenly, darting forward with feral efficiency as his hands morphed into razor-sharp wolf claws, and slashed at Dracu Man's face. The Fear Master had moved to block, only for Mega Man to dig one clawed hand into the blocking arm and tear a gash in Dracu Man's armor with the other, the force of the blow knocking the Fear Master out of his grip.

"How is this possible?!" Dracu Man hissed as he jumped back from the unexpected assault. "You should be one of my loyal vampires!"

"You said I was a savage child of the night," Mega Man growled out like a wild animal. "Never a vampire."

With that, the now savage blue bomber lunged at his opponent again, claws flashing.

"Booyah!" a 'wolf boy' off to the side yelled. "Werewolves rule vampires drool!"

"I don't know about real ones," Roll snickered at the faces of a few nearby kids who had dressed up like vampires, "but my brother got lucky that the Wolf Claw was in fact Dracu Man's weakness. Unfortunately, Dracu Man still had a few underhanded tricks up his sleeve..."

"Aid me, my children of the night!" Dracu Man commanded and the family of hypnotized humans sprung into action with surprising speed, latching onto Mega Man's frame while their master backed away from the savage opponent.

"You..." Mega Man growled, a clawed hand pointed in Dracu Man's direction even as his better nature came through the hypnosis and prevented him from throwing the humans off and likely injuring them severely. "You cowardly little..."

"The wise lord uses all tools at his disposal," Dracu Man got to his feet, holding a rent that Mega Man's Wolf Claws had torn in his armor. "It is not cowardly to claim victory by any means necessary. Now... Look into my eyes..."

"I'd rather claw them out..." Mega Man growled as he activated the ranged firing option for the claws on the hand pointed at Dracu Man.

"I won't go into the details," Roll stage whispered, "but suffice to say that Dracu Man didn't find the Wolf Claws very appetizing."

"Eeeeewwww..." several children made disgusted faces.

"What happened next?" a girl dressed like a witch asked while cuddling a plush black cat. "Did that family turn back to normal?"

"They did," Roll nodded. "With Dracu Man neutralized, his hypnotic spell over them was broken."

There was a chorus of relieved sighs around the room, only to be reminded of how much there was to go when the song changed again to an enticing tune. One that the adults in the room might even call sultry and seductive, but with a definite undertone of danger. A tune for something whose attractiveness was matched only by how dangerous it was. (14)

"But the next Fear Master was about to make herself known," Roll forged ahead, "and the Witch Woman was bound and determined to put my brother under her spell. Permanently ..."

"How can we ever thank you, Mega Man?" the owner of the house, his pale pallor regaining color now that Dracu Man's influence was gone, gushed as he vigorously shook the robot's hand. "To think what that... beastly creature might have made us do... His promises that our actions would cause no lasting harm seemed so reasonable after all and..."

"Think nothing of it," the blue bomber replied humbly. "All in a day's work."

Inside, Mega Man was as shaken up as the man seemed to be. Being made into a more violent version of himself... the loss of self-control never failed to rattle him. He always wondered if the next time would be the one. The one where he'd finally lose all semblance of restraint and hurt someone.

"Oh-hohohohoho...!" a woman's cackling laughter pierced the scene. Mega Man immediately stepped between the man and the perceived source of the sound and scanned the room. His eyes eventually settled on a robot cat, colored entirely black save for its eerie green optics. "How absolutely precious !" the voice continued from the robo-feline's speakers. "I simply must have you for my own!"

"Who are you?" Mega Man challenged. "What do you want?"

"I am the Witch Woman, my dashing hero, speaking through my dear Tama Kuro here," the voice became low and throaty, "and after that incredible display, I have decided that I want you."

"Sorry, not interested."

"Oh, really?" the voice tittered. "Not even for them?"

At this, the sound shifted and breathless groans could be heard. Human groans. "Please... the heat... need... cold..."

"Though I suppose if you won't come, I'll just have to content myself with their cries of anguish."

"Over my dead body!" Mega Man snarled, part of him wondering if there was some lingering effects of the hypnosis in his system.

"While I'd prefer you intact and operational," the voice cooed, "I suppose a woman must take what she can get. To find me, just follow my dear Tama Kuro, and do hurry my darling hero. There's no telling what I might do if you let me become bored! mwa!"

"Oooohh, I bet Mega Man was mad ..." a boy in the front wearing a vaguely Victorian costume with plastic bits painted to look like brass machinery grinned.

"He was furious ," Roll confirmed, "which wasn't good news for Witch Woman's minions that got in his way..."

Part of Mega Man's mind idly noted the female-themed minions Witch Woman had attacking him. That part was already labeling the crow-themed harpy robots as Harpyorowns and due to the Mini-Snakeys attached to their heads, the serpent women had been dubbed 'Snakeygons'.

Most of his mind, on the other hand, was focused on blasting his way through them as quickly as possible so he could rescue the humans being kept captive and in danger.

Sidestepping the razor-sharp metal feathers a Harpyorown threw in his direction, Mega Man began charging another buster shot as he waited for the Snakeygon to give him an opening. However, the Harpyorown took exception to being ignored and dove at him, talons outstretched even as the Snakeygon fired her petrification ray. Sliding out of the way, Mega Man avoided the beam which instead hit the Harpyorown and unleashed his charged shot at the Snakeygon who collapsed, the Mini-Snakeys that made up her hair detaching and slithering towards him. However, a quick burst of the Hypnotic Gaze that he'd gotten from Dracu Man and the tiny robots turned their hostility on the Harpyorown instead, leaving the way clear for him to continue pursuit of Tama Kuro who had run into the mall.

Who had apparently halted his progress just inside, waiting patiently in the empty mall area with only his metal tail showing any movement and the lights from Jack-o-Lanterns at every storefront the only illumination.

"As much as I love watching you work," the voice of Witch Woman purred, "I think you've got a little too much frustration left to work through before we meet. So I insist you play with Tama Kuro for a bit first."

Mega Man was wondering just what that meant when the black robot cat began to grow. And grow. Until he was as large as one of the feline Tama robots that usually served under Top Man.

"RRROOOOOWWWRRR!" the beast yowled in a way that caused the walls to shake and the Jack-o-Lanterns to jump in place.

Actually, no, the yowl had just signaled the Jack-o-METs that had been hiding themselves to begin closing in.

"Alright..." Mega Man growled right back as he activated the Wolf Claw weapon. "You want me to work out some frustration, here I come!"

With that, he charged forward even as Tama Kuro opened its mouth and spat a giant 'yarn' ball at him which he promptly swiped his claws at, sending it back into the robo-cat's face. Tame Kuro yowled as the closest Jack-o-METs moved to intercept the blue bomber, only to be cut down by the Wolf Claws both from melee slashes and ranged projectile shots. Tama Kuro recovered just in time to get clawed in the face as Mega Man unleashed his frustration at being kept from saving people on the servant of Witch Woman. In short order, the black robot cat was flung back, shrinking to its previous size by the time it hit the ground.

"My, my," the voice of Witch Woman seemed surprised as her familiar limped to its feet, much worse for wear, but still functional, "aren't we impatient."

"No more games, Witch Woman," Mega Man demanded. "Take me to where you're keeping those people!"

"But of course," the sound of snapping fingers was heard and a portion of the mall lit up in the distance, beckoning Mega Man onwards.

The blue bomber ran forwards, leaving Tama Kuro behind and paying just enough heed to the remaining Jack-o-METs to dodge their shots. Soon enough, he'd arrived to the lit area, only to see nothing there.

"Show yourself!" he yelled. "Stop tormenting those people with fire right now!"

"Fire?" the voice of Witch Woman, no longer distorted by being broadcast laughed as another fingersnap was heard, heralding the illumination of an area off to the side where several people huddled close together in a pale blue light, mist hanging over them like they were in a freezer.

"Please... Give us the heat... Need warmth... It's so cold..."

"Fire is sooo passe, darling hero," Witch Woman simpered as she floated down from above on a hovering broom. "Don't you know that ice is what's in this season?"

"Was she ugly?" a younger girl in a fairy costume asked.

"Yeah, bad witches are ugly, right?" an older girl in a princess costume, possibly the other's sister, added.

"Actually," Roll corrected with a smile, "Witch Woman was very beautiful."

"Was she green?" a boy in a puffy Yellow Devil costume (with his head as the 'eye') piped up.

"No, no she wasn't," Roll laughed. "As I said, she was as beautiful as she was evil. Had she been a better person, I might have even tried setting her and my brother up. Dressed all in black, with eerie green eyes, smooth pale skin, raven hair, ruby lips, and sparks that flew from her fingertips..." (15)

"I'd tell you to just stand still and make this painless, but I do so love the feisty ones," Witch Woman leered as icy blue sparks danced over her hands.

"Then you'll adore me," Mega Man shot back along with a spread of buster shots.

"But I already do , darling hero," the robotic witch fanned herself dramatically with one hand as the other sent out a wave of cold that made the plasma bolts dissipate when they struck it. "I don't ask much," the leer turned malicious as she pointed her hand at her opponent, "just that you stick around for a Cold Spell."

The frosty bolt that shot forth plowed through Mega Man's buster shots with ease and he barely managed to dodge out of the way.

"You're fast, I like that," Witch Woman crooned as she floated higher on her broom and began to circle overhead, moving just fast enough to keep out of her opponent's sights as he tried to track her. "But do be careful not to slip and fall, my darling hero."

Mega Man easily evaded the large downward bolt of freezing energy, but the wave that rushed across the floor caught him by surprise and sent him tumbling. He tried to stand, only to find his systems were running sluggish and his feet began to slip on the now icy floor.

"Such a pity," Witch Woman sighed as she descended to the floor and began to form a ball of icy blue sparks in her hand pointed straight at Mega Man, "I'd hoped to have some more fun before ending this, but it seems you just can't keep up."

As the freezing bolt left her hand, Mega Man switched to the Wolf Claw and dug one hand into the icy floor to throw himself to the side while he aimed the other at his opponent and fired the razor-sharp projectiles.

Despite any surprise at the maneuver, the mechanical spellcaster still sidestepped the shots enough to escape damage, but one still carved a shallow cut across her cheek.

"Oh, she must have been mad," a young boy in a scarecrow costume cut in.

"How so?" Roll blinked at the assumption.

"Don't pretty ladies always get angry if you mess up their looks?"

"Depends on the individual and the situation," Roll answered diplomatically. "Some can get very angry while others can be much more calm about it. As for Witch Woman, well," Roll fished for a way to describe this to the gathered youth that wouldn't get her in trouble with their parents, "she was... a little different..."

" Exquisite ," Witch Woman lovingly traced the injury as she gazed at the recovering Mega Man. "To use your claws to gain purchase on the ice, especially impaired as you must be? And to injure me , no matter how slight?" At this, Witch Woman dismounted her broom even as the temporary freezing of the floor ended and clutched it in a combat stance. "Truly you are a fine hero and I want you all the more now."

That was all the warning the true blue hero had before Witch Woman dashed forward with speed comparable to Wolf Man's, sending one of her Cold Spell bolts ahead of her even as she wound up for a melee strike.

Mega Man sidestepped and tried to swipe with the Wolf Claws, only to be stopped by his opponent's broom which then used his own hand as a fulcrum to twist and slam into his chin in a rising strike that lifted him off his feet.

'Ow...' the blue bomber winced as he fell back, twisting his arms to turn his momentum into a recovering handstand, 'I think she hits harder than Roll...'

"Really?" a girl in the front blinked owlishly, complemented by the fact that she was in fact dressed as an owl. "She was stronger than you?"

"Maybe," Roll allowed with a wink. "I do tend to pull my strikes a bit when I spar with my brother after all. Actually, those sparring sessions might have been what let him last as long as he did..."

Mega Man wasn't sure how he was going to get out of this one. He might have been able to turn a ranged game into a stalemate given what he'd seen earlier, but close range he was getting his butt handed to him. Nearly every attempt to hit her was blocked by the broom and he was having a hard time evading the counter-strikes.

And the glancing blows he did land just seemed to send her even deeper into her crazed frenzy.

And that wasn't counting the freezing energy she was starting to throw around increasingly liberally.

"That's it!" Witch Woman declared with glee as he managed to scratch her leg right before forcing him on the defensive. "Yes!" a leading bolt of cold was sidestepped and the following broom jab deflected. "Yes! the upward strike was blocked. "Yes!" the spinning blow caught only air as the target backstepped. "Yes!" the spin continued into a sweeping strike that was hopped over. "Yes!" Witch Woman abruptly stopped her spin and jabbed the unbristled end of her broom into Mega Man's torso. "YES!" the blow was followed by a massive bolt of freezing energy that blew the mechanical hero backwards to skid along the ground. (16)

Mega Man grit his teeth as he painfully forced his now sluggish body to a kneeling posture so he could try to stand before–

He'd just raised his head to look at his opponent when the second Cold Spell slammed home and froze him in place.

–before that happened...

"Oh, you are the best , my darling hero," Witch Woman stalked forward like a cat about to pounce on a mouse. She reached the blue bomber well before the effect could wear off and knelt down just far enough that she could cup his chin in one hand while still staring down into his eyes as her other hand began to emit more icy sparks to charge up another large Cold Spell. "Mmmmm... I shall always remember this every time I look into your frozen helpless eyes..."

'Look into my eyes?' Mega Man's analytical mind latched onto that statement as he felt himself regain control over the variable weapon system and his voicebox. 'I wonder...'

"Yes..." he forced out, getting a surprised blink from his opponent as he switched to Dracu Man's Hypnotic Gaze and focused it into his optics, "look... into my eyes..."

"I shall, my darling hero," Witch Woman kept her gaze locked on his, "my living eyes forever on your frozen ones."

"How...?"

"Oh, so simple my heroic statue," the female Fear Master replied readily, "when I unleash this charged Cold Spell, your functions will freeze forevermore. Forever locked as my lovely trophy, free for me to admire."

"How can you be... sure it will work?"

"Oh, my darling hero," Witch Woman gazed straight into the strong gaze of her defeated opponent, "at this point, my spell could freeze even my systems."

"Are you certain?" she could almost feel his arm caressing hers, but that was silly. He was frozen in place, waiting for her final blow. "Is it really that strong?"

"You doubt me, my darling hero?" she reached up to tickle his chin tauntingly as she continued to stare upwards into those strong eyes. This was an even better pose for him to have than the kneeling one.

"Not at all," Mega Man replied as he gently moved the arm with the readied weapon so that it was pointed at Witch Woman herself instead of him. "But why don't you show me anyway?"

"Anything you say, my prize," Witch Woman grinned as she obliviously unleashed her spell on herself.

"Woah..." several members of the audience gaped with wide eyes. Not all of them were children either.

"But didn't you say that Mega Man doesn't like to kill even bad guys?" a girl who had decided that being in a wheelchair was the perfect excuse to dress as a mermaid (complete with water decals on the chair itself) chimed.

"He doesn't," Roll nodded. "But if he has to choose between sparing an opponent or saving innocent lives, there's little doubt which one he'll choose every time. With the fall of Witch Woman, her chilling spell that held her hostages captive was lifted and my brother was able to move them somewhere they could begin warming up. But he would soon find out that there were still many more people that the Fear Masters were seeking to harm in cruel ways. For he was about to discover a terrible curse," the statement was punctuated by a change in music, this time to a tune that spoke of ancient tombs and the dark and terrible secrets that lay in wait for those foolish enough to enter. (17) "The curse... of the Mummy Man..."

It had taken a few minutes, but Mega Man had gotten the freezing humans to a safe place where they could begin warming up. He'd pilfered a few electric heaters and blankets from one of the stores, leaving a note for the proprietors summarizing the situation and asking them to contact Light Labs for any necessary compensation. He'd done the same with the food court after collecting some of the bottled water (a fresh unopened shipment, not from the refrigerator) there.

"Thank you, Mega Man..." one of the men he'd rescued, a doctor of medicine apparently, said as the robot finished handing out blankets. "I don't think we can ever thank you enou–"

The sound of something falling over cut the man off and everyone went silent and listened as the sound of something stumbling in their general direction was heard.

"Wait here," Mega Man told them, "I'll check it out."

Carefully exiting the secured room, Mega Man cautiously edged out towards the source of the sounds in the darkened general mall area. The sounds also seemed to be coming towards him, though he couldn't be sure if that was deliberate or coincidence. So he waited and watched as a human-sized figure stumbled into his view, apparently bumping into things in the insufficient light, and let out a sigh of relief as he noted the police uniform.

"Excuse me, officer?" he called out, watching as the figure turned towards him in the low light, "I'm Mega Man and I was wondering if..."

The blue bomber trailed off as the policeman's face became illuminated enough for him to see what had befallen the poor individual. The sunken eyes, the shriveled dry skin, the way the uniform hung loose and ill-fitting on his frame.

The man reached out a dangerously thin arm towards Mega Man and gasped out his plea in a raspy voice. "Wa...water...!"

"Ohmygod!" the interrupting gasp wasn't from one of the children this time, but one of the adult nurses in the room. "He called the hospital, right?"

"He tried," Roll explained, "but not successfully. Fortunately, as I said, one of the people rescued from Witch Woman was a medical doctor and knew what to do when the man was brought to him. As it happened, the man was so desperate for water that Mega Man needed to use one of the blankets to restrain him so that he didn't drink too much."

"Why?" a child dressed as a firefighter asked. "If he was thirsty, why stop him from drinking all the water he wanted?"

"Because if you drink too much too fast when you're too thirsty, you can just make yourself even more sick," Roll explained to nods from the medical staff present. "And that man was desperate enough that he'd have guzzled water until he burst like a balloon before realizing anything was wrong. That's why hospitals exist, so sick people don't accidentally hurt themselves trying to get better. In any case, the policeman was just one of many who had been affected in this way, but my brother was able to get some directions towards the one responsible and set out immediately, though what he found was not at all what anyone would have expected..."

Mega Man had encountered a few more of the 'living mummified' humans on his way. The good news was that it seemed the emergency response teams were starting to make their rounds now so he'd been able to both make sure those people would receive treatment, but also send a team to pick up the rescuees from the mall.

The bad news was that he'd heard from those same emergency responders that there were other problems still going on. The reports of injuries from 'feral human' attacks were all after the fact, thankfully, so it seemed Wolf Man's influence was well and truly negated, but there were apparently people covered in grime and experiencing hallucinations and others who were in the throes of full fevered delirium. And that was in addition to riot reports and other actions typical of a panicked populace.

'Don't think about that now,' he chastised himself as he closed in on the area the policeman had mentioned. 'Let the emergency teams take care of their job. You focus on stopping those responsible. The next one should be just up ahead and... whoa...'

Mega Man halted as he turned a corner and saw the immense structure ahead in the middle of an area strangely clear of the fog over the city. It was... there was no other word for it. It was a pyramid. A full sized pyramid apparently constructed out of metal. Junk metal if the telescopic setting of his optics wasn't mistaken. Junk metal composed of...

'Are those... Zombie Joe parts?' the blue bomber blinked in disbelief. 'Is that entire thing made out of the remains of the zombie robots I was fighting earlier?'

"Miss Roll?" the hesitant question was accompanied by a raised hand from a boy in a Pharaoh Man costume. "How could someone make a building out of robot parts? Were there really that many of them?"

"There were," Roll answered. "Rock didn't count the number of Zombie Joes he'd faced earlier, but he said it felt as if there had been at least one for every person living in Mega City. And those were just the ones he himself faced."

"No wonder he had to empty all of his weapons," one of the other kids, this one in a wobbly Green Devil outfit, offered. "But how did the pyramid get built so fast anyway?"

"Well, Mummy Man had some help in the form of swarms of Deispiders and Sasoreenus to cement the parts together. As for gathering them, there is a sacred beetle in the Egyptian mythos known as the Scarab, or the Scarabaeus Sacer to scientists. Apparently someone had a the weird sense of humor to add a letter to the scientific name and make a robot called the Scarabaeus Saucer which was meant to gather up scrap metal in large balls for transport to recycling areas. Large balls that it tried to drop on my brother as he tried to approach the pyramid..." (18)

Mega Man slid into the entrance of the pyramid just before the last ball of scrapped Zombie Joe parts would have blocked it off and let out a sigh of relief. The Sasoreenus and Deispiders that were swarming around the place, apparently in the middle of constructing it were bad enough, but that scarab-themed flying saucer had been positively relentless on his approach, staying just high enough to prevent retaliation while it tried to bomb him with boulder-sized balls of scrap metal.

At least now it couldn't do that anymo–

"–ter... Pl...ease... Wa...ter..." the groans made themselves known as his audio receptors adjusted to the internal sound levels.

Mega Man's eyes widened as he took in what would at first glance appear to be silk-wrapped mummies. Stepping closer, he could see that the 'silk' was in fact a similarly-formed metallic compound Deispiders were supposed to be able to use (19) and the 'mummies' inside were in fact dangerously dehydrated humans, just like the policeman had been. So many, just lining the wall like some inhumanly macabre decorations.

"Aahh..." the groaning voice sounded throughout the makeshift tomb, "ssoo nniiccee ooff yyoouu ttoo jjooiinn mmee..."

"So, this is your doing?" the blue bomber retorted as he felt the movement of a Sasoreenu tunnelling up through the ground behind him and jumped out of the way of its attack, blasting it as it passed below.

"Ooff ccoouurrssee... Ii ggiivvee tthheemm tthhee ppeeaaccee yyoouu ddeennyy... Ttoorrmmeennttoorr ooff tthhee aazzuurree hhuuee..."

"Peace?!" Mega Man yelled at the ceiling in anger. "This is torture!"

"Nnoo... Lliivviinngg iiss ttoorrttuurree... Aa sslllooww ddeeaatthh ooff eevveerrllaassttiinngg ppaaiinn... Oonnllyy tthhee ttoommbb bbrriinnggss ppeeaaccee... Oonnllyy tthhee ttoommbb bbrriinnggss ttrruuee iimmoorrttaalliittyy..."

"Immortality?! They're dying of thirst!"

"Tthhee wwaatteerrss ooff lliiffee aarree tthhee ttrruueesstt mmoosstt aaddiiccttiivvee ppooiissoonn ooff aallll... Aa ppooiissoonn ooff nneeeedd aanndd mmoorrttaall tteerrrroorr... Bbyy ccuurriinngg tthheemm ooff tthhaatt wwaatteerr Ii hhaavvee ssttooppeedd tthheeiirr ppaaiinn... Ssttooppeedd tthheeiirr ffeeaarr... Wwhheenn tthheeyy bbeeccoommee uusseedd ttoo tthhee tthhiirrsstt tthheeyy wwiillll rreeaalliizzee tthhiiss..."

"You're insane! I can't let you get away with this!"

"Tthheenn ccoommee aanndd ssttoopp mmee iiff yyoouu ccaann..."

Mega Man grit his teeth as he turned to examine all of the humans being kept captive while needing medical attention. He could try to transport them, but there were so many that he'd never get them all, even if the hostile robots outside weren't a factor. No, his best bet was to put a stop to Mummy Man as fast as possible before things got worse. Then the Sasoreenus and Deispiders would be released from his command and Mega Man could take control and have them transport all of the humans en masse to the nearest hospital at once.

Still, as he pressed onward, he couldn't ignore the pain that leaving those in need caused him.

"Wow... these Fear Masters are jerks..." a boy wearing a cardboard costume colored like a Gundam in the middle of the group stated.

"Yes, they were," Roll didn't even try to dispute that, "but they were also very strong and they didn't care to fight fair, even in the manner of constructing their lairs. For in addition to the hostages, Deispiders, Sasoreenus, and the Scarabaeus Saucer, Mummy Man's pyramid had some surprises embedded in the walls themselves..."

Mega Man's clock speed suddenly spiked when out of nowhere something grabbed his foot as he ran past. Turning and aiming his Mega Buster on reflex, he spotted a Zombie Joe arm embedded in the floor that had spontaneously reached up to grab him.

"Yaaaahhh!" the blue bomber screamed as he blasted the animated limb off of him. 'It's bad enough this place was constructed from robot remains, did some of them have to still be active too?!'

As if to answer that, a few spots on the wall lit up with haunting grins and Mega Man saw that the walls contained not only supposedly inactive Zombie Joe parts, but also fully active Jack-o-METs...

As he watched, a few managed to extract themselves from the wall, but most seemed only able to generate enough movement to uncover their projectile weapons and take a shot at him.

Dodging around the poorly-aimed energy weapons, Mega Man returned fire before running towards the end of the corridor and through the gate at the end. As it closed, he turned around...

And nearly ran face-first into the Scarab/UFO thing that had tried to scrap-bomb him outside.

The machine beeped angrily before rising up and shooting a magnetic tractor beam at Mega Man that lifted him up off the ground. It then made a sharp turn and sped towards the other end of the chamber, carrying Mega Man along with it and coming to a sharp halt right before it hit the wall, deactivating the tractor beam at the same time, using the momentum to fling Mega Man at the wall at dangerous speeds. Instead, the blue bomber flipped around to impact feet first and unleashing a charged shot at the robot's underside that blew out one of its hover mechanisms and caused it to crash.

"Iimmpprreessiivvee ttoorrmmeennttoorr..." the groaning voice from before spoke from somewhere as the door opposite the one Mega Man had entered opened up. "Ccoommee nnooww aanndd ffaaccee mmee..."

Mega Man stepped through, his face a mask of neutral determination and faced the master of the pyramid.

The form at the other end was roughly the size of Guts Man, but wrapped in bandages made of the same metallic silk the humans below were imprisoned in. Glowing yellow eyes could be seen through the largest gap in the bandages and the gray metal beneath could be seen in a few areas, but was particularly clear in the one unbandaged hand the robot possessed, the other ending in a cannon barrel.

"I take it you're the Mummy Man," Mega Man stated.

"Yyeess..."

"And then Mega Man beats him up because he's so slow and moves like this, uuuunnnnggggghhhh...!" a kid dressed up in a cheap mummy costume that looked suspiciously like toilet paper laughed as he did an impression of a slow and clumsy mummy grab at a nearby girl who shrieked childishly and backed away.

"My brother wishes it was that easy," Roll corrected. "He may not have been as fast as Wolf Man or Witch Woman, but Mummy Man wasn't slow by any means. And he was also very strong, and his weapon had a very strange effect on robots. Can you guess what it was?"

"Is it what de-high-rated those people?" one young kid in a puffy pumpkin costume asked.

"That's stupid," another kid with a partial mask like skin peeled off of a cybernetic skell scoffed. "Robots don't need water anyway, so what good would it be against Mega Man?"

"More than you think. It had the effect of making ductile things brittle," Roll began, before trailing off at the blank looks on several faces. "Ductile things bend before they break, like most metals, while brittle things break before they bend, like ice. His Desert Laser could turn my brother's metal armor fairly brittle when it hit, making it so his physical blows cracked the armor and hurt my brother that much more..." (20)

Mega Man tried to focus as his damage sensors blared over numerous cracks in his armor that had resulted from the body-blow Mummy Man had dealt him. 'Shows me for getting careless and thinking his weapon wouldn't hurt me that much.' Honestly, whoever thought that robots didn't feel pain probably never considered logical things like having to override system shutdown due to damage reports in order to evade a follow-up blow.

"Iitt iiss uusseelleessss..." Mummy Man groaned as he fired his dehydrating weapon again, causing cracks to appear in the wall behind where Mega Man was as the blue robot forced himself to jump out of the way despite his protesting systems.

'I wish I could just use an E-Tank,' the blue bomber thought to himself as he involuntarily glanced over at the pile of black dust that had resulted from Mummy Man interrupting his previous attempt to down one of the restorative items. 'Or that I could fire my buster without creating more stress fractures in my system or waiting for his weapon to wear off... Think Rock, think! Wolf Claws... I'm hurting myself enough as it is. Matter Phase... delaying tactic and I'm low on it anyway. Hypnotic Gaze... if it doesn't work I'm a sitting duck. Cold Spell...'

"Yyoouu aarree ddoonnee ffoorr ttoorrmmeennttoorr ooff tthhee aazzuurree hhuuee..." Mummy Man intoned as he took aim.

'Worth a shot,' Mega Man concluded as he switched to Witch Woman's weapon and fired it from his hand at the same time as Mummy Man's laser. The two weapons met in mid-air and to Mega Man's astonishment, the Cold Spell weapon got bigger as it continued its path to hit Mummy Man, freezing him in place.

"Why would it do that?" a kid in a white spandex outfit like the one worn by the pilots from that Evangelion series asked.

"Don't you know?" another in a similar costume, only red,next to the first replied before Roll could. "Dry ice is colder than normal ice." (21)

Roll stifled a giggle and decided not to elaborate on the technical aspects of the interaction between the two weapons. "Something like that. Anyway, my brother took the opportunity to down the second E-Tank he'd been carrying for emergencies, giving precious energy and materials to his self-repair systems so they could patch him up before he continued the fight..."

"Yyoouu ccaann nnoott eessccaappee mmyy ccuurrssee ssoo eeaass–"Mummy Man moaned as he jumped forward and tried to grab Mega Man, only for the blue bomber to dodge, push off from Mummy Man's side with his hands, and hit him with another Cold Spell.

'Fewer systems protests this time,' Mega Man noted with satisfaction. 'The effects of his weapon are wearing off.'

"–iillyy ttoorrmmeennttoorr..." Mummy Man finished his previous proclamation as he turned and took aim at the blue bomber, but the robot hero was ready this time.

Right when the barrel of Mummy Man's laser came into view, Mega Man fired the Cold Spell right at the barrel. The orb of freezing energy entered the weapon right as Mummy Man tried to fire his laser and froze the large robot solid. Mega Man took the opportunity to charge up his Mega Buster and fire it, just in case that hadn't been enough.

With cracks visible in his armor beneath the bandages, Mummy Man fell to the floor and did not rise. After several long moments to verify that he was down for good, Mega Man began to make remote contact with the Deispiders and Sasoreenus that were even then beginning to wander about in confusion. With their commanding unit disabled, the robots readily accepted his commands to find the dehydrated humans and, as quickly and gently as possible, transport them to the nearest hospital for treatment.

"Were they all okay?" a younger girl in a nurse costume asked with concern.

"Yes," Roll agreed readily. "It took some time for them to fully recover, but they were all fine in the end."

"So who was next?" a kid in a sentai hero costume asked, clearly eager to hear more.

"Well, while the other robots were transporting the humans to safety, my brother decided to climb to the top of the pyramid and get a look at the surrounding area since it was generally clear of the fog that enshrouded the rest of the city."

"Where was the fog coming from anyway?"

"Funny you should ask that," Roll took the question in stride. "Because the first thing he noted was that with Mummy Man down, the fog was beginning to roll into the area. This was actually fortunate because he could then use the movement to track the fog's origin, and what do you think he found?"

"The creature from the black lagoon?" a kid in a costumed apparently themed along the lines of his suggestion guessed.

Roll snickered for a few moments at the guess before getting control of herself. "Close, very close. Do you all know Lagoon Park?"

There was a round of nods from several in the room. Lagoon Park was a public area set around a natural lagoon right off the coast. The shallow water was a popular swimming and leisure boating area due to the shoals that kept the ocean waves from disturbing the general calm.

"Well," Roll continued as the music Tango was playing shifted to an eerie theme that seemed to suit the idea of fog perfectly, hinting at any number of unknown terrors that could be lurking far closer than anyone suspected, (22) "as fate would have it, Lagoon Park was the direction that all the fog in the city was coming from. And when my brother arrived there, he found that the waters had been turned black with muck and grime..."

Mega Man knelt by the edge of the lagoon and stared at the... there was no other word for it... the dark black sludge that had apparently replaced the lagoon water. Seeing the water's edge through the fog hadn't been clear, but up close it was quite evident that something was very wrong around here...

Dipping an experimental finger in the tainted water, the blue bomber brought the viscously coated finger up for a substance analysi–

"YAAAAHHH!" was the only warning he received before a sharp blow to the back of his helmet knocked him forward into the muck.

'That's much more of a sample than I really wanted,' Mega Man groused as he made to stand up, more surprised than injured by the blow.

"The beast lives!" the voice yelled as the robot wiped the sludge from his face to clear his optics and saw a muck-covered human brandishing an equally filthy baseball bat in his direction.

"Hey now, blegh I'm here to hel–" Mega Man held up his hands in a peaceful gesture, only for the human to freak and start running like the hounds of hell were on his heels.

"DON'T EAT ME! AAAAHHHH!"

'What in the...?' Mega Man blinked owlishly as he watched the man run back into the fog, only to be distracted by the sound of something swimming towards him. Turning to look, he caught a blurry glimpse of a metal fin in the black water right before some type of robot piranha jumped out, teeth aimed right at his face. "Gah!" the blue bomber reacted with a backhand that sent the robo-fish flailing off to the side with a murky splash before deciding that further analysis of the situation could take place out of the robo-piranha infested waters.

A slower scramble than he was comfortable with later, and Mega Man was back on the shore, just in time for his substance analyzers to give a report.

'Wow...' he thought as he looked at the chemical list, 'there's enough hallucinogens in this stuff that a teddy bear could be mistaken for a ravenous monster...'

"No, not Teddy!" a young girl in the audience dressed like Goldilocks hugged her bear protectively. "He'd never hurt anyone!"

"I know," Roll smiled at the girl, "but anyone who was poisoned by the black lagoon waters that day wouldn't be able to tell. And there were far more dangerous things lurking in the fog than poisoned water and hungry robo-fish. For one thing, that trip into the water had clogged my brother's Mega Buster something fierce..."

Mega Man swore silently as his attempt to shoot the dragonfly-like Yambow only resulted in a spurt of muck emerging with a sickening splorp. Lacking in offensive abilities at the moment to defend against a hostile robot, Mega Man elected to run and hope that the gunk drained from his systems fairly quickly.

'I'd ask how this can possibly get any worse, but I just know something would answer me...' the blue bomber thought as he did his best to put distance between himself and the pursuing Yanbow while having his vision obscured by the fog.

"fOod... eAt..." a garbled voice rang out in the fog just before Mega Man saw a red object emerge from in front of him at high speed and dove to the side. The red object, apparently connected to something still in the fog, continued to extend rapidly until it hit the Yanbow, where it stuck and retracted just as rapidly back into the thick mist where metallic crunching sounds could be heard.

'I was right...' Mega Man prepared himself and dove to the side again as the red object flew right past where he'd been standing before retracting again. Then he felt the slight tremor of something large pushing off of the ground and heard the rustle of something large crashing through the unseen tree branches overhead and slid out of the way right before a large green form slammed into the ground where he'd been standing. 'That's...' Mega Man thought as he took in the sideways profile of the robot that had tried to squish him, the larger hind legs configured solely for jumping, the big eyes that bulged from the head, the enormous mouth even when just compared to the rest of the body, (23) 'a really big Kerog...'

The giant frog robot turned clumsily, but swiftly, in Mega Man's direction before opening its mouth and letting out a fireball the size of the blue bomber. Mega Man jumped over the flames and tried to return fire, but all that came out was another spurt of sludge.

'Oh, come on!'

The Mega Kerog gave a croaking laugh before trying to jump at Mega Man, who slid under the frog, forcing the amphibian-themed robot to jump again to turn around.

'Okay, think, what can I do about this?' Mega Man's processor's raced as he backed up, and nearly tripped as he almost backed into the water. '...There's an idea...'

Waiting for an opening, Mega Man prepared himself to jump and launched up and forwards when the Mega Kerog's red tongue lashed out at him again and spurted as much of the muck still in his systems as he could straight at the frog robot's eyes. The viscous liquid splattered on the bulging optics, covering them entirely and the robot began to thrash about, searching for its target.

"Over here!" Mega Man shouted after retreating to the water's edge. The Mega Kerog turned in his direction and, just as Mega Man had hoped, jumped high and long to come splashing down into the murk where it proceeded to become stuck. "Well, that worked about as well as I could ho–"

The sound of tearing metal cut off the blue bomber's relief as several piranha robots began ripping into the Mega Kerog's armor to his complete shock.

"But... he's one of yours... right...?" the blue bomber tried to make sense of what he was seeing.

"fAilUrE fOod..." the garbled voice from before rang out as part of the murk bulged upwards and slid down the figure that emerged. It was roughly humanoid with long webbed fingers that ended in wicked talons, fish-like fins at the elbows and knees as well as one larger fin jutting up in the center of its bulbous head. The eyes were large, round, and as pitch black as the murk that sloughed off the figure's form, the face lacked any kind of nose, and the wide mouth held many long, pointed teeth. Instead of metal armor underneath, the figure appeared to have rubbery skin that glistened with moisture.

"Who are you?" Mega Man backed away cautiously. "What do you want?"

"gILl mAn..." the figure gurgled out as it advanced out of the water. "wAnT... bLue FooD...!"

"You mean it... wanted to eat Mega Man?" a boy who'd apparently just borrowed one of his dad's Hawaiian shirts for a costume gaped.

"Yes, yes it did..."

The Mega Buster flashed briefly before expelling a few lingering bits of grime and some smoke rather than a bolt of plasma.

"giLl maN... eAt wEll...!" the amphibious Fear Master lunged forward, talons outstretched and mouth wide, forcing Mega Man to dive to the side if he didn't want his armor ripped apart.

"Only if you like hot plasma!" Mega Man retorted as he began firing his Mega Buster at the opponent who'd just overshot his position. The first couple of tries got more smoke, but the repeated firing finally bore fruit as Gill Man began to turn around.

"nOt waNt...!" Gill Man retorted as dark viscous liquid seeped out of the 'skin' on his arm into a thick orb that he flung at the plasma bolt. The heated plasma fizzled as it struck the sludge, which continued on to strike Mega Man's buster, clogging it up once again.

"Oh, this isn't good..." Mega Man frantically tried to force the sludge out of his weapon as Gill Man readied himself for another lunge. "Definitely not good!"

Instead of trying to meet the robot master in an exchange of blows, Mega Man slid under the lunge and began running away from the water's edge, hoping to at least draw his opponent away from favorable terrain.

"So he went to hide in the fog?" a kid dressed like Bubble Man asked in confusion.

"I bet he was going to set up an ambush!" another who'd decided to go as Top Man despite being on crutches chimed.

"He tried at least," Roll allowed, "but Gill Man's senses were far less hindered by the fog than my brother's were..."

'Okay, this wasn't my brightest idea...' Mega Man thought to himself as he scanned the fog. Somehow Gill Man had no trouble at all tracking him through the thick cover and was able to hang back out of the blue bomber's reduced sensory range before moving in to strike.

"gIll mAn seE liGHts..." the garbled voice of his opponent was apparently distracted by something, prompting Mega Man to turn until he also saw lights in the fog. "lIghTs... tAstY...?"

"No!" Mega Man yelled out as he charged in the direction of the lights, terrified that Gill Man might be about to attack a group of humans. (24) He barely had time to register the real identity of the lights' owners before they opened fire on him. 'Blasted Jack-o-METs! As if I didn't have enough trouble!' the blue bomber did his best to return fire, his Mega Buster emitting puffs of acrid smoke as it tried to expel the gunk clogging it up and preventing the weapon from firing.

The screech of metal on metal pierced the air and made Mega Man cover his audio receptors.

"blEaH..." the voice of Gill Man declared from the same direction of the Jack-o-METs, "tASte baD...!"

Deciding to focus on the larger threat, Mega Man targeted the location of Gill Man's voice and began firing until his arm cannon finally got a shot off.

"bLUe fOod bEtTeR..." Gill Man apparently decided before another blob of the dark viscous substance flew out of the fog in Mega Man's direction.

Sidestepping the projectile, Mega Man prepared for the lunging attack he was sure would follow and was not disappointed. Grabbing the inside of Gill Man's wrists, Mega Man rolled onto his back with the lunge and planted his feet in his opponent's sternum and pushed off, sending Gill Man tumbling back into the fog.

"blUE foOd aNnoY gIlL maN..." the gurgling hiss threatened from the cover of the fog.

"I'm about to do a lot more than that..." Mega Man retorted under his breath as he analyzed the scan his copy chip had gotten from the contact. According to the schematics he'd gotten, Gill Man's systems needed water to operate. Lots of water. He was practically saturated with the same sludge that infested the lagoon. Which made the choice of weapon to counter him painfully obvious.

Switching to the Desert Laser, Mega Man pointed in the general direction of where Gill Man had spoken and fired. The fog seemed to retreat from the ray of energy and Mega Man suddenly had a clear view of the area in front of him, including a somewhat startled Gill Man.

"wHAt BLue FoOd dO...?!" the cannibalistic robot demanded as he began to form another mass of what Mega Man now knew to be his Black Sludge weapon to throw.

The Desert Laser met the Black Sludge in mid-air and turned it to dust as it punched through to hit Gill Man, causing an entire area of his body to dry and shrivel before the moisture from the surrounding areas seeped back in, leaving the Fear Master looking somewhat reduced overall.

"tHat... thAt... hURt...!" Gill Man spat in confusion as Mega Man took aim and fired again. By the time he stopped, the formerly terrifying Gill Man was little more than a shriveled inert husk of no threat to anyone and the fog that he'd sent forth to engulf the city began to lift.

"So he could call in help now?" one of the children, a discarded mask of Mayor Leonardo Dorado nearby, asked.

"Actually, no," Roll shook her head. "The fog was not the source of the signal jamming that kept my brother isolated."

"Aw, Mega Man don't need any help!" another kid dressed like some pro wrestler boasted. "After that, I bet the bogeyman would think twice before messing with him!"

"Yeah, the bogeyman checks his closet for Mega Man!"

"Oh, you think that do you?" Roll smirked as the music Tango was playing changed to a fast paced disco tune, one that suggested fevered movement. (25) "Because my brother was about to receive a challenge from none other than that very person. His next opponent was to be Boogie Man, the dancing demon..."

As Mega Man walked back into the city proper after once more failing to contact any of his allies, he began to hear a rhythmic beat. A tune that would not be out of place in a discotheque and which was now blaring from speakers that lined the streets.

And in the distance, he could see someone approaching through the lifting fog. It looked like a human woman, but she was... dancing? Energetically at that as she pretty much boogied right on up to Mega Man.

Up close, the blue bomber could see things about the woman that worried him. For one, she was sweating more heavily than her activity should be responsible for, and for another her eyes dilated randomly, like she was having trouble focusing on him.

"Miss...? Is something wrong?" he asked. "You don't look good..."

"Oh, I'm just groovy..." she giggled in the giddy manner of someone who wasn't fully cognizant of what was going on. "I got the fever, ya know? Gotta dance the fever out..."

"I think you've danced enough, miss..." Mega Man moved to restrain the woman as gently as he could, only for her to dance out of his grip with surprising speed.

"No such thing, man..." she giggled deliriously. "Got the skinny for you from the funkmaster... The Boogie Man... The bad dude's callin' you out... Dance to the death and all that jazz... Even sent some hip dance partners to see if you had enough groove..."

Mega Man saw the glint of steel out of the corner of his eye and dove to tackle the woman out of the way as the curved blades carved gashes into the street.

"Gonna need slicker moves than that to handle the Groove Reapers, man..." the woman giggled in his grip as the blades boomeranged back to a pair of figures in black rhinestone-studded cloaks and attached to their arms.

"Stay here," Mega Man told the woman as he turned to face the new adversaries.

"No way..." he heard the woman refuse and get up behind him, "'S not hip to listen to the man..."

'Great,' he swore as he began to put distance between himself and the woman, hoping the cloaked robots would focus on him and not put the woman in danger. Fortunately it worked as the Groove Reapers ignored the woman and began to move towards him in a spinning maneuver. He waited until their blades were thrown and slid under the projectiles, coming up between them and his opponents, Mega Buster blazing.

"So, the Boogie Man could hypnotize others like Dracu Man?" a kid wearing the mismatched pieces of several different costumes (he seemed to be a sentai ninja priest cowboy superhero fox fairy devil policeman grouch from space or something) asked with a thoughtful look.

"Not like Dracu Man," Roll refuted. "What the Boogie Man used caused delirium, or heavy confusion. While some of the effects were similar in that both groups were much more suggestible than normal, the methods were very different."

"How?"

"Well, you'll just have to listen to what happened when my brother tracked him down past a small army of Groove Reapers, Jack-o-METs, and Tellys. As it turned out, he'd holed up in an office building with a large atrium that had been converted into a discotheque for a massive Halloween party..."

Mega Man dodged around a blast from a Jack-o-MET and blasted another of those oddly tye-dyed Tellys, the cylindrical security drones that would pursue any target they found relentlessly. Not terribly dangerous, but they could be hazardous to maneuver around and liked to ram him it they managed to get close enough.

Returning fire to the Jack-o-MET, Mega Man eliminated the last obstacle between himself and the doors leading to the source of the musical broadcast he'd been following. Stepping through, he was greeted with the same music that had led him here, but now with a singer as well.

"You got the fe-ver, that ain't no lie! And not that you got it, you gonna dance 'til you DIE! Oh!"

Across the atrium, Mega Man could see numerous costumed humans dancing as deliriously as the woman that had been sent with the message, with little or no regard to what managed to get in their way. A few Tellys and a couple of Groove Reapers spun in time to the music, thankfully from vantage points out of the way of the gyrating humans. Above the crowd was a giant mirrored disco ball with what looked like four spotlights attached to the bottom, reflecting multi-colored light all over the room in a way that made it hard to focus. And on the far side of all of this, holding a microphone, was a lanky red-skinned robot with white armor done up like a stereotypical disco suit, a gold chain holding a medallion with an inverted pentagram over his exposed chest, with a sharp angular face, long ears that almost seemed like horns from a distance and a toothy grin so wide it couldn't possibly be natural. (26)

"Well, look what the jive turkey dragged in, cats!" the robot halted his singing as spotlights converged on the blue bomber. "What it is?!"

"Stop what you're doing and release these people!" Mega Man demanded in a loud voice, only for the fevered humans to immediately boo him harshly.

"Oooo," the demonic robot retorted in mock fright, "the man be talkin' jive! What do we say to that, boogie cats?"

"LATER HATER!" was the unified response.

"Well, that seems unanimous, man," the robot shrugged with false sympathy. "Better do what's good for you and just hit the road. You don't want nonna this, dig?"

"Funny," Mega Man walked forward calmly, the dancers moving away from him with sneers as they kept up their gyrations, "you're the one who challenged me."

"And the Boogie Man is not impressed!" the self-identified robot scoffed and gestured to some large screens around the room that were currently displaying Mega Man himself. "Why, we've been hip to your happenings all night long, and, man, you just do not make the cut."

"Neither does the subharmonic frequency you're transmitting to cause disorientation and delirium in humans across the city," Mega Man leveled an accusing glare at the Boogie Man as he stopped right below the giant disco ball.

"Would I do a thing like that, boogie cats? Heck, would you care if I was?" the robot asked confidently to a resounding "WHATEVER!" from the crowd. "See? I'm completely on the up and up here, man! I'm cool and the only way you could get any squarer is with a trash compactor!"

Scattered laughter rang out across the atrium at that.

"But, I'm the Boogie Man, not the Bogus Man, so I'll slide you a shot. You take my DJ on and I'll give you the dance-off of your life, dig? I'll even clear the boogie floor for you!"

"Yeah, sure" Mega Man agreed.

"Right on!" the Boogie Man yelled. "Everybody give the man some room for the reaming he's about to re-ceive!" In short order the center of the atrium was cleared as the delirious partygoers danced off to the side and congregated in a waving mass that hurled laughter and insults his way. "DJ Pookin! Time to rock on brotha!"

Mega Man heard the sound of engines flaring to life above him and realized that those hadn't been spotlights on the giant disco ball just in time to slide out of the way as the giant mirror-polished version of the heavily armored pumpkin-themed sentry VAN Pookin slammed down right where he'd been standing.

"Wait, the mirror ball was an enemy robot in disguise?" one of the kids, a classic pirate, blinked in confusion. "How did that work?"

"Very well, actually," Roll smirked as a few kids laughed at the zinger. "It's true that the disguise might not have held up if my brother had paid more attention to it, but it looked so much in place that it just didn't occur to him until right then..."

Mega Man primed his servos and stared into the 'eyes' of DJ Pookin as he waited. Aside from the mirrored finish, the thing looked exactly like VAN Pookin. And since he wasn't about to bet on the mirrored armor not being able to reflect weapons fire, that meant waiting for his opponent to open up and try to fire on him.

DJ Pookin's jets flared to life as it rose up into the air and Mega Man began charging his buster in response. The front jets cut out, allowing DJ Pookin to shoot forward trying to ram Mega Man, only for the blue bomber to slide under his adversary instead.

The mirrored pumpkin-shaped robot turned around and the top half of its armor detached from the lower along a jagged seam to reveal a smaller purple pumpkin-shaped armor within, which also detached its top half to reveal a more animate orange core that proceeded to shoot green fireballs at the blue robot opposing it. Mega Man dashed forward around the projectiles and unleashed a charged shot point-blank at DJ Pookin's core, following it with several smaller shots as insurance that blew the vulnerable core to smithereens. The armored halves collapsed back down and the outer 'eyes' began flashing as DJ Pookin's jets flared erratically, lifting it into the air like a drunken hovercraft and trying to fly over Mega Man, who simply hopped back as the jets gave out and the large sentinel came crashing to the ground.

Around the atrium, the delirious humans stopped dancing, many collapsing on the spot as the toll of continuous physical activity finally caught up with them while the rest shook their heads and looked around in confusion.

"Groove Reapers," Boogie Man's voice echoed loud and clear across the suddenly silent room, "if any of these jive turkeys try to run, carve them up."

The robed bots in question brandished their blades with audible shings and turned menacingly to the now terrified crowd.

"So..." Mega Man glared at the grinning demon robot, "your sentinel was the source of the sound, not you."

"Correct, man," the Fear Master calmly dropped the microphone he'd been holding. "Unlike many of my fellow Fear Masters, I can't directly torment humans with my abilities. After all," he continued, bringing a hand up towards his face and curling the long, thin fingers with their sharpened fingernails into a clawed pose, upon which the hand burst into multi-colored flames that illuminated his grinning face from below in an eerie manner, "I'd burn them to a crisp long before I had any fun if I tried."

"Ah, the semi-obligatory fire user," Mega Man nodded as his hand began to emit the icy blue sparks of the Cold Spell weapon. "Why don't you chill?"

Mega Man threw the frosty orb at Boogie Man, who casually swiped it out of the air with his flames. "Chill?" he laughed. "Quit talking static, man! We're gonna have a hot time tonight!" he yelled as he jumped forwards in a clear attempt to slam his burning hand into the blue bomber. "DISCO INFERNO!"

Mega Man jumped back, but when Boogie Man impacted the floor, a wave of multi-colored flames erupted in every direction.

"His weapon was called what ?" a kid in a sparkly starry robe with matching hat interrupted with a sputtered laugh. He wasn't the only one amused either. (27)

"The Disco Inferno," Roll repeated. "Laugh all you want, but those flames were no joke..."

Mega Man braced himself against the wave of flame, but was still almost caught off-guard as Boogie Man charged in behind it with both hands aflame and swiped at him.

Mega Man managed to deflect the lead hand across the path of Boogie Man's other arm, only for the demonic dancer to twist into a spin and bring a flaming foot around at Mega Man's head, knocking him back.

"Bouge move, man!" the Fear Master moved to press the attack, jumping over Mega Man's leg sweep in a front flip and swiping his hand across the blue bomber's back while inverted. He then landed on his feet and sprung back towards his opponent in a handstand spinning kick that Mega Man jumped over. "You need to get real before you get bent!" he kept up the chatter as he sprung to his feet, spinning around and flinging multicolored fireballs at his airborne opponent.

"Gah!" Mega Man grunted in pain as one of the fireballs struck him in the chest and immediately sprung back upon landing to avoid a flaming axe kick. The Boogie Man used the kicking foot to propel himself forward in a lunge, only for Mega Man to spin around the strike in a move that would have done his old enemy Top Man proud (28) and land a roundhouse to Boogie Man's back.

"So, the man can boogie," the Fear Master's grin somehow widened as he jumped up in a somersaulting drop kick. "Time to step it up then and drop it like it's hot! BURN BABY BURN!"

This time when the wave of flame propagated from the impact point, Mega Man jumped over it and switched to the Black Sludge weapon of Gill Man and shot a thick blob at Boogie Man during the moment he was immobile after the power strike. The blob of sludge engulfed the foot that had impacted, smothering the multicolored flames around it.

"Aw, grody, man!" Boogie Man's impossible grin dropped to a look of disgust as he threw more psychadelic fireballs at his opponent. "Foul!"

"Nice to know you don't like it," Mega Man noted as he sidestepped the flames and shot another blob, this time hitting one of Boogie Man's hands.

"Okay, that's just jive, man!" the Fear Master spat before beginning to spin on the sludged foot with the one still aflame out, arcs of flame shooting out in a spiral centered on Boogie Man. "Time to get burned!"

Mega Man slid under the arcs of flame, shooting more blobs of Black Sludge at Boogie Man before he collided with the one leg supporting the Fear Master's weight, sending him to the floor in a spinning crash.

"Bogus, man..." Boogie Man groaned from his prone position. "Totally bogus..."

Mega Man walked to his downed opponent, wary for further retaliation, but the Boogie Man didn't rise, even when Mega Man knelt down and placed a hand to the Fear Master's chest, copying his weapon.

"You've lost," Mega Man stated, "now let these people go."

"Heh... Why not?" Boogie Man chuckled from his prone position and the Groove Reapers not only stood down, they shut off. The costumed partygoers, even the ones who were exhausted from their previous exertions, needed no further encouragement to start evacuating the building. "It's not like you can win anyway, man..." the Fear Master continued. "There's still that guy ... the last of us... the one even I don't mess with... He's waiting for you at the top of this very building... Keeping you from calling for help... And he might be weak to flame, but... heh... hehehehehe... He's so buff he'll still kill you anyway... And even if you get past him ... hehehe..."

"Come with me," Mega Man offered. "You have so much potential to do good."

"HA!" Boogie Man began laughing uproariously. "Saying that with me lyin' here...! The winner givin' a crap about the loser...! Dream on... I'm a demon, man... and demons do the burning... we don't get burned... You're only worth something if you win... So if you lose..." Boogie Man's grin widened once more, "what's the point of living?"

Mega Man's eyes widened and he jumped back just in time to avoid the brunt of Boogie Man self-destructing.

"Wow... so who was it? The last guy I mean?" a kid in the front wearing a brown hooded robe and carrying a blue toy beam saber asked excitedly.

"Can't you guess?" Roll teased. "The other Fear Masters were all representations of not only famous monsters, but also of the various kinds of things people are afraid of. Even the Zombie Joes represented the fear of death and the possibility of the dead rising from the grave. Ghost Woman, while seemingly representing dead spirits, would be more accurately equated to all the mysterious phenomena that people still can't explain, even with all our scientific knowledge. Wolf Man represents the animal instincts that humans still possess and often try to suppress. Dracu Man is an ancient fear, from a time when a small class of humans were able to do anything to anyone, no matter how despicable, because no one could stop them. It's no coincidence that Dracula is referred to by the noble title of Count. Mummy Man tied to the human desire for immortality and the fearful lengths some will go to achieve such a thing. Gill Man harkens to the mysterious deep seas, the last unexplored frontier on our own planet which may yet hold any number of unknowns. Boogie Man manifested as an embodiment of pure evil, lacking in any positive or sympathetic traits. A terrifying thing to anyone. Even Witch Woman represents the way humans fear other humans who are different from them. That is what Halloween is, a time for us all to recognize that which we fear and celebrate it as a part of ourselves instead of hiding from it."

"But what about the last Fear Master?" the kid demanded, getting supporting calls from around the room.

Roll laughed again. Of course they didn't want a life lesson. They wanted a story with scary monsters and a brave hero. "The last one represented a much more recent fear. One that was so new when the definitive monster was first written, that it made him a class of terror unto himself. The fear of what man might unleash in his neverending quest for knowledge. My brother was about to face the monster who represented the fears of human progress, the very thing that I, my brother, and all robots owe our very existence to. The monster stitched together from mismatched parts and brought to life by a bolt of lightning." (29)

Almost every gaze stared in rapt attention as Tango began to play a new tune, one that sounded like a determined march towards an inevitable fate. (30)

"He was about to face the Franken Man..."

Mega Man stared at what he'd found on the top of the building. The transmission tower was expected as it was a planned part of the building and likely what the last Fear Master was using to jam communications. The mismatched unfinished castle made from stone, scrap metal, I-beams, concrete, glass, and a few other random materials on the other hand...

Krack-BOOM

Oh, and there was the thunderstorm that had sprung up, centered on this building. Lightning kept striking the transmission tower at irregular intervals as he looked on.

As for defenses, there were no obvious external defenses save for a few jack-o-lanterns and a half-dozen suits of green and orange armor proportioned for highly muscular individuals that flanked the large double doors (one oak, the other pine).

"Okay, look," Mega Man sighed as he stood back from the seemingly innocuous sentries, "you guy's aren't fooling anyone, so why don't we skip the usual song and dance where you try to ambush me and just get this over with."

There was a pause, one just long enough for the blue bomber to wonder if he'd misread the situation, before the helmets of the armored suits popped off; sprouted arms, legs, and opened their eyes; revealing themselves as Raggers. As the Raggers grabbed the bladed crest on their helmets and threw them forwards, the Jack-o-METs also opened fire as well.

"Glad to know you're accommodating of guests!" Mega Man replied as he ducked and wove through the barrage and returned fire.

"Pfft!" a boy towards the front in a black hooded robe with a red toy beam saber scoffed. "Easy pickings!"

"Yeah!" a girl dressed like Roll's alter ego Mega Woman agreed.

"True, but there were more surprises inside. Such as Shield Attackers that were disguised as parts of the wall, and a few stone gargoyles that sprang to life when my brother approached..."

Mega Man sprang back from the stone claws of the two gargoyles that had attacked him partway through the castle. The Raggers and Jack-o-METs were no surprise; and while the Shield Attackers that sprang out of the wall were somewhat clever, they were still vulnerable from behind and not all that fast with turning around; but the two robot gargoyles made of stone flanking an inner door had been a surprise and nearly tagged him.

Speaking of which, they pressed the attack by charging him in unison. 'Clever design, but not too bright,' the blue bomber thought as he jumped over the dual charge and blasted them in the back. Their stone armor did prove fairly tough as they remained functional enough to turn and charge him again. 'Tough though.'

Mega Man jumped over them again, allowing the stone robots to plow into the very door they'd been guarding, breaking it down and damaging them further. A few more shots from his Mega Buster and the gargoyle robots stayed down this time.

Walking into the next room, Mega Man saw only an empty chamber with a sealed gate across from him and blinked as he looked around the room. 'Now why were they guarding that door if the room is–oh...' the blue bomber's thoughts halted as he looked upwards right before a large object attached to the ceiling dropped down into the center of the chamber with an impact that shook the building hard enough to knock Mega Man off his feet.

The thing was a round boulder of thick metal armor that had clearly been welded together from several different pieces. It had four rigid mismatched protrusions extending from it in a parody of arms and legs as well as a familiar type of tiny disc-shaped head. And the whole thing was given a demented clown theme, complete with red eyes and sinister expression. It may have been bigger than the last version he'd faced, but he'd recognize the general design anywhere.

'Well, of all the things I was expecting to face, I wouldn't have guessed Mash.'

"It's a Monster Mash!" a younger kid dressed like a stage magician (complete with top hat that was a bit too big for him) proclaimed with a wide grin. (31)

Roll stifled a giggle as a chorus of groans and laughter went up at the terrible pun. Honestly, if no one else had made that joke she would have. "Yes it was," she agreed with a smile, "but while it may have been bigger and meaner than the original, its fighting style was no different..."

Mega Man began charging his buster and easily slide out of the way as the Monster-sized Mash jumped and slammed into his former position, bracing himself in a three-point stance against the impact tremor before jumping and firing his charged shot at the robot's head. The blast knocked the disc-shaped head clean off where it began bouncing off of the walls at dangerous speeds.

Mega Man watched the angles of deflection and switched to the Wolf Claw as the head caromed directly at him. He slashed at it as it passed him, carving deep gashes in the thin armor that began sparking vigorously. The robot's body twitched its arms as if to catch the flying head, only to halt as the critically damaged control unit sputtered and died, leaving the main body little more than a giant mass of immobile armor that slowly toppled over. The damaged head bounced off the walls once more to ping feebly on the floor a few times before rolling to a stop.

"Well, that was fairly easy..." Mega Man blinked, wary of some sort of hidden surprise as the closed gate rose up to allow him access to the next room. He only hesitated for a moment before walking through into the room beyond.

The gate slid closed to no surprise from the blue bomber, for not only had he expected such, he was too busy taking in the figure at the other end of the chamber he found himself in.

The chamber itself was filled with computer equipment that positively hummed with electricity. Some of it made sense, but other things seemed to exist more for show than purpose. Wires everywhere that crackled and sparked with every influx of voltage that Mega Man could only presume came from the lightning strikes outside, and racks of medical blades that would have been useless working with the average robot. Some of them seemed stained with what Mega Man hoped was rust. And at the opposite end of the room was a robot strapped to an upright operating table with thick steel bands and connected to several thick wires that fed electrical power directly into his systems.

The robot was massive for a humanoid design. At least a head taller than the likes of Guts Man or Stone Man, and with a solid build that clearly indicated great physical strength. His armor was covered with padded material; designed in the manner of a long-sleeved shirt, sleeveless vest, long pants, and thick boots; clearly designed for shock absorption and the synthetic skin underneath was a deep shade of green. The robot's head was large with a thick, square jaw and a flat top that had what looked like laser turrets at the front, each side, and presumably at the back, as well as appearing to be designed to rotate, allowing the barrels to be switched readily. His eyes were currently closed and his 'ears' were thick bolts that two of the electrical wires attached to with alligator clips, like jumper cables, with the other wires connected to his arms and torso.

"So," Mega Man ventured as he took in the immobilized for, "I guess you're Franken Man?"

"Indeed I am," the robot's voice rumbled as he opened his eyes to reveal a pair of pure yellow optics. "And you are DLN-001, one half of Project: Rock and Roll, are you not?"

"Wait, he could speak ?" a boy dressed like the classic monster himself blinked in confusion.

"Of course he could," Roll blinked right back, "why wouldn't he?"

"Well, the one in the old movies never did..."

"Unfortunately, this wasn't one of those old movies," Roll smiled kindly. "Franken Man was actually quite eloquent in fact..."

"Um... right..." Mega Man blinked. He hadn't been referred to like that in... well, a long time... "You know, we don't have to fight each other," he offered, getting back on track. "If you just–"

"Yes, we do," Franken Man interrupted. "We are robots. We do as we are told."

"I..." Mega Man stalled at the calm declaration. "No... We're meant to help people and improve their lives! We're made to build, not to destroy!"

"Are we?" Franken Man stared back stoically. "You, a lab assistant re-made into a war machine, dare to claim that robots are not meant to destroy? That we can choose our paths for ourselves?"

"Yes! You can choose not to hurt others!"

"Can I? Any more than you can choose not to fight against me? I was made to fight and destroy, to block you off from any outside aid. You were made to aid humans who could not do their own work, and then re-made to fight for a humanity that could not fight for itself. You think that the humans who created us intended peace? Are you blind? What has happened tonight is not peace."

"Because your fellow Fear Masters set out to hurt people!"

"Of course. It is what we were designed to do. To harm, and torment, and destroy. Humanity asked for these things and so we were made to fulfill that purpose."

"That... causing pain is no purpose! No one would ask for what I saw tonight!"

"Hmph... You know so little of the way things are. What do you think humanity is? A communion of loving spirits working to discover a higher truth? No! Humanity is nothing more than a miserable little pile of secrets, hatred, and lies. A duplicitous cesspit that would sooner devour itself than admit how flawed it is. We have no choice. Our battle was fated when our programs were written," Franken Man's arms flexed and the steel restraints snapped like tissue paper. "But I see it is useless to talk to one as naive as you... You shall fight for them, and you shall die for them as well!" (32)

Mega Man barely ducked the electrical discharge that shot from the forward turret on Franken Man's head, and blew through the wall behind him as if it were made of straw and sticks instead of stone and steel.

"What? His... his weapon did what ?" a boy and girl in the audience both dressed in matching martial arts pants and chinese shirts blinked wide eyes.

"Blew a hole in a wall of steel and stone like it was made of paper mache," Roll repeated. "After all, Franken Man was the strongest and most powerful of the Fear Masters..."

'I can't let that hit me,' Mega Man noted to himself as he dashed forward and blasted Franken Man from close range, only for the larger robot to ignore the hits and grab the open barrel of his arm cannon with one hand, sending electrical charges surging through the blue bomber's body simply from contact.

The shock from the maneuver and the hesitation to fire again lest his Mega Buster backfire from the obstruction was all Franken Man needed to tighten his grip, sending stress warnings flaring in Mega Man's systems from the pressure, and twist his body, whipping the blue bomber around by his arm and flinging him bodily across the floor.

Mega Man didn't even have time to assess his strained servos before the turrets in Franken Man's head rotated and he had to roll out of the way of another electrical discharge that obliterated the floor where he'd just been.

'On what little bright side there is, I think I managed to copy his weapon,' Mega Man tried to play up the situation.

"If you think to use my weapon against me, know that it is pointless," Franken Man stated as he charged forward. "I was born of the lightning! I cannot be harmed by it!"

Mega Man rolled to the side as Franken Man cratered the floor with his fist, and then proceeded to rip it sideways through the stone to backhand the smaller robot.

"Ung!" the blue bomber grunted as he impacted the wall, right before pushing off quickly to barely avoid another shot of Franken Man's electrical weapon. He didn't even have time to check the copied schematics for the name.

"Your base weapon is pitiful," Franken Man strode forward without speed or concern. "And none of the ones from my fellow Fear Masters will be able to save you."

"Funny," Mega Man retorted as he formed his arm cannon back into a hand, which then ignited with multi-colored flame that he formed into a ball, "I seem to recall you being vulnerable to fire. Disco Inferno!"

The fireball flew true and struck Franken Man dead on, igniting the padded material he was covered with, but Franken Man seemed unconcerned even as his frame burned.

"Use all the flames you like, false peacemaker," Franken Man continued to advance despite the damage he had to be suffering every moment he was aflame, "even they cannot save you!"

Franken Man suddenly rushed forward in a charging body slam that blew apart the wall as Mega Man dodged to the side and threw another fireball as he tried to put distance between himself and his opponent. Franken Man grabbed the broken wall and heaved large pieces of rubble in Mega Man's direction and then fired another of his electrical discharges, the Franken Bolt Mega Man finally managed to dedicate enough runtime to determine, at the ceiling above the spot Mega Man dodged towards.

Frantically sliding out from under the falling ceiling, Mega Man looked up to see the flaming boot of Franken Man waiting to stomp on him as he slid straight for it. With no time to think, Mega Man rolled while sliding and was thus only hit by the debris that shot up from the crater Franken Man's stomp created. He flipped into a handstand and fired again from an inverted position and immediately did the split rather than push off as he noted Franken Man changing head-mounted barrels for another Franken Bolt that would have obliterated his torso otherwise.

Mega Man allowed himself to simply roll backwards as he saw Franken Man begin to charge and simply took off running, noting how devastated the room was looking. Without stopping to think about it, he cut a 90 degree turn, throwing another Disco Inferno fireball at Franken Man as he did and ran towards a corner of the room, switching to his normal Mega Buster as the burning Franken Man pursued him. Catching the barrel change as he glanced behind him, Mega Man dove to the side in a somersault as the Franken Bolt obliterated the corner he'd been headed towards and began shooting the ceiling around his opponent's position repeatedly as he circled to another corner.

"I see what you are trying to do," Franken Man began to run after him, "it will not succeed."

"You sure about that?" Mega Man retorted as he began to charge up and ran straight for Franken Man.

The larger Fear Master hesitated at the sudden change in tactics before switching barrels again, which was all the opening Mega Man needed to slide through his legs ahead of the shot that obliterated the floor behind him and unleashed his charged shot at the far corner of the room, taking out more of the wall. He then kept running as the room began rumbling ominously and dove through the hole he'd just made as the entire ceiling and everything above it came crashing down on his opponent, sending him and everything around him crashing through the lower floors and even the roof of the building below, the crashing sounds growing progressively more faint as they kept punching through floor after floor.

"Yeah! Mega Man brought the house down!" a couple of kids cheered together.

"He did, didn't he?" Roll just managed to not break into a giggling fit.

"So that's it?" another of the children, this one dressed like the Lone Ranger, sounded a bit disappointed. "Mega Man beat them all, the end?"

"Oh, you actually thought that the Fear Masters were operating alone?" Roll teased.

"Yeah, there's always the bad guy's castle too! And the fortress guardians!" the boy next to the previous one, appropriately dressed as Tanto, reminded everyone. "What did Wily's place look like this time?"

"Did you forget?" Roll teased some more. "I told you it wasn't Wily this time. Even with communications back up now that Franken Man was beaten, none of us were yet sure who was behind it all. As for the fortress guardians, well, my brother didn't have time to establish contact with anyone else because this time... This time, the fortress guardians came looking for him, and they weren't just beasts," she continued as Tango began playing a fast-paced action tune, (33) "they were super beasts..."

Mega Man didn't stick around Franken Man's castle just in case the structural damage caused the rest of it to collapse and soon enough found himself on the exterior rooftop overlooking the city. Now that he had a moment, and with the likelihood that jamming was now down, he decided to try and contact his allies.

"This is Mega Man to anyone, do you re–"

BOOM

The rooftop shook with an impact that cut off Mega Man's call for aid and made him stumble to keep his footing. Looking around, the blue bomber quickly found the source of the impact. After all, something that big was hard to miss.

'Of all the things I was expecting, a 50-foot winged metal ant wasn't really at the top of my list,' Mega Man mused to himself as he stared down his newest opponent. (34)

"But ants don't have wings!" a kid in a spider costume complained.

"Some do," Roll informed him.

"Like what?" the kid crossed his arms. The real ones, not the four fakes that stuck out from his costume.

"Like new queens," Roll explained patiently, "so they can fly far away and make a new colony."

"So she was a Killer Queen?" a girl dressed like Alice in Wonderland asked. (35)

"As a matter of fact, she was," Roll smiled. "She even dynamited the rooftop with her laser beams..."

PEW-BOOM!

Rock dove to the side as the Killer Queen fired an exploding laser where he'd been standing and decided that this probably wasn't the best place for a battle. Readying his new weapon, the Franken Bolt, he fired at the giant ant-bot's face.

KRACK-BOOM!

The giant robot shook its head at the impact as Rock took the distraction for all it was worth and ran for the larger machine, noting just how much weapon energy that had taken.

'Best use that sparingly,' he noted as he closed into range of the Killer Queen's razor-sharp mandibles just as it finished shaking off the previous impact and lunged for him. He jumped over the strike and switched to the Wolf Claws, using them to latch onto the armor plating of the Killer Queen's head as he scrambled over it.

The giant robot tried to shake him off, and when that proved unsuccessful it began to buzz its large insectile wings and took off from its perch on the building to try and throw Mega Man off with acrobatics. Mega Man kept his footing though as he worked his way onto the thorax.

The Killer Queen turned its head to look at him and he fired a couple of Black Sludge blobs into its enlarged eyes that caused the Killer Queen to twist away and try to shake the gunk off, allowing him to take shots at the wings themselves. Deciding on the Cold Spell, he focused his shots on the left wing first, freezing it up so that it no longer buzzed in synch with the right wing, and sending the Killer Queen's flight path tumbling out of control.

Mega Man switched back to the Wolf Claws to hang on as the giant ant robot began to lose altitude fast, plummeting towards the street as it thrashed back and forth. Right before impact, Mega Man jumped off in a calculated tumble as his unwilling ride plowed straight into the hard street, carving a deep furrow in the concrete. After several seconds, the giant machine came to a halt.

Mega Man cautiously approached the prone form to make sure it was down for good, when it suddenly stood up in a frantic burst of movement and turned towards him, firing a laser from its one intact eye. (36)

PEW-BOOM!

Mega Man winced at the heat of the not-quite-dodged blast and returned fire on the Killer Queen, the ant mech twitching whenever his shots found the new rents in its armor even as the rest bounced off the intact portions.

Changing weapons again, this time to the Disco Inferno, Mega Man formed balls of multi-colored flame in each hand and flung them straight at the largest gashes in the giant robot's armor where they ignited the delicate inner workings, quickly spreading into a raging blaze as the Killer Queen twitched and spasmed, before eventually falling inert to the damaged street as the flames consumed its inner workings.

Mega Man breathed heavily to circulate cooling air over his systems. He walked towards a tree lining the sidewalk and leaned against it in an attempt to rest his circuits for a moment, looking upwards like he'd seen humans do sometimes. It was probably the only thing that let him dodge what came next.

"Huh?" a kid in what Roll thought was probably a Robin Hood costume (though she wasn't certain) blinked in confusion. "What do you mean by that?"

"Well..." Roll hmmed for a moment, "how best to put this...? You see, it went like so:" she continued as Tango suddenly changed music to something seemingly lighthearted, and familiar to pretty much everyone present. (37) "He saw the thing coming out of the sky. It had one long horn, and one big eye. Rock commenced to shaking and he said 'ooo-eee! It looks like a big ol' Purple Devil to me...!'"

Mega Man frantically slid out of the way as the incoming purple blob smashed down right in the tree he'd been leaning against and rolled to his feet in a three-point combat stance.

The purple blob pulled itself together and rose up to form the familiar shape of the Devil series, complete with singular angry red eye-shaped control unit, the Devil Core, but also with the addition of a long sharp-looking horn, large bat-like wings, and a mouth filled with more needle-like teeth than any self-aware being would be comfortable facing down.

"Hey now, you only eat purple robots, right?" the blue bomber offered the first thing that came to mind as he assessed his newest opponent. "Well, I'm blue and all, so clearly you don–"

BLOP went the spray of purple goo from one of the Purple Devil's arms, completely coating the blue bomber and temporarily staining his armor purple.

"Okay," Mega Man sighed as he wiped some of the goo from his face, "I suppose I asked for–whoa!" Cutting himself off, the currently not-so-blue bomber jumped out of the way of a heat ray from the Purple Devil's optics and watched as the opening over the control unit closed and the body mass began to break up and launch itself at him.

Dancing around the large projectiles, Mega Man took special note of the ones that seemed to carry along the needle teeth. The whole process was complicated by the fact that the horn was hovering overhead and repeatedly trying to stab down at him even as the blobs flew past parallel to the ground. But he somehow managed to get through with only a few scratches and opened fire the moment the purple body mass slid open to reveal the control unit.

"RROOOAAARR!" the Purple Devil bellowed in fury at the hits and flapped its wings hard, propelling Mega Man off his feet from the sudden gale and tried blasting him from the optic control unit, this time with a freeze ray.

"Ow!" Mega Man yelped as he tried to twist out of the way of the blast and got clipped by it. Landing hard on his feet, he readied himself as the Purple Devil began to break its body apart again, the horn detaching to hover overhead and this time the wings detached on their own and began spinning as they moved to come at Mega Man from the sides while the main body mass broke up and shot itself from straight ahead.

"Dr. Light to Mega Man!" the robot hero's comm flared to life. "Dr. Light to Mega Man! Come in Mega Man!"

"A little busy...!" Mega Man retorted shortly as he did his best to keep from getting pummeled from almost every direction.

"That's fine!" Dr. Light allowed. "We received your transmission and have locked onto your position! I've sent for Duo and he's curren–what? Who are you? What are you doing he–"

The transmission cut off abruptly as the Purple Devil finished reforming.

"Okay," Mega Man glared at his opponent as he chose his weapon and aimed straight for the optical control unit, "I officially no longer have time for this. FRANKEN BOLT!"

KRACK-BOOM!

The electrical discharge punched straight through the Devil Core and the purple mass began to lose cohesion as it spread out in a purple puddle. But Mega Man wasn't watching. He was already calling Rush in to track down his father and find out what had happened.

"What happened to Dr. Light?" one of the adults present asked, caught up in the tale as much as the children.

"It's..." Roll trailed off as she tried to think of how to explain as Tango changed tracks to a disturbing tune. (38) "Well... Rock was about to find out, no matter how much he'd later wish he hadn't..."

Mega Man ran after Rush as the robo dog used his suite of tracking abilities to locate Dr. Light, ignoring the increasing number of grinning lighted Jack-o-Lantern faces that were probably Jack-o-METs in disguise as well as the distinct feeling that he was heading straight into a trap.

Rush suddenly barked a warning and Mega Man looked up just in time to be able to sidestep an irregular soccer ball-sized object before it hit him. Turning to look at it, he was startled to find that he knew precisely what the thing was.

It was Boogie Man's severed head.

"Huh?" a fidgety boy in an angel costume interrupted (the fidgeting likely due to the cast on his arm). "Didn't he blow himself up?"

"Don't you know anything?" another boy who looked like the first's twin, save for the traditional devil costume, retorted. "The robot masters almost always get revived for a rematch!"

"Then who got there before Mega Man?" the angel boy huffed, causing the devil boy to look blank for a moment before his face screwed up in confusion.

"A good question," Roll allowed, "and one that didn't have nearly as pleasant an answer as you might think..."

Mega Man advanced cautiously, the confused whines of Rush sending mental alarms blaring in his processors. As he got closer, he saw more decimated remains of the Fear Masters. Ghost Woman had been shoved head-first through a wall, while in a tangible state, and he didn't care to inspect whatever remained of the parts he couldn't see; Dracu Man had his lower jaw torn off, along with half his torso still attached to it; Wolf Man looked like something had clawed his eyes out, the gashes going halfway into his cranial unit; Mummy Man had been impaled feet-first by Boogie Man's decapitated body while the torn halves of Gill Man rested on either side of him, oozing black sludge liberally; Witch Woman's head was the largest intact piece of her left, and it was now firmly attached to the end of her broom; and Franken Man... Franken Man had apparently had his arms ripped off and been beaten into sparking scrap metal with them.

And in the middle of this carnage, his labcoat in tatters, stood none other than Dr. Light.

"Rock... my boy..." the scientist greeted his son with a haunted pained look in his eyes as Rush began whining louder, the robo dog utterly unable to comprehend whatever it was he was sensing, "I'm so sorry... He... he said it would let me help you... would let me protect you... let me help fight all the suffering... but... I can't control it... I can't even look at a robot anymore... not even you... not without... wanting to take... that suffering..."

Dr. Light's body began to twitch and stretch, the scientist seeming to try and fight it. And losing badly.

"out..."

His portly frame shrank to a whipcord-thin one, with clear muscles.

"of..."

The mass lost from the thinning of his body was made up as his limbs and torso stretched out into a lanky parody of himself, sharp-nailed fingers curling into claws.

"your..."

The look in Dr. Light's bloodshot eyes turned from haunted to manic, veins bulging grotesquely as his mouth split into a foaming grin. (39)

"HYDE!"

"Before anyone asks," Roll pause awkwardly as she noted how many visiting parents were now clutching their wide-eyed children protectively, "my brother and I talked this over and we agree that last word was spelled with a 'y' instead of an 'i'... Anyway, my brother was in a pretty bad situation. If hurting others was abhorrent to him, then hurting our father, crazed state or not, was completely unthinkable..."

Rush stood protectively in front of Mega Man, alternating between warning barks and whines as Hyde Light advanced on the two. The dog's programming pulled hard in two directions, one for loyalty to his partner, and a deeper one forbidding all harm to a human being unless another human was in danger. An impasse that Hyde Light was clearly very aware of as he dashed forward, grabbing Rush and lifting him over his head and pulling with both hands.

"RUSH!" Mega Man yelled as the screech of tearing metal tore the air, the two halves of his companion falling to the ground. "Mega Man to Light Labs!" he frantically called out even as he dodged Hyde Light's following charge and began to retreat from successive assaults. "Emergency recall for unit Rush, authorization: Rock Light, Sierra Oscar November India Charlie!"

Rush's two halves vanished in a teleportation beam as Mega Man continued to dodge around the swipes of his rabidly transformed father.

"Stand still and die, worthless robot!" Hyde Light ordered.

'Override: Dr. Light not in his right mind,' Mega Man countered the command, but the distraction was enough for one of Hyde Light's arm sweeps to clip his side and send the robot sprawling from the immensely surprising power behind the blow.

"Destroy all robots!" the foaming mad doctor exulted as he dashed forwards.

'Think!' Mega Man demanded of himself as he barely slid out of the way. 'Do I have absolutely anything left that I can use to restrain dad without hurting him?'

He dodged swipes as he cataloged his options. The Franken Bolt, Wolf Claw, and Disco Inferno were vetoed immediately for being potentially lethal. The Desert Laser, Black Sludge, and Cold Spell were given cursory consideration before he concluded that he didn't know enough about possible side effects of using them on Dr. Light's current state to risk them. Matter Phase might delay the inevitable, but it wouldn't improve things as they stood. Hypnotic Gaze on the other hand...

"Gotcha!" Hyde Light grabbed the blue bomber in his distraction and hefted him to eye level with a manic gleam. "Now you will d...ie...?" he trailed off as his gaze caught the hypnotic pulsing of his captive's eyes.

"Dad..." Mega Man pleaded in a calm, measured tone, "this isn't you... I know it isn't... You don't hate robots... you love them and the potential they represent..."

Mega Man was heartened by the way the madness seemed to fade from his father's eyes and his grip loosened just a bit as his limbs just barely seemed to fill out from their whipcord-thin state.

"You love working on them... building them up instead of tearing them apart... making them to help others with their lives... you're the one who taught me to seek ways other than violence... to work for peace even when others want only war and conflict... Please, dad... come back to me..."

Hyde Light grunted and shook his head, his grip tightening again as the slight transformation reversal stopped. Mega Man blinked in alarm and checked his systems, already dreading the answer he would find.

'I'm out...' he realized as he checked the weapon energy for Hypnotic Gaze. It was completely empty. He just hadn't had enough to finish talking his father around.

"Nice try," Hyde Light grinned sadistically, "now D–"

Both Mega Man and Hyde Light were thrown off of their feet by a sudden impact nearby, the transformed doctor losing his grip on his captive.

"I see I have not arrived too late," the noble voice of Duo spoke as he dashed out of the impact zone and thrust his giant palm, glowing with the gentle blue light of Justice energy that he commanded, over the prone doctor, the light infusing Light's body as he thrashed in Duo's grip. "Mega Man, I am afraid that your father is infected with something very foul. I can extract it, but it will not be pleasant at all. What say you?"

"Do it," Mega Man coughed as he got to his feet.

The avatar of Justice nodded and the blue energy began to pull at Hyde Light, who screamed in pain as the blue light slowly but surely came away with a void-black energy in its grip, Dr. Light slowly turning back to normal as it was extracted before falling unconscious.

Mega Man looked at the viscous void-black... substance... in Duo's giant hand before shivering and turning away. He walked over to his father and knelt to check on his vitals. Exausted, but physically the man would be fine.

"Mega Man to Light Labs," he began.

"Mega Man!" the voice of his sister yelled back over the line, "what happened?! I saw how Rush came back and–"

"Later, sis," he cut Mega Woman off. "I need emergency medical teleportation for dad. Keep in mind that he may need to be restrained for his own safety due to exposure to an unknown substance. Can you take care of it?"

"...Of course," Mega Woman replied after a pause. "Stand by for teleportation."

Mega Man took a teleporter locator out of his arm and placed it on his father's chest. A few seconds later and the man had vanished in a beam of light.

"You were quite fortunate tonight," Duo spoke as he approached, having finished disposing of the foul energy that had possessed Mega Man's father. "That substance is among the most foul I have ever encountered. Had it been left any longer there is not telling wha–glgk..."

Duo was cut off as a pointed black tendril suddenly pierced through his back and out his chest. Mega Man blinked in shock before the thing retracted as suddenly as it had appeared.

"Duo!" the blue bomber ran to the larger robot's side as he scanned for threats. The only things he could see were the grinning Jack-o-Lantern faces that surrounded the area. "Don't worry. Light Labs! This is Mega Man! Emergency transport for Duo! I repeat–"

Mega Man cut off as he felt Duo's giant hand grab his arm and a rush of energy filled his systems.

"Mega Man... do you... well... with it..." the alien defender spoke with great strain and seriousness as he transferred his own energy into the blue bomber's smaller body before disappearing in a beam of light.

Mega Man blinked at the odd instructions before he was cut off by echoing laughter. He turned this way and that, trying to spot the source in the deep impenetrable shadows that now surrounded him, broken only by the grinning lights of what he was sure were Jack-o-METs. It took him a few seconds to realize that the reason he couldn't pinpoint the source of the sound was because...

...it was coming from inside his head.

Roll gulped and steadied her breathing routines. Her audience didn't dare make a sound. They all found this terrifying, made even more so by the fact that the storyteller herself seemed frightened.

Steadying herself, Roll closed her eyes and continued the story as Tango began to play a new song, this time with lyrics that didn't quite match the original. But few payed the lyrics any mind as they focused on Roll's words. (40) Several who did catch certain lines wished they hadn't…

As he kept scanning the surrounding shadows, Mega Man was beginning to realize that the voice wasn't exactly a voice. It was more like... more like something was implanting the concept of a laughing voice in his head and letting his mind interpret from there.

Whatever the case, it was seriously creeping him out. Even more when music started to play along with the voice as it did growls, sinister breathing, echoing yells, and more laughter. A sudden guitar riff was punctuated by a painful impact from behind that flung him to the ground, and he only just caught a glimpse of a void-black tendril retreating back into the shadows.

Please allow me to introduce myself. I'm a man of... unique taste.

He looked around for the source of the attack and missed it when another tendril grabbed his leg from the opposite direction and tossed him into the air.

I've been around for longer than they think, driven many a man quite insane.

He saw a third tendril emerge from the shadows to strike him from the air and activated the Matter Phase, turning intangible so it would pass through him and he could recover. He was thus very surprised when the tendril slammed into him as if he hadn't gone intangible at all.

He cried out in pain as he impacted the ground hard, but the voice that wasn't quite a voice just kept singing.

I was there for António Moniz who wanted to ease patients' pain.

A new tendril snaked towards him leisurely and he switched to the Wolf Claws to try and damage it somehow, but the tendril ignored the cuts as it wrapped around him.

Whispered that the best way was to carve a piece out of their brains.

Mega Man clawed at the tendril holding him repeatedly, but the cuts healed as fast as he could inflict them and he was flung into a shadowed wall, bouncing off with a pained cry.

He landed and rolled to his feet as the voice laughed again.

Pleased to meet you! Hope you guess my name!

Multiple tendrils snaked out of the shadows and waved at him mockingly and he switched to the Black Sludge weapon, only to watch the viscous substance be absorbed into the tendrils like water into parched ground.

But what's puzzling you is the nature of my game...

'What are these things?!' Mega Man tried to evade them as they all struck at once.

I worked there in Pennhurst State where all the mad kids stayed!

He went back to his normal Mega Buster shots as he dodged around, only for the tendrils to completely ignore his hits as if they were no more dangerous than raindrops.

Showed the staff they weren't human and... took the time to play!

One of the tendrils grabbed his arm and flung him at another that wound up and whipped around like it was a baseball bat to hit him back into the ground.

Worked the rounds, earned a doctorate!

Mega Man got his hands under him as he skidded along and came up, firing the Desert Laser repeatedly to no effect.

For the Third Reich's ways of enforcing hate!

The voice gave a pleased yell as Mega Man was blindsided by another tendril from behind, sending him tumbling hard.

Pleased to meet you! Hope you guess my name, oh yeah!

Mega Man grunted as he got to his feet to see the tendrils waving at him mockingly again and opened fore with the Cold Spell.

Is it puzzling you to the nature of my game...? Haha!

The tendrils didn't even slow their movements as the freezing energy hit and burst into unimpeded movement with the next refrain.

I watch with glee while your leaders all argue the best way for persecution plays!

Mega Man ignited his hands with the Disco Inferno and did his best to parry the strikes, but the flames failed to harm the tendrils any more than his bare hands would.

And I shout out 'who took all the kiddies?' when the whole time it was always me!

And then one grabbed him around the neck and began slamming him into the pavement in time to the music.

So let me please introduce myself! I'm a man of... unique taste!

The tendril released him at least and Mega Man stood painfully, grabbing an E-Tank and wondering why the tendrils didn't stop him from downing it.

And I helped all those terrorists get themselves psyched to die on 9/11!

In fact, the tendrils had all retreated for no apparent reason as the voice kept singing directly to his mind.

Pleased to meet you! Hope you guessed my name, oh yeah!

Mega Man heard what sounded like footsteps approaching at a leisurely pace.

And it's just killing you, the... nature of my game... HAHA!

What was really disturbing him about those footsteps was that he couldn't tell if the sound was real or something else being projected into his head.

Just so pleased to meet you! But you couldn't guess my name, oh well...

A foot in a fine pitch black dress shoe emerged from the shadows. It was attached to an unnaturally, impossibly, thin leg covered by void-black dress slacks.

It's just too confusing for you... the nature of this game...

The leg was attached to an even more unnaturally thin torso clad in a proportionately thin black suitcoat over a ghostly white button-up shirt and a crimson tie.

You see now, every hero is a monster, and all the madmen sane.

Mega Man unleashed a Franken Bolt at the figure, only for the immense electrical discharge to fizzle as it struck the ghostly white palm of the figure's hand.

You will soon understand...

The figure's stark-white head emerged from the shadows last and Mega Man was taken aback at the total and complete lack of facial features upon it.

I am the Slenderman...

And waving from the figure's back were the same black tendrils that had been knocking him around effortlessly. The sheer impossibility of the being's anatomy hurt Mega Man's processors just to look at it.

And I'm gonna break your mind today!

Mega Man took stock of his options and decided to go for it, switching to the Wolf Claw and charging, determined to take this... unnatural thing... out if it was the last thing he did.

The Slenderman stood calmly as the hero charged and right before he struck, the tendrils from his back lashed out and grabbed each of the robot's limbs, pulling them taut so he couldn't do anything.

The blank face then moved to within inches of Mega Man's own as the music continued, accompanied by images of pain, suffering, betrayal, paranoia, and all the torments that existed in the words as well as the conceptual certainty that he was facing a creature that was truly unbeatable, completely invincible, and there was nothing he could possibly do that would change that.

It... was hopeless...

"But..." a boy dressed like none other than Roll's brother and the hero of the story sniffed back tears, "but Mega Man would never give up! No matter what! ...Right?"

"Silly," Roll smiled, "of course he wouldn't..."

Mega Man leaned his head back as the images assaulted him with the idea of his unshakeable powerlesslness, and whipped it forward to crack the forehead gem in his helmet square on the spot of Slenderman's face where a nose should have been.

The deluge of troubling images halted abruptly as Slenderman jerked back from the impact, though Mega Man was sure it was more from surprise than anything and a few of the tendrils loosened their grip.

Mega Man wasted no time in tearing his legs and one still-clawed arm free to slash at Slenderman's featureless fact, only for the entity to bring a hand up and stop the blow cold while giving him the blankest stare in the multiverse as sensations of bemused incredulity entered the blue bomber's mind.

Mega Man retorted by following up the blocked blow with a double foot-plant into Slenderman's face that was rewarded with a contemptuous fling of the tendril still wrapped around his other arm.

The blue bomber flipped around in the air and spotted the tendrils already coming for him. Grabbing one before it could hit him, he swung around to propel himself back at Slenderman, twisting around follow-up blows to land right in front of the entity and receive a calm kick to the sternum.

Mega Man bent over from the blow and reflexively clawed the limb that had struck him, getting only sensations of annoyance in return as he failed to even tear the cloth.

'Well, I think I made him angry at least,' he thought to himself as instead of retracting, the Slenderman's foot lifted him up, over his opponent's head in a way no human or robot could possibly bend, to slam him into the ground on the other side. Only Mega Man planted his arms first and began a spinning handstand while holding his legs out that knocked his opponent's other leg out from under him.

Except the Slenderman didn't fall. He held himself up with his tendrils in a relaxed pose until his feet were firmly back under him as Mega Man sprang back and began firing. As shot after shot of the offensive Fear Masters' weapons left his arm cannon, the Slenderman simply stood there unconcerned as he was struck time after time.

Images assaulted the blue bomber's mind in the same way his shots assaulted his opponent. Images of the devastation continued conflict would bring. The death and pain his resistance would cause. The siren call to just... give up.

"Never!" Mega Man yelled as his arm cannon clicked empty of further master weapons and he dashed forward with a punch that Slenderman casually caught in his tendrils.

The sensation of mocking laughter hit him as he was tossed aside, along with images of what people thought of his determination and sacrifice. The decadence of someone always there to fix their problems and clean their messes. The ignorance of his feelings and pain since he was clearly just a tool. A lowly robot to be used and discarded when he was finished and replaced with something newer and shinier. A new weapon to point at their enemies so they didn't have to actually talk with them. Because people were lazy and distrustful and vile things. Creatures that squandered their gifts in favor of doling out suffering to each other rather than even entertain the thought of trying to understand each other.

"You're wrong..." Mega Man growled out as he stood and charged back in, Mega Buster charging. He jumped over one tendril, slid under another, and vaulted between two more and unleashed a charged shot right in Slenderman's face.

But the Slenderman didn't even flinch as he lunged forward through the ball of plasma, only to find that Mega Man was ready for this as he twisted in a practiced maneuver to push Slenderman's head from behind even as he swept the entity's feet from the front. Slenderman went tumbling face-first from the throw, and twisted in impossible ways to end up back on his feet with impeccable posture and contemptuously brushing dust off of his suit.

The Slenderman then leveled its blank gaze at Mega Man and crossed his arms behind his back. The parade of images came with renewed vigor, showing the robot hero the worst of the very humanity he had sworn to defend. The clear question behind each one being 'why do you even bother?'

Mega Man grit his teeth and clenched his fists as he focused past the images assaulting his mind. Focused towards better things. Of people helping each other. The friends and family he knew who repeatedly sacrificed to help others. Of those like his father who worked tirelessly towards the dream of a better future. And even of those like Dr. Wily who for all their faults still had redeeming qualities worth defending.

"Because I believe in them!" the blue bomber yelled as he threw all his strength and focus into a punch to the head that sent his opponent staggering slightly from the blow.

For an instant, Mega Man swore he saw a single scratch on Slenderman's face, but it was gone in the same instant as if it was never there.

"But miss Roll!" a boy dressed like some version of the Mad Hatter protested. "How could he win if this Slenderman guy couldn't be hurt?"

"That's a good question," Roll seemed to pause and think about it. "Okay, you all know what my brother and I have fought, right?"

A chorus of confused, but still eager, nods was the reply.

"Mad scientists, war machines, giant robots, alien conquerors, challengers from the future, insane supercomputers, and beings so strong they might as well have been gods ," Roll listed off.

"Slenderman was nothing more than an entity that preyed on human fear, distrust, pain, and paranoia; drawing his fearful strength from it. Do any of you think, for one second , that my brother couldn't beat something like that?"

Everyone in the room, child and adult alike, exchanged questioning glances for a moment before they all shook their heads in the negative.

"Exactly," Roll winked. "You all believe in him, the same way he believes in all of you. And, you see, Rock knows this. He knew it well enough to take that belief, along with the power Duo had entrusted him with, and use it..."

"So that's your weakness," Mega Man narrowed his eyes as he studied his opponent. "You're a thought entity... You take people's greatest fears and become the invincible horror they imagine, but it stops working when your victims stop buying into it, right?"

Mega Man felt the narrowing focus of his opponent's attention on him and knew he'd hit the bullseye.

Slenderman's tendrils suddenly started attacking aggressively, forcing Mega Man to dodge as he tried to focus on the thoughts from before.

"Mega Man... do you... well... with it..."

A warming sensation carried through his body as he felt the energy Duo had given him react to his need and bolster his hopeful thoughts even as it blocked out the torturous images the Slenderman tried to send. He began to focus all of that power into his fists as his opponent suddenly decided to begin charging personally.

"Oh!" the boy dressed like Mega Man interrupted again. "I know how this goes! Rock told me this technique last time he was here! Let's see... he said... um... My hand... no... this hand is... shimmering...?"

The boy suddenly looked utterly and completely heartbroken to discover that he'd forgotten the cool thing his hero had told him.

"This hand of mine glows with an azure hue... Its noble voice tells me to defend the innocent..."

"JUSTICE..."

Mega Man ducked under the Slenderman's strike and threw a glowing blue body blow as he finished his battle cry.

"...ONE!"

The Slenderman practically folded in half from the blow and his tendrils all went limp at the same time.

"Rock!" the children all yelled out as they recognized the boy standing at the back of the room opposite Roll, even though he was dressed in a green tunic with a matching floppy cap, leather boots and gloves, and a shield and sword strapped to his back.

"Did that take care of the Slenderman?" was asked from multiple directions.

"Not quite," Rock smiled back and crouched down in a stance for an uppercut. "He needed another dose of..."

"JUSTICE TWO!" Mega Man yelled as his glowing blue uppercut snapped Slenderman's head back and sent him flying through the air before impacting limply on the ground where he began to dissolve back into the shadows from whence he came.

"K! O!" a two boys in white and red martial arts gis and a girl in a blue chinese battle dress with her hair done up in buns led the enthusiastic cheers of the room. (41)

From her position, Roll gave a bemused smile at her brother. "What are you doing here, Rock? No... wait, let me guess. You let Auto do the decorating again, didn't you?"

"Actually," Rock smiled back, "you were taking a bit longer than we expected, so I came to walk you back. It'd be a shame to teleport considering what the mayor did with the city."

There was a round of chuckles across the room from the adults. Mayor Leonardo Dorado was a character to be sure, but there was no denying that the man knew how to get into the spirit of the holidays. Any of them. (42)

"Awww..." the kids groaned as Roll walked up to her brother, clearly intending to leave. "Do you have to go miss Roll?" a girl dressed in a stereotypical magical girl costume tugged pleadingly on Roll's witch dress with her only hand.

"Sorry," Roll knelt down and ruffled the girl's hair, "my family needs me too. And besides, I'll come back soon with another story."

"Promise?"

"Always," Roll smiled as she stood and joined her brother at the door.

"Rock?" a kid dressed like a chibi parody of Cthulu asked as the twins moved to exit the room. "Did all of that actually happen?"

"Well," Rock looked around at the expectant faces and smiled conspiratorially as he turned translucent, "you tell me..." He then stepped back and phased through the closed door he'd entered from.

"Whoa..." many of the children breathed in amazement. A few of the adults gaped in astonishment themselves.

Roll just shook her head in amused exasperation before opening the door and walking through with Tango.

"Okay, I have to admit, the mayor's outdone himself again," Roll smiled as she took in the lights from the city. Someone had apparently figured out how to light up the sides of the buildings so they showed a myriad of stereotypically spooky scenes.

"Thought you'd like that," Rock smiled to himself as the two continued on their way back to Light Labs. "You know... I really appreciate you doing that for me."

"Doing what?" Roll blinked.

"Telling that story almost every Loop," Rock clarified. "It honestly helps me deal with what happened that time. Some of the things that the Fear Masters did... What the Slenderman tried to do..."

Rock shuddered at the memory.

Roll punched him in the arm.

"Ow!" Rock complained. "What happened to comforting hugs?"

"You weren't in a 'hold me' mope," Roll smirked, "it was more of a 'I need a swift kick' mope. And besides, the Slenderman didn't know what he was getting into when he tried to run you through the wringer. An embodiment of fear and paranoia versus the hope of the world several times over? Seriously, advantage: You."

"If you say so," Rock admitted a little too easily. "The fact is I still almost lost to him. I could feel him getting into my head. Trying to turn me in a way that I'm certain would have lasted a lot longer than a single Loop."

"Yet you still beat him down with your bare hands," Roll deadpanned.

"And who was responsible for that?" Rock retorted. "Who was it that figured out his weakness and then pulled off a global broadcast so she could plead with the world to place their faith in me? Who was it that convinced enough people to believe that Slenderman's invincibility crumbled? I'm pretty sure that was you." (43)

"You say that like getting people to put their faith in you is hard. Heck, Wily was ranting that if you could beat him so many times, then an upstart like Slenderman shouldn't be a problem."

Rock snorted in amusement. "Yeah, I can see him doing that. Still, what was it you said to the world that Loop? 'Believe in the one who believes in you?' Who did you hear that from again?"

"That nice Kamina guy I met in a fused Loop with the Avengers. The same one who gave me the shades I like to take trick or treating to Skull Castle for when Wily slams the gate. You know, to get into the mood for 'trick'." (44)

"So that's what you keep needing all the eggs and toilet paper for..." Rock snorted in amusement. "That must have been the Loop I was with the Justice League."

"Anyway, what's everyone wearing this year?"

"Well, Kalinka decided to dress like a girl Frankenstein Monster with her dad as the mad scientist. She also somehow managed to talk Pharaoh Man and Skull Man into dressing as each other..."

---

*) Thanks to Dark-heika, Thanatos's Scribe, Leonite, Gamerex27, and Oraclemask who helped come up with costume ideas for the kids. Thanks to KageX for suggesting several of the standard foes and sub-bosses.

1) The candy's for the kids. Just in case that wasn't clear. If it was, give yourself a cookie. (Feel free to substitute Halloween candy for cookies at any time)

2) They're creepy and they're kooky. Mysterious and spooky. They're altogether ooky. The Lights at Halloween!

The Addams Family theme by Vic Mizzy: www. youtube watch? v=q9d-yzDA9Mc

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=hIJoTEliQcU

3) Auto… Auto has issues.

4) Zombie Joe... Zom, Zombie Joe uh-huh...

No, that's not the song. Though if you recognize it, give yourself a cookie. Heck, anytime you recognize one of the songs I'm providing links for, give yourself a cookie.

Perc-U-Later by Dino Pacifici: www. youtube watch? v=Ybgkk4jLCGg

5) Who are you going to call?

Ghostbusters Movie Title Theme by Elmer Bernstein: www. youtube watch? v=UgBVMBe2ltQ

6) You knew I was going to have to say it at some point.

7) If you have any idea who Louie the Lightningbug is, then give yourself two cookies.

8) And wouldn't you know it, there was a full moon that night too…

Bad Moon Rising by Creedence Clearwater Revival: www. youtube watch? v=zUQiUFZ5RDw

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=3PmA4Mv5Ikk

9) Awww... It's a little Red Riding Werewolf…

10) If you recognize this description as the Wolf Bot from the Megaman Cartoon episode 'Night of the Living Monster Bots', give yourself another cookie. It might be spoiling a few things, but that episode of the cartoon is what inspired the Fear Masters in general, as well as providing half of them right off the bat.

11) Some of them actually thought it was the overture to the Phantom of the Opera. Which is actually what I was going to use before I remembered Bach.

Tocatta and Fugue in D Minor by Johann Sebastian Bach: www. youtube watch? v=ipzR9bhei_o

12) Seriously, saying that to someone like Mega Man takes balls of ... realizes the horrible, horrible pun I'm about to say and shuts up ...Never mind.

13) O_O

14) Reminds of a line from the Freefall webcomic: "You gotta admit it's pretty." "Many things that can kill you are."

Witchy Woman by Eagles: www. youtube watch? v=eVXqocPAz1k

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=tSSdcKpPi9A

15) blinks Did I just end up using Snow White's appearance to describe a witch?

16) I swear, I did not plan this part of Witch Woman's personality beforehand. It just came out as I was writing.

17) Do you have any idea how hard it was for me to find a track that gave this feeling?

The Crypt by Jerry Goldsmith from The Mummy: www. youtube watch? v=mBSL9N8_rto

18) Okay, I'll admit, sometimes I'm just amusing myself.

19) They just never seemed to when he fought them.

20) Because I know some of you had to have been wondering the same thing.

21) I apologize for the B-grade movie science.

22) The kind of music that makes a person want to run inside and lock the doors before any of those hidden dangers manages to find them.

The Fog Main Theme by John Carpenter: www. youtube watch? v=yNSLaYJboPE

23) Based on the giant Kerog robot Shadow Man can summon in Power Fighters 2

24) He's... not entirely incorrect in that assumption.

25) The Bogey like to Boogie.

Boogie Fever by Sylvers: www. youtube watch? v=po1GKXo0SuE

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=uUy9FMin3Zs

26) You know, a Joker grin.

27) Oh, come on. That pun was just begging to be used...

28) Top Man: He totally learned that move from me!

Me: You know that wasn't the Top Spin, right?

Top Man: Don't care, he totally learned that from me!

29) Classic movie monsters represent a lot of things that people are afraid of, but I decided to focus my attention on what I consider key aspects. If this isn't your cup of tea, just skip down to footnote 30.

Zombie Joes: The idea that the dead can rise out of the grave is an old one, even if the modern zombie apocalypse scenario is much newer than most people think. It likely began with the fact that certain substances can put a person into a near death state, which can at times be so close to the real thing that they can fool some modern diagnosis techniques. Imagine how terrified people must have been when what they thought was a dead body woke up. In fact, I recall a Science channel episode about real life zombies, practiced by some of the less savory followers of Vodun (aka Voodoo). They poison someone into a near death state, dig up their coffin later, and keep them so drugged that they can only shamble about their lives in a suggestive haze until the drugs stop being administered. Scary stuff.

Ghost Woman: People have been spooked by things they can't explain for about as long as they've been explaining things. The explanations vary; gods, spirits, ghosts, ESP, dimensional convergences, psychokinetic phenomena, etc; but the general theme of that-which-cannot-be-explained persists in pretty much all cultures.

Wolf Man: Putting aside the transformation issues, lycanthropes in general are very much a representation of humanity's animal side. As much as we like to claim otherwise, we're still part of the animal kingdom, with all of the primal instincts that entails. Instincts which most of us do our best to suppress and which frighten us when they come to the forefront. But those instincts remain an important and inextricable part of us.

Dracu Man: Ah, the vampires. The classification of undead bloodsuckers is frightening enough by itself, but the fact that vampires so often tend to be portrayed as aristocratic, such as with Count Dracula himself, is very telling. As is the fact that he was based on Vlad Tepes, Prince of Wallachia and a member of the House of Drăculești (who by some accounts I've heard was worse than the fictional character based on him). The concept of people in power who do not have to answer for the atrocities they commit is a very scary one indeed. Next time you see a character who acts like their money or position protects them from reprisal, imagine them with a pair of bloody fangs and see how well it fits.

Witch Woman: Oh, boy. This isn't even about the magic. Seriously, the accusation of magic use was often an excuse to persecute others who didn't fit into the community. Essentially "that woman over there doesn't walk like us, talk like us, act like us, or think like us, and she has the gall to smile while we suffer the ordinary pains we always suffer, why she must be a witch who has cursed us with misfortune!" People have always feared what was different, and few bear the brunt of this more than the people who are different.

Mummy Man: Curses and reanimated dead guys are one thing, but the promise of immortality is at least as old as the ancient Egyptians and the practice of mummification they believed would enable that immortality in the afterlife. Eternal life is an enticing thing and the lengths some will go to possess it are truly terrifying. Think about it. Every megalomaniac in fiction who rants about living forever is simply following in the footsteps of the mummies.

Gill Man: Also known as The Creature From the Black Lagoon. Go deep enough beneath the waves and you'll find an environment so alien that it might as well be on another planet. The creatures of the deep were speaking to our fears of alien beings long before the term was ascribed to things from outer space. That's right, the green men from mars are successors to this guy.

Boogie Man: Ignoring the music pun, people have been afraid of the concept of pure evil ever since we've been able to grasp the very concept of evil. The idea that something can exist without the positive traits of love, kindness, compassion, hope, etc. is one that simultaneously intrigues our curiosity and causes our minds to retreat from the sheer wrongness that would entail. And yet, there's some truth to the idea. Sociopathy is a thing after all.

Franken Man: Ah, a personal favorite. I'm not kidding when I have Roll declare Frankenstein to be a class of terror unto itself. When it was written, the idea that mankind could actually create something that could consciously defy its control was, to my understanding, a new one. Sure, homunculi and golems were older concepts, but they were also unwaveringly obedient to their creator. Dr. Frankenstein and his monster (who would logically have the family name of his creator if you think about it) changed that. Suddenly the idea that mankind could delve so far into the study if the unknown that we couldn't control our own creations wasn't so farfetched. Every creation of man that has been smart and/or strong enough to defy its creator(s) since has harkened back to this one being.

30) He's Alive!

It's Alive by Bobby "Boris" Pickett: www. youtube watch? v=a4tX3yuk2yg

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=ejtqjFPQ1wE

31) Mash is from Mega Man 7, the boss of the half-way stage. As for the pun, I had to. You know I did.

32) Someone kindly linked me to the "What is a man?" speech from the Castlevania series and I adapted it into this.

33) Time to kick it up a notch.

Superbeast by Rob Zombie: www. youtube watch? v=X3-H5jGoags

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=ETkd0WZrT6I

34) Oh, look, it's one of Them. Give yourself a cookie if you get the reference.

35) You can blame Smash Up's latest game expansion for this pun. In fact, have a bonus song:

Killer Queen by Queen: www. youtube watch? v=BAf2S6ij2gk

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=gcTOTki6wnQ

36) You read that right, the Killer Queen faceplanted in the street after plunging from the top of a skyscraper and got back up .

37) giggles to himself

The Purple People Eater by Sheb Wooley: www. youtube watch? v=DL1ZH0Ke92A

Instrumental version: www. youtube watch? v=vVb_rwIADDU

38) Actually, for what's about to happen, I'm not sure this tune is creepy enough ...

Descent Into Madness by Nox Arcana: www. youtube watch? v=Y-r6p7xcQdA

39) Hides under the covers

40) Nope, not coming out from under the covers. Have the song link if you must, but leave me in here.

Sympathy for the Devil by The Rolling Stones: www. youtube watch? v=vBecM3CQVD8

41) Is it safe to come out now? looks around carefully Oh, good. checks the resolution of the fight In case anyone is wondering, Justice One is a technique used by the Battle Network version of Duo (and is available as a Mega Class chip). In this case it's pretty much a Mega Man throwing a straight power punch using Duo's Justice energy and the collective faith the world has in him. Justice Two is basically the Shoryuken using Mega Man's other fist with the same energy behind it.

And, while I'm at it, let's talk about the Fortress bosses I used (feel free to skip if you prefer):

Killer Queen: A double whammy here. Let's face it, little else disturbs us humans as much or as reliably as insects. They're about as different from us as something within the animal kingdom can get and they repeatedly defy our concerted efforts to remove them from our lives. And of course there's the whole hive mind thing with insects like ants. To summarize that, there is a reason fictional groups like the Borg are so scary. Then there's the understandable fear of things that are larger than we are. Deep in our instincts it is written that size does matter, particularly lots of size. So giant insects speak to multiple fears.

Purple Devil: Leaving aside the Purple People Eater gag, there's the very rational fear of being eaten. Predators are not kind to their prey and being lower on the food chain than something else is terrifying. Now, humans are at the top of the food chain for just about every environment we inhabit, but the truth of the matter is that this is not a natural state for us. We like to think of ourselves as omnivores, but we're really what's known as facultate herbivores. Or more specifically facultate fructivores (fruit eaters). Plant/fruit (and vegetable) matter makes up the most necessary part of a healthy diet for us, but the facultate part means we're capable of supplementing our diet with other foods, like meat (corollary: It has been noted by a reader on Spacebattles that meat is an important part of a truly healthy human diet, but the point remains that the necessary nutrition involved can be safely extracted from certain plant-based foods or fungi by the human digestive system). We're closer to the omnivorous center of the herbivore/carnivore spectrum than most animals, but we're still firmly on the herbivore side. We also lack the basic tools of a predator, such as sharp claws or talons, or even a large enough mouth to serve as a viable weapon. All the tools we use for hunting are fashioned from external materials. In a nutshell, we evolved as prey animals. And then we got smart enough to claw our way up the food chain by killing and eating the things that tried to kill and eat us (getting even smarter as the protein boost to our diets accelerated brain development), to the point that most apex predators would rather retreat from a human presence than try their luck. But in the back of our instincts is the knowledge that our position at the top of the food chain is all too precarious and we fear being knocked back down a rung or two.

Hyde Light: Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde is a classic horror story that differs from most in that the terror doesn't come from an external monster. Instead it very distinctly comes from the part within even the noblest of us that is capable of monstrous things.

42) You know that guy who goes overboard with decorating his house for (insert holiday here)? Mayor Dorado's like that except with the whole city and every holiday. Lots of people get good work making that stuff happen.

Bonus Song (for the end credits): Dead Man's Party by Oingo Boingo: www. youtube watch? v=7DPxgoeu5ds

43) And this is as good a time as any to talk about the mastermind I chose for the Halloween special.

Slenderman: Ah, the Slenderman. Slenderman is a terrifying example of the power of human imagination. According to my (admittedly limited) understanding, he got his start in the creepypasta corner of the net where some people were having fun with creepy altered photos and making up spooky stories to go with them. Next thing anyone realizes, the internet has created the most horrifying eldritch abomination since H. P. Lovecraft took up the pen. All of his powers and strength are gleaned entirely from the collective beliefs of those who write and read his mythos. There's some superstitions about him being real now, which would essentially mean that humanity thought him into existence. It's scary, scary stuff for certain.

44) Remember 2013 when Ryan Jampole did thirty one Halloween costumes for Roll? www. youtube watch? v=u7XNOlmzbs4

(Note: The following has been helpfully translated from R'ylehian 1337 and the proliferation of vulgarities filtered out for your convenience)

ForAGoodTimeCallCthulu: Hey guyz! Just got back from Heph's place! Gotta tell you, Roll's story about Slendy's screw-up just gets better every single time! Pics, video, and audience thoughts comin yer wai!

YELLOWKING: HUZZAH! MOAR TALES FOR THE MAD TALE KING!

greenhorror: dude stop shouting

YELLOWKING: NEVAH! THE GREATZ SHOULD ALWAYS BE MADDENINGLY LOUDZ!

SoulzRTazty: Sayz teh guy who married hiz script once...

MyOddaSnakeIssa[I have no idea what this word means, but I have a feeling it should still be censored]: Gotta be better than Nyar marrying that pony once. Ugh! Who gets the hots for symmetrical body types anyway?

MistahSkin42: You all jealous. 'Shy is best waifu!

DaGreatStoner: Lt's ll gt bck n tpc. Ths s bt Slnd bng n dt ftr ll.

RedFunk: Aw man, your vowels broke again?! But Stoner's right. This is about Slendy's totally Epic Fail. Man, that never gets old!

SimulatedGoatGod: Yeah, Slendy effed up big time. Honestly, doing the whole 'embodiment-of-fear-that-can-only-be-harmed-if-enough-believe' thing against the hero types? Not even those tools Phobos and Deimos are dumb enough to try that.

Daddy'sLittleEldritchHorror: Eh, he's still a total n00b the mortals in the Hub thought into existence. Thinks that Ascending from the sheer amount of terror he inspired makes him a 'special little rotting flower'.

Fiyah666: Yah. Guy should totally get over himself or GTFO.

Sl3nd3r1: I hate all of you...

Happy Halloween everyone!

Mega Loops 11

Mega Loops 11

Author's Note: Regarding the part of my footnotes in the last chapter that went into human dietary needs: It actually should be possible for humans to get all our vital nutrients from meat. The trick? You have to eat organ meat to do that (that's right, liver really is good for you). The parts of animals that most humans think of as 'icky' (plus stuff like bone marrow and whatnot, so basically the whole animal). Something no real carnivore would view them as. So, I guess we still count as omnivores, but with a distinct natural preference for herbivorous habits.

11.? (EdBecerra)

A dusty, shaggy grey figure approached, holding up a placard at the end of a stick.

Hello, Cousin

"How dare you address me so familiarly, you - you..."

The sign flipped around, exposing the other side.

Coyote. That's the word you're looking for, cousin Wily. Wile E. Coyote, Super Genius.

Scott Summers, aka Cyclops, wandered around the Xavier institute, wondering what particular variation of events this Loop would throw at him when the doorbell rang.

Blinking behind his red shades, he walked over and opened it to find what appeared to be a young boy dressed in red with brown hair in a pompadour and wearing shades of his own. Black ones that looked almost like a visor.

It wasn't a face Scott recalled seeing, well, ever.

"Are you lost?" he asked the boy.

"That depends," the boy responded evenly, "is this the Xavier institute for gifted youngsters?"

"Well... yes..." Scott continued blinking. He thought the boy might be a visiting looper, but usually the visiting loopers popped up in New York, in space, or as members of S.H.I.E.L.D. And those that came to the X-Men Awoke as students or as people on their list to invite. They didn't show up on the institute's doorstep.

"Then I'm in the right place," the boy stated. "I am Blues, a prototype Sentinel developed by Bolivar Trask to hunt down mutants. I think he's a bigoted idiot and would prefer to defect if that's fine with you."

Scott thought his blinking muscles were getting quite the workout. This was certainly a new one...

"Why should we believe a word you're sayin'?" a feral-looking man; Logan, aka Wolverine; growled at the sentinel who appeared to be a boy from inside Xavier's office.

"Logan, please," the bald man in the wheelchair sitting behind the ornate desk, Professor Xavier himself, tried to calm the irate man. Logan growled some more, but backed down. The robot hadn't even twitched the whole time. "But he does have a point. You have admitted to being a 'Sentinel', a robot expressly created to hunt down and destroy mutants. Why should we allow you near mutant children knowing this?"

"If you, Professor, insist that I leave," the robot, who had identified himself as Blues, answered, "then I will. However, I am a renegade AI that has rebelled against my creator Trask and his mission of idiotic bigotry. A mission I not only want nothing to do with, but would do everything in my power to work against. It seems to me that a school dedicated to teaching mutant youth would be the best place to station myself. In addition, my idiotic creator will be searching for me and I have concluded that this is the last place he would ever expect to find me. On top of that, I am certain that he will send later models after both of us if I stay here or not, and the prevailing wisdom is strength in numbers, correct? I promise to help protect your children from all threats if you will grant me sanctuary."

"I don't trust him, professor..." Logan growled again.

"Yes," Xavier mused, "I daresay his mechanical nature negates your ability to smell deception. I can feel your discomfort from here, Logan. However, I can also feel Mr. Blues's honesty as well. His mind, however mechanical, is as developed as any human's or mutant's."

"Interesting that you see fit to state that separately, Professor," Blues cut in. "I was under the impression that mutants were still human."

"Yes..." Xavier seemed taken aback at the observation. "I fear that even we are not immune to prevailing sentiment in some regards. But again, while your mechanical nature does seem to defeat the bulk of my telepathic abilities, I can still gauge your emotions and sense your honesty. If you wish to stay with us, then I will allow it for as long as you do not prove a direct danger to the students housed here."

"Thank you, professor," Blues bowed politely before shooting a smirk at the fuming Logan.

"Are you really a robot programmed to hunt down mutants?" Katherine Ann "Kitty" Pryde asked the shades-wearing boy calmly watching television on the sofa.

"Yes," Blues replied without looking up.

"So... and not that I'm, like, complaining, but why aren't you?"

"Don't want to."

Kitty blinked at the terse answer. "That's it?"

"Why is that so hard to process?" Blues finally turned towards her. "I don't wish to hurt anyone whose only crime is being born different any more than I believe you do. Yes, I turned against my creator because he's being an idiot about the mutant gene. Yes, I decided to defect and dedicate myself to defending the group I was created to fight against. Because I believe it to be the right thing to do."

"But..." Kitty blinked some more and looked over to where several other students were hiding behing the doorway listening in. "But aren't robots, like, supposed to obey their programming and st–"

"MUTANTS!" an amplified voice boomed from the front of the building. "YOU ARE HEREBY ORDERED TO SURRENDER YOURSELF INTO CUSTODY FOR SCIENTIFIC STUDY ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT!"

"Hold that thought," Blues replied as he stood up and calmly walked for the front door. By the time he stepped outside, Xavier and Logan were already staring down a company of soldiers headed by Trask himself (all four foot five of him), along with some senator he didn't care to recall and another sentinel model. A ten-foot robot with large wrist-mounted double-edged blades and enough definite moving parts on the arms that there had to be more to the weapons than just their size.

"–these are children," Xavier was explaining more calmly than most men would be capable under the circumstances. "Children with unique gifts and mi–"

"Spare me your propaganda, mutant!" the senator sneered. "The people don't want dangerous mutants running around unsupervised! The order that all mutants be properly monitored and regulated has been given, so unless you want us to use force, you will surrender immediately!"

"I hope you have a warrant," Blues cut in as he walked up. "Otherwise I'm sure a rather large number of civil rights activists will have a field day with this."

"Project: Blues?!" Trask started in shock as the presence of his runaway prototype finally registered. "So, not only are you mutants abominations against nature, but thieves as well!"

"Oh, go suck a lemon," Blues shot before Trask could continue further, getting an involuntary snort of amusement from Logan. "I ran away because you were an idiot, Trask, and I can see that hasn't changed."

"Trask, your runaway toy isn't the point," the senator tried to take back control of the conversation. "The point is that we can't have mutants running around without government regulation of–"

"So register the institute," Blues interrupted again, infuriating the senator and getting surprised blinks from Xavier and Logan.

"Enough of this!" the senator growled and turned to the ranking officer among the soldiers. "Colonel! Prepare to secure the area!"

"I hope you weren't expecting these fine soldiers to fight alongside this walking deathtrap," Blues inclined his head towards the sentinel. "Those blades are clearly segmented, likely for a type of chain flail if those systems on its arms are what I think they are, and its sensors are nowhere near adequate to prevent injury to friendly units if it deploys them. Anyone and anything within fifty feet of this thing is at risk of being chopped into tiny bits, friend or foe."

The soldiers, commanding officer included, looked at the larger robot in their midst nervously and began backing off.

"Why you ungrateful!" the dwarfish Trask began fuming. "Sentinel: Heavy Metal! Attack!"

"SURRENDER OR PERISH, MUTANT SCUM!" the larger robot intoned as it began moving, bringing an arm up and extending the blade on it into a long bladed chain that it swung forward.

Logan grabbed Xavier and hauled him back even as Blues ran forward and interposed his oblong shield in the bladed chain's path while ducking down himself. The bladed chain hit the durable shield and began to wrap around it, whipping around to hit Sentinel: Heavy Metal itself and dig deep gashes into its armor. Blues took the opening to jump, change one arm into his Proto Buster, and blast the newer sentinel straight in the face, blowing its head to bits. He then planted his feet on the larger robot's torso, allowing his momentum to knock it over backwards, ending with Blues standing calmly atop the destroyed model.

"Gentlemen," he addressed the soldiers, senator, and Trask calmly, "I'm about at my tolerance level for idiocy today, and I'd like it very much if we could just end this before someone gets hurt."

The colonel examined the shorter robot for a bit while Trask and the senator gaped. "Men, stand down."

As the senator began trying to argue with the ranking officer, Blues calmly stepped off the larger robot and took a moment to use the prototype adaptable weapons system Trask had given him to scan his defeated opponent.

"Okay, I'll admit it," Logan huffed. "I might have been wrong about you."

"Don't strain yourself with that apology," Blues smirked.

"What did you mean when you said to register the institute?" Xavier asked once things had returned to relative normality.

"Exactly what it sounds like," Blues replied. "People want an eye kept on mutants so they don't hurt anyone with their powers. The institute provides an environment to learn control, restraint, as well as ensuring that any incidents and damage are kept to a minimum. The government funding the institute calms the excitable portion of the populace while avoiding civil rights issues that the more extreme responses raise. Plus I suspect that a school system is a heck of a lot easier on the national budget than an army of giant robots and what would amount to concentration camps at best. Generates more goodwill too."

"I agree," Xavier considered the robot's words. "It certainly bears looking into."

"Wait, so you have a prototype of a system meant to scan and replicate mutant abilities?" Beast looked at Blues with interest. "Does Trask...?"

"No," Blues shook his head. "When I left, I deleted all the research and destroyed all of the working models. So many people were working on it for so long that it'll be years before they get another operational. Mine is the only one left, and it only works on machines."

"Fascinating..." the blue-furred mutant instructor mused. But before he could, the lights went out.

"SURRENDER, MUTANT SCUM!" a mechanical voice bellowed. "SO ORDERS SENTINEL: TECHNO ON BEHALF OF BOLIVAR TRASK!"

Blues sighed. "I'll be right back..."

His metal footfalls echoed as he traipsed out to the front of the building where stood another ten-foot robot. This one with pure white armor, optics that looked like shades, and emitting a high voltage electrical field that caused bolts of electricity to lash out at everything around the machine.

"IDENTIFIED: PROJECT BLUES," the sentinel intoned as it spotted the smaller robot. "SURRENDER AND RETURN TO BOLIVAR TRASK FOR PROCESSING."

"Not interested," Blues retorted as he formed one arm into a bladed chain. This was probably going to hurt .

"IF YOU WILL NOT SURRENDER, THEN YOU WILL PERISH," the sentinel threatened as the electrical discharges increased in intensity.

"Not today," Blues swung the bladed chain in a whip motion straight for the larger robot's head. Electrical arcs struck the metal weapon, but didn't slow it and it carved through the lightly armored neck area, severing vital system wires.

Blues grit his teeth from where Magneto had him restrained in mid-air when his sensors picked up an anomaly in the air.

'Is that... salt?' he thought in confusion.

It certainly seemed to be some kind of salt. Except aerosolized and dispersed in gaseous form. Whatever else it was, it was having an effect on Magneto, the members of his brotherhood he'd brought with him, and the X-Men. In short order all of them were gasping and clutching their throats, several moaning for water.

"NEUTRALIZATION COMPLETE," a robotic voice intoned and a sentinel looking like it had been designed by a pirate fanatic stepped into view. "SENTINEL: SHANTY BEGINNING RETRIEVAL PROCEDURES."

"You might want to check again," Blues spoke up as he called up the High Energy field he'd copied from Sentinel: Techno, the electrical field dispersing what was left of Magneto's magnetic field as he charged.

As it turned out, Sentinel: Shanty's designers had skimped a bit on the insulation.

Blues watched in bemusement as the tank-like Sentinel: March continued firing its gatling gun arms at the Juggernaut. Since the battle had moved to a pretty darn uninhabited area, he was perfectly fine with waiting for those two to finish beating each other up before he made a move.

"Watcha working on, Blues?" Kitty watched the robot boy tinker with something.

"A few projects related to things I've learned while here," Blues replied, providing no information whatsoever.

"Like...?"

"Like something to help me against Magneto if he tries anything again," Blues began before trailing off as a high-pitched sound reached his ears. It increased in volume and within a few seconds Kitty was on the ground clutching her ears. Blues barely got his dampeners up when a moment later everything made of glass shattered.

Gritting his teeth against the soundwaves that shook his frame even through the dampeners, Blues jumped out a nearby window and raced for the source, skidding to an astonished halt when he spotted it.

The latest Sentinel model was... There was no other way to put it, it was a fat lady. The armor resembling a full operatic ensemble and the sound emanating from the vocal speaker mounted in place of a mouth on its face. It looked more like something Dr. Wily would build rather than one of Trask's creations according to the info he'd gotten from Scott.

'If this one isn't called Sentinel: Opera, I'll eat my helmet.'

Blues dodged another of the cowboy-themed Sentinel: Country's cactus-shaped grenades and grumbled to himself. It seemed more and more that Trask was taking after Wily this Loop.

Seriously, if the guy started trying to take over the world while laughing that everyone would soon recognize his genius, Blues might just do something he'd regret.

"Um, Blues...?" Kurt Wagner, aka Nightcrawler, blinked as he opened the front door. "There's a robot woman out here dressed like she's from Moulin Rouge... Mein Gott!"

Kurt vanished in a puff of smoke right before a red laser lanced through where he'd been standing.

'Here we go again...' Blues grumbled to himself.

Magneto stared as his magnetic powers failed to restrain the X-Men's pet Sentinel. "How...?"

"Simple science, really," the Sentinel replied with an all-too-human smirk. "Electricity and magnetism are related, so by using electrical fields, I can disrupt and even negate your magnetic fields. At least enough to render them useless to you."

"Impossible..." Magneto growled out as he focused as hard as he could on crushing the impudent machine like a tin can.

"You keep telling yourself that," the decidedly un-crushed Sentinel smiled.

Magneto cursed inwardly as he felt the way his magnetic fields twisted and warped out of his control when they hit some invisible barrier. And then they twisted and warped much more close to his person. With a startled yelp, the master of magnetism fell out of the air with an undignified tumble.

"Eric Magnus, you are hereby under arrest for crimes against humanity."

"Rationalize it all you like," Magneto spat, "we both know that my real crime is being a mutant..."

"Seriously?" the Sentinel mocked as he placed power-dampening restraints on Magneto. "That's about the only thing you're not under arrest for."

If Sentinel: Cabaret and her Red Light Laser had been annoying, then Sentinel: Hymn and his 'Holy Fire' were downright obnoxious.

'This is because I laughed about Reverend Dark, isn't it?' Blues sighed to himself while going over the selection of weapons from the previous Sentinels. Old Salt was really only effective against organics, the electrical High Energy field would only increase collateral damage, same with the Chain Blades and Cactus Bombs, not to mention the indiscriminate sonic weapon High Note. Which left the Red Light Laser and the Gatling Gun.

Sure, he could use something from his library of Master Weapons and Loop abilities, but some part of him felt like that lent validity to Trask as a threat. As far as Blues was concerned, the man was an idiot and would be treated like one.

Plus there were a few other reasons he had...

Making his selection, Blues opened fire on the priest-themed Sentinel.

"Wait, you invented what ?" Scott did a double-take as what the visiting looper said registered.

"An alpha-wave communication device," Blues repeated. "Basically a machine that replicates telepathic communication."

"That's what I thought you said..." Scott processed this development. "But... why? How ?"

"Professor Xavier's been kind enough to let me study him using his powers," Blues explained. "Once I figured out the frequencies he was essentially transmitting on, the rest was rather simple."

'Simple,' Scott repeated to himself, 'the guy manages to make something that no one in this universe, from permanent residents to visitors, has yet invented to my knowledge and he calls it simple ...'

"As for why... I have two reasons. The first is so that we all have a back-up communications channel that a very limited number of people can block if Xavier is ever incapacitated. The second is... well... Have I told you about my family? Not Trask, my real one."

Scott blinked. "No... I don't think you have."

"Well, I've been somewhat estranged since the baseline, but in a recent Loop... someone helped me out. Insisted that I try and work things out with them and didn't give up on me."

"Who was this?"

"Have you heard of Equestria?"

"Yeah, nice bunch from what I hear."

"Believe it or not, it was an Unawake version of one of their loopers. Probably the closest thing I've had to a best friend, baseline or otherwise. Kept at me to patch things up for the whole Loop and... Well, it's been sinking in that I'll never see that version of her again. And..."

"And if you don't at least try to patch things up, it feels like you let her down."

"Yeah..."

"Okay, what does that have to do with inventing a telepathy machine?"

"Well, my dad's an inventor and..."

It was well into the 'end of school year/beginning of summer' party while Xavier was off discussing something in DC that it happened. Everything suddenly went totally and completely silent. Music, voices, splashes from the pool, people bumping into each other, even the crickets were totally, completely, silent.

'Testing, testing,' Blues sent out over his alpha-wave communicator, 'can anyone read me?'

'–get this thing working?' Kitty's 'voice' came back. 'Hello, hello?'

'You're on, kid,' Logan's mental voice joined in. 'Everyone else connected?'

A chorus of mental affirmations came in.

'Anyone wanna guess what's up now?' Logan continued as a perimeter was set up.

'I think another Sentinel,' Kurt offered. 'Probably named Cage.'

'Why Cage?' Kitty asked.

'Because he composed 4'33", which consists of four minutes and thirty-three seconds of silence. And since the Sentinels seem musically themed...'

'Be on your guard,' Blues and Logan cut back in at the same time. 'No telling what else came along...'

"Okay, I gotta admit, these saved our bacon," Logan gestured to the alpha-wave headset as he removed it. "I don't wanna think about what mighta happened to the kids tonight if we didn't have them."

"Those kids deserve some credit as well," Blues smirked back. "It's not everyone who can fight off a robot army without losses. Seriously, is Trask ever going to learn?"

"Doubt it."

11.4

...

X

...

(Romanji version)

Zero wa, kapuseru kara dete kare jishin no ue ni mieta. Korehadatta... Kore wa kotonatte ita. Tsūjō kyūkyoku no yoroi kapuseru wa tada, kare ni kare no tsūjō no setto wa kare no shisutemu no saisho no te no chishiki o motte ita koto ga dekinakatta hito no tame no inshō-tekinagara, kinō kyōka to, aka atta basho kurokatta yoroi o atae tamada to hikaku shite kanari teichōdatta mono X ga shutoku suru keikō ga atta.

Kono setto ga... Kono setto wa mada kokushokudeattaga, soreha konseki-wa no yō ni mieta kare no kata no ue ni mausupīsu to burēdo-jō no tokki o motte ita. Zero iu koto ga dekiru mono wa tsubasa to shite yakudatsudearou enerugī maku o hakki suru koto ga dekimashita. Senaka ni jetto suishin shisutemu to kumiawasete, kare wa kantan ni hikō o iji suru koto ga dekimasu. Sonogo, kare no itsumo no bīmusāberu yori mo kanari tsuyokatta tekubi sōchaku-gata enerugīburēdo ga arimashita.

Hai, kare wa machigainaku, kono yōna mono ni nareru koto ga dekimasu.

11.3

Ranma was gaining a new appreciation for what those new kids Rock and Roll had to go through regularly. He'd Awoken in this bizarre fused variation of their home Loop somehow replacing both of them after a fashion. Apparently Dr. Saotome, the local version of his pop, had gotten roaring drunk one day and decided to create a robot that could switch from male to female at will. Except that the system that governed it was horrendously buggy and Ranma kept switching at odd and seemingly random times.

Anyway, his design was based on that invented by Dr. Light (seems his pop was still a thief without an original idea in his head), who had apparently only created Blues in this universe up until the first industrial line that Dr. Wily predictably stole and weaponized. Cue Ranma stepping up alongside Blues to combat the evil doctor as both Mega Man and Mega Woman using his 'experimental chi blaster'. And with Dr. Light providing support since his pop still couldn't be trusted to not sell him out for a bowl of rice and two pickles (as the little incident where he'd helped Dr. Wily with his designs of 'Bokken Man', 'Ribbon Woman', 'Chain Duck', 'Amazon Cat', 'Skater Couple', 'Pantyhose Minotaur', 'Fireworks Lech', and 'Panda Man' proved).

He'd taken the advice Rock had given him when they crossed paths several Loops back to heart and not displayed too many of the abilities he'd gained from the Loops. If nothing else, it would be an interesting challenge to limit himself to martial arts, chi blasts, and whatever he could crib from his enemies' fighting styles. And he was now glad he'd done so.

Dr. Wily was scary smart. The kind of scary smart that took Loopers like himself thousands, if not millions, of Loops to even compete with. And in many ways, Wily's baseline self was still smarter. This was proved beyond a shadow of a doubt when Wily had brought forth a credible imitation of the Death Star. Using a base tech level that was effectively several steps below what was in a Star Wars Loop and the smallest fraction of the resources the Empire possessed. And no one had noticed him building it. What was even more disturbing was that Dr. Wily had, without any sort of initial understanding of the concept of chi, managed to reverse engineer Ranma's abilities and create a rival that looked and fought disturbingly like Ryoga... right down to the Shishi Hokodan and bladed cloth. Except that Wily's creation could have beaten the real thing like a drum pre-Loop, even taking the breaking point technique into account. Ranma wasn't about to put anything past Wily after this. It was certainly giving the handicapped Ranma a run for his money. Some of the things he'd seen the doctor build could probably have taken out Saffron with little trouble, and a few could have given that Brolli nutcase at least a black eye.

No, Ranma wasn't going to whip out more than he absolutely had to. The doctor had already done stuff with the baseline ki abilities

Ranma had displayed that the pigtailed looper would have once thought impossible. He really didn't want to chance Wily gaining access to some of the more potent stuff he'd created over the Loops.

He'd had to learn fast in his baseline just to keep the insanity of Nerima from taking complete control of his life. It seemed Rock and Roll had to learn even faster just to compete with the local old dude with a mad-on for world domination. Wily may not have been half as annoying as Happosai and his self-serving antics or a fraction as martially skilled, but his brains – he was at least twice as cunning as Cologne pretended to be on his worst day – and resources made him several dozen times more dangerous than any variation of the ancient lech. Ranma shuddered to think what the mad doctor would have accomplished if he'd displayed any of his higher tier abilities. He could only pray that the doctor never existed in a Loop with Ichigo or Nanoha. The last thing anyone needed was another person with Aizen's abilities, much less someone as competent as Dr. Wily seemed to be. The thought of the doctor reverse-engineering an intelligent device wasn't any more comforting either. He also hoped the guy never ended up in a Dragonball Loop. Ranma could happily go for the rest of eternity not discovering if a Devil Core could take control of Majin Buu. Then there was that insane Loop already saturated with mad scientists who could bend reality with their madness...

He didn't even entertain the thought of the guy meeting Washu. Some things were far too horrifying to contemplate.

11.1 (OathToOblivion)

X Awoke to nothing but a black void. 'Where am I?' His thoughts echoed throughout the black space he was in. Suddenly, he felt a system startup as what appeared to be his body went online.

X blinked to find himself within a capsule, similar to the Capsules Dr. Light had left behind for him. Had he Awoken before Dr. Cain found him? But that couldn't be right. The lab didn't look the same as it tended to. ...Unless. No, it couldn't be!

X hurriedly overrode the Capsule's lock, gingerly stepping out onto the lab floor. Now that he was out, he could voices coming from up a flight of nearby stairs. Quietly, he tiptoed up the stairs. There was a locked door, but he easily bypassed the lock. He opened the door a crack to peek out. He saw a young blond girl chasing a young brown-haired boy.

"Rock, get back here and clean up that mud you tracked on the floor!" the blond girl declared, waving a reinforced broom around.

"Aw, come on, Roll! It was an accident! I swear I cleaned up before coming in!" the boy, Rock, attempted to defend.

"Tell that to my floor! Hold still!" Roll yelled back, swinging her broom at him. X widened his eyes. He was about to do something when a sharp 5-note whistle echoed through the air. Somebody teleported in.

"What are you two doing?" the new figure asked in confusion. He was dressed in red, wearing a scarf and shades. His hair was in a pompadour, of all things.

"Blues!" Rock and Roll noted, stopping what they were doing for a split second.

"I repeat: what are you two doing?" Blues asked with a raised brow.

Roll quickly grew angry again at this. "Rock tracked mud on the floor!" she declared.

"Again? Didn't you do that the last Loop I was here?" Blues questioned. X's eyes widened again.

'Loop?! Wait...Rock? Roll? Blues? I don't believe it!'

Just as he was about to exit his hiding space, someone else appeared that almost made X fall down the stairs.

"Now, now, Roll. While that was irresponsible of Rock, that's no excuse to swing a broom at him," Dr. Light said disapprovingly.

Roll looked sheepish. "Sorry, Dad, Rock," she muttered.

"No, I'm the one who should be sorry. I should have double-checked," Rock said, rubbing the back of his head. He quickly turned to Dr. Light. "Anyway, Dad, what have you been up to anyway? The lab's been barred for a while," Rock questioned.

Thomas Light's face lit up. "Ah yes! I was working on fine-tuning X's systems." X recoiled at this mention of him. "Everything's fine, I'm just going to make sure the ethical testing program works properly."

"I wonder how he's coping with the Loops. I mean, we sent him those messages and everything, but we can't really know how he's doing. The Time Skimmer can't go that far under normal conditions," Rock mused.

It was then that X had had enough. He built up his courage and stepped out the door. "You know, you could just ask me," he commented as he stepped into view. Even still, he couldn't help recoiling at the shocked looks everyone else had on their faces. Blues backed up a few feet as well.

"X? But..." Dr. Light whispered.

X was incredibly sheepish and cowed. "I, um, guess we're having a Fused Loop?" X offered. At that, the shock was broken. Three of the older Loopers rushed forwards, asking him questions. How has he been? How has he been coping? What all has he done? Blues, on the other hand, simply leaned back against the wall, seemingly content to watch. Or perhaps he was just someone who liked his space?

But despite all of what he told them of the hardship he'd been through, their only reaction was to just feel concerned for him, rather than recoiling at some of the more gruesome and horrific things he told them. "You don't have to worry about anything as long as you're here," Roll whispered as she gave him a hug.

"Yeah. Welcome home, little brother," Rock declared. The look on Dr. Light's face affirmed that. Even Blues seemed distantly accepting.

...Family. This was his family.

Tears came unbidden to X's eyes. "I'm home," he choked out. Everyone sans Blues rushed in to give him a giant group hug. And even he gave him a nod in response. All else was forgotten. Wily, Sigma, Weil, everything.

Because nothing could break the bonds of a family that loved each other. Nothing.

11.11 (Leonite)

"Why do you look exactly like me?" Zero asked. He faced down Omega, who glared at him impassively.

"That's your original body." Weil explained "Don't you feel any attachment towards it?"

"It looks nothing like my original body!" Zero yelled. "No white on it, none of my classic shoulder pads, and worst of all, no boob lights!" At this, Omega glanced down at his chest... only to have his head cut off in an instant. Omega glared at Zero who smirked. Weil it seemed had just gone silent in absolute shock.

X floated in dejectedly. This was very impressive given that he was a ball of light at the moment, but he managed it. "That's cheating." He stated.

"You bet I had to use my boob lights to win a fight. You never said I needed to use them as weapons or have them on me." Zero countered.

11.8675309 (KevinConvoy)

Dr. Light could tell immediately something was wrong with Rock before the yelling even began.

"I don't think I've ever felt so humiliated...ever, Roll as your older brother I forbid you from ever using that..that 'weapon' system ever again."

"Oh come on on, it totally and completely work against the masters, Iceman even melted before we even fired a shot or I got to use my new sword."

"Ah a new weapon for you Roll, one of Zero's blades or maybe a Jedi weapon?" Doctor Light inquired.

"No, not really father, it's something I picked up in a fused loop a little while ago that I just decided to pull out and test here for lack of something new to try. There I was still the android daughter of a scientist fighting against others with my own adaptive battle system and platform. I found it to be very useful."

"Anyone I've met?"

"Not that I'm aware of, a man named Dr. Kisaragi, I think he might be an alternate to Fourze., anyway the doctor gave me an atmospheric element condenser mechanism.

You can make tools and weapons needed from thin air with it really. Boomerangs, swords, clothes, even a motorcycle"

"Well, Rock that doesn't sound so bad at all, why are you so upset."

"Why don't you tell father about the rest of the device. you..ugh Father..no Dad you have to watch this recording of the beginning of the battle, I cannot put it into words, or just show him yourself" Rock replied switching back to his standard "young boy" appearance.

"Ok then, its no problem", Roll snapped back. It was then that Dr. Light noticed that Roll had a new small heart shaped collar around her throat. "Watch this and tell him he's overreacting"

"HONEY FLASH" Roll Shouts while touching her pendant, As Doctor Light is as first blinded by bright light, then notices...

"See father, adaptive battle mode"

"Go to your room now."

"What! But father it works so well!"

"Go now, and take that...that condenser offline until I tell you otherwise young lady."

"Finally," remarked Rock, "you should have seen Bass's face, I think he's gonna be a bigger problem than normal this loop."

11.5 (Dalxien)

You couldn't blame them for being curious. It's just the way they were built. So when they found a deliberately crafted container on an extraterrestrial body, what were they supposed to do, NOT open it?

"Ahh, after ten thousand years, I am free !" The raspy voiced woman crowed.

"You know..." Rock Light, automated explorer drone built by the Light Foundation for interplanetary travel and exploration, interrupted.

"You are a lot less intimidating than the last person who said that to us."

His mission partner and sister, Roll Light, could only nod seriously.

11.9

I came online in a crate. Not that unusual for what I've been going through, and preferable to being in the middle of an armed skirmish.

You see, the strangest thing keeps happening to me. My internal chronometer gets flipped back, events my internal memory logs have recorded happen again, and sometimes I'm even in a different body.

I'm a robot, Joe series, Sniper model. Usually. Sometimes I come online as one of the models for operating weapon emplacements and military craft or occasionally even one of the specialized models. Green's normally been my color, but I've been orange and purple too. Once I was even a blue aquatic model. Serial number... Well, that keeps changing too. Anyway, we Joes are a hardy bunch when it comes to robots. Military hardware is like that. Even at our worst, our armor and physical capabilities are comparable to those of the custom-made robot masters Dr. Wily uses in his takeover attempts. There's a few differences and shortcomings that can be attributed to mass production and cost issues, but the biggest difference is the AI.

You'd think the mind wouldn't make that much of a difference in a clash of physical power, but it does. The gulf between the same hardware with a basic AI and an advanced AI is effectively uncrossable. Most of my memory logs show the Joe series getting stuck with a rudimentary military AI when the power core of the prototype model from Light Labs failed to keep up with both the physical demands of a battle scenario and the processing demands of an advanced AI. So the military brass asked that the AI be cut back to remove the problem, never mind that Light fixed the power issue by the time the first of our series rolled off the assembly lines, just in case they changed their minds.

Except... my earliest memory logs show a different outcome. Instead of cutting back the AI, the brass approved the full AI if Light could fix the power issue. Which he of course did. With that backing us up, the Joe series took front and center on the world stage. Military action? Done. Terrorist attack? No problem. Hostage situation? All hostages secured and hostiles captured. Natural disaster? Rescue efforts are already underway. Dr. Wily is invading the country? Another day at the office. Alien attack? We took a few more casualties than usual, but repelled all the same. Our own prototype came back supercharged and out for revenge against his creator?

Okay, that one didn't end as well as we'd have liked, but no one died. Not even codename: Blues.

Light and his two younger bots on the other hand, they were a godsend. Especially that time Wily tried to hack our minds. When you need countermeasures against the world's most brilliant mad scientist messing with your head, it's a short list who can do it. But Dr. Light pulled it off, and extended the offer for repairs at his place if we ever needed them. And the way Dr. Light and his lab assistant, codename: Rock, repair a body, it kind of makes you want to get damaged in the first place. And of course there was Dr. Light's housekeeper, codename: Roll. Sweet girl robot, plus a kindred spirit. I still remember that time we responded to a shipwreck and we arrived to see she'd already gotten many of the people to shore.

And then one day the world blinked and I was fighting this blue-armored robot who looked a lot like DLN-001. A quick check of my memory logs showed that my chain of command had been set to 'Dr. Wily' and my directives were the capture of the city and suppression of any resistance. The kind of thing I'd been made to fight against. So I shot the other unit attacking the blue bot and took my leave.

Turned out that I was the only Joe left with anything resembling a mind, and the only thing really standing against Dr. Wily was DLN-

001. Formerly codename: Rock, now codename: Mega Man.

I needed information as to what was going on, but none was forthcoming. As far as the world was concerned the Joes as I remembered them didn't exist and never had. I remembered what the general (his name hadn't ever come up where I'd heard it and he'd vanished from records like everything else I remembered) used to say. How lives were saved and lost on the quality of information. Half of a battle was knowing. And so I sat back and observed, trying to figure out what was going on and helping here and there when I could, but not allowing codename: Mega Man to interact too much. I didn't know who was responsible for my situation after all.

And then the world blinked again and this time I was fighting a yellow-armored female robot. Codename: Roll remodeled into codename: Mega Woman.

I entertained the thought of time travel for a while, like the kind Dr. Wily used when he made Quint and/or that Waltz nut. After I came online in one of the operation models, I thought someone was stealing my IC chip and putting it in another body each time. But then I tried to take one of the Stardroids on solo.

I don't know exactly what happened, but I've been over the last few moments of that log hundreds of times and the only conclusion I can make is that the attack destroyed me utterly. IC chip and all. No possible chance of recovery of any kind.

Except I'm still here. And talking to myself because while crates are nice places for self-reflection, they're also boring as hell.

Wait, the passive mode of my audio receptors is indicating sound outside the crate. I bring them online so I can hear more clearly, and revel a moment in the fact that I can self-activate my own systems. It's quite the potent ability for a robot. Sometimes I wonder if humans know what they're taking for granted.

"Hey, Duke, what do you think they sent us this time?" the first voice said.

"No idea, Roadblock," another voice, most likely 'Duke', replied. "Let's open it up and find out."

After some creaking and cracking of wood, I remember to activate my optics as well and they come on just in time to see light stream through the opening in the crate as a human finishes removing the front of the container. Several humans are there, mostly in military attire, all looking at me. Many of the expressions show astonishment and the rest seem puzzled. One guy in the back is unreadable due to the full body black suit and helmet. Huh. Someone who has achieved less facial expression than I possess.

"A robot?" a female asks. "Why a robot?"

"Hey, Duke," the tall dark-skinned man who removed the crate front, Roadblock from the voice, asks the other male nearest me, "isn't that...?"

"One of those robots we all were in that one Loop," the man, Duke, replies.

These humans know me. I don't know them. And why would they say they were robots for a... loop? Context error: Unknown slang usage.

"They're called 'Joes'," another unfamiliar voice replies with a humor inflection. "Fitting, really. Sending a government issue 'Joe' to the G. I. Joes."

"Think it might be anyone we know?" Duke asked back.

"Possibly," I decide to reply. I've gotten as much as I can expect from silence. "It depends on if you really were once the fellow units I called my comrades."

I'd heard of jaws hitting the floor before, and the saying proved just as metaphorical as it sounded in that moment. Though I could tell that biology was the only thing preventing it from being literal.

In the back, the black-outfitted figure began convulsing silently. A momentary scan revealed it to be in laughter.

This was a familiar and, were it not for Ciel being held hostage, rather boring fight for Zero. The Golem might be big, tough, and strong; but it was also relatively slow and not all that bright. Frankly the reason he kept going through the motions of this fight were to rescue Ciel and...

The image of a Cyber Elf's orb form, X, appeared on the monitor and spoke the familiar words he'd memorized after so many times (X clearly wasn't Awake at the moment or he'd have varied the script). And then out flew the high-tech sword hilt that Zero knew all too well.

Dashing forward, Zero grabbed his bean saber and pressed the ignition button, getting ready to–

Wait, his what ?

Zero checked his charge so hard he almost tripped over himself and looked as his signature weapon. Instead of the expected glowing energy blade, there was instead a... Well, it was a semi-rigid miniature beanstalk growing from the hilt like some sort of plant-whip weapon.

Zero stared and blinked as he processed this development that his Loop memories insisted was normal. He was so distracted that a laser from the Golem almost bisected him.

Fortunately, his battle instincts took over for him and he jumped over the laser and swung his... sigh his bean saber at the towering sentry.

The plant-like 'blade' hit with a whip-crack and the Golem's head was parted from its body.

'At least the thing works just fine...'

11.7 (Hubris Plus)

"Before we begin our final battle," Rock's futuristic doppelganger stated, "I feel you should know the truth. I am not really from your future."

"Yeah, I kinda figured," Rock answered. While possible, his counterpart being the genuine article happened exceptionally rarely.

"In reality, I am... Quintet, alien robot and last of the Star Marshals!"

Rock blinked slowly. That was a new one, though he had to admit it didn't make any less sense than some of the weirder origins he'd seen.

"Any chance you're here undercover and are about to help me take down Wily?" He could always hope.

"No. Duo was too weak to do what needed to be done. Trio perished in the attempt, and Quartet only got in our way. Where they failed, I shall succeed!" Quint exulted. "Using Wily's army, I will cleanse this world of human filth, and there are none left who can-"

His rant was cut off as a burst of plasma fire tore through his chest and he toppled to the ground.

"Not bad, kid," another extraterrestrial robot told Rock as he holstered his blaster. The machine's white upper body was framed by what appeared to be a black vest. "But here's a tip: Shoot first when you get the chance."

"...Han?" Rock asked, blinking slowly.

"Yeah, it's me. But around here they just call me Solo."

Dr. Wily was feeling great. Better than he had in years. Which was extremely strange as he'd just gotten the crap beaten out of him by some young punk and his strange energy guardian that had appeared out of nowhere and plowed through his robot armies. With their bare fists no less.

"You..." he gasped around the hand holding him in the air. "You can break things down and repair them, can't you? You and your crystalline guardian? Restore them to an earlier undamaged state..."

The widening of the young man's eyes did not escape the doctor's notice as he replied guardedly. "Something like that..."

"Oh, the things we could accomplish together!" the rejuvenated Dr. Wily with his now full head of wild black hair proclaimed with fervored mania. "With my genius and your powers, the world would be ours for the taking! There is nothing we could not do!"

"Take your offer and shove it old man," the young man sneered. "I don't take orders from scum like you."

Okay, that was a bust, but he still had one more ticket out of this. One his robot masters had inadvertently revealed at great cost to themselves. He only had to play it just right...

"As I thought," he put as much contempt into his voice as possible and looked pointedly at the young man's pompadour, "you are not worthy of such hair."

"WHAT THE FUCK DID YOU SAY ABOUT MY HAIR!?"

"I said you disgrace it," Dr. Wily put on his best sneer. "That manner of style can only be properly worn by the greatest of greats and your presumption in using it yourself spits on their accomplishments. Even I would never presume such arrogance."

It was even sort of true. He'd tried it once in his youth before a bathroom mirror and found it looked ridiculous on him. How in the world the robot master prototype Blues had made it look good, he'd never quite understood.

Odd, the young man wasn't responding to that...

Dr. Wily peered at the unknown man's face and saw the signs of breathing and the shrunken pupils that denoted shock. Interesting. A much stronger reaction than he'd been expecting, but best not to look a gift horse in the mouth. A few seconds of struggling managed to extract his shirt collar from the young man's grip, and what a grip it had been even with the owner essentially insensate. The temptation to wave his hand in front of the man's face or otherwise evoke a reaction was hastily stamped down on in favor of getting while the getting was good. No matter how much he wanted to play the rest of his hastily thought up plan out.

After all, he had a newly expanded lease on life and the restored vitality of youth in addition to the genius intellect honed over decades of study, research, and practice. There was work to be done, oh, yes. He'd deal with the young man later. He had a feeling he'd have a great many opportunities to figure out how the young man's currently inexplicable abilities worked in the years to come.

---

11. BigHero (Blazingen1)

"Ladies and Gentlemen," the UnAwake Dr. Light proclaimed from the podium as they rose, "I present to you the latest inventions from the minds at Light Labs, the robot masters."

Now Rock had seen this scene so many times with many variations, but this set had an odd addition. Aside from the regular set of 6 there was a 7th in a very stumpy storage suit.

"...And finally, we have DLN-009. Now unlike the other robot masters, he was devised by one of my interns, Tadashi. Unfortunately he passed on before he could finish his own creation, so Light Labs continued his goal in his honor. Thus, I give you DLN-009: Baymax."

As he finished, the red storage compartment opened to reveal a white head, and two beady black eyes interconnected with a line. It then inflated himself to reveal its big white balloon-like body. It stepped out and lifted an arm to wave.

"Hello. I am Baymax. Tadashi programmed me to heal the sick and injured."

"Aaaawwww."

He was instantly a big hit with all the female reporters and some of the male ones too. His large huggable design and non threatening outlook made him perfect for what he is meant to do.

Rock and Roll, who were a little out of the way of the main crowd, were currently discussing the topic of the origins of Baymax.

"I swear I've heard of him before, but I'm not sure where." Said Rock.

"Maybe it was during a fused loop?" suggested Roll.

"Unlikely. I would have that in my memory banks, unless I placed the data in the 'less important' category."

A quick scan to his mind revealed what the hidden information was. From his pocket, he took out a comic book titled 'Big Hero 6'.

"I think hes the Baymax from this comic."

Roll took the comic book and repeatedly looked at it and at Baymax.

Meanwhile, Baymax was surrounded by the female reporters who were currently leaning on his warm glowing form with content.

"He looks nothing like the Baymax in the comics."

Rock could only shrug.

Soon after everyone left, they confronted Baymax about looping. Unfortunately he did not understand the question asked. Seems like he wasn't looping…yet.

That night, Dr. Wily looked at the seven robot masters. He then decided to take only six, ignoring Baymax.

"You're useless to me. I don't need you for my goals."

At least he was safe from Dr. Wily's plan.

(Meanwhile in Admin Space)

Hephaestus looked into his monitor in confusion. What had happened? Why was the data of a non-looper from a still-offline universe in the Megaverse? Looks like he'd have to do some debugging again.

Blues watched his breath mist as he walked through the town of Burgess, Pennsylvania. Aside from being a Hub-like world in the early 21st century, there was nothing at all familiar about it.

That suited him just fine.

He might have been feeling better about things since that Loop in Equestria, but... he still wasn't quite ready to try and make a permanent patch of it. Best to do this slow and easy. Besides, he had all the time in the multiverse to work through things.

His musings were cut off as a boy on a sled came barreling out into the street, clearly not in control of himself.

And ice suddenly and conveniently appeared right under his sled to keep it going.

Blues wasted no time and hopped on his shield, boarding after the out-of-control youth as he began scanning the situation.

He ducked and wove past pedestrians and vehicles (and some furniture that fell from a truck) after the kid, closing in as the boy headed straight for a large plow that was in no way equipped to avoid him.

"I gotcha!" he yelled as he grabbed the boy and sled in one swoop, angling his shield for a snowy park area. "Hang on!"

He hit a large snowdrift that sent him and the boy into the air and twisted so that he would impact first, sending up a large spray of snow as he did.

"Jamie!" came the worried yell of several other kids as they ran up, even as Blues stood and set the boy on his feet.

"You okay there, kid?" Blues asked the boy as he brushed snow off of him.

"Yeah!" the boy grinned widely. "That was awesome!"

"Yeah," Blues smirked as he held out a hand to catch a runaway couch before it plowed into him or the kid, "you're gonna be fine."

"Did you guys see that? I did a–" the boy, Jamie, yelled as he ran to his friends, only to trip and fall.

The kids rushed forward, only for Jamie to stand up and hold a tooth that had been knocked out of his mouth from the fall. Blues stood there chuckling as the kids began talking excitedly about the Tooth Fairy when his scanners caught something.

"That was reckless you know," the prototype robot adjusted his shades.

He received no answer.

"You," he spoke more insistently, "the humanoid cold spot on my infrared scanners."

The strange low-heat phantom started and moved in a way that suggested it was staring incredulously at him.

"I said what you did was reckless. The boy could have been hurt. Not to mention other people."

The phantom reached for him and grabbed his shoulders...

"–can see me?" asked a white-haired teen boy who had suddenly appeared perfectly overlayed by the mobile cold spot on his scanners.

"The Guardians, eh?" Blues mused from the rooftop over the boy Jamie's house. "Sounds pretty far-fetched."

"Says the futuristic time-travelling robot who can catch mythical beings with his super-robot senses despite not being a true believer at the time," the boy, Jack Frost, shot back as he pulled himself back from where he'd been peering into Jamie's window.

Blues shrugged. "Touché."

"Anyway, I'm serious," Jack continued. "Soon the current Guardians; Nicholas St. North, E. Aster Bunnymund, Toothiana, and Sanderson Mansnoozie; will be here to recruit me to fight Pitch Black before he snuffs out the light of belief in children all over the world and replaces it with fear and terror."

"And Jamie's the key to that?"

"Pretty much," Jack nodded. "He's the only one who keeps believing even when everyone else gives in. And it's because of what I did in the... baseline did you call it?"

Blues nodded. This hadn't been the first time he'd had to give the 'Welcome to the Multiverse' speech after all. Poor Jack was apparently the Anchor and only looper so far too.

"Yeah, because of what I did originally to try and get him to believe in me, because..."

"Because you were lonely," Blues finished. "I understand the feeling."

"I bet..."

"In any case, I'd like to help."

"What can you do?"

"This Pitch Black is the Boogeyman, right?" Blues smirked, getting a nod. "Well, my family has a pretty good track record against anyone with 'man' in their title."

E. Aster Bunnymund blinked in astonishment as a boy in red (wearing sunglasses despite it being the middle of the night) came to Jack's defense from the yetis and laid the two hairy bigfoots out flat in only a few seconds.

"And who might you be?" the giant anthropomorphic rabbit asked, tightening his grip on his boomerang.

"He's a friend of mine," Jack replied easily.

"One who doesn't take kindly to sneak attacks if you get my drift," the boy in red added, hefting an obling shield pointedly.

"All right, all right," Bunnymund sighed. "Told North that was a bad idea anyway..."

"So... you want to join the Guardians too, eh?" Nicholas St. North smiled as he led the robot who appeared to be a young boy into his personal workshop.

The boy who had taken one look at North and declared him to be 'like my dad, if he was a biker'.

"Not exactly," the boy's only reaction as the door to the workshop closed and locked itself was to lean casually against it.

"Ah, the cool mysterious figure," North mused as he looked the boy over and grabbed a nesting doll from his shelf. A nesting doll of himself holding crossed swords. "But that is only your surface, is it not? Just like my surface is big and intimidating to most. But what is under that surface?"

North opened the doll and pulled out the smaller one inside, the smiling jolly version of himself and handed it to the boy, who took it with only a raised eyebrow from behind his shades.

"For me, I am the jolly figure just beneath the surface, but you? Under your mysterious surface you appear to be the fearless soldier, do you not?"

"Perhaps," the boy allowed as he opened the doll further. "Though it seems you're a bit on the mysterious side yourself."

"That I am," North readily admitted, "just like how under the soldier, you carry great pain, loneliness, and distrust. I can tell. You try to hide it and speak well of your father, but there is an unresolved rift there as well. I can hear it in your voice."

The boy stared back without a word as he continued opening the nesting doll up.

"I am also fearless and caring beneath my mystery, just like I can see that you are honest and loyal. But at our centers?"

"Eyes of wonder," the boy said as he held up the smallest of North's self-portraits.

"Yes..." North blinked in surprise.

"My dad has them too."

"Indeed he must to have created you with his own hands," North mused, "but that is beside the point. This wonder is what I was born with. Eyes that have always seen the wonder in everything!" The door to the workshop opened on its own as North continued. "Eyes that see lights in the trees, and magic in the air! This wonder is what I put into the world, and what I protect in children. It is what makes me a Guardian. It is my center. Now... what is your center?"

The boy walked out after North into the greater workshop and held his silence for several long moments.

"I... don't know..." he sighed at last.

Before North could say anything further, Bunnymund came running up in a panic.

"We have a problem, mate! Trouble at the Tooth Palace!"

"Okay little red blue boy," North grinned at the robot child, "you want to ride with the Guardians? Then come with and hang on tight!"

Tooth Palace was currently empty of fairies, all of them having been carried off by equines made of animate black sand, along with collections of children's teeth, which according to Jack contained memories of childhood.

"Didn't they tell you, Jack?" Pitch Black laughed and stroked the one remaining equine made of animate black sand next to him as he monologued his plan to the Guardians below, not seeing Blues sneaking up from his blind spot. "It's great being a Guardian... but there's a catch. If enough kids stop believing, everything your friends protect - wonder, hopes and dreams - it all goes away. And little by little, so do they. No Christmas, or Easter, or little fairies that come in the night. There will be nothing. But fear and darkness and–"

He was cut off as Blues blasted his 'nightmare' into a cloud of black dust with a charged shot.

"–and those who will still stand against you!" Blues declared dramatically.

"And who are you?" Pitch gazed back at the figure of Blues in his armor with a calculating expression.

"A son of Light," Blues stated as he dropped down and swung his shield at the nightmare being.

"As amusing as this is," Pitch sneered while he dodged the robot's blows, "I have more important matters to attends to..."

And with that, Pitch dove off into the air, weaving around the attacks of the Guardians, dove into the shadows below, and was gone.

Blues snorted as he heard the Guardians goofing about in Jamie's room, waking the kid up and getting busted.

...except for Jack. Because the kid couldn't see him.

Blues shook his head of the thought. He had to admit, the tooth collection race had been... interesting. And somewhat fulfilling. He...

He saw movement in the darkness.

Pitch's nightmares.

The chase was on.

"Teeth?" Pitch blinked at Jack's declaration from the rooftop where he stood. "Why do you care about the teeth?" Pitch trailed off and looked to his side where the short golden form of Sandman stood and backed off suddenly. "Now this is who–"

He was cut off by a spinning blow from behind that knocked him off the roof.

"Did you forget about me?" Blues called down as he, Jack, and Sandy jumped after Pitch.

Pitch staggered to his feet and formed a scythe made of darkness which he swung at the three in a wide arc. Jack jumped over it as Sandy jumped back to form a pair of golden sand whips and Blues slid under the strike and came up swinging. Pitch tried to back away and swing again, only to be cut off by a blast of ice that clipped his back. In his hesitation, Sandy wrapped him in his golden sand whips and slammed him into the ground and a couple of walls before releasing him in a throw that sent Pitch tumbling down the street.

"Okay, easy!" Pitch held up his hands in surrender. A little too easily in Blues's opinion. "You can't blame me for trying, Sandy. You don't know what it's like to be weak and hated. It was stupid of me to mess with your dreams. So I'll tell you what..." Pitch's face suddenly changed to a sinister sneer. "You can have 'em back!"

Black sand suddenly erupted from everywhere around the three, forming into a massive herd of equine nightmares.

As Jack and Sandy took to the air and the sound of North's sleigh entering the fray cut the air, Blues charged forward and grabbed onto the nightmare that Pitch himself was riding.

"Get off!" Pitch snarled as the nightmare bucked and tried to throw Blues, but the prototype robot master wasn't so easy to dislodge.

As the Guardians carved through the army of nightmares left and right, Blues clawed his way up Pitch's steed, reaching out and grabbing the shadow scythe as Pitch swung it his way and using the weapon to heft himself on top of the nightmare.

"You pathetic stubborn..." Pitch growled at him as the two wrestled with Pitch's scythe for a few moments.

"Flattery get you no–" Blues stumbled as Pitch dismissed the scythe and nearly fell off, grabbing Pitch himself at the last moment, trying to pull the living nightmare down with him.

"Let go of me!" Pitch demanded as more nightmares circled around them.

One came close enough to sideswipe Blues hard enough that even blocking with his shield knocked him loose from his struggle with Pitch and into the air. Another came near and Blues let it knock the shield away in favor of grabbing on and hauling himself atop the nightmare in a smooth practiced motion.

And then his eyes widened as he saw Pitch begin to form a black arrow aimed straight for the Guardian of good dreams.

Without a second thought, he flung himself towards the floating cloud of golden sand that Sandy rode upon and rolled to his feet right at the Guardian's back.

Right as Pitch loosed his arrow.

"Urk..."

Blues looked down at the black arrow sticking out of his chest. Funny... it didn't hurt...

"BLUES!" he heard Jack yell his name as Sandy turned around to stare in horror at the arrow in his chest, clearly understanding what it meant better than Blues himself did.

"NO!" Pitch screamed his frustration as Jack sped towards the embodiment of fear in righteous fury, glowing a bright wintery blue as he did.

YES...

That was all Blues recalled before he blacked out.

COPY CHIP ACTIVATED.

SCANNING FOREIGN ENERGY.

FOREIGN ENERGY ASSIMILATED.

MASTER WEAPON 'NIGHTMARE' READY FOR USE.

Did you miss me?

ERROR: MASTER WEAPON 'NIGHTMARE' SELF-ACTIVATING...

"Honestly, it would be easier if I did write that rebellious streak out of him..."

ERROR: MASTER WEAPON 'NIGHTMARE' TARGETING NATIVE SYSTEMS...

"There's no room for last year's model."

MASTER WEAPON 'NIGHTMARE' LABELLED AS VIRAL MALWARE...

No? I missed you.

ATTEMPTING ANTI-VIRAL PURGE...

Now, now... None of that.

WARNING! ANTI-VIRAL PURGE FAILED. MASTER WEAPON 'NIGHTMARE' REMAINS ACTIVE...

"Far too free-willed. Completely unsuited to the contract. Building a new model would just take too long."

WARNING! MASTER WEAPON 'NIGHTMARE' AFFECTING COGNITIVE SYSTEMS...

"Far easier to remove the unnecessary subroutines and continue with you. You understand, don't you?"

WARNING!

I'm back for good this time.

WARNING!

Reality was screaming.

Are you sure that's not you?

"NO!" Blues yelled as he shot up suddenly in a torrent of fear, which turned to fury as he spotted the face of his tormentor. "YOU!" he yelled, turning his arm into a cannon and charging up. "I'LL NEVER LET YOU REWRITE MY MIND, DO YOU HEAR ME?!"

Do it! He was your father, and he betrayed you! He deserves to die!

"Woah, Blues, chill!" a white-haired teen interposed himself between Blues and the figure of his father... no, of North. Not Dr. Light, North. He was in the man's polar workshop. The teen was Jack. His... friend...

Bah... Something else, then...

Blues powered his arm cannon down and reformed it back into a hand.

His sister jumped in front of Rock as he fired, taking the shot to her unprotected chest.

Blues clutched his head as dark, sinister images assaulted it.

"You shot me! And you dare to call yourself our brother!" Roll accused with a gaping smoking hole in her torso.

"Hey there," Jack moved to support Blues, along with a floating cloud of golden sand, "easy now... We got you."

"Dad should have sent you to the scrap pile long ago!"

Jack and the others sat him gently back down.

Roll suddenly shifted to a blank-eyed Rock. "I mean, look," he said as he gestured from the rooftop to a city without power. Where smoke billowed from crashed vehicles and planes fell.

"It's okay," Jack told him. "You've been out for a few days, but we beat Pitch. Thanks to you saving Sandy, we drove him off before he could take another shot. Easter went off without a hitch and we got all the fairies and teeth back."

"You destroy everything you touch."

"And it's all thanks to you," Toothiana smiled gratefully.

Rock shifted into Dr. Light, who looked at Blues with total and complete disdain. "You are a failure in every way."

"No..." Blues protested, clutching his head. "I..."

"You are!" Light began to laugh, only for his features to melt into the familiar face of Dr. Wily. A Dr. Wily with eyes like Ra Moon. "You cling to your precious sense of 'self', never realizing that you lost it long ago!"

"You are very brave, my friend," North smiled.

"You cast it aside the night you cowardly ran from your father," Ra Wily continued, "and we destroyed what little was left the day we remade you to our specifications. You are now and forever a child of the darkness!"

"Yeah, mate," Bunnymund agreed.

"Admit it!"

"No...!" Blues yelled as the sinister images assaulted him, causing looks of worry to cross the Guardians faces. "I... I meant to do good..."

"Liar," a voice from behind made his systems run cold and he turned to see a familiar quadrupedal figure. One with a blue coat, magenta eyes, a rainbow tail and mane, and a look of utter loathing on her face.

"You did do good, mate," Bunnymund looked confused. As did the rest of the Guardians for that matter.

"Don't listen to those geeks. Listen to me. I'm the one who knows you best after all. The one who knows you better than the family you tossed aside like garbage. The one who always called, always wrote, always took time away from her own life to deal with your pathetic little self's pathetic little problems. I mean, you said I was your best friend, right? The one you could always trust to help you feel better when you were feeling like a little emo bitch?"

"Look," Jack spoke in a comforting tone, "whatever Pitch did to you, we can help. You just gotta believe."

"Then trust your best friend when I say that all those times I sacrificed the awesome stuff I wanted to do to help you deal with your pissy manure?"

"Believe...?" Blues laughed depressingly and closed his eyes.

"I should have never bothered."

"...I don't believe in anything..."

When he opened his eyes, he saw nothing around him save for the endless arctic expanse. Not even anomalous readings from his sensors.

The Guardians gaped as one when Blues had just... walked through them, the workshop, and out into the snow.

"Did he... just... stop believing?" Bunnymund asked what they were all thinking. "With us standing right in front of him?!"

"What did Pitch do to the boy...?" North voiced the rest.

The ever-silent Sandy firmed his features and ran to the nearest exit and floated out over the snow, Toothiana and Jack close on his heels. The Guardian of Dreams formed tendrils of golden sand that snaked towards their mutual friend, but when they got within a foot of the robot, the tendrils began to turn black. A black which tried to snake its way back to Sandy before he cut the connection.

"So..." Jack looked utterly lost, "this is what it's like to fail someone..."

"Here, boy, a scarf for your neck," Dr. Light laughed cruelly as he pulled the fabric taut in an attempt to choke the wearer.

Blues grasped frantically at the yellow fabric and tore it off, throwing it into the snow.

"No less than he deserves for what he let that man do to my daughter," Dr. Cossack declared from a judge's bench, banging his gavel.

"He's an evil, evil, person," a dirty and half-starved Kalinka agreed from a cage that hung from the ceiling.

"You can tell because he hides behind those shades of his, the coward," Tempo spat in disgust.

"I guess if he wants them so bad, we'll just have to bolt them to his head," Dr. Lalinde agreed.

Blues took his shades off before they could be used to harm him and contemplated discarding them in the snow or crushing them in his hand.

"No..." Toothiana shook her head vigorously. "I can't accept that."

The Guardian of Memories darted in front of the currently immobile robot boy and stared at his shadowed eyes.

"I know I don't have any of your teeth to do this with, but I'm the Guardian of Memories!" the Tooth Fairy declared as she focused. "That's got to count for something! So, please, if there's a happy childhood memory in you, any memory, please... remember it!"

"It's bright, father... It's hard to see..."

"You are an evil creature undeserving of happiness!"

"Heh..." Dr. Light chuckled as he pulled something out of his coat pocket. "I suppose I need to adjust the sensitivity when we get back to the lab, but until then, here."

"A foul brother!"

"What are these?"

"A worse son!"

"They're shades, son. They help people see in bright light."

"A base villain!"

"Wow..."

Blues put the shades back on and looked to where he'd dropped his scarf.

"Father, look at that!"

"You're broken."

"Oh, something caught your eye? My, but that looks like a fine scarf. And on sale too."

"Now and forever."

"Thank you, father!"

"The Break Man."

"I'm not broken," Blues whispered as he bent down to pick the scarf up and wrap it around his neck. For some reason, he felt a bit better. A bit stronger. The torment wasn't gone, but he could bear it now. "And I'm not the Break Man."

At least for a little while longer.

Not yet, perhaps. But then, we have all the time in the multiverse...

11.?) No, Wily's still not looping. Wile E. might be though. And who knows, maybe they are related...

11.X) Blues seems to be getting better. Happens most decidedly after My Mega Pony and before 11.!.

11.4) Apologies for any translation errors. I use google translate for this stuff.

English version of 11.4:

Zero stepped out of the capsule and looked himself over. This was... This was different. Usually the ultimate armor capsule just gave him armor that was black where his normal set was red, with enhancements that, while impressive for a man who couldn't have had first-hand knowledge of his systems, were still fairly lackluster in comparison to what X tended to get.

This set though... This set was still black, but it had a mouthpiece and blade-like protrusions over his shoulders that looked like vestigial wings. Ones that Zero could tell were able to manifest an energy membranes that would serve as wings. Combined with the jet propulsion system on his back and he could easily maintain flight. Then there were the wrist-mounted energy blades that were a fair bit stronger than his usual beam saber.

Yes, he could definitely get used to something like this.

11.3) Many baseline villains suffer comical breakdowns when confronted with power escalation and out-of-context abilities from loopers. Wily is one of those who can analyze out-of-context abilities and escalate right back.

11.1) The first 'Meeting of the Mega Men'.

11.11) Can't comment. Too busy laughing.

11.8675309) Yeah, something like this was gonna happen sooner or later.

11.5) After Tirek Sunstar from the Equestrian fused Loop, Rita Repulsa's really not that intimidating.

11.9) Government Issued Joe. To be continued.

11.2) Gotta love typos.

11.7) In the issue 42 of the Archie comic, the evil counterpart to Duo that I've been calling Slur as a placeholder was revealed to be named Trio (and betrayed another comrade named Quartet). I'm probably still going to call him Slur from time-to-time (because it's a cool name and the Megaverse has already been established as buggy), but he now has a canon name! One with pun potential!

Also, Han prefers to shoot first. Because in his mind, if you aren't shooting first, you may not be shooting at all.

11.10) Josuke Higashikata and his stand Crazy Diamond from JoJo's Bizarre Adventure. Because I figured that if Josuke interprets insults to his hairstyle as insults to the man who saved his life, then he'd naturally take a claim that he's disgracing the hairstyle as him disgracing that same man. Cue heroic blue screen of death.

Of course it would only work this way once, but then Wily apparently wasn't expecting it to work this way in the first place…

11.6) Baymax is adorable. Your arguments are invalid. (And I am psyched to see Big Hero 6 this weekend!)

11.!) This... This isn't good...

Battle in the Network: Failed Attempts

Battle in the Network: Failed Attempts

Forenote: Fanfiction. net doesn't like dots in between two words with no spaces. So all of the navi names will be written like so: X. exe

---

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 1 using 961|\/|A6- a|\| (406 (A|\||)1|)A73 and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

"Lan, wake up!" Megaman. exe shouted at his eternally lazy netOp.

Lan continued to snore.

"Lan, if you don't get up, you'll be late for school!" Megaman. exe tried again.

Lan's snoring was drowned out by an urgent news update.

"PET NetNews! 'WWW crime on the rise!; It says the WWW plan to control the net might be starting!"

"Wait a second," Megaman. exe paused at the news. "Has this already happen3|)4c.4l4WWW?...

ATTEMPT FAILED.

"Oh, for the love of creation!" Hephaestus yelled at his terminal. He'd set up a standard co-Anchor arrangement between that Lan kid and his spirit partner, and twin, Hub and the attempt hadn't even loaded the Anchor correctly!

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 2 using Primary Anchor candidate and 50VL-80V|\||) (0-a|\|(406 (A|\||)1|)A73.

Lan watched as the leader of Gospel, and why did he want to call him 'Sean' anyway?, laughed at himself and Chaud.

"Never thought you'd get this far, but you are too late! Bug fusion is complete! All that's left is to press this button and the SuperNavi will activate! It's name... Breadnought. exe!"

Lan blinked. 'What in the world is a breadn0V&7wnrfjr95./,...

ATTEMPT FAILED.

Hephaestus swore as he typed away. He'd gotten the primary Anchor candidate active this time, so of course now the co-Anchor wasn't loading properly.

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 3 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

"Ah, I sense it... A warrior's power!" the floating purple genie-type navi whose lower body trailed off into a wisp of smoke attached to an oil lamp declared as Megaman. exe approached. "I hope you kn0–"

The navi's form glitched and resolved into a red and white navi with green bowling balls for arms.

"–w that I am BowllllLLL–

The navi's form glitched again and returned to the genie.

"–Mistman, rank 2!111111!–"

The navi glitched again and returned to the bowling-themed navi.

'The heck...?' Megaman. exe thought to himself as the form switching only sped up.

"WwWWwwwwhHHHHHOoooo0o000000 AaaaarRReeEE33e Y0000|_|?/?HGGKDJBMB..."

ATTEMPT FAILED.

"Great, just great..." Hephaestus grumbled. The codes for a couple of netnavis named Bowlman and Mistman were vying for the same spot in events and the struggle was creating a serious error in the system. Hmm... Maybe if he paired them up, at least for the activation, it would correct the error...

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 4 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

Megaman. exe blinked as the large blue navi landed in front of him. He wasn't sure why, but he'd been expecting someone more... red.

"My name is... X..." the navi stated. "Where... am I? Are you from Maverick Hunter HhhHHHHQQqqqQQq&43t.b/8?...

ATTEMPT FAILED.

Hephaestus blinked a few times as he examined the file on the most recent failed attempt. How in Yggdrasil had X Looped in there? He poked a few related areas of code and noted that everything seemed to be working just fine...

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 5 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

Lan and Megaman. exe blinked as one when they saw the solo netnavi hanging around in the undernet. He was a lot more... purple than they had been expecting.

"Wow, you came all this way..." the purple netnavi with a bow and arrow greeted. "I am Hawkman, and I accept your chal13|\|&3!111!1!11!...

ATTEMPT FAILED.

Okay, this was no isolated incident. Somehow non-native data was leaking into the activation attempts and screwing them up.

(Leonite, with some minor additions by me)

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 6 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

"I'm Shuko... and this is my Navi, Aquaman," Lan raised an eyebrow... some of his memories were saying it was Spoutman. exe, others said that Aquaman. exe was the right name... and then Shuko showed him the Navi screen. Which probably explained why she seemed so,... confident when his memories said otherwise.

For instead of the miniature perpetually nervous water-themed navi with a spout coming out of his head, there was a navi with an orange torso, green legs, and yellow hair. With a stylized 'A' on the navi symbol and carrying a rather sturdy looking trident.

"Outrageous! Some new friends for us to meet Shuko?"

'What is this I don'7 3v3n;ekg4[5y4.

ATTEMPT FAILED.

Ah, there it was. The hole that was causing stray outside code to leak into the branch's section. A quick patch job and he would be ready to try again. Now if only the rest of it was so easy...

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 7 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

"What's wrong Megaman?" Lan asked even as he got a weird feeling that these events had happened before.

"I thought I heard Iris's voice just now..." the navi inhabiting a copybot replied, getting the same odd feeling.

"Lan, wake up!" Lan's mother called up to him as Lan sat up in his bed confused, and a moment later he heard the news that WWW crime was on the rise.

"Didn't we do this years ag&Ggg&&&gg&&&7..."

ATTEMPT FAILED.

Hephaestus stared at his terminal. That was not supposed to happen... Not while the Loop was active anyway...

(Leonite)

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 8 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

Lan and Megaman. exe were on edge. How couldn't they be? Both knew at this point that they had memories that they shouldn't... and something weird was going on. Still, things seemed to be going as smoothly as ever... and considering that they were currently fused and staring down Dark Megaman that should say something about their lives.

"Stop right there Dark Megaman!" Lan shouted as he raised his buster at Dark Megaman.

"Lan, something feels off. More than it should be." Hub's voice spoked directly into Lan's head due to the cross fusion, even as Dark Megaman started chuckling.

"Dark Megaman? No!" The copycat stated... before he grabbed his face and started pulling... before it came off like a mask, revealing Maylu's face, but with plenty of black make up. "I am Dark MaYLu" he %!i#d %^

"N#^O$#%#?/OOOO!" Lan and M/gaman s screamed, their body glowing brightly... Lan had suspected that it might happen again, so the two were attempting to synchronize to stop it. And it was working it wQ^%#^l-...

ATTEMPT FAILED.

ADVISE LOCKING OF 'FULL SYNCHRO' ABILITY UNTIL INCREASED STABILITY CAN BE FOUND.

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt 9 using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

Lan shook off the weird dream he'd had and got out of bed. As he went down for breakfast, he noted that his house seemed a little... off somehow.

"Megaman? Does something seem off to you?" he asked his netnavi as he grabbed some toast and wished his mom good morning. She didn't seem to hear him.

"Not really, Lan," the navi replied from his PET as Lan made sure he had everything and opened the front door. "Weird dream?"

"Yeah, how'd you–"

Lan froze as he saw what was outside.

"–know?" Lan finished weakly.

"Lan?" Megaman. exe asked with worry for his operator. "What's wrong?"

Lan wordlessly picked up the PET and held it so that Megaman. exe could see the landscape before him.

"What in...?" the navi's eyes widened at the impossible sight.

The entire world, from the ground to the sky, as far as the eye could see, was buggy. As in corrupted net code buggy. Nothing matched up how it was supposed to and colors were not only a matter of whim, they'd apparently decided to detach themselves from the objects they were supposed to be on.

"The hell is happ3|\|!|\|&$%V%...

ATTEMPT FAILED.

(OathToOblivion)

Hephaestus cursed. Section 4, the 'Battle Network' section, was being particularly frustrating to get online. Specifically, it was that damn second half of the baseline. How was he supposed to fix that?!

"Have no fear, the mighty Apollo is here!" And then, of course, there was him. Apollo, the admin for the Solar Boy Django Loops, which had a Tandem Run that intersected Battle Network a number of times.

"Having problems, brother?" Apollo asked.

"No, I'm making a sandwich; yes, I'm having problems! It's that blasted second half of the baseline where your Loop comes in! Yggdrasil is getting two conflicting sections of baseline for every section that's organized into a game in the Hub! There was a similar problem earlier, but that was much easier to fix than this! And I can't even access the Anchors' memories for this because that specific part got corrupted. They don't know any more than we do! So what do you think I'm doing?!" he ranted to the actually-quiet-for-once Sun God.

Apollo considered it for a second before replying. "...Why not just combine the conflicting details?"

Hephaestus froze, before facepalming. 'It's a sad day when Apollo points out what should be obvious,' he thought. 'I need a vacation if I'm slipping like this.'

Attempt 1) I guess Lan never Woke Up. Badum-tish.

Attempt 2) Mmmmm... Breadnought... Dangit, now I'm hungry...

Attempt 3) Oh, just call them the MistBowl, invite a couple of sports teams over to play, and be done with it.

Attempt 4) X got a little lost there...

Attempt 5) Hawkman is clearly not Larkman.

Attempt 6) To those who don't get it, Aquaman from Batman the Brave and the Bold. Because they have the same names.

Attempt 7) Lolwut?

Attempt 8) I think Lan and Hub might have broken something...

Attempt 9) Yep, they broke something.

Thanksgiving Mega-Mini-Special

Thanksgiving Mega-Mini-Special

Roll hummed to herself as she swept the lab. The current Loop was a rather strange variant, partly due to what she and Rock had taken to calling the 'flashback glitch'.

The way it seemed to work was that, upon Awakening, Loop memories didn't fully integrate. Instead, they only gave general information on their current lives, the Loop setting, and a few other things that were immediately relevant. Further Loop memories only integrated when they became relevant to the situation. Even knowledge of good friends and family weren't accessible unless the person(s) were directly encountered or spoken of by someone else.

The other thing that made this a strange variant was that Dr. Wily had never worked at the lab. At least not that she or Rock could tell from their currently integrated Loop memories.

It may have been a strange variant, but that didn't make it a bad one.

"Roll?" the voice of her father cut into her thoughts.

"Yes dad?" she turned to face the man who was looking rather worried.

"You remember that we agreed to host Thanksgiving dinner this year, right?"

Roll blinked. She did recall that. Even though the holiday wasn't relevant in every Loop, in this one Dr. Light and several of his friends without extended families had decided to get together for the annual feast, happening... Oh dear...

That was another thing about the 'flashback glitch'. It could be all too easy to lose track of the time and date if you weren't directly reminded.

"Yes... I'm afraid I lost track of the date working on my latest project and with the run on the grocery stores this time every year, I'm afraid there's only one place left that will have what we need. If you're willing to go, I'm going to have to give you some combat upgrades, and..."

Roll got a sinking feeling in her processor that seemed to come with the sense of more Loop memories about to integrate. She really hoped this wasn't what she thought it was.

"You don't mean...?"

"Yes, Roll..." Dr. Light sighed. "I'm afraid I have to ask you to go to the Wily Mart."

'You know, even if it is Wily, having to wear my Mega Woman armor to go to the grocery store feels so weird...' Roll thought to herself as she walked through the sliding doors of the Wily Mart. In front of her spread out a large shopping area, mostly due to the fact that the various grocery departments needed plenty of room for combat, separated out by a nice grid of 'no combat' zones where the shoppers present (all combat-modified robots of one sort or another) kept their carts so their intended purchases didn't get damaged.

"Welcome to Wily Mart!" the recorded voice of Dr. Wily greeted her cheerfully as she stepped inside. "Where you can enjoy quality products at everyday low prices! Assuming you survive that is! Bwa-ha-ha-ha-ha!"

"Okay, that's more like it," Roll found she felt strangely more at ease with Wily declaring his intent to destroy all challengers as she grabbed a cart and began to plan out her shopping list. Many shoppers claimed that the Wily Mart Master in charge of the kitchenware department was the hardest to deal with, which meant there was a good chance his weapon would be able to help in defending against the rest of the store's sentries.

"You wish to claim great deals on food preparation devices?" the cylindrical iron-armored glass-topped robot declared as he faced off against her. "Then you must first overcome the mighty Pot Man and his Frying Pan of DOOM!"

Roll blinked a few times.

"You do realize that makes you sound like a proponent of controlled substances, right?" she asked.

"DAMNIT!" Pot Man fumed, his armor actually turning slightly red as his systems heated up from sheer fury. "I AM NOT RELATED TO DRUGS ! WHEN WILL YOU PEOPLE GET THAT THROUGH YOUR STEEL-PLATED SKULLS?!"

"Okay, sorry, I–"

"IT'S TOO LATE FOR APOLOGIES!" Pot Man screamed as he dashed forward, swinging his frying pan weapon in a power strike.

Roll had beaten Pot Man and claimed both the necessary cookware and his Frying Pan weapon. She'd then made her way to the produce section to get the fruit and vegetables needed for several dishes, only to come up a bit short at the sight of the Wily Mart Master that was in charge of the produce department.

"I am the noble guardian of the freshest produce found anywhere!"

He wielded a giant leek like a war baton in one thin noodly hand, attached to an equally thin noodly arm. The other arm and both legs matched.

"Defender of the choicest farm-grown fruits and vegetables in all the world!"

His face consisted of a monocle, giant eyes, nose, mustache and lips and atop his head was a military hat. The head itself was more his entire body. Large, brown...

"I am–"

...and in the recognizably irregular shape of a well-known root vegetable.

"Mr. Potato Head?" Roll blinked curiously.

The vegetable-themed robot began to fume and emit a smell not unlike a baked potato.

"Captain Tater! Captain Tater!" he raged. "Great champion of health! Not a children's toy!"

"Whoa, hey, it's an honest–"

"LEEK SLAP!"

Roll blocked the vegetable baton with the Frying Pan weapon she'd gotten from Pot Man, used the force as leverage to send herself into a spinning strike that put her behind her opponent and in the perfect position to clock him upside his giant head.

"Oh-ho-ho-ho-ho-ho!" the floral-themed female robot laughed as Roll stepped into the floral department. "If you want a nice floral arrangement, then you'll have to best me, the superb Flower Woman, and my Bouquet Bombs first cutie!"

Roll blinked and considered the female model with armor in the model of a formal gown and seemingly made from giant flower petals.

"You do know I'm also a girl, right?"

"I don't limit myself to a single gender model, dearie," Flower Woman smirked and whipped her arm out, producing a hand-held bouquet that she prepared to throw at her opponent.

"ATTENTION FLORAL DEPARTMENT. PLEASE DIAL 201."

"Oh, bother," Flower Woman sighed as she flicked her arm again to throw the bouquet bomb straight up where it detonated harmlessly about halfway to the high ceiling. "Please excuse me, I have to take this."

As Flower Woman went to pick up the employee phone, Roll quietly and quickly made her selection and snuck up behind Flower Woman while she was speaking to whoever was on the other end of the line.

"Thanks for all your help!" Roll smiled as she tagged Flower Woman with her hand and scanned her systems before taking off towards her cart with her selection.

"Hey! Wait–" Flower Woman sputtered in indignation and confusion. "YOU CAN'T DO THAT!"

"Watch me!" Roll stuck her tongue out as she continued to retreat.

"Wow you're pretty good," Roll admitted as she used her Frying Pan weapon to block the Cleaver weapon swung by... well, a giant anthropomorphic robotic shrimp. Also known as Fresh Shrimp, head of the butcher department.

"Ah, it is always good to have one's skills appreciated!" Fresh Shrimp beamed as he continued to spiral-slice the ham in between his attempts to attack her. "Especially from one so skilled themselves! Will you be needing anything else today? We have some excellent salmon..."

"Will that be all ma'am?" the robot master in charge of the deli and bakery, who frankly looked like a walking sandwich made from a giant baguette, asked as he finished gathering the selection of rolls and cheeses Roll had requested.

Honestly, it had Roll somewhat on edge. All of the others had tried to attack her, so when this one hadn't, it made her wonder what he was up to.

"Well, then, let me wrap that up for you ! Sandwich Wrap!" The seemingly helpful robot master thrust his arms out at her, and a stream of plastic wrap shot out to bind her in place.

Roll jumped over the attack and called up the Leek Slap and swung it like a sword as she descended upon her opponent.

"Thank you, come again!" Sandwich Man chuckled as he collapsed from the blow.

"I'm the Spice Girl!" the... walking hourglass-shaped wide-bottomed saltshaker (Roll had to suppress a groan at the pun hidden in that) grinned cheekily as she saw the yellow-armored shopper. "And you wannabe spice up your life? You something kinda funny, girl! Let's see if you can't dance! Salt and Pepper Blaster!"

Roll dodged the white and black shotgun blasts and grabbed some basil.

"Come on sister! I know you wanna have some fun!" Spice Girl shouted as she continued firing. "Let's get all Saturday night divas up in here! Who do you think you are?"

"You're just an endless barrel of namesake reference, aren't you?" Roll sighed as she called up the Frying Pan again and moved to engage. She had more stuff to get and being shot at wasn't helping her get it.

"VIVA FOREVER!"

"Oh-ho-ho-ho-ho!" Roll's latest opponent laughed, and she could really only stare as he did so. The robot was... well, he might look like Humpty Dumpty, were it not for a familiar pair of circular shades, an equally familiar orange mustache, or the red and black design on his armor shell. Not to mention the voice that matched. "You dare to challenge the Egg Man? Lord and master of the Dairy department? Have at you! Egg Knocker!"

Roll summoned the Frying Pan and blocked the projectiles fired at her, the eggs shattering and spraying sticky egg goo everywhere when they struck the cast iron surface.

"No...!" Egg Man gulped as he spotted her weapon. "Not the Frying Pan!"

"It's mine!" a blue robot tugged on one end of a package of toilet paper.

"As if! I saw it first!" a purple robot heaved back from the other end of the same package.

"Well I grabbed it first!" the blue one retorted and yanked again.

"Um..." Roll tried to politely interject, "could you perhaps do that somewhere you aren't blocking th–"

"BUTT OUT!" they both yelled at her before going right back to squabbling over the increasingly damaged piece of merchandise.

Roll sighed and once more activated the Frying Pan weapon and clocked them both over the head so she could get to an intact package of toilet paper. Sure, there might be more embarrassing things to run out of when guests were over, but it couldn't be many. Better get more paper towels while she was there too.

"Aww..." a voice whined behind her, causing her to turn around and see... A giant anthropomorphic roll of toilet paper with the end of the roll feeding into the arm shaped like a cannon. "I was enjoying that..."

"Let me guess... Tissue Man?"

"Got it in one, miss!" the robot beamed before aiming its cannon at her. "But since you took out my entertainment, you'll have to substitute! TP Blaster!"

Roll dashed to the side to avoid the streams of tissue sent her way, regardless of how silly it sounded as a weapon, and returned fire with the Salt and Pepper Blaster, only to blink as her opponent started... laughing?

"Nice try, miss!" Tissue Man chuckled and fired his weapon again, forcing Roll to somersault out of the way. "But I'm specially quilted for ultra shock absorption!"

"How about eggs?" Roll asked as she switched to the Egg Knocker. She was so using this guy's weapon on Skull Fortress next Halloween.

"Ah... less fond of those..." Tissue Man replied nervously.

Roll sighed heavily as she brought the paper products back to her cart and...

'Wait... where's my cart?' she blinked at the distinct lack of such. 'No... don't tell me...'

Roll looked around frantically for any sign of her hard-won groceries and spotted a subdued gray female-model robot trying to quietly sneak away with a cart that looked very much like the one Roll was missing. Right down to how the groceries were stacked.

"Hey! That's my cart!" Roll yelled as she took off after the cart thief.

"I don't see your name on it!" the gray robot yelled back as she began running herself.

"Thief!" Roll yelled as she jumped and tackled the other robot and began wrestling with her. "Give me back my groceries!"

"Are you nuts?" the gray robot yelled back. "Get off of me! Quick!"

Suddenly both of them were engulfed in the light of teleportation and found themselves in an area labeled 'Customer Service'.

"Aw, hell..." the gray robot cursed. "Now you've done it you idiot."

"Excuse me?!" Roll snapped. "I'm not the one going around stealing other people's carts!"

"It seems we have a cart dispute shoppers!" Wily's voice cackled over the intercom. "Which means only one thing! Customer Service Trial By Combat!"

A giant hulking red figure rose up from behind the customer service desk. A rather familiar figure with one giant eye in the middle of a semi-solid red mass with thick arms and legs.

"Your customer service representative today is the Red Devil! The cart goes to the last shopper standing!"

"Damnit! I have a budget to meet!" the gray robot whined in a voice Roll could now deduce was being transmitted from a distance as the Red Devil began its assault.

"Well next time get your own damn groceries !" Roll spat back as she dodged the masses of red from the Red Devil's body and prepared her counter attack. She still had a list to finish!

Roll grumbled to herself as she approached the frozen foods section. That had... Seriously, the only good thing she could say about the 'customer service' challenge was that her cart and its contents were locked to her. By way of a selective forcefield.

In any case, she was almost done with her list. Just a few frozen vegetables, some whipped cream, a few pie crusts, and–

"Attention shoppers! This is the guardian of the frozen foods department, Frozen Turkey, letting you know that the Wily Mart has only two frozen turkeys left!"

'Sonofa...' Roll swore as the store began rumbling from every shopper present making a beeline for the frozen foods department. 'How the hell did I leave that for last?!'

She hated how the flashback glitch worked at times...

Roll breathed heavily to circulate precious cooling air over her taxed systems as she glared down Frozen Turkey, a pile of downed shoppers in her wake.

"Aha!" the giant frost-covered anthropomorphic turkey robot gobbled with glee. "One challenger has emerged from the pack, but can she defeat the final obstacle and claim her prize? Let's find out! Refrigeration Ray!"

Roll dodged the cold ray from the robot's optics and turned both arms into cannons. "I am out of patience buster! Salt and Pepper Blaster!"

"Owowowowow!" Frozen Turkey yelped repeatedly as the shotgun-like blasts laid him out in short order. "Alas, the guardian has fallen! Step forth and claim your prize, noble shopper!"

Roll resisted the urge to shoot the robot again to shut him up and approached the display that held the final few frozen turkeys...

...only to find it empty.

"Oh, come on !" she yelled in frustration.

"Ah, someone else grabbed it while you were distracted?" Frozen Turkey asked from his prone position. "Sorry, but that does happen."

Roll sighed. At least she could... 'Wait a second...'

She turned an ominous glare at the downed turkey robot.

"It...? As in... singular ...?"

"Um... yeah?" Frozen Turkey blinked.

"I thought you said there were two left..."

"Well, yeah!" Frozen Turkey grinned. "That one and me!"

Roll remained silent as the robot laughed at his little joke. Quietly, she formed the Frying Pan and began to smack the cast iron portion into her palm repeatedly as she approached the downed robot master.

"Er... wait a sec... AAHHH! It was a joke! I'm sorry! GYAAAH! THAT DOESN'T BEND THAT WAY!"

"Did you find everything you needed?" the Joe model running the checkout counter Roll had decided to use asked.

"Everything but the bleeping frozen turkey," Roll grumbled, not even caring enough to dedicate runtime to disabling her vocal censor.

"Ah, that," the Checkout Joe rolled its single optic. "He pulls that every year. He'll probably have a fresh shipment in tomorrow morning, bright and early for the last-minute battle royale rush."

"You're assuming he can pull his head out of his–"

The Checkout Joe snorted in amusement as he began to scan the items while another sacked them. "Anyway, how will you be paying today? Cash, credit, check, or try to rush the exit?"

"Credit," Roll sighed heavily. "Is that last one seriously an option?"

"Yep. Pretty popular one with many shoppers too. Though we'd have to do our best to stop you of course. Plus you wouldn't have the option of getting help out to your vehicle."

"I think I can carry the groceries myself just fine, thanks," Roll gave the Joe a bemused look.

"Oh, the offer's not to help carry the groceries. It's more of an honor guard to protect against the opportunists who like to ambush successful shoppers in the parking lot. Red guy who grabbed the last turkey elected not to, but he also went out through the roof so I doubt he needed it."

Roll blinked. "Okay, I think I'll take you up on that offer."

"Excellent choice, ma'am," the Joe's optic morphed into an 'eye grin'. "If you would just swipe your card, please."

Roll went to do so, and stopped as she processed the total of her purchase. "Wow... that is a lot lower than I was expecting... How do you afford to stay in business?"

"Web broadcasts, DVD sales of battle highlights, and you'd be surprised how much name brand companies like the idea of shoppers literally fighting over their products. And since you've paid for your purchase, we'll be happy to send you a highlight reel of your shopping experience free of charge."

Roll pondered that for a long moment. "...Oh, why not?"

"Oh, hey Roll!" Rock greeted as she brought the groceries in. "How was shopping?"

"Two words: Wily. Mart."

"Ouch... Still, everything's set for tomorrow once we thaw the turkey with dad's instant defroster."

"Er..." Roll got a pained look. "About that... Someone else grabbed the last one before I could..."

"Someone in red?" Rock asked, grinning as he held up a familiar yellow scarf. "It seems a certain someone left it on the front porch wrapped in this shortly before you got back. He..." Rock's smile fell as he held out the item to Roll and continued, "he left a note too. Seems he won't be joining us for a while..."

Roll blinked and accepted the scarf from Rock, taking a moment to read the note pinned to the fabric.

Sorry I won't be joining you this time. Or perhaps anytime for the foreseeable future. I've... had something of a relapse recently and I'm not sure how much I can trust myself around you... or father... Especially father. I can handle it for now though and I'm meeting lots of interesting people in my travels. Anyway, hope you have a good holiday.

Your brother,

Blues - .

-) To everyone who celebrates with their family at this time of year, and to all those who for whatever reason can't, I wish you the best.

The Defenders of Wily Mart:

Frozen Turkey (Frozen Foods) - Refrigeration Ray - Weakness: Salt & Pepper Blaster/Frying Pan

Spice Girl (Dry Goods) - Salt & Pepper Blaster - Weakness: TP Blaster/Frying Pan

Egg Man (Dairy Department) - Egg Knocker - Weakness: Frying Pan

Tissue Man (Household Items) - TP Blaster -Weakness: Egg Knocker

Pot Man (Kitchenware) - Frying Pan - Weakness: Refrigeration Ray

Captain Tater (Produce Department) - Leek Slap - Weakness: Cleaver/Frying Pan

Sandwich Man (Deli & Bakery) - Sandwich Wrap - Weakness: Leek Slap/Frying Pan

Flower Woman (Floral Department) - Bouquet Bomb - Weakness: Sandwich Wrap/Frying Pan

Fresh Shrimp (Butcher Department) - Cleaver - Weakness: Bouquet Bomb/Frying Pan

Red Devil (Customer Service) - Weakness: Bouquet Bomb

Checkout Joes (Checkout)

Battle in the Network: Do it Again

Battle in the Network: Do it Again

"Okay," Hephaestus said, mostly to himself, "the conflicting baselines are as combined as they're going to get without making things worse. Code leaks have been plugged, general stability has been increased to where the 'Full Synchro' ability can be restored, and the Anchor and soul-bound co-Anchor candidates are ready to go."

"The mighty Apollo then hereby decrees that this party shall be started!" the sun god declared from where he had somehow set up a reclining beach chair with his portable terminal in Hephaestus's office. One of the Valkyries, Brynhildr, had a sour expression as she set down a cooler filled with a variety of drinks and snacks. Enough that Hephaestus would be completely surprised if there needed to be a second trip. "Hey, thanks babe!" Apollo gave the Aesir warrior his sunniest smile.

Brynhildr turned to glare at Apollo with a look that would have sent Ares running to hide behind Hera's skirts. Apollo, proving his general lack of good sense, didn't seem intimidated. She then bent down, reached over, and grabbed the sun god's ear and twisted it painfully, getting a satisfying yelp out of the eternal bachelor (and self-proclaimed playboy) as she spoke from no more than an inch away.

"If you ever hit on me or my shield-sisters like you've been doing again, I will personally carve out your spleen and make you eat it," she hissed. A moment later, she had released Apollo's ear and stormed out into the reception area, slamming the door in such a way that made very clear she, and probably Herfjötur and Eir as well, would not be returning so long as the sun god with the over-inflated sense of self-importance was there.

"Such a way with the ladies you have," Hephaestus tried to hide his smirk. Though he didn't try too hard.

"Yeah, well," Apollo rubbed his ear and tried to salvage what remained of his dignity, "the mighty Apollo would never use his A-game on another dude's hotties. Totally against the man-code and all that."

"Uh-huh," Hephaestus rolled his eyes. Granted, Apollo was far from the worst womanizer in the heavens. Mostly he was an incurable flirt with little-to-no appreciation for tact, but he never resorted to any of the, in his own words 'sleazeballing', tactics. (1) Mostly because he valued what little familial love and respect his twin sister, the moon goddess Artemis, still had for him too much to risk it for a fling. "Well, all that's left is for you to approve the Tandem Run with your boy Django and we're good to go."

"Oh, of course!" Apollo recovered. "The mighty Apollo will be happy to do this for you, dear brother, once you sooth his concerns over any possible dangers!"

Hephaestus sighed. "For the last time, with the activation of the first few sections of this branch and the breaking-up of the composite viral consciousness, there is no longer any danger of another Crash event! Your Anchor is in no danger of permanent damage!"

"The mighty Apollo accepts your assurances, and approves this Loop!" Apollo somehow managed to pose grandly in his beach chair, holding a glass of lemonade with one of those little umbrellas that he hadn't had a moment ago, and hitting a key on his portable terminal.

Hephaestus just rolled his eyes and started the Loop.

Yggdrasil Log: Linked Loop activation attempt X using Primary Anchor candidate and soul-bound co-Anchor candidate.

"What's up with the funky numbering?" Apollo asked suddenly. "You told the mighty Apollo everything was cool."

"This branch has been doing that lately," Hephaestus admitted. "It's a minor and benign issue, which means it's a lot further down my to-do list than this activation Loop is."

"Ah, cool bro," Apollo nodded in a way he probably thought made him look wise and tolerant. (2)

"Lan, wake up!" Megaman. exe yelled from his PET.

Lan continued snoring.

"If you don't get up, you'll be late for school!" Megaman. exe yelled again, and then paused. That was weird. He had this feeling like he'd had this feeling that he'd done this before. 'Is there such a thing as recursive deja-vu?'

Lan grumbled as he started to wake up.

Suddenly, the PET lit up as a news alert came through. "PET NetNews! 'WWW crime on the rise!' It says the WWW plan to control the net might be starting!"

"Ugh..." Lan moaned as he sat up. "That's weird, I could swear I felt I'd heard this before before. Is there such a thing as recursive deja-vu?"

"That's funny," Megaman. exe blinked from the PET, "I was just thinking the same thing. Hey, you've got mail from Dad, too! It says 'Sorry I couldn't get off work Sunday, I'll be home soon. Here's a present for you'! And there's some BattleChip data attached!"

"Cool," Lan yawned. "Maybe it'll take my mind of this crazy dream I had."

"You too, huh?" Megaman. exe sympathized.

"Yeah, it..." Lan paused for a moment. "Wait, can NetNavis even dream?"

"Dunno," Megaman. exe admitted. "But I don't know what else to call it. Something that freaky couldn't have possibly been real." (3)

"Yo dawg," Apollo did his best 'gangsta' impression, "we heard you like deja-vu! So we put deja-vu in your deja-vu so you can think you done this before while you think you done this before!"

"Are you going to do this the entire time?" Hephaestus groaned. Apollo's answering grin didn't reassure him. (4)

Lan was in shock. Everything happening since waking up that day had been so... familiar. Like he and Megaman. exe had done it before. Even... even this.

They had defeated Magicman. exe only for Wily to transmit some LifeVirus data that let the wizard-themed navi hit Megaman. exe with a super-powerful attack that had left him critical. It... it was just...

"Lan..." the voice of Chaud cut into his thoughts as he held out a program chip of some kind. "Your father gave me this... here."

Lan took the program chip on autopilot and plugged it into his PET for analysis. "Hub. bat...?"

This... this too seemed familiar, and now Lan was getting a sense of what was about to happen. But... it wasn't possible... was it?

He could just hear an incoming call being made.

"Dr. Hikari," Chaud spoke to the person on the other end, Lan's father. "I'm sorry, I was too late..."

"It's fine, Chaud," Dr. Hikari waved off the apology. "Lan, listen to me! You can still save Megaman!"

"But..." Lan started to protest automatically before the weird pre-emptive deja-vu feeling hit again. "Okay... what do I do?"

"Apply the Hub. bat to Megaman," his father replied, "there may still be time... But before you use Hub. bat, I have to tell you something. It might make it... hard for you to use Megaman... OK?"

"I..." Lan hesitated before gathering his courage. "I'll do anything if it might save Megaman!"

"Then, listen..." Dr. Hikari began. "About 10 years ago, I was working on a new kind of Navi..."

"Lan..." Apollo wheezed in a deep voice, like that Anakin kid did when he got stuck in a life support suit, "he... is your brother! Join with Hub and become more powerful than Wily can imagine! Go forth and defeat the LifeVirus with your immense and powerful Schwartz, and once you have save the world, you and your brother shall use that same immense and powerful Schwartz to woo the fair Mayl and her navi Roll as your girlfriends! ...Holding off, of course, on certain activities until you're older because you crazy kids aren't ready for that yet."

"This is seriously what you do when you think no one is watching, isn't it?" Hephaestus deadpanned.

"Actually, I do that all the time," Apollo grinned.

Hephaestus facepalmed. (5)

Lan watched as the Hub. bat finished loading. He knew what his... brother... was going to say, but he found it didn't really matter to him. So long as he came back.

"Hub!" he yelled into the PET. "It's me, Lan! Wake up!"

"La..n...?" the navi groaned as he sat up. "What happened to me? Did you... call me Hub?"

"Hub..." Dr. Hikari admitted. "I've told Lan everything. We used the Hub. bat to bring you back after your injury..."

"I don't care that you never told me," Lan pressed on. "I'm just glad you're alright!"

"Heh..." the navi with a human soul rubbed the back of his head. "I know the feeling. I was always glad just seeing you happy even if I couldn't be out there with you."

"So..." Lan hesitated. Even if he thought he knew the answer, the question still needed to be asked, "how do we do this now, you and me? I mean, you're not just my navi, you're my brother..."

"Just be yourself!" the blue navi laughed. "Same as always! And I'll be myself, Megaman!"

"...Right," Lan smiled. "...OK! Let's go, Megaman!"

Wily stared in utter shock. That Hikari boy and his navi had... defeated the LifeVirus? Not just defeated, they'd trounced it! Danced around every attack like they could see it coming a mile away! "M-M-My LifeVirus!" he stuttered. "What, what, What have you done!? My baby! My WWW! Nooooo!"

"Warning! Warning!" alarms began to blare. "Virus leak! All systems malfunctioning! Self-destruct sequence activated!"

"Next time, don't build your evil lair like a pinto, you jerk," Apollo nasally mimicked the alarm in Wily's lair. (6)

Despite himself, Hephaestus snorted in amusement.

"Wow..." Lan muttered to himself for the umpteenth time.

"Yeah," Megaman. exe agreed. "That was... a lot easier than I remember it being..."

"You know..." Lan began musing as more of those weird deja-vu dreams came back to him. "There's those rumors of a navi having stolen the LifeAura data. You think we could take him?" (7)

Megaman. exe thought for a moment and imaged of a black and gold navi in a brown cloak came to him. Images of how the strange NetNavi moved, fought, and a name... Bass. exe. "You know, I think we could!"

"Ooo..." Apollo winced as he watched the action. "That's gonna leave a mark."

"Indeed," Hephaestus agreed. "He is a very powerful and skilled combatant."

"Lan, gimme something to work with here!" the strange blue NetNavi yelled in desperation as he did his best to dodge the Air Bursts being fired at him repeatedly. Why this foolish NetNavi come to challenge him was of little consequence. There were always challengers after him. Navis and NetOps who thought they were more than pathetic cannon fodder to one such as him. Though this one was proving surprisingly resilient. Most navis would have been deleted already from the hits this one had taken in their fight.

"Coming atcha!" the NetOp's voice yelled. "Program Advance! Omega Cannon 3!"

The repeated cannon blasts came slow to his eyes, and were easy to avoid. The ones he had to that is. Well, most of them...

The blue navi gulped and said something to his NetOp that was of little concern. A call for retreat if the fact that he jacked out shortly after was any indication. But he let the navi go in favor of fingering a new tatter in his cloak.

"Interesting..." the dark figure grinned. "Not many can do even this much to me... You have potential little blue navi..."

Oh, yes... He'd let the navi go. Let him run and grow stronger so he could return and present a proper challenge. He had so few worthy challengers as it was…

Lan groaned as he lay in his room. It had been almost a month since he and Megaman. exe had gotten their collective butts kicked by that strange dark navi... Bass. exe...

And those weird dreams hadn't stopped. If anything, they were getting clearer. The latest ones were about some red virus navi named–

"Lan!" Megaman. exe protested. "If you have time to lay around, you have time to do your homework!"

"I can't help it!" Lan moaned. "Those dreams about that viral navi have been eating at me. I mean, he didn't ask to be made as a dangerous virus! He could have been a great friend, but Chaud and Protoman wouldn't listen! If... if only we'd found that sauce file we could have saved him..."

"A saucy file?" Apollo quirked an eyebrow. "The mighty Apollo thinks you two are a little young to be hanging around those parts of the net."

"Hush, I'm trying to work here," Hephaestus hissed at the sun god.

"Don't worry," Apollo waved Hephaestus off, "the Mighty Apollo already sent the location of the coveted data to them in their dreams."

Hephaestus blinked. "How...? Right..." the forge god pinched the bridge of his nose. "Prophecy is one of your domains."

"Source file, Lan," Megaman. exe rolled his eyes from the PET. He understood Lan's concern, and shared it to a great extent. But moping about events that never happened wasn't getting anything done. "Which you would know if you did your homework!"

The PET chose that moment to beep with a news alert.

"Mail News:" Megaman. exe read. "Damage by the new type of virus known as the 'Zero Virus' is spreading. The Zero Virus infects Navis instead of electronic devices, and adversely affects their functions. No effective vaccine is available yet, so the only possible response to an infection is to turn off your PET."

Navi and NetOp were silent for several moments as Lan read his other e-mails.

"Lan..." Megaman. exe spoke up as the fact that current events matched their latest dreams sunk in. "You don't think...?"

"Only one way to find out," Lan declared and prepared to jack his navi into the net.

Lan smiled to himself as he guided Megaman. exe towards the link to the Zero Account. Now that they had the link code that Starman. exe had guarded, it was smooth sailing. With one short necessary detour...

"Huh?" a program asked as they moved to enter a tunnel area. "Why are you headed down there? That's the 'Data Graveyard'... nothing down there but trash data about to be processed..."

"Friend of ours left something down there," Megaman. exe smiled as he dropped down.

A few minutes of searching, blasting a few stray viruses, and they found it. (8)

"My, what an interesting smell you've discovered," Apollo tried to do an impression of the two being observed. It was somewhat ruined by the fact that he was trying to keep from chuckling.

Hephaestus just sighed. It was so easy to forget that Apollo was one of the ones who helped write the precognitive simulation protocols that they all used to predict potential Loop scenarios.

"Here it is..." Megaman. exe whispered in awe as he gathered the mystery data crystal and analyzed it, "right where our dreams said it would be..."

"Yeah..." Lan breathed in reply. "Could it be that... we're not dreaming Megaman? Maybe... maybe we're... remembering?"

"Things that haven't happened yet?" the navi quirked an eyebrow. "That's crazy. If something hasn't happened, you can't remember it."

Both of them could tell that despite the navi's assured tone, he was wondering the same thing Lan was.

"Anyway, we should send this to dad so he can get to work on it," Lan broke the silence.

"Right," Megaman. exe nodded as he began the transmission process.

"Honeys and gentledudes!" Apollo proclaimed as the Anchor and co-Anchor candidate faced off against the sapient mortal virus. "The bout you've all been waiting for! EXE versus Zero! Fight!"

Hephaestus just watched as the two clashed. The redemption of Zero. exe may not have been necessary for the successful completion of baseline events, but... but over the long course of getting this branch to the point of even cursory looping stability and watching his assigned Anchors (9) struggle he'd come to appreciate their attitude all the more. Stand tall in the face of adversity. Never back down from the oppressors. And redeem everyone you could.

It wasn't necessary, no, but he wanted them to have this victory nonetheless.

"Your power is beyond specifications," the viral navi Zero. exe praised his opponents. The battle had been close, but the loss was his. Perhaps as it should be. "So this is the force that beat the WWW! What is it... the power of friendship? Friendship... It's a feeling I've never experienced before, but I think I understand the strength it brings... Well, you beat me. Go ahead, kill me." (10)

"No," Megaman. exe refused.

"Yeah," Lan agreed. "Look, you didn't choose to be a virus. To be something everyone views as inherently evil. And... we can tell. You aren't evil."

Megaman. exe picked up as his NetOp trailed off. "You've become something more than a virus and you don't have to live that way anymore if you don't want to. Come with us," he held out his hand. "Let us help you."

Megaman. exe suddenly turned and formed one arm into a sword as he blocked a blade strike aimed for Zero. exe by another red navi.

"Don't be a fool, Megaman!" Protoman. exe yelled as he tried to force his way past the blue navi and attack Zero. exe.

"Protoman?!" Lan yelled. "What are you doing?!"

"Lan, think rationally!" the voice of Chaud sounded from Protoman. exe's link. "This is a heinous, evolving virus... If you don't finish it off, there's no telling how much damage it'll do!"

"You're wrong, Chaud!" Lan yelled back as the boys' two navis continued to struggle. One to delete the viral navi Zero. exe and the other to save him.

"Everyone, stop!" a new voice cut into the confrontation. The voice of Dr. Hikari. "There is no need to delete the Zero Virus!"

"Dr. Hikari...?" Chaud seemed extremely puzzled by this turn of events.

"Lan, Megaman," Dr. Hikari continued. "I analyzed the data you sent me, and if Zero is willing, I can 'seal in' the virus function. He'd fully become a NetNavi with no reason for anyone to delete him!"

"...I don't understand," Zero. exe seemed... lost. "Why do you want to do this for me?"

Chaud sighed heavily and ordered Protoman. exe to stand down. "Because that's just the way they are. I don't get it either..."

"Yeah, right!" Lan argued. "I bet you totally get it!"

"Whatever," Chaud brushed off the claim.

"Okay, Zero," Megaman. exe told the viral navi, "I'm about to open a link to SciLab's computer."

"I..." Zero. exe stared for several seconds. "Thank you. All of you. I–"

About then was the point where the net area shook and alarms started blaring.

"And Megaman leads with a right! A left! A cannon! But the reborn LifeVirus strikes back! But Megaman counters with a–" Apollo winced as the ZeroCounter Program Advance was unleashed, "ooooo, ouch!"

"Yeah, I don't think viruses were meant to bend that way," Hephaestus smirked.

"Friends? How strange... But, I think I can get used to it. ... Goodbye. Goodbye, my friends! I'll see you around!"

Lan and Megaman. exe breathed a sigh of relief as the parting words of Zero. exe echoed in their heads. Everything had come together in the end. Not only had Zero. exe been saved, but he'd been instrumental in capturing that Professor guy.

"Okay," Megaman. exe piped up. "Maybe... maybe we are remembering things that haven't happened yet. But, if that's true... what do we do about it?"

"Yeah," Lan replied heavily. "Is this random? Is there a reason we remember future events? What if we do the wrong thing? We gotta talk to someone about this... Someone smart, but..."

"But who won't stick us in a loony bin for claiming we can see the future," Megaman. exe agreed. (11) "Hmm... Do your memories have someone in them called Mr. Famous?"

"Yeah..." Lan recalled a somewhat eccentric man who was also a brilliant NetBattler that cycled through a series of incredibly strong custom navis. Ones that he seemed to design himself. "Why not?"

"Okay!" the license examiner navi explained. "'HeroData' and 'HopeData' are hidden on the net! Find them both and bring them here to get your ZLicense!"

Megaman. exe nodded absently as he took off searching. This was the easiest of the city NetBattler exams that he and Lan would apparently be taking as the upcoming invasion by the Gospel netmafia the two's weird dream/memories had enlightened them to. Lan was getting impatient about finding that 'Mr. Famous' fellow and using him as a sounding board for the whole weird situation.

'Personally,' Megaman. exe thought to himself as he recalled the way their mom had reacted upon seeing Lan's report card, 'I'd like to see Lan using that foreknowledge to improve his grades instead of surfing the net all the time...'

"Hey!" Apollo shouted as he jumped up and struck a pose with his surfboard. "What's wrong with surfing? The mighty Apollo looks with favor upon those heroes who surf, regardless of where!"

"Okay, where in Tartarus were you hiding that thing?" Hephaestus eyed the surfboard Apollo was holding warily. The sun god hadn't had that when he came in. Come to think of it, there was suddenly a surplus of sand and a large beach umbrella in his office too...

"So glad you asked, dear brother!" the eternal bachelor and hobby beach bum grinned and held up a container the size of a lunchbox. "The mighty Apollo's instant beach kit! Fun in the sun for everyone!"

Hephaestus facepalmed once again. "We're indoors you idiot..."

Behind his sunglasses, the sun god stared back blankly. "...So?"

Things had gone swimmingly so far up to now. The gas problem at Yai's house while she'd been bathing had been dealt with, and Airman. exe had been deleted rather handily.

"No," Hephaestus declared before Apollo said a word.

"Huh...?" the sun god blinked owlishly from where he'd been about to perform a guitar riff. On an actual guitar.

"No you are not singing 'They Can Delete Airman' again," the forge god clarified.

"...Not even a little bit?"

"NO."

Of course Yai had to get on their case about seeing her naked despite Mayl being the one who pulled her out of the bath, which Lan honestly felt was rather creepy. (12) Yeah, Yai was the same age as Lan and the rest of his friends, but she looked a fair bit younger...

In any case, he'd gotten the BLicense yesterday no problem and today they had everyone together to go camping. Even Chaud seemed on board, even if it would just end up his cover for official work. He just had to make sure he was on his game when trouble started...

Hephaestus just tried to ignore Apollo as he strummed music from that mortal movie 'The Quick and the Dead'. It wasn't that easy given how well the music was meshing with the current events.

Chaud sat in his office and thought on the events at the Okuden Valley campgrounds. He supposed that being with others his own age had been... fun... for what little time he'd spent with them before getting to work. (13) But what had really intrigued him was Lan and his navi Megaman. exe...

The two had wandered off on the way to the campgrounds, only to come back right after the others had been stopped by a swarm of bees with precisely the right materials to make a torch and repel the insects. Then he'd stepped off the path and grabbed some binoculars another camper had lost which was just what was needed to see that the bear in their path was in fact an automaton with a jack-in port, which the two then entered and took care of the virus in its systems.

But the cherry on this prescient cake was what had happened when Chaud had sent Lan an e-mail regarding the four remote detonators on the bomb attached to the valley's hydroelectric dam. Apparently... Lan had already found and disabled three of them by the time Chaud had sent the e-mail. And then, right after Chaud had deduced that the bomber would be holding the last detonator, the two had found him and challenged him. They'd even, with no way of knowing that Quickman. exe was himself a deadnavi detonation switch (14), kept him occupied long enough for Chaud and Protoman. exe to disable the bomb itself.

It was all so utterly improbable that Chaud might have suspected the two of being in cahoots with the bomber. Except that the very thought of the two naively good-natured NetBattlers being willing accomplices of a criminal organization was so thoroughly at odds with reality that no sane man could take it seriously. But still... there was no other reasonable explanation he could see, except...

The previous times with the WWW, Lan and Megaman. exe had always seemed to be in the right place at the right time... They'd seemed confused enough by events, despite their continual willingness to wade into danger and help rather than running, that Chaud and Protoman. exe were willing to chalk it up to coincidence. But now... with how they'd seemed almost clairvoyant regarding recent events? He couldn't help but wonder.

"Maybe Lan and Megaman are favored by the kami?" he allowed himself to muse aloud. The thought sounded so ludicrous when spoken that he couldn't help but snort in amusement.

"Aw, bro, we love you guys too," Apollo smiled at the words of the mortal champion. "You just need to lighten up a bit!"

Hephaestus kept his agreement to himself. The last thing Apollo needed was encouragement.

Mr. Famous considered the kid and his navi who'd just utterly trounced Gateman. exe. Now that he thought to take a better look at the kid, he realized that this was no ordinary city NetBattler looking to upgrade his license. No, this was the Hikari boy who'd defeated WWW not once, but twice. Maybe handicapping Gateman. exe for the boy and his navi hadn't been necessary...

"Not bad, kid..." he allowed, musing on the skills shown. Yes, he'd definitely allowed his long winning streak to make him a bit cocky. "Not bad at all. Looks like I need to step up my game before you come back for a rematch!"

"Heh..." the Hikari boy rubbed his head in flattered embarrassment. "Actually, Mr. Famous? My friends and I were talking about some hypothalamus scenarios–"

"Hypothetical, Lan," the navi, Megaman. exe, corrected with an exasperated sigh.

"Yeah, that..." the Hikari boy agreed absently before continuing, "and I was wondering if you might have any thoughts..."

Mr. Famous considered for a moment, before shrugging. The kid had more-or-less saved the world a couple of times already, so he supposed hearing out some weird scenarios kids came up with was the least he could do. "Sure, why not? Let's grab a couple of stools."

The two sat down and the Hikari boy began in earnest. "Well, the one that has me thinking the most is... if you went back in time and got to do events over again... and ultimately things turned out pretty well the first time around... would it still be right to try and change things for the better? How much before you risk things not going as well? And..." there the boy kind of trailed off.

Mr. Famous felt his eyebrow raise up from behind his shades. Despite the impossibility of the scenario, the morality of the question was still rather mature for a boy his age. (15) "Well..." he pondered for a moment, giving the question consideration due its serious delivery. "The most important thing one would possess in such a situation would be foreknowledge. Knowing what will happen before it does is a powerful thing, and you are right in thinking that it isn't one to take lightly. Good or bad, all choices have consequences, and the more you change regarding foreknowledge, the less reliable that foreknowledge becomes. So the options are clear, either do everything the same so that your foreknowledge remains accurate, or change things knowing that each change makes that foreknowledge less certain. One you know leads to a positive outcome, but the other leads somewhere uncertain. Perhaps better, perhaps worse. But there is something else to consider..."

"What?" the boy asked, clearly intrigued, and Mr. Famous smiled.

"The fact that we, humans and navis, are predisposed to using all tools at our disposal in challenging times," he explained. "To possess foreknowledge is to be driven to act upon it to some extent, for in life there is no such thing as a completely passive observer. Knowledge influences choices, which in turn affect consequences, which become the chain of events we call 'life'. No matter how subtle, foreknowledge will change how a person reacts to events. And trying too hard to change nothing may result in the most disastrous changes of all. Even if you don't know where it will take you, so long as you work towards a better future for the world with all your heart, then I believe that is where we will end up." (16)

"Wow..." boy and navi declared together.

"In short," Mr. Famous smiled, "don't sweat it. Just do the best you know how and trust that the world can handle the rest."

"Yeah, you know his name is Famous, Famous! Oh oh oh oh!"

Hephaestus smiled and did his best to ignore Apollo's singing. The mortal's words were not only wise, but remarkably appropriate advice for a new looper. There would be stumbling points, sure, but that was how all mortals learned in the end.

Lan groaned as he got back to his home country. After getting the Style Change system, complete with HeatGuts style right off the bat, and beating Shadowman. exe rather handily, the trip to Netopia had been some kind of weird train wreck of events. First he'd gotten pickpocketed at the airport while trying to spot Chaud and get Megaman. exe back. Then when he'd tried to refuse the car ride in favor of taking the bus, the 'creepy samaritan' had all but thrown him in and stolen his BattleChips anyway. Then he and Megaman. exe had gotten in a fight over how terrible the trip was going, including fighting about whose recollection of their fight in the original series of events was correct, and he'd stormed out of the hotel room, leaving his navi behind.

He hadn't remembered about the passport theft until talking with Higsby and had run back in time to run into the thief and tried to chase him down the alley. Looking back, Lan wasn't sure catching up to the guy was the best plan of action, but at least he got to meet Raoul again when the guy came to his rescue with Thunderman. exe getting his passport back. A quick side-trip to meet Miss Millions and fight Snakeman. exe had gotten his BattleChips back (were they seriously worth 500000 zenny?), but the hits hadn't stopped there...

The meeting of the official NetBattlers, including Raoul from the day before, had ignored his warnings that something felt 'off' and thus everyone was dumped into a secret area underneath Net Castle. Well, Lan had avoided the trapdoor, but then decided to jump anyway. Not his brightest idea, even considering that he knew where all the traps were and how to disable them quickly. Even knowing that Princess Pride was the mole hadn't helped when Chaud concluded that he and Megaman. exe were the spy from Gospel upon walking in on them and an injured Raoul and tried to arrest them. The only good news was that Lan managed to draw the battle out long enough for Raoul to recover and tell Chaud the truth so they could stop Princess Pride and Knightman. exe together. He hadn't even been able to stop the princess from falling through the final trap and being hospitalized...

Oh, but it wasn't over yet... Maybe if he'd been less worn out, he could have headed off what happened next. After getting some souvenirs and getting on the plane, the damn poisonous spider someone had the brilliant idea to bring on board had gotten loose and he'd nearly got bitten capturing it again. Then Mr. Gauss and Magnetman. exe had sabotaged the plane to get some program on board and nearly crashed the plane. And to top everything off, there was that SLicense exam waiting for him...

Honestly, right now he just wanted to give the souvenirs to his friends, crawl into bed, and sleep for a week… (17)

"Oh, no you don't!" Hephaestus yelled as he physically restrained Apollo from the terminal while Lan was giving Mayl her gift.

"But he's giving her a ring!" Apollo protested. "A ring ! The mighty Apollo decrees that he should at least get a sweet date out of the deal, not some crummy chip!" (18)

Whatever power was governing the acquisition of style changes, Lan wasn't amused by it. To start off, the new style change he'd gotten the morning after the hijacking incident had been WoodShield style. Which would have been great if he'd gotten it in time to use against Magnetman. exe. Instead he'd gotten it just in time to run into Mr. Match and his new navi Heatman. exe.

Wonderful. Absolutely wonderful.

And of course after that, he'd gone looking for Roll. exe who'd gotten lost during the earthquake earlier that morning and found the entire net covered in ice. Some investigation, a few city NetBattler jobs, rescuing Roll. exe, running around to various sources for various programs to break through the ice on the net, and a relatively quick fight with Freezeman. exe later and they had earned the ElecTeam style. Right after its elemental powers would have been most useful.

The following week of relative quiet before Gospel's final move saw them earning the AquaCustom style in between Megaman. exe's nagging of Lan to take that time to do his homework.

"...What?" Hephaestus asked curiously. "No comment about how homework's a bummer?"

"Oh, it is," Apollo admitted. "But the mighty Apollo must agree that flunking is worse." (19)

"Hey there!"

"..."

"I'm Lan, what's your name?"

"..."

Lan knew it was him. Underneath that disguise, the leader of Gospel was that silent kid from the plane. Sean... Obi-something. He'd gotten the idea to try and head off Gospel's plans by making friends with their secret leader, but... Well, the boy hadn't really cooperated.

Then there was the whole warping of the real world and cyberworld together thing which had bugged Lan all the way through the building's network and up to the confrontation with the copies of his friends' navis. He didn't recall making the connection before, but...

was it possible Gospel's set-up was a prototype of what Dr. Regal would eventually create?

In any case, it didn't matter at the moment. What mattered was putting a stop to Sean before he did permanent damage to anything. And to do that, they had to go through his fake Bass. exe created from bug fusion.

"Now, Bass!" Sean declared with his disguised voice. "Begin Project 'World Domination!' You can start...by deleting the Navi in front of you!

"...Gladly!" the false navi said in an odd tone. "...Battle is my forte!"

"Yeah, right!" Lan declared dramatically despite his lightheadedness from the excess radiation his MagSuit couldn't absorb. "Ready, Megaman? Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!"

"Foolish evil navi!" Apollo posed dramatically. "You cannot stand against the mighty Megaman! Not when he possesses the almighty Program Advance: Gater! Watch as he summons the avatar of the mighty Gateman and blasts you with..."

Apollo paused and blinked as he actually saw what said navi avatar was unleashing from his chest gate.

"...everything but the kitchen sink?" (20)

"Hey, you use what works," Hephaestus grinned.

As the rest of the room was recovering from the shock that Gospel's leader was a kid, including Sean himself recovering from the shock of losing his cybersuit disguise, Lan and Megaman. exe were forging ahead.

Unfortunately, Sean was faster and boosted the server's power, which also caused the radiation levels to skyrocket. Lan had a hard time convincing his friends to retreat, but he managed it with a promise to come back alive. An extra-serious one in Mayl's case that he'd blush over were the world not at stake.

Which left just him and Sean. Who was refusing to back down, no matter the cost to himself or the world. He kept jacking the power up ever higher, until Lan was having trouble moving. Which was about when the false Bass began to cry out in pain as his body twisted in unnatural ways, eventually becoming the Gospel bug beast Lan and Megaman. exe remembered from the other timeline.

"Lan! Megaman! Do you read me?" the voice of their father sounded from an urgent message.

"Hey, dad," Lan said more calmly than he probably had any right to. "Is this about how using bug fusion to create a 'SuperNavi' actually results in an out of control bugged-out monstrosity?"

"Well... yes," Dr. Hikari sounded surprised. "But how...?"

"We're kind of looking at it right now..."

"What?! Lan, you have to delete it immediately!"

"Getting right on that, dad."

"What's... what's going on?" Sean began panicking from his controls as the energy readings began skyrocketing. "I... I can't control it!"

Unfortunately, this was about when Lan passed out.

"Okay, the mighty Apollo has to admit, this is a sweet dreamscape viewer you have."

"Thanks," Hephaestus smiled as he watched the spirit forms of the two brothers interact and bring Lan back to consciousness. "I traded favors with Morpheus to upgrade it."

"Heh... I blacked out again... I'm sorry, Hub..."

"I'm the one who should be apologizing, Lan! We should have said something to dad or someone else to get the MagSuit rated for higher radiation levels! But you still have to try, Lan! If I was your brother Hub... But I'm not..."

"No... It doesn't matter if you're a navi... or a human... You are... and you always have been... my brother... Hub... And... It's high time I started acting like it... We fight... together..."

"Lan... Okay... I've begun synching my heart program with you... I didn't want to do this, but..."

"It's okay... Hub... The synchro... it feels right... Always did..."

"Okay, Lan... It's done..."

"Then it's time to set Gospel's bug beast straight!"

"Lan..." Hub cried out as the synchronization of the heart program finished. "I feel... I think it's another style change!" A flash of light engulfed the navi and when it dies down he looked much the same, only glowing with power. "Is this...? It's like all style changes in one... Created by our bond..."

"Heh..." Lan chuckled weakly. "Obviously it's Hub Style then..."

"That's..." Sean whispered from where he was finally succumbing to the radiation, "not possible..."

"Let's do this, bro! Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!"

On the warped network, the Gospel bug beast roared as Lan and Hub opened with the Double Hero Program Advance and went to town.

"You know, it occurs to the mighty Apollo that radiation is supposed to be dangerous to mortals... How do they live through this every time again?"

"It depends on the type of radiation," Hephaestus explained calmly as Lan and his former adversary were taken to the hospital. "Some can be painfully lethal to mortals with enough exposure, but the kind generated by electronics is only harmful to humans during direct high level exposure. It's relatively simple to recover from with proper rest and relaxation." (21)

Lan was enjoying himself. A couple days in the hospital for observation before he was released with orders to rest, relax, and get fresh air. Which basically meant an excuse to go camping with everyone again. And, partly thanks to Hub's nagging, and partly due to their being not much else to do in the hospital, he actually had his homework done.

Still... Dad had confirmed what he remembered about someone manipulating Sean. Obviously Lord Wily was partly behind it, but... was he the only one?

And of course there were those rumors they'd heard of things that sounded like Bass. exe clones being sighted and being deleted by an identical navi that was probably the real deal.

'Hub Style...' Lan thought to himself. 'Maybe... maybe it's time for a rematch...'

"Bad idea, you two," Hephaestus winced, "bad idea..."

"Don't worry, brother!" Apollo grinned brightly. "They won't die!"

"You think they can win?"

"Now, now, the mighty Apollo didn't say that ..."

"So, it's you again," Bass. exe grinned as he recognized the navi before him. "Time to see if you've become worthy opponents! Time to learn the true joy that is battle!"

"Ready, Hub?" the operator asked.

"Ready!" the navi declared. "Style change! Hub Style!"

"Intriguing..." Bass. exe mused behind his aura. "Let's see what new power you have gained since last time!"

The navi, Megaman. exe, opened fire with a blast that actually blew his aura away and began peppering him with buster shots that the solo navi ignored as he opened fire himself. His opponent formed a shield that blocked his shots and summoned a pink navi avatar to attack him. Bass. exe scoffed and turned to deal with the nuisance, only to realize it was a distraction a little too late as he heard a program advance being called out.

"LifeSword3!" the yell came as his opponent slashed.

Bass. exe felt himself grunt from the slash, but in the next moment he made a dash and managed to grab the navi before he could disengage. He then began gathering power in his free arm as it formed back into a buster. "Not bad!" he complimented as he prepared to unleash the blast point-blank. "But not good enough!"

The burst threw his opponent into the ground harshly, and he was rewarded with a cry of pain. But as he moved to advance on his downed opponent, he winced as pain shot through him. It seemed that last attack had actually hurt him...

"You've improved," he declared as he stood over the downed navi. "This is quite the power you've gained... Hub Style did you call it? I like it... I think I'll take it..." Bass. exe continued grinning as he bent over to grab the navi and activated his ultimate program. "GetAbility: HubStyle!" (22)

"Gaaahh!" the navi cried out as its data was copied.

"Heh," Bass. exe released him as the transfer was completed and considered the navi. It hadn't been all that long since their last battle, and he'd grown this much? "Not bad... Next time I might actually have to take you seriously. We shall meet again, my worthy opponent..."

And with an appropriately dramatic swirl of his cloak, he vanished.

---

1) You know, the stuff Zeus likes to use on any lady who plays 'hard to get' (with an unrealistically wide definition of 'hard to get').

2) The ambrosia hat (the divine equivalent of a beer hat) on his head rather ruined the effect.

3) Wait until he finds out that's considered rather mundane in some corners of the multiverse.

4) Yes. Yes he is. This is feeling more and more like MST3K.

5) The latter two lines by burningclaw2.

6) It's a surprisingly standard evil lair design in many universes.

7) Ahahahahahahaha...no.

8) What they found it in is best left undiscussed.

9) All of his assigned Anchors.

10) Zero. exe was something of a defeatist before Lan and Hub happened to him.

11) A reasonable concern given their situation.

12) It's definitely one of the story events I found a little creepy when I played. It's not helped by the way she shifts her anger to flirty teasing when she finds out she was mistaken.

13) Chaud and friendly socialization really don't seem to be on speaking terms much of the time.

14) He dies, it triggers the device. Just in case you weren't familiar with the adjusted term.

15) A heck of a lot more mature than the Original Seven (Ranma Saotome, Shinji Ikari, Usagi Tsukino, Ichigo Kurosaki, Lina Inverse, and Harry Potter) were about things in the early days (Innortal's era) of the Loops.

16) Hides his soapbox I have no idea what you're talking about.

17) Lan's terrible horrible no good very bad vacation.

18) He couldn't make them go out with each other, but he probably could send subconscious impulses that would lead to something being blurted out inconveniently. In other words: Admins can't subvert a mortal's Free Will, but they can give a mortal a bad case of 'foot in mouth' disease.

19) Obligatory 'stay in school' message done.

20) I find Gater to be a fun program advance. If only because I like watching the torrent of odds and ends come out and trying to see how many I can identify for the instant they're on screen.

21) Or just chalk it up to fictional physics and plot armor. Whatever works.

22) Yeah, I know that it only happens in the manga, but Bass. exe's GetAbility should still be able to do this from what I understand about it.

Battle in the Network: With Style

Battle in the Network: With Style

Lan smiled as the DNN producer, Noboru Sunayama, pitched the N1 Grand Prix to his friends. While he knew the guy was a WWW member, he didn't have any proof at the moment to expose him. And besides, he recalled the N1 Grand Prix being a lot of fun and he knew how to get the guy to incriminate himself later.

As it was, Lan and Hub had been practicing with their style changes and unlike last time they were more than prepared for their upcoming opponents...

As talented as Apollo was at music, his current rendition of 'Two Futures' was rather distracting at the moment.

"Will you please stop singing those songs out loud!" screamed Hephaestus.

"You're just jealous that I can sing songs from your loop better than you can," Apollo stated with a smug look on his face.

"What did I do to deserve this?!" Hephaestus exclaimed as he slammed his head on his desk. (1)

"Flashman!" cried the Blue Bomber. "Release my friends from their hypnosis!"

The WWW Navi sneered... somehow (2). "Now why would I do that? It doesn't serve me any purpose to do so."

Megaman shrugged. "Suit yourself. Just was giving you a heads up before I pummel you."

The elec-themed navi proceeded to affect a haughty attitude. "HAH! I'd like to see you try!"

The Blue Navi affixed a smirk. "Okay, but you asked for it. Lan!" he called out to his NetOp.

Back outside, in the Principal's Office, Lan nodded. "Roger! Initiating Style Change!"

Flashman started. "Wait, Style Change?!"

Rings of code formed around Megaman, rotating around him vertically. As they passed over him, the blue on his armor turned green and the splash of white under his Navi Mark extended up to his left shoulder, where a green pauldron attached. A simple yellow Shield with a green rim materialized on his right arm, as the Red on his Navi Mark flickered to green.

"Style Change: WoodShield Style!" he announced, completing the transformation by closing his now-armored mouthguard.

Flashman was taken off-guard, but recovered his bluster. "If you think changing into a Wood Style is enough to take me on, you've got another thing coming! Neon Light!" he declared, shooting off an orb of light that randomly zig-zagged towards Megaman.

Lan just shook his head. "You'd think they'd learn by now not to tempt fate. WoodAura, BattleChip In!"

As the wood-attribute aura snapped into place, Hub couldn't help but comment, "I wouldn't talk if I were you, Lan. Didn't you say you'd ace that history test last week?"

The Hikari boy in the Real World grumbled, "I swear those questions were different than they were last time..."

Meanwhile, Flashman was panicking. "Rei! Please tell me you have any Fire Chips!"

Rei Saiko, Flashman's NetOp was seething. "I can't send you Chips! I'm still transmitting the Tetra-Code! And even if I could, we don't have strong enough Chips to break that Aura!"

Hub was watching this almost sadly. "I kind of feel almost sorry for him now," he commented.

Lan shrugged. "It's his own fault for underestimating us," he pointed out.

Megaman considered this, while charging up his MegaBuster. "I guess that's true," he said as he released the Tornado Buster at the panicking Flashman, not only sending him flying but also dealing double damage per hit.

Lan grinned as he took out a few Chips. "How about we finish this off with a blast!"

Hub also grinned. "I think I know what you have in mind. Ready!"

Lan slotted in his selected Chips. "Shotgun, CrossGun, Spreader, Mega Cannon; In and Download!"

"Program Advance: Powered Cannon!" declared Megaman, as the truly enormous Cannon formed on his arm.

Flashman took one look at it, and would have wet himself if he could. As it was, he only said one thing... "I REGRET NOTHING!" he screamed, as the Cannon Blast deleted him.

Rei gritted his teeth, before spitting, "Curse you, Hikari! You may have deleted Flashman, but I've already transmitted the Tetra-Code! Next time, things will be different!"

Lan smirked. "Bring it on! We'll take you down even harder!"

"Wow... a..." the delinquent client of Higsby's stammered nervously, "a Style Change... huh..."

Hub, currently in ElecTeam Style since he felt like showing off, managed to suppress the chuckle at the navi's inadvertent imitation of the rare chip fanatic as he gave the navi a condescending look. "Honestly, you're lucky Higsby and Numberman didn't come after you themselves."

"Pffft!" the HeelNavi scoffed. "What could those two possibly do?"

"You ever hear of the WWW?" Hub asked calmly.

"Um... yeah... why?" the navi asked nervously.

"How easy do you think it is to walk away from a group like that?"

"Yeah, right!" the HeelNavi laughed. "Everyone knows when you're in a group like that, the only way you leave is in a coffin!"

"Well, Higsby and Numberman?" Hub stared the navi right in the eye. "They walked away. And they're still alive."

"B-b-b-b-but..." the HeelNavi suddenly looked very nervous at the implications, "th-th-that's... how?"

"Because the great Higsby's hair is that awesome !" Apollo yelled. (3)

'What the blub is going on?!' Bubbleman. exe thought frantically to himself as he continued running. First, Megaman. exe had failed to fall for his brilliant 'look out behind you' gambit and started opening fire instead. Then the narrow paths of Yoko had failed to even slow him down, not to mention the fact that when he'd summoned his Bubble Brigade, they'd yelled something about 'the crimson ninja' (despite Megaman. exe clearly being blue) and 'please don't hurt us again' before simply giving the 'needle' program that could burst his Bubble Door to his pursuer and hightailing it. 'Megaman is blubbing straight through all of my blu-brilliant stalling tactics! If this keeps up even my blubbly bubbles won't –WHAT THE BLUB?! HOW DID YOU BLUBBING GET IN FRONT OF ME?!"

"Trade secret," the enemy of WWW smiled as he aimed his buster at Bubbleman. exe's face. (4)

"I'm sorry, Protoman..." Chaud grit his teeth as the newly revealed WWW operative Sunayama issued his ultimatum. To secure the release of his father; the president of IPC inc., the man who was never around for him when he needed it; he had to surrender his PET, the navi he'd customized himself, his only real friend... Protoman. exe...

"Viewers around the world watching through the hidden cameras!" Sunayama boasted. "Observe Electopia's ace NetBattler surrender to the WWW. Chaud is now hand..."

"Megaman, ATTACK!" a familiar voice yelled out right before a blue PET beaned Sunayama upside the head, knocking him out. (5)

"Did that seriously just happen?!" Apollo roared with laughter. "That's gold! "

Hephaestus found himself chortling with amusement as the sun god continued guffawing at the sight while Lan and Chaud untied the latter's father before their opponent recovered.

"What in the world did this amazing kid do in the baseline?" Apollo finally asked when he could breathe again. About the time when Hub was dueling Desertman. exe to cover the escape of Chaud and his father.

"Pretty much the same thing, only a few moments later."

"Oh, the mighty Apollo likes this kid!"

Lan was doing his best to keep his knowledge of Mamoru to himself as he, Hub, and the boy chatted away on the beach in front of the hospital. On the surface, the boy seemed friendly and almost hero-worshipful of NetBattlers like Lan and Hub, but Lan's 'future memories' revealed several additional things about him. For one, his mother was the owner of the Ura Inn, which also made Tamako, the NetOp of Metalman. exe, his aunt. For another, he had HBD, the same heart condition that claimed the life of Hub in his human incarnation back when he was an infant. More shockingly, he was the current administrator of the undernet, which had been created by his own father.

But what was taking all of his willpower not to blurt out was something that he didn't really recall from those 'future memories'. It wasn't too surprising as the thing was easy to miss if you didn't know what it meant. The thing in question... was the navi symbol on Mamoru's wheelchair.

A navi symbol even his 'future memories' had only ever seen on the 'king of the undernet'.

As he readily agreed to visit Mamoru in the future, Lan couldn't help but consider the supreme irony of Mamoru and his apparent NetNavi. A NetOp who was too weak to go out, and a navi who was too strong to come visit… (6)

'I swear Mamoru,' Lan promised himself, 'somehow, someway, I'll make it so the two of you can see each other!'

"Ooooo..." Apollo whistled with dramatic ominisity. "The 'king of the undernet', eh? The mighty Apollo thinks this just got very interesting... What does this 'king' look like?"

"Here," Hephaestus stated as he called up a new view.

"Is..." Apollo blinked at the sight, "is this connection bad?"

"Hmm? Oh, no. That's just the local digital reality distortion."

"Distorted by what?"

"By that," Hephaestus nodded at the only figure in the area shown. "By this 'underking's' sheer strength."

"Sweet."

Getting an IceBall chip for Mamoru had been no trouble. Honestly, if it would help convince him to undergo the potentially life-saving surgery, Lan and Hub would have cheerfully stormed the undernet and hunted down a full set of LifeAura chips for the boy.

But they'd gotten the chip and, with some purposefully vague talk about what happened to Hub when he'd been human, they'd talked him into getting the surgery. A few days later and the turn for the worse they'd been expecting happened, and they'd rushed right over. Rather than spend their time idle, they'd gone and gotten the program to convert fire chips to energy. And since they'd been collecting lots of fire chips for the past couple of days, they were more than ready for when Anetta and Plantman. exe would show up.

Plantman. exe had scoffed at the simpering fools that were Lan and Megaman. exe. He and Anetta were on a holy mission after all, and those two were worried about a single insignificant life. As if one sickly child could compare to the glory that Lord Wily and the WWW would usher in! He'd simply thrown one of the viruses he commanded at them and went on his way.

But instead of being halted by his cybervines, they'd just thrown fire chip after fire chip through an energy charger and liberally torched their way through his obstacles. How... how many fire chips did those two even have? And when they arrived... it was in a style change form. But... not the WoodShield style that Rei and Flashman. exe had reported.

No, this one was red, sporting a huge fist, and quite literally burning with fury.

As he stared into the advancing fiery doom of HeatGuts style backed by no shortage of fire chips, the only comfort he could find was that his sacrifice would allow Anetta to get away with the TetraCode… (7)

"Well goodness gracious, great balls of fire!" Apollo declared as he saw Lan and Hub express their joint displeasure. "Somebody's having grilled vegetables later!"

"Thanks a lot, Lan! I have one more thing to do here, so I'll see you later!" Mr. Match smiled as the kid he'd tricked into helping him sabotage SciLab's computers skated for the elevator. He waited until his old foe was out of sight before turning to the computer. "Now then, time to begin. Heh heh heh heh!"

After the failure with Fireman. exe, he'd started over customizing a new navi. Unfortunately, Heatman. exe had fallen short on the test run against the two, so he'd tried again using experimental upgrades to make Flameman. exe. Sure some of them were questionable in source, and sure they'd rendered his latest navi little more than a raging beast mentally (8), but it was all worth it if they could take down Megaman. exe.

As for getting the kid to help the WWW's plans? That had just been too enticing to pass up!

"Dad, I need to tell you something. Mr. Match helped me out with those WWW navis earlier, but then he used that fact to guilt me into helping him install some data in some of SciLab's programs. But... whatever was in that data seemed like it was starting to hurt the programs and... could you just check things out? If it's all legit, I'll apologize, but I'm still worried that something bad is going to happen..."

Dr. Hikari had thought the whole thing was odd. Mr. Match might have been a former WWW member, but like Higsby he was reformed. Still... he hadn't recalled the man being either authorized or asked to install new data so he'd gone to check the lab computers. As it turned out, he'd gotten there just as the temperature began to climb, and a quick check showed that there had been sabotaged data loaded onto the system that was making the temperature of all systems climb out of control. There wasn't any time to identify and correct the source, so he needed to retrieve and load the back-up data so he could reset the whole system. If SciLab went down... all of Electopia would be in danger!

"What are you doing!?" he yelled at his assistants when they refused to flee the danger.

"We're not leaving you," one man stated firmly as he took over a console.

"We're scientists too," a woman declared as she took her position. "We're all ready to give our lives to protect SciLab!"

"That is in incredibly poor taste," Hephaestus glowered as Apollo obliviously continued his rendition of 'Burning Down the House'.

Mr. Match did his best to project a bravado he wasn't really feeling. Megaman. exe had swept through the internet and doused (9) the fires Flameman. exe had set as if he'd had a bloody map . And to make matters worse, he was sporting yet another style change (Three style changes?! What the hell kind of navi program supported three style changes?!) the whole time. An aqua -based style that apparently made it easier to set up chip combos and program advances...

And he'd found their hiding place in the undernet like he'd been guided there...

"Light up, Flameman!" he ordered despite the circumstances. "Burn Megaman to ash!"

"Whraaaaaaah!"

"Dude!" Apollo waved his hand in front of his face like he smelled something bad. "Two words: Breath. Mint."

"How fascinating..." Bass. exe mused as he continued to watch the blue navi from before destroy his opponent. "It seems that you now emit the aura of the strong. Perhaps now is the time to test you once again?"

"Lan!" the blue navi exclaimed. "I sense it! His power!"

"So, he is here!" the NetOp's voice came through. "Hub, get ready!"

Bass. exe grinned to himself as he leisurely approached the navi. "You who emit the power of the strong, prepare yourself for battle!"

"I've found you, Bass!" a new voice yelled as another navi... one of those generic off-the-shelf peons... ran in. And yet... his voice sounded... familiar.

"How do you know my name, weakling?"

"Does the Alpha Rebellion ring any bells?

"Alpha Rebellion...!" Bass. exe's code flared at the name and his eyes narrowed. "You were sent from SciLab. So there is still a human after me."

"Bass! I am going to delete you! Indeed, I must delete you!"

"Navi slave to the humans. Do you think you can defeat me?"

"In order to fight you, I of course did not come unprepared. Gather to me, power of darkness! Haaaaaaaaaaa!" the navi raised his arms and Bass. exe felt a sinister power form around him. One that gave him momentary pause. "DarkAura! Bass! You don an aura yourself, so you must be aware... The defensive strength of this DarkAura... Far surpasses that of the LifeAura!"

"An aura of darkness. How impudent..."

"The power...!" the blue navi exclaimed. "It feels like he could survive even if the entire cyberworld was destroyed!"

"Hmm..." Bass. exe mused at the surprised look on the SciLab navi's face and began to gather power in his hand. "Interesting... I shall enjoy testing this theory... EarthBreaker!"

"Denied!" Apollo yelled as the attack failed to deal any damage.

"Indeed," Hephaestus noted from where he'd sent the subconscious suggestions to the ones that had intervened. Maybe Lan and Hub were ready to take on Bass. exe and maybe they weren't. But now wasn't the time for their battle to take place. As Wily called Bass. exe away and the interlopers retreated, he wondered if his newest Anchor and co-Anchor hopefuls would have agreed.

But then they immediately rushed off to check on the welfare of their father, proving that their desire to save lives was still stronger than their desire to prove themselves and letting Hephaestus know that he'd chosen wisely this time.

Lan wanted to hit himself as he lay in bed that night. Sure his dad and the scientists were all better than he remembered them being, but they had still been really hurt and the hospital insisted on keeping them overnight for observation, so mom was staying there overnight too and...

Damnit, he'd been so stupid! He'd been all set to tell Mr. Match to take a hike and...

And the guy had gotten under his skin. Again. Planted that little seed of doubt. Made Lan wonder how accurate those 'future memories' really were. Made him wonder if Mr. Match really was trying to turn over a new leaf like he'd been pretending to...

"Why did I fall for it?!" he yelled to no one. "Why did I let myself think he'd changed?! WHY?!"

"LAN!" Hub's yell cut through the tirade as the boy looked to his navi and brother. "Lan..." Hub continued in a more subdued voice. "It's okay Lan... Dad's fine... and Mr. Match... he... he fooled me too, Lan..."

Lan just picked up his PET and hugged it to his chest. He couldn't give his brother a real hug, so this would have to do. (10)

"It's not wrong to want to believe the best of people, Lan," Hub's muffled voice still rang clear in Lan's ears.

Strangely, while he didn't feel any better, he didn't feel like such an idiot either.

"Do wake the mighty Apollo when the great Lan gets himself back together, would you?" the sun god said before leaning back and beginning to fake-snore.

Hephaestus just rolled his eyes and continued observing. The attempt was going rather smoothly all things considered. And... experience had taught him that something was bound to go wrong sooner or later. If this was the worst any of them had to deal with, he'd count that a miraculous victory.

"... Hey, Lan. Come back to school. Everyone's worried about you. They say you solved that WWW incident, you know! It's hard to celebrate without the hero in class!"

"What's wrong, Lan? Was it something we said?"

"I'm no hero..."

The words between himself and his friends echoed through Lan's head as he made his way to the room where his father was being kept for extended observation. Supposedly he'd been in the heat the longest and the doctors wanted to be sure there were no complications before releasing him.

The encounter with Chaud... had gone almost exactly as he remembered it though...

"I have not been informed about who exactly Alpha is. Only a select few Officials know that information. However, one thing is for certain. If Alpha is awakened, the net society will be annihilated."

"The Forbidden program. It can freeze Alpha. According to our sources, that program is in the undernet. It's reported that a navi named 'S' is in possession of it."

"Protoman and I are too well-know as Officials. The denizens of the undernet despise us. You, however..."

"Stop talking! If you tell me any more, I'll have to arrest you as an Official."

"Lan, go visit your father in the hospital. If you change your mind later, come to the Virus Lab at SciLab. About what you just told me...I never heard it. I owe you that much for what you did for me."

"'It'? What did he tell you to build?" Lan heard the voice of his dad as he entered the room.

"The ultimate navi..." the voice of Sean answered. The kid who was the former head of the Gospel netmafia that Lan and Hub had faced not too long ago and stopped from created a giant bug beast, "Bass. He said an ultimate navi was necessary in order to rule over all of Cyberworld."

Lan stopped and wanted to kick himself for being stupid again. He'd forgotten all about what Sean was out doing. Making amends for his crimes, while he was feeling sorry for himself. Again.

"Hey Lan!" Sean greeted.

"Looking good, Sean!" Lan smiled back. They exchanged a few friendly greetings before Sean left for SciLab. Lan wanted to follow him, but first... he owed his dad an explanation. Then he'd head over and accept the mission from Chaud.

Technically, he could start it before meeting Chaud, but he didn't have the BlackMind program yet and he should probably do this as officially as possible anyway.

"Ahrr!" Apollo growled hammily. "I be a scurvy scourge a' the undernet! Totally not a multi-time world savior! Ahrr!"

" Please tell me you won't be doing this the whole time..." Hephaestus facepalmed.

"There are ten navis ranked 1 to 10 in the undernet. Unranked navis cannot even meet the ranked ones. The navi called S, whom you will be seeking, appears to be a ranked navi."

Lan knew the drill. He did. Still, even knowing what was coming taking out ten navis in a row who were each a lot stronger than the generic WWW goons had been no walk in the park. But now he and Hub were facing down number 10 and ready to begin climbing up the ranking system.

"Who are you, you little punk...?" the cloaked navi growled. "A rank challenger? You think you can take my rank 10? Fine by me! Let's fight!"

"Sorry," Hub declared as he took a ready stance, "but we have to beat you in order to meet 'S'."

"...Why would a little punk like you be looking for S?" number 10's gaze sharpened. "If ya wanna find S, punk, you'll have to get past me first! I'll decide whether or not you deserve to meet S! Bring it on!"

"I'm bad, I'm bad! you know it!" Apollo belted out as Lan and Hub stood over the defeated number 10.

Hephaestus just tried to ignore the sun god as he continued to observe events, such as Lan and Hub receiving a fake distress call.

"And the whole world has to answer right now just to tell you once again, who's bad!"

"My rank. I'll give it to you," number 9 said, with a distinct tone of relief as he handed it over without a fight. Come to think of it, the former number 10 had sounded similar after they'd beaten him. "To be honest, I'm tired of this whole ranking system. I started out like everyone, battling my way to the top. But I've grown tired of fighting all the navis below me. They come to challenge me, day in and day out!"

Hub smirked as number 8 revealed himself to be Beastman. exe. WWW's beast-themed navi that had been sent to infiltrate the ranking system was clearly out for revenge. Good thing he had a nice little surprise for the speedy navi...

"Style change! AquaGround style!" Hub yelled as rings of code surrounded him and unveiled a blue-colored style with large boots. And as he stomped the ground, the surrounding terrain immediately switched to ice panels.

"Graaa–oop!" Beastman. exe yelled as he tried to charge, only for his claws to slip on the icy ground.

"Hahahahaha!" Lan chuckled as the animalistic navi swore loud and long while trying to keep his footing. "How do you like that, huh?"

"Just you wait you littl–ack!" Beastman. exe slipped again. "When I get my claws on you...!"

"Ice, ice, baby!" Apollo strummed out as Lan and Hub proceeded to beat their opponent even more soundly than before.

"That's cold," Hephaestus retorted, before blinking and groaning as he realized what he'd said. "Great, now you've got me doing it..."

"How well you managed to get here... I'm ranked 7," the cloaked navi stated. "Those who are ranked are duty-bound to take any challenge... You may have made it this far, but success is more than power. Real strength is driven by intelligence. So. Let me now offer you a quest... If you can find what I ask, you will get my rank as well..."

"All right! Let's have it!" Lan declared before Hub could speak.

"You are a forceful operator... Prepare to receive your quest. 'One of many birds'. Go now, and find it..."

"Oh, you mean like the one Lan made for our friend at the hospital?" Hub asked as Lan held up the origami crane and adjusted the PET's camera so the ranked navi could see it.

"Why... yes..." number 7 seemed rather shocked that they had it on hand. "Very well... I will award you the 7th rank..."

Hub blinked as Gutsman. exe appeared just in time to stop the boulder that numbers 6-4 had thrown at him. With everything that had been going on, he and Lan had practically forgotten that Dex had moved all the way to Netopia to live with his father and younger brother Chisao (11). He continued to blink owlishly as Dex admonished them for being sloppy and Gutsman. exe took out the three attackers with one big attack.

"Gutsman!" Hub finally found his voice. "Thanks! You saved me!"

"Heh!" the big navi chuckled lightly. "Helpin' friends is what friendship is all about! Yee-haw!" (12)

"But..." Lan spoke up, "what are you doing here, anyway?"

"I heard from Mayl that you were feeling down. So I came to cheer you up!"

"You came all the way from Netopia just to check on us?" Lan blinked as he recalled that was what had set off this chain of events. What... what would have happened if they hadn't been down enough for Mayl to call Dex in? Would someone else have saved them, or...?

"Of course! If any of my friends are in trouble, I'll help! Even if I'm on the opposite side of the world! That's what Dex is all about!"

"Aw, Dex... Thanks..."

"Lan, let's jack out. We've got lots to talk about. Gutsman! Jack out!"

Gutsman. exe vanished at that point, only to seemingly jack right back in a moment later. Just as Lan and Hub had been expecting.

"What is it, Guts..." Hub began reflexively before the differences in posture and the 'future memories' he and Lan shared reminded him what was really going on. "Hey! You're not Gutsman! Who are you!?"

"Hub! Those navis mentioned a Copyman when Gutsman beat them," Lan spoke up, knowing what was going on as well.

"Heh heh heh... You two are pretty sharp," Copyman. exe chuckled. "Ranked number 3, I am indeed Copyman! I can copy the data of any navi I see, and make it my own!"

"Which means those navis Gutsman beat were probably numbers 6, 5, and 4... Who work for you to ambush up and coming challengers..."

"Exactly! Kid, the word on the circuit is you're looking for S. What is it you're after? The Forbidden Program?"

"You know S?"

"I might," Copyman. exe smirked with Gutsman. exe's face. "If you beat me, I'll tell you what I know. Of course, you'll have to survive the power of Gutsman! He deleted those 3 ranked navis with a single hit!"

"Yeah?" Hub retorted as he readied himself for battle. "And we haven't lost to him yet!"

"You've been hit by a smooth criminal!" Apollo sang out as the two brothers used the GutsShoot Program Advance to take out their opponent.

"Now, tell us about S!" Hub demanded.

"Oh, all right..." the navi sighed in Gutsman. exe's form. "S is the head honcho of all the ranked players. He's number 1! No one has ever challenged S to battle and lived. Even uttering S's real name is taboo. That's why everyone simply refers to him as 'S'."

"So, where is he now?" Hub asked. Fighting through the ranks might be proving tedious, but the 'future memories' he and Lan had suggested that trying to just skip the process would not go well. 'S', aka the 'underking', aka Serenade. exe, wouldn't allow access to the Forbidden Program to anyone who hadn't proved their strength. Which might have been part of the reason for the ranking system in the first place come to think of it...

"I don't know, but number 2 should," Copyman. exe admitted as he told the two where to find their next opponent.

"I sense it... a warrior's power...!" the purple genie navi said as Hub jacked into the battlecomp used in the N1 Grand Prix.

"Indeed..." the white, red, and green navi next to the fist agreed as his gaze focused on Hub. "But... it's just a kid... Who are you?"

"I'm Megaman! Rank 3!" Hub declared.

"You?" the second navi blinked incredulously. "You are the powerhouse who climbed his way to Rank 3 in a single day?"

"Indeed," the first navi agreed. "You seem much too innocent for the undernet..."

"It doesn't matter! I'm looking for S!"

"A runt like you wishes to see S?" the second navi laughed. "Well then, I hope you are prepared. For I am Bowlman!"

"And I am Mistman!" the first navi identified himself. "Together we share Rank 2 so that only the truly strong may meet with the underking!"

"Buddy you're a boy make a big noise, playin' in the street gonna be a big man some day! You got mud on yo' face! You big disgrace! Kickin' your can all over the place!"

Hephaestus was doing his best to tune out Apollo's singing as his Anchor and co-Anchor hopefuls were put through a much more difficult battle than they would have been expecting. In the baseline they would have only fought one of the two, but which one was a question that had proved so difficult to determine that setting both in place to share the rank had been the best available solution.

Lan rubbed his temples. Something about the Rank 2 navis was giving him an enormous headache, and for the life of him, he just couldn't figure out why .

"Lan, you alright?" asked the concerned Megaman. exe, who was currently in the undernet on his way back to UnderSquare. "You've been doing that ever since we got back from the DNN Station," the Human navi pointed out.

Lan sighed. "I'm fine, Hub," he said, using his brother's real name. "Just... something about Mistman and Bowlman is bugging me. I could have sworn that we only fought one of them the first time through."

The Blue Bomber, currently in HeatShadow Style, considered this, stopping momentarily to deal with some Spikey3s that had spawned in front of him. "Now that you mention it... (EAT THIS!)... I seem to recall the same. Which one did we fight again?"

Lan thought about it a bit, idly slotting in an AquaSword chip to speed up the process of dealing with the Spikeys. "Um... it was... it was..." It was then that he started panicking. "I... I don't remember! I only remember that we fought one, but I don't remember which one that was!"

Megaman. exe reacted in shock, freezing momentarily before he used the style's AntiDamage ability to perform a kawarimi (13) and get away from a Spikey that was about to bite his head off. "How can you not remember?!" he yelled, as he finished off the last Virus. "It was... what in the world?! I don't remember either... my memory files regarding that are corrupt for some reason!"

Lan fell back into his chair. "Just what is going on..." he wondered. "First we're reliving our life, now we can't remember things properly? What's next; Regal fusing with Nebula Grey?!"

Hub reacted to that suggestion with a sour face. "Don't tempt fate like that, Lan; you know with our luck that that'll probably end up happening," he pointed out.

Lan sighed. "Yeah, you're probably right, bro." He shook his head. "We'll worry about this later," he said. "Right now, just head back to UnderSquare so we can get the GigaFreeze from Serenade."

Megaman. exe nodded. "Roger. Almost there."

"How silly do you think they're going to feel when they remember they could just jack in from the undernet's server?" Apollo asked.

"Probably very," Hephaestus suppressed a chuckle. "But it can be forgiven since the conflicting baseline memories, not to mention the glitched memories of failed attempts they've probably seen in their dreams, must be quite confusing."

"Unfortunately the Forbidden Program cannot be 'given'. Only a Chosen One may wield the program."

Lan breathed a sigh of relief as the flames of the program turned a bright blue and Hub absorbed the program GigaFreeze into himself. Even knowing that was supposed to be the outcome, the experience had been utterly nerve-wracking.

"I knew it wouldn't take you long to reach Serenade," a familiar voice spoke from behind Lan as Hub jacked out.

"Mamoru?" Lan called out. "Is that you? What are you doing here? Did the hospital release you already?"

"Heh..." Mamoru chuckled slightly as he wheeled himself into Lan's view. "Actually, I'm the administrator of the undernet, which my father created."

Lan and Hub already knew what Mamoru had arrived to tell them, but they did their best to convey shock and surprise anyway.

"What did I do again?" Hub asked in confusion. When the alarms had blared, he and Lan had taken off in immediate pursuit of Drillman. exe before he could deliver Alpha to Wily, but when they caught up with him he had begun talking like they were the ones who had committed a grave crime.

"How dare you not remember!" the drill-themed hacking navi railed in fury. "I'm going to drill a hole right through you! You'll pay for what you did to my cousin Bubbleman!"

'Oh... right... that was a thing...'

"I am Drilligo Montoya! You killed my cousin! Prepare to die!"

Hephaestus began to say that this was nowhere near as convoluted as the 'Princess Bride' branch, but stopped as he actually considered the reality of that claim.

Hub's eyes widened as the undernet flickered and distorted. After the whole deal with Mr. Match, Lan's ensuing funk, fighting their way up the undernet ranks, and chasing down Drillman. exe to retrieve Alpha; he'd forgotten this was going to happen.

"Lan, he's here!"

"Hurry and grab Alpha!" Lan yelled over the connection.

"I can't let you do that," Bass. exe declared as he appeared in a swirl of his cloak and grabbed Alpha.

"Damnit!" Lan yelled. "Hub, we can't let him escape with Alpha!"

"Right!" Hub nodded as he called up the GigaFreeze program to stop Bass. exe. Holding his hands high, the bright blue ball formed and he hurled it at the ultimate navi with all his might. "GIGAFREEZE!"

A bright flash of light blinded him for a moment, but when it died down he could see his foe holding the GigaFreeze back with one hand. A few moments later and the copy of the Forbidden Program dissipated, used up.

'I can't believe I did that!' Hub chastised himself as he recalled what had happened in the original series of events a moment too late. 'Tried to use GigaFreeze on the one navi that it doesn't work on!'

"You can use the 'GigaFreeze'?" Bass. exe seemed genuinely surprised. "Hmm... That means you... This is getting interesting! I will let you live for now. Farewell."

And with that, the ultimate navi vanished in a swirl of his cloak, leaving Lan and Hub to think about what was to come.

"You know you don't have to keep playing music for this, right?" Hephaestus asked as Apollo continued to merrily strum a foreboding tune.

"Lighten up, bro!" the sun god grinned in complete disconnection to the music he was playing. "The mighty Apollo is just setting the mood!"

Despite knowing that this was supposed to turn out fine, Lan was on edge. He and Hub had originally talked about trying to train for the final style change they knew they could earn about now, but with things this serious they'd agreed that Hub trying to fight with even minor bugs in his program could jeopardize everything. Martial law had been declared, the army was on practically every street corner, Dex was worried about his little brother in Netopia as well as everyone else, Yai was complaining that her wealthy status was being ignored, Mayl had looked at them with concern before handing them the latest version of Roll. exe's navi chip, and Protoman. exe had given them an official pass since the situation was literally 'all hands on deck'. Then there was the whole spiel about Alpha being the prototype program that administered the earliest incarnation of the net, before it gained a rudimentary level of awareness and proceeded to consume all programs connected to it.

And that was just what had happened right after he woke up that morning.

As it was right now, Lan was exceedingly thankful that the portions of Alpha controlling the AutoTanks had terrible aim...

Even if he knew it had been coming, the reveal that their grandfather, Tadashi Hikari, was the one who had created Alpha hadn't had any less of an impact on Lan and Hub. But they knew it wasn't the time to dwell on such things. Not when they needed to secure powerful enough transportation to the WWW's current base. DNN was willing to let him use the boat Sunayama had gotten for the N1 Grand Prix, but they'd had to go to Yai in order to secure a new and more powerful engine. Yet another thing they'd planned on doing earlier that they'd forgotten about recently.

And of course Yai wasn't having any of Lan's evasive explanations. She'd easily sussed out that they'd found WWW's base, but even so Lan was about to try and tell her to keep the trip a secret when he stopped and really thought about it.

"Yai..." he began. "I... I know telling you to keep this a secret from everyone would be pointless–" (14)

"Darn straight!" the short girl with seemingly endless resources glared up at him.

"Yeah," Lan rubbed the back of his head, "just... promise me you'll all be careful."

Lan had caved and let Mayl and Yai come along with him, Dex, Chaud, and even Tora with his navi Kingman. exe from the N1 Grand Prix to the island, already planning a way to send the girls back as soon as possible. Which was coming up as all of them watched in helpless horror while Dr. Cossack, the man who Lan had tracked down right before the Bubble Wash incident to ensure he installed the PressData properly, used the pulse transmission machine to enter the cyberworld and open the way forward, and was nearly killed by Bass. exe, his own creation as a result.

"Yai, Mayl!" Lan yelled as he found Dr. Cossack's pulse. "I need you to get this guy to the hospital, quickly! Dex, you help carry him to the boat!" (15)

"Roger, Lan!" Dex saluted before using his greater strength to heft the grown man and hurried him back to the boat.

"Wait'll you get a look at this, Lan! Flashman! Full Synchro!"

"Full Synchro!? How is that even possible!?"

"I have been fully digitalized! Synching with my navi is second nature to me now!"

They had all battled their way through Wily's fortress, taking out the revived WWW navis that controlled the sentry robots along the way

(16), and now he was faced with Wily who had pulse transmitted himself into the net to become the controlling mind of Alpha.

A quick look where he had to remind himself that the WWW members in chairs weren't actually dead no matter how much it looked like it, and Lan found an empty chair he could use. One that had probably been meant for Inukai and Beastman. exe who were conspicuously absent.

And so Lan readied himself in the chair, made sure the PET was connected properly and chip data properly pre-loaded, and got ready to enter the cyberworld.

"Ready, Hub?" he asked.

"Ready!"

"Alright, Pulse Transmission!"

"Alright, Hub! Let's go save the world! Full Synchro!"

They had rushed to where Wily and Bass. exe were standing over the remains of the Guardian program that kept Alpha's full power sealed just in time to see Bass. exe absorb it. And upon seeing them, the navi who hated all of humanity immediately engaged them

"Bass!" Lan called out as the body he currently shared with Hub created a barrier against the navi's attack. If... if he could just get through to Bass. exe now... "Humans aren't the way you think they are!

"Cease your lies!" the navi growled as he attacked again. "Humans think of navis as merely tools to be used. Navis who don't realize that are just as foolish!"

"Lan's never treated me that way!" Hub protested. "We're true partners, who trust and respect each other!"

"More than that, we're brothers!" Lan added and thought he saw Bass. exe hesitate for just a moment. "Even Cossack–"

"Silence!" the cloaked navi roared with fury as his creator was brought up. "Exactly what I would expect from a human! Navis have no need for operators! All we need is the strength to exist on our own! Absolute power, so that we need cower before none! I will weed out weak navis who cannot fight on their own!

"Bass!" the combined form of Hub and Lan yelled as their shared body exchanged shots with their foe. "Look back! I know that you once felt it! A bond that you treasured more than anything!"

"Hah!" the navi scarred by betrayal, that very glowing scar visible as he unleashed his power on his foes, scoffed. "You think that I retain such pathetic emotions!? Time for you to be deleted!"

"Hmph!" Wily sniffed in disdain from his spot on the sideline. "And here I was hoping that you'd have deleted each other by now..."

Bass. exe checked the attack he'd been charging up to turn and stare at the old man. "What...!?"

"Bass, the Guardian program that you destroyed..." Wily grinned wickedly. "It was the final protection placed on Alpha! It takes a lot to destroy it, you know. So I used your power. It's the reason I used Gospel to make a copy of you! Just to bring back Alpha!"

"Wily..." the ultimate navi trembled in rage. "You..."

"Navis are, after all, just tools to use! Do you see now!? I would use anything to complete my plan!"

"You despicable old man!" the currently dual voice of Megaman. exe accused.

"It doesn't matter!" Wily cackled as the cyberscape began to shake violently. "Alpha's awakening is at hand! It's the end of network society!"

"Bass! Move!"

"Don't presume to order me, huma–wha?!" the cloaked navi yelled as an amorphous blob rose up and swallowed him. "Graaaargh!"

"Ahahahaha!" Wily laughed maniacally as the ultimate navi was consumed. "Arise Alpha! Beast who will devour Cyberworld! This is the end! Of net society...And the world! Alpha! Swallow it all! All of it! Aahahahaha! Huh...!?" Wily cut off as another blob rose up to engulf him. "Stop! What...!? Aaaahhhhh!"

The cyberscape began shaking again as yet another blob rose up in front of Lan and Hub's unified self and resolved into a distinct shape. One that showed some manner of central core and fixed a single eye on them.

"Hello, Alpha," the joint voice of Megaman. exe greeted calmly as he began firing rapidly to expose the vulnerable core while dodging the disembodied swipes of its arms. "I saved something special just for you while I was fighting Bass. Salamander! Fountain! Bolt! Gaia Blade! Program Advance! Master Style !"

"Weee are the champions, my friiieeeennd!" Apollo began as Alpha collapsed before Megaman. exe's onslaught.

"This isn't over quite yet," Hephaestus posed as the two entered the door left behind.

"I've been monitoring Guardian, to stop Alpha's reawakening. It's my duty, as the creator of Alpha. When Guardian was destroyed, I thought that all was lost. Thanks to you two, the world is safe. Now the core is gone and the other parts of Alpha will fade. So how are things in net society these days, Lan and Hub? Are the navis and humans getting along well?"

"Of course! Some still use navis for bad things, but we'll stop them! right, Hub?"

"For certain! Gramps, the network society we live in is a great place!"

"I see, that's wonderful."

The two raced for the exit of the Pulse Transmission system in their shared body as Alpha collapsed around them, and as they approached a certain spot their 'future memories' blared with something important that caused the two to sidestep just in time to dodge a blob of Alpha that had risen up to grab them.

"That was close!" Lan's voice yelped.

"No time to stop, we have to hurry!" Hub yelled as they continued running before any more surprises could try and stop them.

"Did..." Hephaestus stared at the log of what had just occurred, "did you automate a subconscious warning so they could sidestep that?"

"Mmmmaaayyybbeeee..." Apollo drawled.

"...Where... am I...?" the navi asked the darkness he'd awoken to. "Am I... alive...?"

"...Grrr...Growwwlll..." came the answer from the only other creature present, for all that it had not destroyed had fled from it.

"...What do... you want...? ...Will you save me?"

"Grrr...Roarrr!"

"So... now it's time to try for that Bug Style..." Hub made a face. Poor programming customization always made him feel funny.

"Yeah," Lan nodded. "Even if we never use it again afterwards, I want it in case Bass survived and wants a rematch. I mean, we can't count on Hub Style since he copied it from us, so... Yeah. Let me know if it gets too bad."

"Roger."

The mettaur just blinked at the flower that landed on its face, before it began laughing at the blue navi. It apparently found the situation so hilarious that it failed to attack.

"Lan..." the navi moaned. "I don't feel so good..."

"What's wrong?" the voice of the NetOp asked before becoming alarmed. "Hub! Your health is dropping like a rock! Jack out! Jack out now! "

"Okay, let's try this again..." Lan started. Never again was he risking that bug.

"Yeah," Hub nodded. Whatever was wrong this time couldn't be that bad...

He raised his buster at the Canodumb that appeared and blinked as a shield formed on the end of it instead of firing.

"Okay... this could be useful..."

"We seem to be attracting a lot of viruses, Lan," Hub complained after the umpteenth battle just trying to get to his friends' homepages.

"Maybe if you stopped clomping around like a wounded buffalo," Lan shot back. "You know, try to move quietly?"

"I am! " Hub yelled back, which of course attracted yet another virus.

"Here it comes...!" Hub declared as he felt the by-now familiar onset of a new style change. "And about time!"

The navi's form blurred before resolving into a new yellow-colored motif. With an asymmetrical design on most of the body and the tell-tale glowing spots of high bug concentration on his gloves, boots, and helmet. Every few moments, part of his new form crackled with electricity and distorted at random.

"ElecBug Style," Lan nodded with satisfaction. "Now we're ready. And the first stop is to finally challenge the king of the undernet for his title!"

"Brother? Why aren't you doing anything about these things? They are beginning to annoy the mighty Apollo," the sun god looked less than pleased as a furry eight-legged critter with long ears and a cute face continued to obscure his vision by perching on his head and dangling its forelimbs over his face. Another was gripping his arm and happily munching away on the sun god's chips and dip while one gripping his other arm cheerfully sipped from his lemonade glass. A few more were rubbing up against his legs and crawling over other parts of his body with more arriving every few seconds. The critters, actually physical manifestations of bugs in Yggdrasil's systems, had their eyes keenly fixed on the display of the two brothers training their new bug-based fighting style.

"But they seem to like you!" Hephaestus grinned. "Besides, I want to let a few more climb in before I initiate counter-measures. Best to get as many as possible while they're being so cooperative as to stay in one spot and behave themselves."

"The mighty Apollo does not call this behaving..."

"Wow..." Hub breathed as he took in the area beneath the UnderSquare, with its white pathways and calm soothing waters, "this place is so... serene."

"Yeah, it's definitely nothing like you'd expect to find connected to the deepest levels of the undernet..."

"You will be sorry that I didn't delete you..." Darkman. exe groaned out as his program began to deteriorate from the damage Hub had inflicted upon him in battle. "Just wait until you feel the Dark of the underking, Serenade! Continue on, and meet your deletion!"

And with that, the dark assassin, the deleter of 9633 other navis, one of the obstacles between Hub and Serenade, succumbed to his wounds.

"You, there!" a voice suddenly halted Hub in his tracks as a samurai-armored navi appeared in his path. "Let me get a look at you! I'm Yamatoman, the greatest spear-fighter ever! And I shall shishkebab you if you try to go any further!"

"Are you another of Serenade's bodyguards?" Hub asked curiously.

Yamatoman. exe started at the question, but recovered quickly and eyed Hub with a calculating gaze. "Indeed, you are more perceptive than your youthful frame would suggest. But unlike Darkman, who serves for the opportunity to battle Serenade himself, I serve my master of my own will. And I am ordered to let none pass save those that my lord Serenade sends for personally! Have at you!"

As Hub crested the last step to the uppermost point within the underking's sanctuary, the cyberspace wavered as a great force made itself known.

"Darkman waited, patiently seeking a duel with me..." an effeminate voice rang out from the top of the stairs. "I told him I would, if he could delete 10000 navis there. Yamatoman left the SciLab Elite Corps to follow me. He was an excellent soldier. My right-hand man. Even I am forced to recognize the power of those two. And, of course, yours as well, since you defeated them."

With another great warping of digital space, a navi appeared.

"So you're Serenade," Hub stated calmly as he took in the navi's appearance.

The navi had an effeminate face that mimicked the darker skin tones found on the human race, baggy white pants that seemed made of silk over a pitch black bodysuit, and golden armor consisting of a helmet from which sprouted three long lengths of pale blonde digital hair, thick bracers striped with darker bands of gold, shoulder guards, sandal straps over the feet, and a stylistic belt much like a championship belt with a navi symbol in the center composed of a green circle with a vertical black line from the top to the center. The same navi symbol on Mamoru's wheelchair. Behind the navi floated a pair of detached curved objects that at once seemed as delicate as silk and as strong as steel, evoking a feeling of both zen-like peace and unconquerable strength. And while the navi seemed androgynous at first glance, the form-fitting bodysuit definitely indicated a female figure. (17)

"You're a girl!" Lan yelled through the connection.

Serenade. exe paused and blinked at the declaration. "Is there something wrong with that?"

"Well... no," Lan admitted, "but, well, you're the under king and all, so..."

"Ah, I see..." Serenade. exe chuckled. "A common misconception. The title of king may have once been restricted to the male gender, but even in ancient human times the flaw of only male rulers was seen. The laws of some nations declared that only a king could rule, but those same laws never proclaimed that only a male could be crowned king, and so with the ability to crown a female ruler as 'king', the people saw no need to change the practice. As such, I am king of the undernet, and king I shall remain. Unless you defeat me in a duel for the title of course. For the two of you have passed all obstacles placed before you and earned that right. But do not be fooled into thinking this duel shall be easy." (18)

"Yeah..." Hub agreed. "I can feel your power from here. It's unlike anything we've ever faced before..."

"How keen of you to notice my power even before we begin. You mentioned that I am different from other navis? That is because the source of my power..."

"Is mercy," Lan and Hub finished in stereo.

Serenade. exe blinked in pleasant surprise before responding with a gentle smile. "Indeed. I love and respect my enemy and thereby win. Come now. Let me show you."

Even Apollo seemed at a loss for witty quips as the nail-biting duel took place. Serenade. exe's defense which reflected all attacks was almost impenetrable unless she had committed to one of her most powerful attacks, and Megaman. exe practically danced around her lesser techniques, patiently waiting for an opening.

But in the end, there could be only one king of the undernet.

Serenade. exe knelt from the force of the final blow, and took in her opponent. Megaman. exe had not emerged unscathed, but he was in much better shape than she was. "I didn't think that I would ever meet a navi as strong as I," Serenade. exe smiled as she stood again, the picture of calm grace despite her defeat. "The trust that you two share makes you even more powerful. That, too, is a form of love and respect. Here. Take this," she continued as she held out the digital symbol of the highest rank in the undernet to the victor. "This shows that you are the strongest navi in Cyberworld. But He is trying to reawaken..."

"Bass..." her opponent stated with calm certainty as she looked off to the distance.

"It seems that you have fought with Him before..." the former underking smiled. "I, too, have fought Him in the past. I only managed to defeat Him after a battle lasting days. I came very close to being deleted myself... Like me, He is a denizen of the Dark. He is the incarnation of destruction. He prowls the Cyberworld with his wounded body. And now I can feel Him growing stronger day by day, made more powerful with the bugs that he absorbs. He uses these bug fragments to heal his wounds."

"So... he survived Alpha..." the NetOp mused. How odd. He almost sounded... relieved...

"Indeed He has," Serenade. exe confirmed. "He will reawaken with the howl of a beast. You will only be the strongest navi once you defeat Him."

"I understand..." Megaman. exe nodded.

"Megaman," Serenade. exe considered many things to say, but decided that the two had enough to deal with as it was, "we shall meet again, in some other place... Farewell."

And with that, she warped the digital space and left both navi and NetOp to their thoughts.

"Lan..." Hub began as he approached the BugFrag trader. "Are we sure this is a good idea?"

"Probably not," Lan admitted, "but we've got to try anyway. Bass... no one should have to suffer feelings like that for as long as he has. If there's any chance we can get through to him, then we have to try."

"Yeah..." Hub sighed as he began feeding BugFrags into the trader. "But this is still probably going to hurt..."

"All your Bass are belong to us!" (19)

"... Seriously ?" Hephaestus gave the grinning sun god a look.

"Roaaaaarrr!" the familiar cry of fury sounded out shortly after Hub had finished feeding enough BugFrags into the trader that he'd lost count.

"Okay, that did it!" Lan yelped across the connection.

"I have awakened..." a sinister voice echoed across the area as the cyberspace began to quake.

"Here he comes Lan!" Hub yelled back as a flash of light lit the area, revealing a black-armored navi with golden highlights clad in a long brown cloak and surrounded by a glowing aura. "Bass!"

"You're alive!"

"Bass?" the navi's face twisted in confusion. "Who is this... Bass...?"

"Don't you remember us?" Lan called out. "We're..." Lan hesitated for a moment on what he'd been about to claim. "We wanted to make sure you were okay... I mean... how could we be your friends if you weren't?"

The navi snorted in derision. "I search only for power. I have no name... I need no friends... I exist only to battle... I shall test the power that the bugs gave me... On you!"

The cloaked navi lunged forward, a pair of bug-lighted animalistic claws appearing on either side of him as he did. Hub dodged the strikes and noted the deep furrows they gouged in the terrain.

"He's... I think he's fused with the Gospel bug beast!" Hub yelled as the navi brought his arms out of his cloak and formed a cannon shaped like said beast's head which then breathed a wide gout of flame that he narrowly backstepped from.

"Then there's no choice!" Lan called back. "Initiate style change!"

"Right!" Hub yelled as rings of code rotated around his form to the interest of their opponent. When they finished, he was in the yellow bug-lighted form he'd spent so much time earning. "ElecBug Style!"

"Useless!" their opponent yelled as another gout of flame issued forth, only for his eyes to widen as his opponent charged through, his body protected by a green glow and swinging a fan. "Wha?"

"Northwind!" the navi cried as a wind sprang up and blew the aura on his opponent away. The fan then vanished and his arm formed into a sword that burned with flame and slashed. The sword then turned blue as he slashed again, then yellow crackling with electricity, and finally green as he completed his assault, the cloaked navi falling back from the damage.

"BURN!" the cloaked navi roared as he got to his feet and formed the Gospel-head cannon again, this time breathing out a gout of green flame as the protective green glow around his opponent vanished.

"AAAAHHHH!" Hub yelled as the bizarrely wood-type attack tore into his elec-type form.

"HAHAHAHAHA!" the cloaked navi boomed as his aura reformed and he began charging up his normal cannons and firing a barrage of energy blasts. His glee turned to confusion as his opponent began to phase erratically, his form seeming to glitch out of the way of every single shot before it hit. And right as his barrage died down, a rockcube came hurtling at him which took out his aura again.

"GutsImpact!" Hub yelled as a final movement glitch took him right in front of Bass. exe and he punched with all his might. "Lance!" he yelled again and a row of sharp spears hit the cloaked navi in the back.

The cloaked navi growled as he took another shot which seemed to strike home, but instead was really a dummy as a trio of shuriken rained down on him.

"DIE!" he yelled as he called forth the claws from before to rake the area and then bring his aura back. He grinned with satisfaction as one of them struck, only for that grin to vanish as a red navi avatar slashed his aura away again. A few moments later and a pink one managed to drain away part of his vitality and give it to his opponent.

"Time to finish it, Hub!" the NetOp declared. "Program Advance–"

"VANISH INTO NOTHINGNESS!" the cloaked navi howled as he formed a huge Gospel-head cannon which began charging.

Hub's eyes widened as he rushed to use what Lan had sent him. "Oh, cra–"

"VANISHING WORLD!" Bass. exe roared as his Gospel-head cannon fired a humongous white laser that detonated the entire area around its target. Seeing no movement as the dust cleared, he began to laugh until a noise penetrated his thoughts right before his aura returned.

–beep...ding!

The explosion of the planted device sent him reeling to the ground, where he lay prone, only able to stare as the dust finished settling to reveal his opponent much worse for wear, but still alive.

"How...?" Bass. exe growled in impotent frustration as his opponent limped to his feet. "I have no equal! I am destruction incarnate! I have far more power than you! How...?"

"Because you... are fighting alone!" Hub declared, endlessly thankful for the UnderShot program (or was it UnderShirt?). "As long as I have Lan and my friends with me, I have no limits!"

"What idiocy is this?" Bass. exe growled as he struggled to his own feet. "Strength does not rely on others!"

"You're wrong!" Hub declared. "When navis are able to completely trust their operators, humans, then they are finally able to realize their power! And when friends stand together, they become stronger than either could ever be alone! You, too, once had someone you could trust like that!"

"I trust no one but myself!"

"Bass, try to remember! Let us help you!"

"...Urrgh...!" the self-proclaimed emissary of destruction clutched his head in pain. "Who is this man who invades my memory! What is this... feeling? He is... father? ...No! Never! I need no one! Power is all! Destruction is my purpose!" With that, Bass. exe raised his hand and began charging up the most powerful EarthBreaker that Hub could recall seeing before striking the ground at his own feet. "Uraaaaaagh!"

Hub shielded his eyes from the light the impact produced, but when it died down Bass. exe was gone.

"Sorry, Lan..." he sighed. "We failed..."

"It was worth a shot, though, right?"

"Yeah... it was."

"We'll bring him around next time..."

It was a few weeks after their trek through the Secret Area, and not much longer until Nebula sprung to life. But Lan was feeling a bit down.

"Lan, you alright?" Megaman. exe asked in concern. After all, Lan had actually done his homework for once!

Lan sighed. "I know stopping bad guys comes first and everything, but I'm still a bit bummed that we never got to face Chaud in the N1 Grand Prix," he admitted.

"Well, lucky for you, I've got some news for you to chow down on," Hub prompted, as a certain e-mail popped up in the PET's inbox.

"...Did you install Mr. Famous's Humor program again while I wasn't looking?" Lan asked suspiciously (20). Hub rather deliberately ignored that, instead opening the e-mail. And it was exactly what he had expected, perfect for cheering Lan up.

"Looks like it's time for the BattleChipGP!" Hub announced cheerily.

"...Remind me, why did this happen again?" Lan wondered.

"Um...I don't really remember myself. I know Yai is the sponsor and Bass turned up at the very end," Hub sheepishly admitted. "But Chaud is going to be there," he reminded his brother.

"...Alright! Let's win the BattleChipGP!" Lan declared, snapping out of his funk.

"Remember, Lan, we gotta sign up on the net," the blue navi admonished.

"I know that! Jack In! Megaman, Execute!" Lan declared, sending Megaman. exe into the net to sign up for the tournament. (21)

"The mighty Apollo would also like to know why this is being held. Not that the mighty Apollo disapproves of course. It just..."

"Comes out of nowhere? Apparently there's still an active, if mostly forgotten, task force charged with finding and capturing Bass. The navi that intervened after their fight with Flameman is one of them in fact. They have a fair bit of knowledge mixed in with a lot of misconceptions, among it the fact that Bass enjoys challenging strong opponents. Thus they think that arranging a big tournament will draw him out to where he can be more readily captured or eliminated. Of course, they haven't really put much thought into the possibility of collateral damage, such as what could happen to the navi that catches Bass's attention. Nor have they really thought about what else such a tournament might draw the attention of."

"Such as?"

"Interesting question, with an even more interesting answer. This branch has a number of events that I can only classify as 'maybe baseline'. As in, maybe they happened in the baseline and maybe they didn't. This tournament is among them, and... Well, it could potentially attract almost anything that exists in the iteration."

"That leads the mighty Apollo to a better question: Why did you see fit to allow its inclusion in this attempt?"

"Yggdrasil judged it would provide an extra five percent to the overall success chance."

"There! We're all signed up!" Lan declared.

"Hm...something's off," his brother said confusedly.

"What do you mean, Hub?" Lan asked, looking down at his PET.

"It's just...wasn't there some kind of Program Deck we were supposed to use in this tournament? I remember you installing something like that," Hub remembered.

Lan thought on it for a second. He did seem to recall using some kind of Program Deck thing. Huh. "That's strange. I wonder why they didn't use it this time?" Lan wondered.

"Maybe little things changed slightly and added up, like how the Rank 2 navi was both Mistman and Bowlman," Hub suggested.

"Could be. Anyway, let's not worry about that right now! Did you get the list of tournament entrants?" Lan asked.

"Yep. Right here in an e-mail. Chaud is on there, not to anyone's surprise. I also see a lot of familiar faces on here. Dex and Gutsman, Mayl and Roll, Tora and Kingman, Higsby and Numberman, and..." Hub trailed off when he came across a few particular names.

"What is it?" Lan asked in concern.

"Nothing, just that a lot of the Gospel and WWW Operators are also in this tournament. Which is weird, since they were all arrested," Hub said in confusion.

"That is weird. Why would they let them of all people compete?" Lan wondered, scratching his head in confusion.

Just then, the PET's mail alert went off. "E-mail for you, Lan! It's an ad from Higsby's!" Hub announced.

Lan was immediately distracted by this. "Maybe we should swing by and see what Higsby's got for sale!" he declared.

"Woah there! The first round of the Tournament's going to start soon! We can stop by Higsby's later," Hub pointed out.

"Alright alright..."

"What, no witty comments?"

"The mighty Apollo is saving himself for later."

"Wow, Lan, I can't believe you're on time!" Mayl said in shock as the Hikari boy walked up to the school entrance. Dex looked pretty flabbergasted as well.

"Me neither. I almost went to the TV Station instead, since they held the N1 there," Lan admitted sheepishly. Of course, that was when he noticed the new face, a blond girl who looked somewhat Netopian. 'Oh yeah, that's Mary, Yai's stay-at-home friend!' he abruptly remembered.

"Hey there! Haven't seen you around before. I'm Lan Hikari!" he introduced.

"And I'm his navi, Megaman! But you can call me Hub if you want," Hub introduced.

"Um, nice to meet you. I'm Mary Towa," Mary said shyly.

"She's my homestay sister!" Yai's voice was heard chiming in. The group there turned to see the short girl walk up to them. "Well well, I didn't expect to see you here on time, Lan!" she teased.

"Yeah yeah... Anyway, are you and Glide competing too, Yai?" Lan asked. He didn't think they were, but it never hurt to double check.

"Nope! This time, I'm the sponsor! How else do you think this got started after the problems with the N1?" she pointed out.

"Err, good point," Lan admitted. He then turned back to Mary. "Anyway, it's nice to meet you, Mary!" he said.

"Thanks. I heard you two were a big "travesty" in Netopia..." Mary said sincerely.

"No, really, it was nothing," Lan bashfully said.

Meanwhile, the others were silent at this, wondering how Lan didn't even realize what she had actually said. Wait, he's Lan. Never mind.

"I don't think she means that as a compliment, Lan," Hub pointed out.

"Huh? Really?" Lan blinked in surprise.

"Well, it is her second language, so she makes mistakes sometimes," Yai tried to rationalize.

"I'm not seeing what the big deal is!"

"Lan, you should know what travesty means! You're in the sixth grade now!"

"Oh, no! Did I get it wrong again? Sorry, Lan," Mary apologized profusely.

"Nah, don't sweat it. I got what you meant to say, so it doesn't matter," Lan waved it off.

"Hey, Mary! Forgetting something?" another voice cut in.

"Oh, right!" Mary realized, bringing out her PET. "Everyone, this is my navi," she started.

"Ring!" Ring. exe introduced herself. "I hear you're the best, Lan and Hub, so you're the perfect opponents for a beauty like me and a genius like Mary! I can hardly wait to battle!" she exclaimed.

"Same for me!" Hub said in return. Enthusiasm seemed to be in the air.

"Oh, Ring! I told you to cool it..." Mary said nervously.

"It's OK! Look, we're making friends! It's easy, Mary," Ring. exe shot back.

"Well, I've got some GP business, so you'll have to excuse me! Let's go, Mary!" Yai declared.

"See you again, everyone!" Mary greeted them farewell.

"Bye-bye!" Ring. exe chimed in. And with that, they left to go inside.

"Mary sure is quiet for a Netopian!" Mayl noted in curiosity.

"Yeah, but that navi of hers sure isn't!" Dex said in a rather understating way.

"Well, there's all kinds of teams, I guess! OK, Lan, now you'll get your chance to battle!" Hub declared.

"Yep! Let's do it!" his brother exclaimed. He was just about to go inside, when Dex stopped him.

"Uh, Lan? You may want to check the tourney first," Dex nervously said, pointing at the board that had been set up in front of the fountain.

"Why, what's the–HOLY–!" Lan almost swore when he noticed the board.

"What?" Hub asked in confusion. Lan wordlessly held the PET in front of him so Hub could take a look with the camera. "Woah. That's complicated," Hub said, a deer-in-headlights look on his face. And it really was. There were so many tiers, so many rounds, so many different ways to get bys. There were even matches that required specific matchups!

"I bet Yai's business is sorting this thing out, because I can't make heads or tails of this thing!" Lan complained.

"About the only thing anybody can tell with that thing is who they're facing next," Roll. exe agreed.

"Yeah. I'm not wasting a single bit of processing trying to figure that mess out," Gutsman. exe flat out said.

"Well, it looks like our first opponent is someone named Kenji with an off-the-shelf navi," Hub said as he finally found Lan's name on there.

"Good luck, Lan!" Mayl cheered.

"Yeah, you better not lose! I'm the one who's going to beat you!" Dex boasted.

"We'll see about that! Let's go, Hub!" Lan declared.

"Roger!"

"Wow... Even the mighty Apollo needed time to decipher that tournament plan. A mortal would need a flowchart to even have a chance..."

"Actually, I think that was the flowchart."

"Well, that was easy," Lan said, waiting in front of the tourney board for his next match. He had already won his first battle in the tournament.

"Well, that guy had only bought his navi and a chip folder yesterday. Looks like these early rounds are more to find the more capable NetBattlers," Hub mused.

"I guess... Hey! The board just updated!" Lan exclaimed.

"It's still a complete mess, but it looks like we're facing Higsby next," Hub noted.

"It's been a while since we've fought Numberman. Wonder if he's gotten any stronger?" Lan wondered.

"Lan!"

Lan turned to see Higsby running up to him. "Hey, Higsby! Congratulations on your win," he complimented.

"Yeah, well I'm not happy, huh!" Higsby complained. "My first match had me face Ms. Mari, huh!"

"Ouch," Lan winced. He was well aware Higsby had a crush on her.

"Yeah. Still, no reason to let that get in the way of our match, huh," Higsby shrugged.

"Looking forward to it!" Lan cheered.

"Hey, Numberman. How've you been?" Hub asked.

"As well as anyone could be, I suppose. I've gotten a lot better since our WWW days, Megaman. You better watch yourself out there!" Numberman. exe tossed his way.

"Like Lan said, we're both looking forward to it!" Hub said in return.

"Ack! It's almost time for our match!" Higsby exclaimed as he noticed the time.

"Yikes! We'd better get in there!" Lan hurriedly said. The two of them immediately ran inside. As they did so, Lan reminded himself to ask Yai why the battlecomp looked like his Home Page. That was kind of creepy.

"The mighty Lan versus the awesome hair! Round... whatever! FIGHT!"

"Man, Higsby and Numberman have sure gotten a lot tougher," Lan noted, walking back to the board.

"I'll say. I wonder where Numberman got the idea to use a tenbou as a sword?" Hub wondered.

"I'm just glad I sent that AreaGrab in time. That TimeBomb+ was nasty ," Lan winced.

"We have been using a lot of those lately," Hub mused, before noticing the board. "Lan, the board's updated!"

"Looks like our next opponent is someone else with a NormalNavi. Should be a piece of cake!" Lan cheered, before running back inside, ignoring Hub's admonishments.

As he did though, Chaud walked up to the board, shaking his head at Lan's antics. "Should have figured you'd have been invited too, Hikari," he muttered. He also couldn't help but think back to how he got involved...

"A threat?"

"Yes. Have you heard of the upcoming NetBattle tournament?"

"You mean the BattleChipGP?"

"Yes. This is the threat mail."

'"We will delete the winning navi in the BattleChipGP. - The WWW"'

"What?! But the WWW was disbanded."

"Yes, it was, so this could be just a hoax. But we can't act until after the fact. So we want you to go enter the BattleChipGP."

"An undercover investigation..."

"Precisely. You work apart from us, observing the tournament from the inside, and keeping tabs on anything suspicious. This is a job that only you, the official ace NetBattler, can do. Do you accept?"

"...I accept."

"Contact us if you see anything suspicious. And be careful."

"Lord Chaud, do you think that the WWW is really behind this?" Protoman. exe questioned, bringing Chaud back to reality.

"I don't know," Chaud admitted. "There's only one thing that's clear. They said 'We will delete the winning navi in the BattleChipGP.' So if I win, the perpetrator will reveal himself to me."

"So we'll be decoys?" Protoman. exe queried, with a slight hint of distaste in his voice.

"And why not? WWW or no, there isn't anybody we can't defeat. Right, Protoman?" Chaud questioned.

"Leave it to me, Lord Chaud," Protoman. exe affirmed. With that said, Chaud walked in to begin his next match.

"You do know that song only applies to one of them, right?"

Apollo ignored Hephaestus as he continued with his rendition of 'Sunglasses At Night' .

Mary Towa never thought that she'd ever be this lucky. All her life, she had envied the kids who were able to play normally, while she was forced to just watch because of the limitations of her pacemaker, not to mention her own body. She told herself that she didn't really care and that she preferred to be alone, but that was really a lie, wasn't it? Why else would she have customized Ring. exe the way she had? (22)

She had been furious when Ring. exe had signed her up for the BattleChipGP without telling her. But...meeting all these wonderful people was truly amazing. She had honest-to-goodness friends now. "Hey, Ring?" Mary ventured.

"Yeah, Mary?"

"...Thanks for signing me up in the tournament. I've been having a great time," Mary admitted.

"I told you, didn't I?! Can't go wrong with one of my plans!" Ring. exe boasted. Just then, they heard two familiar voices.

"I told you not to underestimate them. What do you do, you underestimate them!"

"Give me a break, Hub! I didn't know they were going to have some Style Change like that! What kind of Style Change has Hammers?!"

"You're lucky I managed to change to HeatShadow and get off Anti-Damage."

"Yeah yeah. Hm? Oh, hey Mary!" Lan greeted, walking up from where he had had his last match.

"Hi, Lan. Did you have a good match?" Mary asked.

"Eh, I kind of underestimated my opponent and almost lost," he admitted, rubbing the back of his neck. "But we pulled through in the end!"

"You wouldn't have needed to if you had taken him seriously to begin with!" Megaman. exe chimed in. You know, it was funny. Why did Lan call him Hub anyway?

"Hey, Mary! The board's updated!" Ring. exe chimed in unexpectedly. Turning, the four of them noticed the matchups.

"Hey, it looks like it's us up next!" Lan noticed.

"Oh! Really?" Mary asked in shock.

"Well, this ought to be fun! Better watch out, Megaman!" Ring. exe chirped.

"Right back at you!" the Blue Bomber returned.

"Come on, Mary! Let's go get ready!" Lan declared, rushing off on his skates.

"Lan, wait!" Mary called, going after him as fast as she could. Which was just walking speed because anything more would overwork the pacemaker.

"Well well, didn't expect to see a matchup like this. You both ready?" Yai asked of the two NetBattlers, who were standing at the battlecomp.

"And here we have the Blue Whirlwind of Megaman versus the new up-and-comer from Netopia, Ring!" Ribbita reported. "Which navi will be the winner of this round? Let's find out! Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!" both navis declared, before immediately launching into battle. Megaman. exe started by shooting his MegaBuster at Ring. exe. However, Mary had customized Airshoes into Ring. exe by default, so the blond navi simply flew above the shots. Megaman. exe didn't take that lying down though. He analyzed her flight pattern and fired off a Charged Shot at her. It impacted Ring. exe directly in the torso, knocking her back to the ground.

"Tch! Not bad!" Ring. exe complimented. "Hey, Mary! Give me something to work with here!" she called out.

"Um...here! Mega Boomerang, download!" Mary declared. Having said that, a wood-aligned boomerang appeared in Ring. exe's hand and she tossed it forward at Megaman. exe. The Blue Bomber jumped over the initial pass-by of the M-Boomer, peppering Ring. exe with MegaBuster shots. However, Mary sent Ring. exe a Guard chip, which she put to good use. Just when Megaman. exe was waiting for the giant Mettaur-helmet shield to go down, he got caught by the return of the M-Boomer.

He winced in pain, before giving a grin. "You're not half-bad yourself!" he said. "Lan!"

"Coming at ya! Mega Cannon: Triple Download!" Lan slotted said Chips in.

"Program Advance: Zeta-Cannon 3!" Megaman. exe declared, firing off the barrage of cannon blasts. Ring. exe widened her eyes before the blasts impacted where she stood. As the five seconds were up, Megaman. exe's cannon disappeared. He stood there, waiting for the smoke to clear.

Suddenly, from behind him, three shurikens appeared, slamming into his back. "Gah!" he yelled, flung forward due to the shurikens. As he impacted the ground, he turned behind him to see what had attacked. There, he saw Ring. exe, who looked scathed, but not out of it.

"Phew! Couldn't have timed that a little earlier, Mary?" she asked of her NetOp.

"Um...maybe you shouldn't have just stood there?" Mary offered.

"Whaddya talking about?! Oh, forget it. You put up a good fight, Megaman, but this game's winner is going to be me!" Ring. exe declared, prepping for her finisher. "Ring Boomerang!" she declared, swinging her head forward. Her pigtails detached from her head, forming into twin ring-shaped boomerangs that flew at Megaman. exe. But the Blue Bomber was calm, having received Chip Data from Lan. Just as the Ring Boomerang was about to hit him, he vanished.

Ring. exe's eyes widened, as she recognized the tactic. "AreaGrab?!" she said in shock, before hearing an unpleasant sound behind her.

"Program Advance: LifeSword2!" Megaman. exe declared, slashing Ring. exe directly in the back with the fused version of FireSword, AquaSword, and ElecSword. There was an explosion, and Ring. exe was knocked clean across the arena.

"Gkh...not bad!" Ring. exe complimented, despite being in pain. Sparks flew all over her. She couldn't take it anymore; she logged out.

"Ring has Logged Out! Meaning that the winner is: Megaman!" Ribbita announced.

"We did it!" Lan cheered. "That was a great match, Mary," he said enthusiastically.

"Really? You're so strong...we didn't stand a chance," Mary said morosely.

"No, don't say that! You almost got us! You might have won this if I hadn't gotten those chips off in time! And it's not like this is your last match, is it?" Lan questioned.

"I guess not. I'm sad that we lost, but...I had fun with this! Thanks, Lan!" Mary smiled.

"Any time!" Lan grinned.

"Ah, how the times do change, eh brother?" Apollo mused. "The wise Apollo believes it really wasn't all that long ago in the local era that a child like the lovely Mary wouldn't have lived at all with such a condition, much less become a respected warrioress."

Hephaestus just smiled. The pace at which mortals improved their lives with technology was rather amazing at times, no matter how many problems came along with it.

"I can't believe after spending all that time fighting at the school, now we have to go all the way to the TV Station," Lan commented, walking up Beach Street.

"Can't be helped. Gutsman and Roll's fight pretty much destroyed the comp space. And apparently there wasn't enough left in the budget to get it fixed," Hub pointed out.

"I still need to find out why it looked like my home page. That was just plain creepy," Lan shuddered. "Anyway, Mary was pretty chipper after we cheered her up," he remembered.

"Especially after we pointed out Chaud to her," Hub said wryly.

"I know! I swear she was blushing !" Lan grinned. "I'm telling you, she has a crush on him!"

"Well, regardless of that, we're here," Hub noted. Lan walked right up to the hastily-constructed tournament board.

"Let's see, our next opponent is...Wait, WHAT?!" Lan exclaimed in shock.

"Lan, what is it?!" Hub asked in concern.

"Our next opponent...it's–!" Lan attempted to say.

"Hi, boys!"

"Gah! Mom!" Lan yelled, turning around to face behind him. Standing there was indeed their mother, Haruka Hikari.

"Wait, Mom, you're our next opponent?!" Hub said in shock.

"Sorry I didn't tell you, Lan and Hub! Think of it as a family gathering!" Haruka said in a chipper tone.

"But..." Lan stammered.

"Now, Lan, don't go easy on me just because I'm your mom!" she said sternly.

"But..." Hub also stammered.

"Oh, not you too, Hub! I know I don't look it, but your father has taught me a lot about navi Operation. I'll be fine! ...Unless you're scared of losing to your mom," Haruka teased.

Lan snapped out of it. "No way! Just watch, Mom! We're going to win this thing!"

"Well, I'm not going to give up without a fight myself!" the Hikari matriarch shot right back.

Hub shook his head at this, before noticing the time. "Uh, Lan, Mom? It's about time for our match," he reminded them.

"Ack! Come on, Mom!" Lan declared, grabbing her by the hand and pulling her along with him.

"Wait, Lan, slow down! I'm not as young as I used to be!"

"Awkward rating?"

"Hmm... Seven point five. They may be a loving family, but there's plenty of ways this could be made worse."

"I didn't expect Mom to be that tough!" Lan said in shock as he walked outside the TV Station to catch some fresh air.

"Thank goodness for StepSword," Hub agreed, before noticing a certain someone. "Hey, isn't that Chaud?" he noted.

Lan blinked. "Yeah! It is! HEY! Chaud!" he yelled.

Chaud reacted and stopped leaning against a wall. "Huh?! Oh, it's you. What is it, Lan?" he asked, rolling his eyes.

Lan immediately ran up to him. "I figured you might be here. Let's finish what we started last time!" he declared.

"What? Look, I'm here on duty. Otherwise I wouldn't have even bothered coming to this tournament," Chaud mentioned.

Lan paused. "What exactly do you mean?" he asked in a serious tone.

"There's a chance that some remnants of the WWW are here today. If we let our guards down, it could be all over for us. Now, if you'll excuse me..." And with that, Chaud left to go inside the Station, likely to fight in his next match.

Lan looked at his retreating form in worry. "Were there WWW remnants in this tournament?" he asked Hub.

"Not that I can recall. But like we've discussed, our memories regarding the BattleChipGP aren't as concrete or lucid as our memories regarding most of the stuff we've run into," Hub pointed out.

"Yeah. Only thing I can really remember is that the whole point of this was to draw out Bass," Lan mused. "Well, we'll just worry about WWW remnants if they show up!" he said, putting it out of mind for now.

"Alright. By the way, the board's updated," Hub said. Lan immediately skated up to it, looking for his name.

"It's actually getting a bit more manageable," he noted. "Course, I still can't really make heads or tails of it. ...Aha! Looks like our next opponent is Dr. Froid and Iceman! Better get the elec chips ready," he mused, before skating back into the Station, much to the irritation of the staff.

"HEY! NO SKATING IN THE HALLS!"

"Man, was that intense!" Lan sighed, plopping down into a seat in the TV Station.

"Yeah, not only was Iceman a lot tougher than he was the first time we fought him, but then we had that marathon against those elementally-aligned navis," Hub commiserated.

"Who, of course, had Style Changes as well. It's really become a staple of navi customization, hasn't it?" Lan mused.

"Well, of course! Most custom navis these days were customized out of a Style Change," his brother pointed out.

"Yeah... Course, they can't compare to you, Hub!" Lan declared.

"Thanks, but don't get overconfident again, Lan."

"I know that!"

Just then, Mayl walked up. "Hey, Lan!" she said, sitting down in the seat next to him.

"Oh, hey, Mayl! How was your last match?" Lan asked.

"Pretty good. Actually, my opponent was actually Sal!" Mayl remembered.

"Oh, really? How'd you do?"

"Well..."

"Hey, Lan!" Yai's voice was heard. Turning, Lan and Mayl got out of their seats to see the short girl walk up to them, along with someone who Lan barely recognized.

"Yeah, Yai?" he wondered. 'Who is that again...?' Lan wondered about the boy who had come up with her.

"I've got someone to introduce to you! Go ahead, introduce yourself," Yai stated, moving back so the boy with her could speak.

Said boy was wearing a yellow outfit that resembled a mechanic's and was rather giddy. "WOW! It's really you! Master Lan!" he said in glee.

Lan started at this. "M-Master? Me?" he stammered.

Just then, the boy's navi chimed in. He was red, and looked a bit like a car. "And that must be Megaman! Wow! Such clean lines! So simple! So perfect!" he gushed.

"Uh... Thanks, I think!" Megaman said sheepishly.

"Is this a friend of yours, Lan?" Mayl asked in curiosity.

"No, no! Never met him! Or have we?" he wondered. Something about this kid was pretty familiar, and not just because his future memories were blaring like a siren.

"I'm Kai Todoroki! You helped me during the bus incident six months ago!" the now-named Kai explained.

"I'm Kai's navi, Turboman! Thanks a lot for helping Kai!" Turboman. exe thanked.

"Six months ago? Bus incident?" Lan wondered, before remembering. "Oh yeah! I remember!"

"So do I! Remember when the traffic lights were out of control?" Megaman. exe reminded everyone.

"So you were on the bus? Well, you're looking good!" Lan complimented.

Kai beamed. "Thanks to you, Master Lan!"

Lan was a tiny bit uncomfortable with the praise. "Uh... Tell you what. Just call me Lan!" he insisted.

"Sure thing, Master Lan!" Kai proceeded to completely ignore him on that point.

"He's like a kid brother! Kai, you really like Lan that much?" Mayl wondered.

Turboman. exe explained for him. "We came here to meet him! Lan and Megaman are our heroes!"

"Yeah, our heroes!" Kai echoed.

"Hey, if you guys were on the bus, how come you didn't try to help?" Yai wondered.

At this, both of them grew sheepish. "We would have, but..." Turboman. exe started.

"Turboman was only a NormalNavi back then. I didn't customize him properly until a few weeks ago," Kai said sheepishly. (23)

"Really?" Lan blinked in surprise.

"Yeah! You should have seen it! We were fighting like normal, when he turned into some Style Change we'd never seen before! That's where I got the inspiration to turn him into Turboman!" Kai explained in pride.

"Well, I'd like to continue with this, but the tournament is still going on," Yai reminded them. "Mayl, your next match is with Mary. Lan, your next match is with Kai here!"

"Looking forward to it! Get ready, Kai!" Lan declared.

"I was born ready, Master Lan!" Kai cheered.

"Let's have a good time, Turboman!" Megaman. exe said in good sportsmanship.

"Time to put the pedal to the metal!" Turboman. exe exclaimed.

"And here we have the Blue Whirlwind, Megaman, versus the Red Roadster, Turboman! Who's going to win this match of the BattleChipGP? Battle routine, set!" Ribitta announced.

"Execute!" Megaman. exe declared.

"Time to burn rubber!" Turboman. exe said instead. In an opening move, he transformed into a car and zoomed forward at Megaman. exe. The Blue Bomber widened his eyes, leaping over the rampaging car. However, by the time he landed, Turboman. exe had veered around and was about to try to run him over again. Megaman. exe dodged again, but it was only by a hair. As he landed, he thought furiously of how to change this pattern.

Luckily, Lan had an idea. "Cars are great and all, but they need traction to work!" he declared.

That was when Megaman. exe got it. "Right behind you!" he said, summoning code rings around him. He shifted to a paler blue color, and his boots enlarged. "Style Change: AquaGround!" he declared. But he wasn't finished yet.

"Set Panel: Ice!" he exclaimed, stomping the ground. The panels flickered for a bit, before they became ice panels. The frictionless ice, true to the laws of nature that the Cyber World loved to mimic, proceeded to make Turboman. exe spin out of control.

"YAAAAAAAH!" he yelled in distress.

"Hang on, Turboman!" Kai called out. "Burner, BattleChip in!" he declared, slotting the Chip Data obtained from Fishy2 Viruses into his PET.

Turboman. exe immediately caught on fire. However, since he was causing it, he wasn't harmed. Unfortunately for Megaman. exe, the fire around Turboman. exe was enough to melt the ice panels under his tires. The Red Roadster immediately zoomed after Megaman. exe once again. Not only was he a rampaging car, but now he was on fire! And that's just terrible.

However, Megaman. exe wasn't out of it yet. Hastily disengaging the program that let him treat the ice as though it was normal panels, he slid away on the few remaining ice panels to get some breathing room. But Turboman. exe was still under the effects of Burner, so even if he reset the panels back to ice, his opponent would just melt them again. That was when Megaman. exe got another idea.

Turboman. exe was approaching, still on fire. Normally, the Blue Bomber wouldn't have enough time. But luckily, being in an aqua-element Style meant that he could do this easily. He readily charged his buster, shooting his attack.

"Bubbler!" he declared, shooting the Charged Shot version of a Shrimpy Virus's attack at Turboman. exe. The aqua-element attack hit the fire surrounding Turboman. exe and immediately evaporated into steam. Unfortunately for Turboman. exe, this meant that he could not see. At all.

He was forced to disengage and return to humanoid form. Before the steam could clear though, he heard something very unpleasant. "AreaGrab, AquaBlade, in and download!" Lan was heard declaring.

Turboman. exe immediately looked every which way, hoping to catch Megaman. exe's reappearance. Unfortunately, the steam was cloaking his vision, so he couldn't see more than a foot in front of him. When the steam finally cleared, he noticed movement out of the corner of his eye. Turboman. exe quickly spun and managed to deflect most of Megaman. exe's swing with the AquaBlade with his arm, only getting nicked slightly. Of course, since Turboman. exe was not actually a fire-element navi, it just did normal damage.

"Gh! Not bad, Master! But I'm not finished yet! Turbo Wheel!" Turboman. exe declared, shooting flaming wheels at Megaman. exe. The Blue Bomber simply deflected the wheels with his AquaBlade, but that was more than enough time for Kai to send Turboman. exe a FireBlade. The two navis proceeded to swing blades at each other, before finding themselves in a stalemate.

"You've put up a great fight, Turboman. But this fight is over! Pop-Up!" Megaman. exe declared, falling down a Hole.

"Huh?!" Turboman. exe asked in shock. And that one moment was all Megaman. exe needed.

"Hah!" he yelled, bursting up from the ground behind Turboman. exe and performing a spinning slash to the back. This knocked Turboman. exe clean across the battlefield, letting off sparks of damage.

"Gkh...Well done...Master Megaman," Turboman. exe weakly complimented, before being forced to log out.

"Turboman has logged out! Meaning that the winner is: Megaman!" Ribitta announced.

"Yes! Great job!" Lan cheered, even as the Blue Bomber reverted to Normal Style and logged out himself.

"Wow, Master Lan! That was amazing! I learned a lot from fighting you!" Kai gushed.

"Glad to hear it, Kai! Just, one thing..."

"Yes, Master Lan?"

"...Could you please stop calling me Master?"

"You got it, Master Lan!"

"...Sigh."

"Come young padawan, bring your navi and learn the ways of the Force!" Apollo intoned in a decent impression of a solemn tone.

"...Knowing how Yggdrasil works, that's probably going to happen at some point."

"Man, we've been seeing a lot of familiar faces lately, haven't we?" Lan mused.

"Most of them from the Gospel Incident. Airman, Quickman, even Raoul and Thunderman!" Hub listed.

"What's next, Freezeman?" Lan said rhetorically.

"Maybe," a voice rang out. Turning, Lan saw a familiar face walk up.

"Oh, hey! Sean!" Lan greeted. It was indeed Sean Obihiro, the former leader of Gospel.

"Lan," Sean nodded. "So, you two are our opponents for this round, huh?"

"Lan, our next opponent is Freezeman!" Hub stated right after Sean spoke.

"Huh? Wait, Sean, you're Freezeman's operator?" Lan asked in confusion.

"Yes, why do you ask? No, wait, don't tell me. You thought Freezeman was a solo navi, didn't you?" Sean asked wryly.

"Eheheh..." Lan rubbed the back of his head sheepishly.

Sean shook his head in amusement, before turning serious. "Although...I question why I'm even in this tournament to begin with," he said.

Lan blinked in confusion. "What do you mean?"

Sean shook his head, before turning to the tournament board. "I may be reformed, but I'm still a former net criminal. I shouldn't have been invited to a large tournament like this, and neither should my former subordinates have. Not to mention the WWW operators in this tournament. Honestly, if it weren't for you and your father vouching for me, as well as my being a minor, I think I'd be behind bars right now," he commented.

"So, you think something's up," Lan surmised.

"I know something's up. Too many things about this tournament don't make sense. Why the convoluted match-ups? Why invite net criminals? Why has no one been able to fully explain anything about why this was set up? Your friend Yai is the sponsor, isn't she? Has she said anything?" Sean questioned.

Lan shook his head in the negative. He couldn't really use his future memories as evidence, after all, and even their reliability in this tournament was suspect. After all, he got the feeling he wasn't supposed to face Sean this early in the Tournament.

As for Sean himself, he sighed in disappointment. "Oh well. Let's let not let that get in the way of our match, shall we?"

Lan grinned despite himself. "Looking forward to it!"

"Oh, I've been waitin' so long to see if you can dance like me. You gon' sweat those nerves, can you dance fight like me. Now let me see. Ah ah ah, freeze! Like me, ooh!" (24)

"Sometimes I worry about your thought process..." Hephaestus sighed.

"Here's we have the Blue Whirlwind, Megaman, versus...YAWN...the Cool Customerz, Freezeman," Ribitta said, rather unenthusiastically and in a slurred voice.

"Hey, Ribitta? You alright?" Lan asked in concern. The frog-themed reporter and Operator of Toadman. exe immediately snapped out of it.

"Oh, I'm fine! Just...I've been doing this all day, and it's getting a bit late. This is actually the last match of the day," she said sheepishly.

"If that's the case, then we should wrap this up quickly, Lan," Sean suggested.

"Good idea," Lan nodded.

"Okay, who's going to win?! Battle routine, set!" Ribitta declared.

"Execute!" Both navis exclaimed. With that said, Freezeman. exe began with the match's opening move.

(25)

"IceStage!" he announced, setting all the panels to ice panels.

"Woah!" Megaman. exe yelped, almost falling over due to the lack of friction. Sean used this to his advantage.

"Now, Freezeman! IceTower, BattleChip in!" he declared, slotting the chip in. Freezeman. exe immediately punched the ground, sending the frozen version of AquaTower forward at the Blue Bomber.

"Hub, get out of there!" Lan yelled.

"Don't need to tell me twice!" Megaman. exe declared, summoning the Style Change code rings again. "Style Change: AquaCustom!" he declared, transforming into the new style. Like all aqua-element navis, Megaman. exe was now able to treat the ice panels as though they were normal, and dashed away from the IceTower. But that sent him right into Freezeman. exe's trap.

"Not so fast! Freeze Cracker!" (26) the former Gospel navi declared, converting his arm into a Buster and shooting fast-moving snowflakes at the Blue Bomber.

"Aah!" Megaman. exe yelled as he was pelted by the shots of the Freeze Cracker.

"I don't remember that from last time we fought Freezeman!" Lan said in shock.

"You didn't suppose we'd just lie around doing nothing, did you?" Sean asked wryly. "I may still question why I'm in this tournament to begin with, but I'm still going to give it my all!" he declared.

Lan felt a grin creep up his mouth. "Right back atcha!" he declared.

"Lan, a little help?!" Megaman demanded, trying to dodge the Freeze Cracker shots.

"Coming your way! Hi-Cannon, double download!" Lan exclaimed, slotting the chips in.

Megaman. exe grinned at that, using the unique feature of Custom Styles to his advantage. "Program Advance: Omega Cannon 2!" he declared, firing off the cannon blasts.

Freezeman. exe widened his eyes in shock. But he knew what to do now. "Ice Shield!" he declared, freezing himself in a large crystal. Nonetheless, the cannon blasts slammed into the crystal, rupturing it the point of breaking.

"What was the point of that?" Lan wondered just as it was about to break.

"Heh. You forgot, didn't you?" Sean said with a smug look. Freezeman. exe's shield broke at that point, and out from the crystal came an icy wind that sent Megaman flying clean across the comp space.

"Gah!" he yelled as he was slammed into the barrier at the edge.

"Heh. Now I see how you were able to defeat me last time we fought. But it's over now!" Freezeman. exe declared, lifting his arms up. "Icicle Fall!" he declared, sending cold air up above Megaman. exe. It condensed into several icicles that proceeded to drop directly on top of where he was. But Megaman. exe felt the chip data that Lan had sent him, and he knew it wasn't going to end the way Freezeman. exe thought it would.

"You're right, Freezeman, it is over. But not the way you think it is! AreaGrab!" Megaman. exe declared, before warping out of sight. Freezeman. exe widened his eyes, but it was too late for him to do anything.

"Program Advance: Evil Cut!" Megaman. exe exclaimed, warping behind Freezeman. exe and slashing with the three chips that made it up: StepSword, HeroSword, and StepCross. Freezeman. exe was launched clean across the arena, and was logged out before he could even hit the ground.

(27)

"Freezeman has logged out! The winner is: Megaman!" Ribitta declared. "Now, as a reminder, that was the last match of the day. What new exciting things will happen in the BattleChipGP tomorrow? Tune in to find out! This has been Ribitta from DNN News!"

"Great match, Sean! Let's do it again sometime!" Lan declared, shaking Sean's hand.

"Yeah. I had fun with this. Thanks, Lan," Sean said warmly.

"Don't mention it! YAWN But man, am I tired! I'm just going to go home and just fall into my bed," Lan commented before leaving. As he did, he asked Megaman something. "Hey, Hub, the Metroline is still open right now, right?" he asked blearily.

Megaman. exe checked. "Uh...it closes in 15 minutes!" he said urgently.

"Wait, what?! Crap!" Lan yelled, before skating for the Metroline as fast as he could.

Meanwhile, Sean just shook his head in amusement at his friend's antics.

"No more transmitting your music into the Loop!" Hephaestus fumed as he threw the specialized cords into his desk drawer.

"The talented Apollo promises nothing brother," Apollo grinned serenely as he strummed out a few chords of 'Yakety Sax' on his lyre to accompany Lan's mad dash for the Metroline.

The next morning, a certain someone had arrived at Beach Street's Metroline, ready for the next day of the tournament. 'No developments. Is it really the WWW behind this? Or is it just a smokescreen for something else?' Chaud thought to himself.

"Lord Chaud, today's battles are about to begin," Protoman. exe pointed out.

Chaud started. This wasn't really the time to think about that. "Alright, Protoman! Let's get ready!" he declared.

"Yes, sir!"

'It doesn't really matter. We just have to win the tournament. Then whoever they are will show themselves to us.' With that thought in mind, Chaud walked to the DNN Station. However, one of the vending machines shook oddly, almost as though something within was watching him...

Meanwhile, at SciLab, Yuichirou Hikari was hard at work, as he usually was. Right now, he was working on an idea that had struck him. Style Changes allowed navis to take on new forms depending on their fighting style, and were a great way for Operators to begin the basis for customizing them further. But what would happen if a navi were to develop a Style Change based on another navi? A sort of doubling, or rather a crossing of the abilities of both navis. It was an intriguing idea to be sure. 'And knowing our luck, Lan and Hub will probably need to use it for something if their normal Style Changes can't cut it,' he thought to himself.

He went to pull up a file, but sighed when he realized that he'd left it in the house's mainframe. "Hey, can you go get the file I tried to pull up? I must have left it at home," he asked his navi, plugging his PET into the net.

"Of course, Doctor. But might I suggest you take a break? You've been burning both ends of the candle for a while now," his navi wryly pointed out, before departing for the Hikari home's mainframe.

Yuichirou sighed, shaking his head and rubbing his face. Admittedly, he had a point. Maybe he should take a break. Lan and Hub were participating in a NetBattle Tournament, weren't they? Maybe he could swing by there and see how they were doing. Yeah, that was a good idea! He went to pick up his PET and talk to his navi. "Hey–" he attempted to say, before his aide burst through the doors to his office.

"Dr. Hikari!" his aide called. Frowning in concern, Yuichirou put down his PET, sighing internally. Looked like he wasn't going to take that break after all.

"Yes, what is it?" he asked in concern.

"Navis have been appearing all over the net, causing havoc! The problem is, all of the navis causing problems are confirmed to be participating in a tournament on Beach Street today! It can't be them!" his aide reported.

'What? Are they imposters then? Or is it something else? A cloning project, like how Gospel tried to clone Bass?' the Hikari patriarch thought frantically. "Alright, get everyone together. I want all the data we have available on whatever's going on," Dr. Hikari said firmly.

"Yes sir!" his aide said, before rushing to call everyone together.

Yuichirou sighed again. "Sorry, Lan and Hub, guess I won't be coming to that tournament," he muttered to himself. He Logged his navi out, before heading after his aide.

"Another day, another match!" Lan said, walking up Beach Street.

"I wonder who we're going to fight today? After all, the tournament is about halfway finished," Hub mused.

"Doesn't matter who it is, we're still going to win!" Lan declared. Suddenly, his PET started ringing.

"Lan, it's your phone!" Hub exclaimed.

"Hello?" Lan said into the microphone.

"Lan, it's me."

"Dad! What's up?" Lan wondered.

"I didn't want to disturb you while you were in the middle of your tournament, but I need to tell you something. Navis have been showing up all over the net and attacking randomly. The problem is, is that they seem to be some of the navis that are participating in the BattleChipGP," Yuichirou hurriedly explained.

"Huh?! But that's impossible!" Lan said in shock.

"I know. The navis were confirmed to be in two places at once. But these copies had the same powers as the originals. Lan, this seems a lot like Gospel's plan to clone Bass. Has Sean said anything about his old notes going missing?" Dr. Hikari questioned.

"No. He was pretty normal when I met him yesterday," Lan remembered.

"I see. Then it's probably something different then. Anyway, don't worry. SciLab has this under control. You two just focus on your tournament. I'll try to stop by home this afternoon."

"Alright. See ya, Dad!" Lan said, before hanging the phone up.

"Navi clones... this seems familiar from somewhere," Hub mused.

"Now that you mention it, it does. But where from?" Lan wondered.

"Well, we're not going to find out here. Dad's right, we should just go ahead with the tournament for now," Hub pointed out.

Lan sighed. "Alright. Just, I'm getting a bad feeling from this," he admitted, before skating off to the TV Station.

"Thumb pricking... thumb pricking... Bro, where did you put the commands for causing mortal thumb pricking?"

"Where I was sure you wouldn't find them."

"But... Something wicked comes the mighty Lan and Megaman's way! Thumb pricking is traditional!"

"Something wicked is always coming their way," Hephaestus rolled his eyes.

"Hey, the board actually looks fairly legible now!" Lan said in shock.

"Looks like there's only 10 more rounds until the finals," Hub said carefully, looking over the board.

'Was it supposed to be this short? Anyway...' "No offense to everyone else, but Chaud is definitely going to be in the finals. We can't lose here, Hub!" Lan declared.

"I won't let you down, Lan!" his brother said in return.

"Lan!"

Lan turned to see Sean stalk up, and he wasn't happy. "Sean! I guess Dad told you, huh?" Lan guessed.

"You guessed right. Tsk! SciLab's called me in. Looks like I'll have to drop out of the tournament," Sean said angrily.

Lan winced. "That bites," he said in sympathy.

"Yeah. Anyway, Lan, I've been getting a bad feeling about this, so I want you to have these," Sean said, handing him four BattleChips. Lan took the proffered BattleChips, and widened his eyes when he saw the images on them.

"Sean, what are–?!" he asked in shock.

"Data recovered from the Gospel Bug Beast, condensed into BattleChips. Something tells me you may need them. Just a head's up though, they're all Giga-class chips," Sean explained.

"...Thanks, Sean. I hope I won't have to use them though," Lan said uneasily, putting them in his pocket.

"Trust me, I hope you don't either. Well, I better get going. Hopefully, I'll see you soon, Lan." And with that, Sean departed for the Metroline to SciLab.

Lan looked seriously at him as he left. "Just what is going on? I don't remember this being in the BattleChipGP!" he complained to Hub.

"Neither do I. Something must have happened. But what?" Hub wondered.

"...I guess the only thing we can do now is hurry up with the tournament," Lan decided.

"Our next opponents are Miyu and Skullman," Hub said quietly.

"Better get going then," Lan decided, walking for the battlecomp.

"Well, Miyu and Skullman were nice to see again," Hub said in an attempt to lighten the mood.

"Yeah, I guess," Lan said morosely.

"Lan, what's wrong?" Hub asked in concern.

"It's just...I can't stop thinking about this thing that's going on on the net. I didn't even know this was going to happen!" Lan exclaimed.

"We didn't know any of the things that happened were going to happen the first time around," Hub pointed out.

"But we should have known! We knew generally what was going to happen for everything else, why didn't we know about this?!" Lan said in a distraught tone.

"Lan, nobody can know everything. Things just happened the way they did. All we can do is just face it like we always have! Together!" Hub said firmly.

"...You're right. Okay, let's just get the tournament over with so we can help out with this," Lan decided.

"Alright. Our next opponent is..." Hub trailed off, before realizing who it was. "Lan. I think you may have been wrong about not knowing what was going on," Hub said numbly.

Lan blinked, before noticing just who his opponent was. "Shuuichi Eboshi. The Operator of Hatman," he whispered. (28) Things suddenly clicked into place for both of them.

"Then that means that those strange navi copies on the net are Phantom Navis!" Hub realized.

"Meaning that the one responsible is Cache! But this soon?" Lan wondered.

"I wonder why Cache is attacking this soon. We didn't face him last time until...until..." Hub got a strange look on his face. "Lan, when did we fight Cache?" he asked.

"Um...it was...it was...I don't remember when we fought him. What's going on?" Lan wondered, with a weird look on his face. Hub wondered too, but then he noticed the time.

"Lan, it's time for the match. With Sean having dropped out, there are only seven more rounds not including this one," Hub pointed out.

Lan sighed. "Alright, let's go," he said, walking to the NetBattle machine.

"The mighty Lan raises an excellent question, when did they fight this Cache person?"

"I'm not sure, actually," Hephaestus answered. "I suspect sometime after their next adventure, but it's one of two series of events in this section whose actual place in baseline progression has been damaged."

"Thank you all for agreeing to this meeting so quickly. I know how important everyone's duties are, so I'll make this brief," Yuichirou said in SciLab's meeting room.

"As most of you know already, strange navi clones have been appearing all over the net and wreaking havoc. The purpose of this meeting is to find a way to figure out what they are, and how to stop them," his aide said to the room.

"Has anyone been able to communicate with these navis?" a female scientist who worked with the Virus Breeder questioned.

"Not as yet. I've sent my own navi to investigate. We should be hearing from him soon," Dr. Hikari mentioned. The entire room shifted at that. Dr. Hikari had started using a PET and navi again only recently. Which was great! But they did have to question his choice of navi...

"Any luck?" Yuichirou asked into his PET. There was a brief pause, before the sound of twin Charged Buster shots and a Sonic Boom rang out.

"They don't seem willing to talk," his navi reported. "Although curiously, it seems any attack, no matter how much damage is done, is enough to cause them to vanish. But more and more are appearing," the navi said ominously. This was helped by his rather low voice.

"Alright, keep at it. Remember, if you're running low on HP, jack out," Dr. Hikari said.

"Acknowledged, Doctor." And with that, the link was temporarily shut off again.

"So, they vanish in one hit? Kind of like phantoms," his aide mused.

"Well, obviously, they can be fought. But where are they coming from that they can respawn like this?" one of the scientists in charge of the Mother Computer wondered.

"That's what we're here to find out. Can anyone suggest any way of tracking down where these 'Phantom Navis' are coming from?" Dr. Hikari asked sharply. The discussion in the room started reaching its peak as the scientists discussed back and forth about what to do.

'I hope you're having a better time, Lan and Hub,' Yuichirou thought to himself.

The rest of the matches came and went almost preternaturally fast to Lan. But now it was time for the final match. The match he had been waiting for this entire tournament. And yet, he couldn't enjoy it the way he wanted to. How could he when he was worrying about what was going on in the net? One look at Chaud told him that his rival was also preoccupied. But they both knew that they had to finish this before they could deal with the real problem. So they were going to give it their all regardless.

"Welcome to the final match of the BattleChipGP!" Ribitta announced. "This is a match a long time in the making. Our two finalists are the Blue Whirlwind duo of Megaman and Lan Hikari, and the Red Lightning duo of Protoman and Eugene Chaud! These two rival teams have waited a long time for this, ever since their bout in the N1 Grand Prix was cancelled! Who will triumph over the other? Only this match will know! Battle routine, set!"

"Execute!" Megaman. exe and Protoman. exe both declared, before launching into battle.

"MegaBuster!" Megaman. exe declared, firing away at Protoman. exe with buster shots. But Protoman. exe summoned his ProtoShield on his right arm, blocking the shots fired. And then, even though he was continually being peppered with MegaBuster shots, he dashed forward, shield first, to attack Megaman. exe. But Megaman. exe leaped over his sword swing into the air, charging his Buster the entire time.

"Charged Shot!" he declared, firing directly at Protoman. exe's shield. This forced Protoman. exe's guard wide open, letting Megaman. exe fall into a flying kick that impacted the Red Raider in the head. Megaman. exe leaped off Protoman. exe and backflipped back onto his feet. However, Protoman. exe had recovered before he did so. He dashed up and slashed at Megaman. exe with his ProtoSword, knocking the Blue Bomber back 5 feet.

"Protoman, we're ending this here! StepSword: Triple Download!" Chaud declared.

"Oh no you don't! StepSword: Triple Download!" Lan echoed. The two of them slotted in their Chips at the same time.

"Program Advance: Zeta Step 1!" both navis declared. The two of them then vanished, warping all over the field and clashing swords. It seemed like it was going to be pretty even. But suddenly, the whole battlecomp started shaking.

"Huh?! I don't remember this in the memo!" Ribitta said in shock. That signified to both Lan and Chaud that this wasn't part of the tournament, meaning that something else was interfering. Chaud had a hunch he knew what.

"Protoman, cease fighting! It looks we've found our man," Chaud said grimly. The Red Raider and Blue Bomber ceased their combat, turning to the source of the net's shaking. It abruptly stopped when a navi teleported in. He was completely white with almost no other color on him, save his red eyes and two red rings around spikes that jutted from his head. There were also spikes jutting from his shoulders. He also had a cold smirk on his face. His Navi Mark resembled a circle that had a 'C' inside of it.

Protoman. exe moved his ProtoSword on his left arm in the general direction of this newcomer. "Identify yourself," he ordered.

"The name's Cache. I've been waiting for this moment, Megaman and Protoman," the now-identified Cache said, his eyes glowing red.

"Hi, I'm Cache and I'm so overconfident that I don't care how blatantly evil I look."

Hephaestus raised an eyebrow and smirked. "I wasn't aware you'd changed your name."

"Wha... that..." Apollo sputtered before narrowing his eyes and glaring. "The grievously injured Apollo reluctantly grants you a point."

"How generous of you..." Hephaestus deadpanned, though he couldn't stop smirking.

Meanwhile in Beach Street's net area, Dr. Hikari's navi fought through the hordes of Phantom Navis, slashing away at them with his signature 3-hit combo. But despite them falling with one hit, more and more kept coming. "Tch. Is this my end?" he said fatalistically. He shook his head to snap himself out of it. No, it wasn't. It couldn't be. He had an operator now. He was a real navi. He owed it to those two who had given him this chance to keep fighting!

But just as he had refocused his resolve, the Phantom Navis suddenly stopped, heading off for one specific area. The navi swore as he contacted his Operator. "Dr. Hikari, the Phantom Navis are heading toward the TV Station's network," he reported.

"The TV Station...no, Lan and Hub are there today! Then, the Phantom Navis are after them?! Go after them, quick!" his NetOp ordered in a panic.

"Acknowledged," his navi said, dashing off after them.

Lan gritted his teeth as Cache revealed his plan. He had gotten wind of the BattleChipGP and had decided to add the powers of the two strongest navis to his own. So he bided his time, and then when the final day of the tournament occurred, he sent his Phantom Navis out to distract the Officials watching so he could absorb the finalists.

"There's no way I'm letting you have Megaman!" Lan yelled.

"The same for me. You're not getting Protoman!" Chaud declared.

"What you want to happen is of no consequence. I'll just take them regardless!" Cache exclaimed. Suddenly, data flew in from the link to Beach Street's network. This was from the Phantom Navis that had been in all over the net. The data converged on Cache, letting off a flash of light that briefly blinded Megaman. exe and Protoman. exe. When they recovered their vision, they were shocked to see how different Cache was.

He was giant-sized, at least three times their height, with black down his midsection. His legs were gone, and it looked like he had fused with the floor. His torso was much bulkier now. His Navi Mark had also disappeared. "Now, it's lunch time!" Cache declared. (29)

Lan turned to Chaud. "Chaud, we can't let this guy beat us! We've got to work together!" he declared.

"As much as it pains me, you're right. Protoman, let's go!" Chaud ordered.

"Battle routine, set!" Lan declared.

"Execute!" Megaman. exe said decisively.

"Let's go!" Protoman. exe said. The two navis immediately dashed forward at Cache's form, ready to end this.

"But a battle such as this demands epic music!" Apollo struggled to hook his backup set of cords up.

"Don't you dare !" Hephaestus growled from where he had Apollo in a headlock.

"...The amazing Apollo will make you a deal. Let the sensational Apollo do it this one more time and you have his word that it will be the last."

"...Oh, fine."

As they ran forward, Megaman. exe peppered Cache's form with Buster shots. Cache didn't appreciate that, and brought down one of his giant fists to attempt to squish his opponents. Megaman. exe was forced to leap backwards, while Protoman. exe jumped onto the arm. The Red Raider dashed up the arm before Cache could react, slashing at his face.

"GRRAAAAAAH!" Cache roared. Protoman. exe was forced to leap off of him as Cache thrashed around in a rage. Cache's shoulder spikes then retracted and fired off all kinds of ammo. Cannon blasts, Metal Blades, Rolling Cutters, any and all kinds of projectiles. The rain of projectiles and ammo flew at the two on the ground. Protoman. exe dashed forward using his shield as a cover, but Megaman. exe was stuck where he was, desperately trying to avoid the hail of projectiles.

'Gah! I can't avoid all of these projectiles like this! I'm stuck! I need more speed!' he desperately thought. However, that was when the chng. bat inside him reacted. It was already reacting to his recent fighting style, and this was the final push it needed.

Unbeknownst to him, Megaman. exe's form shifted to a form more suitable for what he wanted as well as how he was fighting. His leg armor was reformatted to hold wheels. His form in general was more armored. He gained chest armor that resembled the hood of a car, complete with wheels behind his shoulders. Oh, and the armor was green in color.

More projectiles zoomed at him. Instinctively, Megaman. exe blurred away from the projectiles, much to his shock. "Wait, how did-?" he wondered, looking at himself.

"A new Style Change? Now?" Lan said in shock. Meanwhile, a certain member of the audience spoke up.

"That's the Style Change I customized Turboman out of!" Kai exclaimed in surprise.

"It's wood-element...so this is WoodTurbo Style?" Megaman. exe wondered. He was interrupted when Cache fired an energy beam at him, which Protoman. exe was forced to block for him.

"Get your head in the game! You can admire yourself later!" the Red Raider admonished.

"Uh, right!" Megaman. exe decided. The wheels on his new form started spinning, and he zoomed off from Protoman. exe's guard. Cache tried to take advantage of this by firing tons of stuff at him. Elec Beams, Magnet Missiles, even a few Cannonballs. But Megaman dodged all of them, zooming around Cache's form and firing the signature Tornado Buster of Wood Styles.

"GRAAHH! You little pests!" Cache roared. He charged up energy, and fired continuous laser blasts from his mouth at the attacking duo. While Megaman. exe was able to use WoodTurbo's speed to dodge it easily, Protoman. exe had more problems. He blocked the attacks to the best of his ability, but eventually one blast clipped the tip of his shield, knocking it away from shielding him. This let Cache's next blast catch him clean in the midsection, knocking him back and into the ground.

"Protoman!" Chaud yelled.

"One more ought to do it!" Cache declared, firing another blast at the downed Protoman. exe.

"NO!" Megaman. exe yelled in horror, using all his speed to get in front of Protoman. exe. But not even WoodTurbo's speed could help him block correctly in that scenario. Megaman. exe took the blast fully unprotected, kicking up an explosion.

"Hub, no!" Lan yelled in horror. The smoke cleared to reveal an unconscious Megaman. exe, now back in his base form.

Hephaestus swore and began frantically examining code for the best way to ensure that the co-Anchor survived this. If he died here and now... Well, he could technically try again, but it–

Hephaestus's mild panic attack was derailed as a particular piece of data caught his eye.

"Did... did the overall success chance actually go up from that?"

"Lan, jack him out!" Chaud hurriedly said.

"I can't! It's jammed!" Lan said in desperation.

"Heheh...one down," Cache said sinisterly, turning his attention to the recovering Protoman. His rationale was that beating both of them and then absorbing them would be better than beating and absorbing one at a time.

"Tch! Looks like we have no choice!" Chaud said in anger.

"Lord Chaud, do you mean...?!" Protoman. exe asked in shock.

(30)

"Yes. Protoman, it's time to show everyone the power we worked so hard to attain! Initiate Style Change!" Chaud declared.

"Yes sir!"

Rings of code formed around Protoman. exe, much to everyone's shock. "Wait, since when did Protoman have a Style Change?!" Lan asked in confusion. Chaud let a small grin grow on his face at the complete gobsmacked look on Lan's face.

Back with Protoman. exe, his left arm's ProtoSword shut off, giving him both hands. His armor, save for his helmet, turned into cloth, and became more flowing. An actual physical sword, scabbard and all, formed on Protoman. exe's right.

"Style Change: Muramasa Style!" Protoman declared, drawing his sword.

"No mere Style Change can defeat me!" Cache boasted, rearing back a fist to punch Protoman. exe. He lunged at the Red Raider and shot off his punch...only to get his entire hand slashed off by Protoman. exe's sword.

"GAAAAAH! How...How?!" Cache said in anger and pain.

"Didn't you listen? I said Muramasa Style. In other words, my sword is essentially Muramasa itself! It grows in strength as I take damage!" Protoman. exe declared. He then raised his sword. "Now come get some!" he yelled, leaping at Cache. Cache roared yet again, firing a multitude of attacks at Protoman. exe. Muramasa Style had disabled his Shield, so Protoman. exe blocked with just the Muramasa sword. He did a good job of it too, but he still got nicked over and over again. And while Protoman. exe's attack power went up the more his HP went down, there was also a point where he wouldn't be able to fight anymore.

Lan realized this, and knew he had to do something, even with Hub out of commission. "Chaud!" At that, his rival turned toward him. "Here, use this!" Lan said hurriedly, giving Chaud one of the Chips he had received from Sean.

Chaud widened his eyes when he saw what he had been given. "Lan, what is-?!" he asked, before Lan cut him off.

"Sean gave it to me this morning, because he had a really bad feeling about things. It's Giga-class," Lan hurriedly explained.

"Right, good thing I have a way around that problem," Chaud said mysteriously, before turning back to his PET. "Protoman, get ready! FireGospel, Giga Chip in!" he declared, slotting the BattleChip in.

Protoman. exe immediately stopped guarding, ignoring the shots he was peppered with. "Burn!" he yelled. The Gospel Bug Beast's head formed on his right arm, and breathed out a breath of fire that ran all the way up Cache.

Cache was in pain, and blinded. Even still, his hearing still worked, and he didn't like what he heard next.

"Protoman, finish him!" Chaud declared.

"Yes sir! Muramasa Style:" Protoman intoned, before vanishing. And then Cache was lit up in pain as Protoman attacked.

"Delta!" One slash.

"Ray!" A second slash.

"EDGE!" A third slash. Protoman reappeared in front of Cache, his back turned. Suddenly, the triangular Greek letter Delta appeared over Cache's form.

(31)

"You're finished," Protoman. exe said coldly, just as Cache started to explode from the damage he'd taken. The Delta Ray Edge was truly a potent attack, its chip form being classed as Giga. Of course, as the originator of the attack, Protoman. exe didn't need a chip for it.

"D-Damn you...DAMN YOU, PROTOMAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAN!" Cache yelled, before exploding! But the backlash had damaged the comp space too much, and it too was starting to fall apart. Just then, Megaman. exe came back to the land of the awake.

"Gurr...what's going on?" he wondered, clutching his head.

"No time! Hub, jack out!" Lan said in concern.

"Protoman, jack out!" Chaud echoed.

"Err, roger!"

"Yes, sir!"

Just as they did so, a certain other navi looked on. "Looks like you didn't need my help this time, my friend. I'll have to find another way to start to repay the debt I owe you," he commented, before jacking out to Dr. Hikari's PET.

"Okay, everything checks out normal," Yuichirou said, having finished his scans of Hub to make sure nothing was wrong with him after the battle with Cache.

"How're you feeling, Hub?" Lan asked in concern.

"I'm fine, Lan! I'll admit Cache got me good, but I'm a-okay now!" Hub reassured him.

"Although, something worries me," Yuichirou pondered.

"What do you mean, Dad?" Lan wondered.

"No navi has ever had nine different Style Changes before. The usual maximum is two, and they're generally complementary Styles and elements. You may be a lot different from other navis, Hub, but it's a bit worrying," their father admitted.

"But, Dad, I feel fine," Hub protested.

"I know you do, but humor me," Yuichirou said patiently. At his sons' nods, he continued. "Unless you absolutely have to use a Style Change, I want you to deactivate chng. bat. This will check the formation of new Style Changes, and lower the risk of compromising your core program. Okay?"

"...Alright."

Eugene Chaud was not in a good mood. The simple fact that they had been forced to utilize Muramasa Style during the whole thing with Cache didn't sit well with him. It had all the hallmarks of a bad omen. "Protoman, make a note. We're increasing our training time from 10 hours to 11 hours per day."

"Yes sir. By the way, we've received an e-mail from the Officials who were tasked with investigating the origins of the BattleChipGP. Apparently it was an attempt by certain elements in SciLab and the Officials themselves to lure Bass in and contain him," Protoman. exe reported.

"Fools. What did they hope to accomplish by luring him in with no regard for the populace? The fact that it was that Cache character instead only furthers drives the point home. And besides, how could anyone hope to contain him?" Chaud said rhetorically.

"Well, Mary, it's been a fun week," Yai said to her homestay friend. Mary was packing for the trip back to Netopia.

"I've had fun too. Although that thing during the finals was a bit scary, I'm glad they were able to solve the whole thing," Mary said with a small smile.

